

OCTAVIA HILL.

Presented to the Library

BY

Lady Shirley Murphy

Date 26 Aug. 1929

Vol. 4151

Class Mark SQC Accession No. 10159

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE POOR LAWS
AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS.

APPENDIX VOLUME IV.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

APPENDIX.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2015

<https://archive.org/details/b24399619>

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE POOR LAWS AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS.

APPENDIX VOLUME IV.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

(72ND TO 89TH DAYS)

WITH

APPENDIX.

[This Volume contains the Oral and Written Evidence of the British Medical Association and of Witnesses from the following Provincial Urban Centres:—

Liverpool and Manchester District;

West Yorkshire;

Midland Towns.]

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
BY WYMAN AND SONS, LIMITED, 109, FETTER LANE, E.C.

And to be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from WYMAN AND SONS, LIMITED, 109, FETTER LANE, FLEET STREET, E.C.; and 32, ABINGDON STREET, WESTMINSTER, S.W.; or OLIVER AND BOYD, TWEEDDALE COURT, EDINBURGH; or E. PONSONBY, 116, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN.

1909.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE POOR LAWS
AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS.

10159

APPENDIX VOLUME IV

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

(PART II - 1847)

WITH

APPENDIX

This Volume contains the Oral and Written Evidence of the British Medical Association and of Witnesses from the following Provincial Urban Counties:

A List of the Appendix Volumes to the Reports of the Commission will be found at the end of this Volume.

Midland Counties

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE POOR LAWS

PRINTED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE
IN WYMAN COURT, LONDON, E.C. 4.

And it is ordered, that if any person or persons shall contravene the provisions of the Act in relation to the said Act, he or they shall be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds, or to imprisonment not exceeding three months, or to both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE POOR LAWS AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF ORAL WITNESSES.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF DAY OF EVIDENCE.	NO. OF QUESTIONS.	PAGE.
ABBOTT, MR. G. - -	Secretary of the Sheffield and Hallamshire District Branch of the Ancient Order of Foresters Friendly Society.	82	42260-42507	288
ALLAN, DR. J. - - -	Medical Superintendent of the Union Infirmary at Leeds.	80	41231-41346	241
ANDERSON, DR. F., M.D. -	Representative of the British Medical Association.	77	39013-39539	148
ASTBURY, REV. CANON G. -	Guardian of King's Norton Union ; Ex-Chairman.	84	43420-43564	333
AYLES, MR. W. H. - -	Member of the Board of Guardians of the Aston Union.	86	45784-45918	431
BAINES, MISS M. - - -	Member of the Leeds Board of Guardians.	78	39540-39774	172
BALL, HENRY - - - -	Superintendent Relieving Officer, Liverpool.	72	35451-35691	1
BARLOW, W. N., M.R.C.S. -	Medical Officer of Health for the County Borough of Bootle.	76	38627-38755	131
BEATTY, DR. J. - - -	Medical Officer of Health and Superintendent of the Borough Hospital for Infectious Diseases at Northampton.	89	47744-47918	501
BECKE, MR. C. C. - - -	Connected with the Royal Victoria Dispensary and the Artisans and Labourers Friendly Society at Northampton.	89	48224-48347	518
BLACKSHAW, REV. W. - -	Connected with the Croft House Settlement in Sheffield.	80	41347-41486	245
BLOSSOM, MR. J. - - -	Member of the Ecclesall Bierlow Board of Guardians.	83	42779-43125	307
BOOKER, A. E. - - - -	Clerk to the Guardians of the Sheffield Union.	80	40853-41103	224
BROWNE, DR. H. L., M.D.	Representative of the British Medical Association.	77	39013-39539	148
BURNET, DR. R. - - -	Medical Officer of the Parish of Birmingham.	85	44420-44616	379
BURY, REV. CANON - - -	Rector of Harleston ; Guardian and Chairman of Brixworth Board of Guardians in Northamptonshire.	89	48031-48223	511
BYGOTT, DR. A. H. - - -	District Medical Officer of the Deritend and Bordesley Districts of the Aston Union.	85	43996-44419	361
CAMERON, DR. J. S. - - -	Medical Officer of Leeds - - -	81	41487-41760	251
CARRYER, MISS E. - - -	Member of the Leicester Board of Guardians.	87	46514-46705	458

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF DAY OF EVIDENCE.	NO. OF QUESTIONS.	PAGE.
CHADWICK, REV. W. E. -	Vicar of St. Giles, Northampton -	88	47014-47189	475
CLEAVER, H. P. - -	Clerk to the Guardians of the West Derby Union.	72	35886-36181	16
COLLIER, REV. S. F. -	Superintendent of the Manchester and Salford Mission.	75	37432-37603	81
COOKE, MR. C. C. - -	Poor Law Guardian of the Aston Union.	86	44975-45292	404
COOPER, H. I. - - -	Clerk to the Guardians of the Bolton Union; Secretary to the Distress Committee for the County Borough of Bolton and Divisional Chairman of the County Borough of Bolton Guild of Help.	73	36692-36926	48
CROSFIELD, H. G. - -	Vice-Chairman, Toxteth Guardians -	72	36182-36261	27
DANIELS, F. W. - - -	General Secretary of the Ideal Benefit Society of Birmingham.	85	44749-44919	395
DEARDEN, A. - - - -	Superintendent of Out-relief and Collector to the Guardians of the Ecclesall Bierlow Union.	80	41104-41230	236
DODD, DR. J. - - - -	Consulting Physician to the Poor Law Infirmary at Leicester.	88	47190-47418	481
DONALDSON, REV. F. L. -	Vicar of St. Mark's, Leicester - -	87	46219-46513	449
EDWARDS, JAMES, M.R.C.S. -	Surgeon to the Liverpool Police Force, etc.	75	38322-38379	112
FAWKES, MR. W. - - -	Clerk to the Guardians of the Northampton Union.	84	43888-43995	355
FORD, J. H. - - - -	Clerk to the Leeds Guardians - -	78	39775-39978	179
FOTHERGILL, MR. S. - -	Superintendent of Relief for the Parish of Birmingham.	84	43825-43887	351
GREENWOOD, DR. A. - -	Medical Officer of Health, Medical Superintendent to the Fever and Small-pox Hospitals for Blackburn, etc., etc.	75	37604-37926	87
GR. SEWOOD, W. - - - -	Secretary of the Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society.	74	37105-37374	63
HAWKYARD, DR. A. - - -	Member of the Hunslet Board of Guardians; Justice of the Peace for the City of Leeds.	83	42508-42778	297
HAYWARD, MISS I. - - -	Relief Visitor of the King's Norton Union.	86	45919-45997	440
HEWLINGS, DR. W. F. McALLISTER.	District Medical Officer of Health and Surgeon to the Provident Dispensary at Leicester.	89	47500-47743	493
HUDSON, MR. S. - - - -	Official Valuer of the Ancient Order of Foresters and Town Councillor of Leicester.	88	47419-47499	489

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF DAY OF EVIDENCE.	NO. OF QUESTIONS.	PAGE.
ISLIP, F. W. - - -	Member of the Leicester Board of Guardians.	87	46914-47013	471
KEMP, A. - - -	Member and Ex-Chairman of the Board of Guardians of Leicester.	87	46706-46913	465
LEA, DR. A. W. W. - -	Member of the Committee of the Corporation of Manchester for administering the Midwives Act of 1902.	73	36927-37104	56
MACDONALD, DR. J. A. -	Representative of the British Medical Association.	77	39013-39539	148
MCDUGALL, A. - - -	Alderman of the City of Manchester; Guardian of the Township of Manchester.	73	36512-36691	40
MANTON, H. J. - - -	Justice of the Peace for the City of Birmingham, etc., etc.	84	43626-43824	342
NEWILL, MISS H. - - -	Guardian, King's Norton Union; President of the Workhouse Magdalen Charity.	85	44920-44974	402
NIVEN, JAMES - - -	Medical Officer of Health for Manchester.	76	38380-38626	115
NORTH, B. - - -	Guardian, Huddersfield Union; Labour Member on the Distress Committee.	81	41761-41883	266
PERCIVAL, DR. G. H. -	District Medical Officer of Health for Northampton and Surgeon to the Northampton General Hospital.	89	47919-48030	507
RAW, MR. N., M.D., F.R.S. Edin.	Visiting Medical Superintendent of the Mill Road Infirmary, Liverpool, etc.	75	37927-38321	98
RHODES, J. M., M.D. -	Chairman of the Central Poor Law Conference Committee.	76	38897-39012	142
RIGBY, EDWIN A. - - -	Clerk to the Guardians of the Huddersfield Union.	79	40717-40852	217
ROGERS, SIR H. - - -	Ex-Lord Mayor of Birmingham; Chairman of the City Aid Society.	86	45293-45461	413
SCURFIELD, DR. H. - - -	Medical Officer of Health for Sheffield	81	41884-42046	273
SIDDON, MISS E. F. - -	Guardian of the Huddersfield Union	79	40471-40716	210
SKIVINGTON, W. E. - - -	Guardian of the Chorlton Union	73	36262-36511	31
SMITH, DR. R. W. INNES -	Surgeon for Messrs. Vickers, Maxim, Ltd. (private account), Doctor for several Clubs in Sheffield.	83	43126-43245	321
SMITH, W. - - -	Representative of Friendly Societies on the Liverpool Distress Committee.	74	37375-37431	77
THORBURN, MISS J. S. -	Member of the Select Vestry of Liverpool.	72	35692-35885	8
TURNER, J. R. - - -	Chairman of the Birmingham Board of Guardians.	84	43565-43625	339

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF DAY OF EVIDENCE.	NO. OF QUESTIONS.	PAGE.
VERITY, REV. W. H.	Member of the Committee of the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Committee at H.M. Prison at Wakefield; Hon. Secretary of the Huddersfield Police Court Mission and of the Huddersfield Labour Home.	82	42048-42259	281
WAITE, MR. R.	Guardian of the King's Norton Union	84	43246-43419	325
WAYNE, A.	Superintendent of the Aston Union Cottage Homes.	87	45998-46218	443
WHEATLEY, W.	Councillor for the County Borough of Huddersfield; Guardian of the Poor for the Union of Huddersfield.	79	40309-40470	203
WHITAKER, MR. J. S., M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.	Representative of the British Medical Association.	77	39013-39539	148
WHITWAM, ELI	Member of the Huddersfield Board of Guardians.	79	40471-40716	210
WILLIAMS, T. O.	Chairman of the Aston Board of Guardians.	86	45462-45783	418
WILSON, MR. H. B.	Medical Superintendent of the Birmingham Medical Mission.	85	44617-44748	386
WILSON, J. W.	Member of the Sheffield Board of Guardians.	79	40081-40308	192
WRIGHT, F.	Relieving Officer of the Leeds Union	78	39979-40080	189
YOUNG, M., M.D.	Medical Officer of Health for County Borough of Stockport and Medical Superintendent of the Stockport Corporation Hospitals.	76	38756-38896	136

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE POOR LAWS AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF NON-ORAL WITNESSES.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF APPENDIX.	PAGE.
ADDY, MELLOR, P.P.G.M.	Prov. C.S., Independent Order of Oddfellows, Manchester Unity, Huddersfield District.	LII	673
AFFLECK, J. J. - - -	Member of Board of Guardians and of Distress Committee, etc., of Birmingham.	CIX	737
AFFORD, T. A. - - -	Relieving Officer, Northampton.	CX	737
ALEXANDER, DR. J. W. -	Medical Officer for Armley District, Bramley Union; and Medical Officer (Non-resident) of Union Hospital.	LIII	673
ATKINSON, TOM - - -	Ex-Guardian, Leeds.	LIV	673
BAKER, REV. J. W. - -	Chairman of Board of Guardians of West Derby Union, Liverpool.	XXVII	641
BALE, DR. WM. B. - - -	Medical Officer, Stockport Union (No. 1 District), Stockport Workhouse, Stockport Union Hospital, Stockport Union Cottage Homes; and Public Vaccinator of No. 1 District Stockport Union.	XXVIII	642
BANNISTER, A. - - -	Member of the Holbeck Board of Guardians, Leeds.	LV	674
BASS, REV. T. J. - - -	Vicar of St. Laurence, Birmingham.	CXI	739
BASTARD, G. - - -	Relieving Officer, Leicester.	CXII	740
BEST, R. H. - - -	Member of Birmingham Distress Committee; Chairman of the West Division of the City of Birmingham Aid Society, President of the Nelson Street Sunday Morning Adult School; Chairman of a manufacturing company, Chairman of the "Masters' Trade Association and Conciliation Board."	CXIII	741
BESTON, J. T. - - -	Member of the Birmingham Board of Guardians.	CXIV	742
BIRCH, J. - - -	Member of West Derby Board of Guardians.	XXX	643
BLOOMFIELD, D. S. - -	Clerk to the Guardians of the Chorlton Union.	XXXI	643
BRADLEY, I. - - -	Coroner for Birmingham.	CXV	744
BRAY, W. - - -	Governor, Liverpool Parish Workhouse.	XXXII	645
BRIERLEY, J. B., M.D. -	Medical Officer for the Old Trafford District, Barton-on-Irwell Union.	XXXIII	646

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF NON-ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF APPENDIX.	PAGE.
BROADBENT, ALDERMAN -	Chairman of Huddersfield Health Committee, etc., etc.	LVI	675
BRYAN, C. F., M.R.C.S. Eng., L.S.A. Lond.	Medical Officer to the Leicester Union Workhouse; certifying Surgeon under the Factory Acts since 1889; Member of the Town Council since November, 1899; President of the Leicester Medical Society, 1892-94.	CXVI	745
BUCHAN, DR. J. J. -	Medical Officer of Health for St. Helens.	XXXIV	646
BUCKLAND, F. - -	Inspector under the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Leeds Branch.	LVII	676
BULMER, J. W. - -	Member of the Board of Guardians, Hunslet Union.	LVIII	677
CALVERLEY, MRS. - -	Member of Board of Guardians, Brixworth, Northampton.	CXVII	746
CARTER, DR. W. - -	Hon. Physician to the Liverpool Royal Southern Hospital.	XXXV	649
CLARK, H. - -	Secretary of Co-operative Society and Ex-Guardian, Leicester.	CXVIII	747
CLARKE, W. J. - -	Missionary in Charge Domestic Mission, Hurst St. Birmingham; Hon. Secretary of Police-Aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children, etc.	CXIX	747
CLEAVER, ALDERMAN R. -	Justice of the Peace; Ex-Chairman of the Board of Guardians, Northampton.	CXX	748
COLE, REV. W. J. - -	Vicar of the Parish of St. Mary's, Sheffield.	LIX	677
COLEMAN, WALTER - -	Master of the Leeds Union Workhouse.	LX	679
COLLINS, H. J., F.S.S., F.C.I.S.	House Governor and Secretary of the General Hospital Birmingham; Formerly Secretary and House Steward of the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, Norwich; Secretary of the Hospitals Association, London; Assistant Secretary and Accountant of London Lock Hospital and Asylum, etc.	CXXI	749
COOK, ARTHUR - -	Chairman Board of Guardians, Bramley Union, Leeds.	LXI	680
COOPER, S. - -	Relieving Officer of the Bramley Union, Leeds.	LXII	680
CROPLEY, H., F.R.C.S. Eng., D.P.H. Lond.	Medical Officer of Northampton Workhouse.	CXXII	750
CROSFIELD, W. - -	Justice of the Peace; Vice-Chairman; Liverpool Board of Guardians.	XXXVI	650

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF NON-ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF APPENDIX.	PAGE.
CROWTHER, G. M. - -	Clerk to the Guardians of the Bradford Union.	LXIII	681
CURTIS, R. J.* - - -	Solicitor, Clerk (since 1903) to the Guardians of the King's Norton Union; previously Clerk to Norwich Incorporation; and formerly Assistant Clerk, King's Norton Union.	CXXIII	751
DAVIS, C. T. - - -	Superintendent King's Norton Cottage Homes.	CXXIV	754
DEWSNUP, J. - - -	Superintendent Relieving Officer, Manchester.	XXXVII	652
DICKINS, J. T. - - -	Member of Board of Guardians and of Distress Committee, Northampton.	CXXV	755
DYSON, REV. W. H. - -	Vice-President of the Huddersfield Charity Organisation Society.	LXIV	684
EASTWOOD, F. - - -	Justice of Peace; President Huddersfield Infirmary.	LXV	686
EDDOWES, MRS. - - -	Member of Ashton Union Board of Guardians.	CXXVI	756
ELLAM, H. - - -	Relieving Officer of the Huddersfield Union.	LXVI	686
FAWCETT, J. W. - - -	Secretary of the Leeds Industrial Co-operative Society, Limited.	LXVII	687
FISHER, H. - - -	Relieving Officer of the King's Norton Union, since May, 1889.	CXXVII	756
FITTON, LEVI - - -	Relieving Officer, Leeds - - -	LXVIII	688
FLETCHER, C. - - -	Clerk to the Guardians, Birmingham	CXXVIII	757
FORBES, DR. A. - - -	District Medical Officer Ecclesall Bierlow Union; Member of the Sheffield City Council.	LXIX	689
FORREST, E. W. - - -	Secretary of the Birmingham General Dispensary.	CXXIX	759
FRANKLIN, G. - - -	Chairman of the Boards of Overseers of Sheffield and Ecclesall.	LXX	689
FULLAGER, MISS F. E. -	Ex-Member Leicester Board of Guardians.	CXXX	760
GALE, DR. A. K. - - -	District Medical Officer Ecclesall Bierlow Union.	LXXI	690
GATELEY, S. - - -	Justice of Peace, Solicitor, Member and Ex-Chairman of Birmingham Board of Guardians.	CXXXI	762
GAUNT, ALFRED - - -	Clerk to the Guardians, Bramley Union.	LXXII	691
GIBBONS, W. E., M.D. -	Hon. Secretary Leicester Division of the British Medical Association.	CXXXII	763

* Mr. Curtis gave oral evidence on behalf of the National Poor Law Officers' Association for England and Wales. For his evidence see Qs. 28796-29094.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF NON-ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	No. OF APPENDIX.	PAGE.
GOULD, J. E., M.D. Lond., D.P.H. Cantab.	Medical Officer of Health and Medical Examiner to the Education Committee, Bolton.	XXXVIII	654
GRUNDY, T. - - -	Member of Distress Committee; Police Court Missionary; and Manager of Labour Home and Workshop for Unemployed, Huddersfield.	LXXIII	692
HADFIELD, G. - - -	Master Crosland Moor Workhouse, Huddersfield.	LXXIV	693
HAGGER, H. J. - - -	Clerk to the Select Vestry of Liverpool.	XXXIX	655
HARGROVE, REV. CHAS., M.A.	Late Hon. Secretary Leeds Charity Organisation Society.	LXXV	693
HARPER, REV. A. M., M.A. -	Vicar of St. Matthew's, Leicester -	CXXXIII	766
HEAP, REV. W. H. - - -	Wesleyan Minister, Huddersfield -	LXXVI	694
HENRIQUES, D. Q. - - -	Vice-President Board of Guardians for the Relief of the Jewish Poor of Manchester; Member of the Distress Committee of the City of Manchester.	XLI	656
HERTZ, MISS O. - - -	Member of Chorlton Board of Guardians.	XLII	659
HEWING, J. - - -	Huddersfield, Member of the Friendly Societies Federation and of the Executive Committee Trades Council; Vice-Chairman Conciliation Board; Member of Board of Guardians and of Distress Committee, etc.	LXXVII	695
HILL, G. - - -	Superintendent of Out-relief of the Sheffield Union.	LXXVIII	696
HILL, S. - - -	Justice of the Peace, late Chairman of the Salford Board of Guardians.	XL	656
HINCKS, W. E. - - -	Secretary Charity Organisation Society; Member of Town Council and of Distress Committees, etc., Leicester.	CXXXIV	766
HOLLAND, D. G. - - -	Member of Board of Guardians and of Distress Committee, Leicester.	CXXXV	768
HOLMES, DR. F. - - -	District Medical Officer, Leeds Union.	LXXIX	699
HOWITT, J. W. - - -	Superintendent Relieving Officer for fifteen years at Aston; District Relieving Officer for twelve years at Leeds; and Assistant in the Union Clerks' Office there for thirteen years.	CXXXVI	769
HUDSON, MRS. R. - - -	Leeds Lady Hospital Fund, Leeds Maternity Fund.	LXXX	699

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF NON-ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF APPENDIX.	PAGE.
JOHNSON, S. E., L.S.A. Lond., L.M. and L.R.C.S. Edin.	Medical Officer and Public Vaccinator of the Southern District of the Kings' Norton Union; twenty years Alderman of the City of Birmingham; Justice of the Peace of the County of Worcester.	CXXXVII	771
JOHNSTON, DR. L. A. W. -	District Medical Officer, Parish of Birmingham.	CXXXVIII	771
KAUFFMANN, DR. O. J. -	Hon. Physician to the Queen's Hospital; Visiting Physician to the Workhouse Infirmary; Consulting Physician to the Birmingham General Dispensary.	CXXXIX	773
KAYE, J. H. - - -	Justice of the Peace; Member of the Committee of the Police Court Mission and Labour Home, Huddersfield.	LXXXI	701
KELLY, T. F. - - -	Formerly a Member of the Manchester Education Committee on behalf of Roman Catholic Charities of Manchester and Salford.	XLIII	661
KINDER, COUNCILLOR -	Justice of the Peace; Chairman of the Leeds Education Committee.	LXXXII	703
LAMBERT, F. - - -	Late Master of the Workhouse, Leicester.	CXL	774
LLOYD, G. - - -	Master of the Aston Union Workhouse, Birmingham.	CXLI	774
LOMAX, T. - - -	Agent and Secretary of the District Provident and Charity Organisation Society of Manchester and Salford.	XLIV	662
Longbottom, Dr. W. -	District Medical Officer, Sheffield -	LXXXIII	704
LORD, D. - - -	Solicitor; Member of Board of Guardians, Bramley Union.	LXXXIV	705
LUPTON, CHARLES - -	Hon. Treasurer of the General Infirmary, Leeds.	LXXXV	706
MACDONALD, J. - - -	Clerk to the Guardians, Township of Manchester.	XLV	663
MACGREGOR, DR. PETER -	Hon. Surgeon, Huddersfield Infirmary, etc.	LXXXVI	710
MACKENZIE, DR. F. I. -	District Medical Officer, Huddersfield Union.	LXXXVII	711
MANSFIELD, H. - - -	Clerk to the Leicester Board of Guardians.	CXLII	777
MCCARTHY, D. - - -	Guardian of the Leicester Union -	CXLIII	778
MEE, F. W. - - -	Clerk to the Guardians, Hunslet Union.	LXXXVIII	712
MILLARD, C. K. - - -	Medical Officer of Health, Leicester -	CXLIV	779
MOORE, DR. S. G. H -	Medical Officer of Health, County Borough of Huddersfield.	LXXXIX	718

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF NON-ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF APPENDIX.	PAGE.
MORTON, JOHN - -	Vice-President of the Huddersfield Charity Organisation Society.	LXIV	684
NORTH, J. - - -	Clerk to the Guardians of the Aston Union since June, 1891, etc., etc.	CXLV	779
O'NEILL, J. W. - -	General Relieving Officer, Hunslet Union.	XC	719
OSBORN, F. M. - -	Hon. Secretary of the Sheffield Boys' Working Home.	XCI	720
PAGE, W. - - -	Late Superintendent of Test Labour, Leeds.	XCII	720
PHIPPS, A. E. - - -	Clerk and Solicitor to the Trustees of St. John's Hospital for upwards of fifteen years, the Trustees of the Northampton Municipal General Charities for upwards of nine years, and the Trustees of the Northampton Freeman's Annuities for about two years.	CXLVI	780
PINCHARD, REV. A. - -	Vicar of St. Jude's, Birmingham	CXLVII	781
PORRITT, DR. NORMAN -	Consulting Surgeon to the Huddersfield Infirmary.	XCIII	721
PORTER, DR. W. - -	Physician to the Royal Infirmary, Sheffield.	XCIV	723
PRENTIS, J. T. - - -	Secretary of the Huddersfield Industrial Society, Ltd.	XCV	723
REYNOLDS, DR. E. S., F.R.C.P.	Physician to the Manchester Royal Infirmary, and Visiting Medical Officer to the Manchester Workhouse Infirmary.	XLVI	664
RUSSELL, DR. J. - -	Assistant Physician (Physician to Out-patients) Birmingham General Hospital.	CXLVIII	782
SCOTT, C. J. - - -	Member of Board of Guardians, Northampton.	CXLIX	783
SENIOR, H. - - -	Master of the Hunslet Union Workhouse.	XCVI	723
SEVESTRE, R., M.A., M.D., Cantab, etc.	Assistant Physician, Leicester Infirmary; Medical Practitioner in Leicester; one of the Hon. Medical Advisers, Leicester Charity Organisation Society.	CL	785
SHEFFIELD, LORD BISHOP OF		XCVII	724
SHERRIFF, A. - - -	Member of Leicester Board of Guardians.	CLI	787
SHORT, DR. T. S. - -	Visiting Physician Poor Law Infirmary, etc., Birmingham.	CLII	787
SIMPSON, H. - - -	Member of Board of Guardians, Aston Union, and Secretary, Gas Workers' and General Labourers' Society.	CLIII	788

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF NON-ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	NO. OF APPENDIX.	PAGE.
SINCLAIR, W. - - -	President of the Sheffield Federated Health Association.	XCVIII	725
SMITH, T. - - -	Member of Board of Guardians for the Parish of Birmingham.	CLIV	789
SMITH, THOS. - - -	Barrister-at-Law ; Clerk to the Ecclesall Board of Guardians ; Ex-Member of the Executive Committee of the Council of the Association of Poor Law Unions ; Member of the Parliamentary and General Purposes Committee of the National Poor Law Officers' Association, and Secretary of the Yorkshire Poor Law Conference.	XCIX	726
SPARK, FRED R. - - -	Justice of the Peace, Leeds - - -	C	727
STANISTREET, MISS M. -	Member and Treasurer of Brownlow Hill Brabazon Committee, and Member of Schools Committee.	XLVII	665
STONE, S. F. M. - - -	Clerk to the Trustees of the General Charities of the Borough of Leicester and Trinity Hospital.	CLV	789
STOPFORD, REV. J. B., M.A. -	Vicar of Leesfield, Oldham - - -	XLVIII	665
SYKES, A. - - - -	Hon. Secretary and Treasurer to various charitable organisations in Leeds.	CI	729
TARRANT, W. - - - -	Master, Ecclesall Bierlow Union Workhouse.	CII	730
THOMPSON, C. W. - - -	Relieving Officer, Holbeck Union -	CIII	731
THOMPSON, T. C. - - -	Justice of the Peace ; Member of the Northampton Board of Guardians and Rural District Council for sixteen years, and Chairman of the Rural District Council since 1895-96.	CLVI	790
TILLYARD, F. - - - -	Barrister ; Lecturer in Commercial Law at the University of Birmingham ; Organising Secretary, Charity Organisation Society, etc., Birmingham.	CLVII	791
TROUGHT, T. W., B.A. -	Member of the Birmingham City Council Distress Committee, and an Hon. Secretary of the City of Birmingham Aid Society ; Head Master, Camden Street Council School, Birmingham.	CLVIII	793
TROUT, DR. J. E. - - -	Guardian ; Chairman of Workhouse Management Committee ; Chairman of Central Outdoor Relief and Dispensary Committee, Birmingham.	CLIX	794
TURNER, DR. ALAN C. -	Secretary, British Medical Association, Sheffield, etc.	CIV	731
WHITESIDE, REV. DR.	Member of Catholic charitable organisations dealing with the poor in the City of Liverpool.	XLIX	669

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF NON-ORAL WITNESSES—continued.

NAME OF WITNESS.	OFFICIAL OR OTHER QUALIFICATIONS.	No. OF APPENDIX.	PAGE.
WHITWORTH, A. - - -	Vice-President of the Huddersfield Charity Organisation Society.	LXIV	684
WILCOCKSON, REV. J. -	Hon. Secretary, Church Army Social Work, Manchester and Salford.	L	669
WILSON, COUNCILLOR C. H. -	Justice of Peace, Leeds - - -	CV	732
WILSON, D., M.D. - -	District Medical Officer, and Medical Officer of the Workhouse, Huddersfield Union.	CVI	734
WREN, T. B. - - -	Church Army, Leeds - - -	CVII	734
YOUNG, B. J. - - -	Justice of the Peace ; Member of the Sheffield Board of Guardians since 1882.	CVIII	735
ZANETTI, Miss F. - -	Inspector, Chorlton Board of Guardians.	LI	671

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE ROYAL COMMISSION

ON THE

POOR LAWS AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS.

SEVENTY-SECOND DAY.

Monday, 14th January, 1907.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. C. S. LOCH.

Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELEPS.
The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).
Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. HENRY BALL, called; and Examined.

35451. (Chairman.) You are superintendent relieving officer of the parish of Liverpool?—I am.

35452. After our personal examination of the Poor Law administration in Liverpool I do not think it will be necessary to detain you at great length. You have prepared a statement which we may treat as your evidence in chief?—Yes. (The Witness handed in the following statement.)

1. In the Parish of Liverpool at the present time there are 1,305 families, comprising 2,324 persons, in receipt of outdoor relief. These numbers are made up as follows: 221 aged men, 968 aged women, 256 widows with 875 children, and four men temporarily disabled.

2. The amount of relief granted is 1s. 6d. per week for each child, nothing being allowed for widows who are able-bodied; thus an able-bodied widow with three children would receive 4s. 6d. per week. This relief is given partly in money and partly in kind (about one-third being in kind), i.e., bread, tea, sugar and meal, the kind being issued from the parish stores. For the aged the relief ranges from 2s. 6d. to 4s. each per week.

3. The persons receiving relief may be classified as follows: Those who are past labour; women (with children) who are either widows or whose husbands are in prison or in hospital; and a few whose husbands have deserted.

4. There is no relief given in aid of wages.

5. The main cause of pauperism, I think, is want of regular employment. Out of the whole of the labouring population of this parish there is only a very small percentage in constant work, and the earnings of the casual labourer are so small and precarious that he is unable to pay a subscription to a club or tontine or make any provision for emergencies, and has therefore no alternative at a time of stress but to seek Poor Law assistance.

6. There are a great many model lodging-houses, and they supply the majority of the inmates of the workhouse.

7. Drink is undoubtedly the cause of much pauperism.

Mr. H. Ball.
14 Jan. 1907.
Liverpool.

Causes of pauperism.
1. Unemployment.

2. Model lodging houses.
3. Drink.

Mr. H. Ball. 8. From time to time a considerable number of middle-aged men have applied for assistance, who have stated that they have been unable to get work, employers giving the preference to younger men as being less likely to make any claims for compensation under the Act. These men have been mostly able-bodied, and, in my opinion, capable of doing a fair day's work.

14 Jan. 1907. Liverpool. 4. Compensation Act. Effect of the port on pauperism.

9. The fact of Liverpool being a port adds very little to the numbers who apply for assistance.

35453. (Chairman.) You have no scale of outdoor relief, have you?—We have no scale.

35454. What is the practice as regards the amount generally given?—As a rule an able-bodied widow with two or more children, if they are healthy, is granted relief to the extent of 1s. 6d. per child.

35455. That is to say if there was an able-bodied widow with one child she would get 1s. 6d.?—There is no widow in receipt of outdoor relief with one child, provided they are both healthy.

35456. You would not give outdoor relief unless she had three children?—Two.

35457. What is the scale or practice with regard to adult persons to whom outdoor relief is given?—If they are healthy there is no relief granted under sixty years of age.

35458. But assuming they were infirm?—Then according to the surroundings they would get relief: if there was sickness they would be more liberally dealt with.

35459. You say in your statement that for the aged the relief ranges from 2s. 6d. to 4s.?—Yes.

35460. What is the supposition: is it that there are resources in addition to that 2s. 6d.?—That is the reason that there is only the 2s. 6d. given.

35461. It seemed to me the amount of the relief given was low, does not it rather result in more persons getting relief if the relief is low than if it is high and what may be called adequate?—When there was an Order by the Local Government Board, I think it was a few years ago, about the liberality in administering outdoor relief, the Liverpool Select Vestry adopted it to a great extent, and they increased each one of the aged poor as they came up 6d. a person to start with, and that was the cause of the people coming up from all round; it caused an increase of applications.

35462. The extra 6d. did?—Yes; since then some of the committee have given another 6d. again on that and in a few cases 4s. altogether has been given.

35463. What is about the lowest rent paid for one room?—One shilling. When I say a shilling, there are a few cases where they pay 9d., but then two of them will be together in that room; that is only 9d. as far as we are concerned, they only submit 9d. to the board. Two old people will be in a room and have two beds in it; two small beds.

35464. (Mr. Booth.) The total rent being 1s. 6d.; 9d. each?—Yes.

35465. (Chairman.) What would you give an aged couple?—From 5s. up to 7s., in a few instances 8s., but in only a few.

35466. Do you assume generally in giving outdoor relief that there are resources even if the fact is not proved by the relieving officer?—With very few exceptions there are some resources, and those we cannot get at, but we know by the surroundings that they are not living on what they state they are: there is that appearance of comfort which they could not have on their acknowledged income. Then again in Liverpool there are so many sources of getting assistance from the different places of worship which are very good to the poor, and these people know that and they will go to them; I have traced them myself to three different persuasions where they have been getting assistance.

35467. Is there any agreement or arrangement between the parish of Liverpool and the neighbouring unions as to the scale of relief?—None. The only agreement there is is that we do not remove each other's poor Liverpool to one another's unions except in the case of lunatics. That is an agreement between the different boards.

35468. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The three boards?—Yes. If a case comes down from West Derby across the border into Liverpool, a case that has been getting relief, whatever they have been getting in West Derby the Select Vestry grants the same, and the same if they come from Toxteth, and the Toxteth people I know do it in return, whatever Liverpool is giving to the poor, if they cross the border to Toxteth they give them the same there.

35469. (Chairman.) Therefore, there must be something like equality in the scale?—I cannot say there is. The West Derby people, with very few exceptions, do not give a widow with children money, they give it all in kind, then when they come across they receive kind from us; but if they remain with us any length of time, we will say when they have been there six months, and come up for the second or third time for renewal, there is a little money granted in addition.

35470. Your board have practised classification to a certain extent, as regards the different inmates of the workhouse?—No, I do not think they have accommodation to do it. I often feel that it is a great pity that there is not better classification in the workhouse.

35471. I thought that you had branch workhouses?—We have, but those branch workhouses are not sufficient to carry out the classification.

35472. The main workhouse is so big that the classification you attempted is not sufficient?—You could not do it in Brownlow Hill.

35473. If a woman came up who is a bad character, a drunkard and misconducts herself otherwise, I assume relief to you would not give outdoor relief?—With children I women. suppose you mean?

35474. No, perhaps she is in bad health?—I have known many cases where they have had bad characters, and although they have had comfortable homes, if they have come up for sickness they have been put on for four weeks on trial to be watched by the officers and reported upon in four weeks' time, and frequently they have improved and the relief has been continued.

35475. They have been proved to be conducting themselves well?—Yes.

35476. But an able-bodied woman who was of a rather bad character, either single or as a widow, who came up for relief, I assume would be sent to the house?—Yes.

35477. That would be the practice?—Yes, with regard to able-bodied women.

35478. If that is the practice it becomes all the more important to classify the inmates of the workhouse so that respectable women who are obliged to go to the workhouse should not have to consort with those?—It is my duty to go into the house with the different committees, and I feel at times very keenly it is a great pity they cannot classify them more than they do, but I know again they have not the accommodation to do it. When I see respectable young women, who have had a mishap and been obliged to come in there, and the class of people they have to go amongst, it invariably undoes them altogether.

35479. Going into the causes of pauperism, you think that the reason why there is so much pauperism in the parish of Liverpool, is due to the casual employment, and the uncertainty of the wage?—Greatly.

35480. The casual employment, so far as the docks is concerned, does not merely apply to unskilled labour, but applies also to the tradesmen?—Yes, it does.

35481. In fact it applies to everybody except just the carters, and the few persons in permanent employ?—It is very little we have to do, except it is a case of sickness, with anybody except the unskilled.

35482. Have you ever given any evidence as to, or taken any part in any enquiry into the system of casual labour?—No.

Scale of relief for widows.

Scale and conditions of out-relief to aged.

Undeclared means assumed in giving out-relief.

Waiver of settlement between three Liverpool unions.

- Liverpool. 35483. Has the question ever been looked at from the Poor Law point of view; as far as I know the investigation is generally between employed and employer?—That is so. Things may be much better down there now, because they have adopted, or are adopting, a system which was advocated by the late Mr. William Rathbone a good many years ago. He fought hard to get it done then; that is, have telephone stations along the line of docks, because it has been known that there have been 200 or 300 men wanted at one particular dock, when they have all been on other stands, as they call them, away from the place, and they could not get enough men.
- Earnings of casual labourers. 35484. You state that the earnings of the casual labourer are so small and precarious that he is unable to pay a subscription?—That is so. The casual labourer will not average 15s. a week the year round.
- "Special list" dock labourers. 35485. I am coming to the strong able-bodied casual labourer?—These are strong that I refer to.
35486. If they are on the special lists of the dock companies they get high wages?—The special list men are not casuals.
35487. You do not call them casuals?—No, they are there, and whenever a boat comes up they know they will be put on. In many instances they will be working night and day while it lasts, and they will make big money.
35488. The process would be that these strong able-bodied men who are on the special lists or earlier lists of the companies, would get good employment as long as they are strong?—Yes, as long as they are healthy.
35489. As they get older or weaker they would go lower down in the scale and get less and less employment?—That is so, until they begin to find some grey hairs, and then that person is not wanted at all in the vast majority of cases.
35490. Your experience is that few of these save?—There is not much saving amongst them: I do come across cases, but it is very seldom.
- Predominance of casual labour in Liverpool. 35491. Therefore the great bulk of the employment in the parish of Liverpool is casual labour?—Yes.
35492. Half-day or day?—Half-day or day, or they might work a couple of days and then not get anything again for a fortnight.
- Docks cause Immigration of labourers from Ireland and elsewhere 35493. Do you know that many persons come from outside Liverpool to work in the docks?—A great number come there with a view of getting on.
35494. From all parts?—Yes, from the farms and from Ireland. It is a common thing for them to come in there from the boat and twenty-four hours afterwards be in the workhouse.
35495. That regularly goes on from year to year?—Yes, year in and year out.
35496. I suppose that by the time any of them come to the condition to want Poor Law assistance they have got a settlement?—In time, or an irremovability. I have had them come under my notice many and many a time: they have been informed at the place they came from that if they came over here there was plenty of work for them, and they come over here and cannot get back: in many instances they are ashamed to go back if they had the means given to them. That is so, especially in the neighbourhood of Dublin: people who have never been in Liverpool before come up there and say there is plenty of work.
- Effect of casual labour on thrift. 35497. Should you say that the system of this very short employment discourages thrift and makes people rather reckless about the future?—If they had an opportunity a great many of them would save, but I put it to you that a man with one, two, or three children and his average earnings, if he gets four days in a week he is doing well that week.
35498. I am thinking rather of the other men who are earning high wages. I suppose you do not know much about them. You do not know if they during their good times put by in the savings bank?—My experience of them is that they do not.
- 14 Jan. 1907. 35499. That is that they would provide sufficient to keep the house going while they are employed upon the special list?—Yes: the wife, if she is a steady woman, has a comfortable home and plenty of furniture and clothing, but as soon as there is a fall off, the husband sick or thrown out of employment for some other reason, away go the things.
35500. They have saved very little?—Not saved, there is more comfort about the house.
35501. Coming to your point that middle-aged men are no longer employed, should you say that the age of employment has rather diminished at the docks?—Yes.
- Effect of Workmen's Compensation Act on unemployment. 35502. Since when: since the Compensation Act?—Yes, since that Act: I could not say how long ago it is, but you gentlemen will remember the Act I refer to.
35503. We have had evidence but no figures to support that statement. I suppose you have no figures to support it?—I have not: I have not kept any diary. When I have been round with the Committee in the workhouse I have seen able-bodied men healthy, but with their hair gone grey or turning, and it has been said to them, "Why do not you go to work at a less scale," and their answer has been, "I would if they would allow me, but the Trades Unions will not allow me to work."
35504. I assume that these men in casual employment if they once come to Liverpool remain in the hope that things will get better?—They seldom go away.
- Immigration of labourers to Liverpool. 35505. I do not quite understand the last sentence in your statement: you say the fact of Liverpool being port on a port adds very little to the numbers who apply for pauperism assistance?—That is people coming in by the shipping: it is very little.
- Effect of the fact of Liverpool being port on a port adds very little to the numbers who apply for pauperism assistance. 35506. But that does not affect the employment which the shipping gives?—No: although it has the name of being such a tremendous lot of shipping it employs no more men. There is one of these great leviathans come in and they will discharge her with the same number of men as they would one of only a third of her size or less than that a few years ago: they do not employ more men.
35507. Because the main space of the ship is taken up by engines?—Because of the improved appliances for discharging and loading again. Where a man would be employed at it a week a few years ago it will all be done in forty-eight hours now.
35508. (Mr. Booth.) That applies to the discharging rather than the loading, I suppose?—To both.
35509. But the loading still has to be done mainly by the actual stevedores in the hold by hand?—Not by hand.
35510. I can quite understand that you can get the cargo out of a ship by mechanical appliances, but it must be difficult to stow a cargo except by hand?—The way they lower it into the hold is surprising, and the speed at which it is done, and how the men are accustomed to it. It is taken away from the bottom of the hold as soon as it alights there, the man has it on one side and is ready for the next. It is surprising how they get through the work.
35511. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) What is the least that an individual can live upon in the Liverpool district generally?—They reckon down there that if they can get even 1s. a day they are doing well to live upon; they pay their lodging and live on that.
35512. Therefore it becomes more certain that you presume there must be other sources of income when you only give 2s. 6d. to an individual to exist upon for a week?—That is so. I have stated in my statement about it being given up to 4s. That is in cases where we could not see that there was the same amount of comfort as there has been in others which have only got the half-crown: that is in cases where we have been more uncertain what was coming in than in the other cases.
35513. I may take it in no case would you give up to what a person would require to live upon per week:

Mr. H. Ball. you do not give 6s. or 7s. under any circumstances ?—
 14 Jan: 1907. Only where there has been a serious case of illness have I known them to give any great amount.

Liverpool.
 Extent of providence in skilled as compared with unskilled workmen.

35514. I notice that you state that although a skilled workman is to some extent casual, that is that he does not get a full week's work week by week, nevertheless he hardly ever comes upon the Poor Law ?—I never get one (I am speaking of out-relief now) without it is a case of sickness, and then any savings they have had have gone.

35515. Then I may presume, may I not, that the skilled workmen do save ?—Either he or his wife; they have more comforts round them and they part with their things before they come to the parish. If that comes to my knowledge I always check it and see that they are attended to before the things do go away, because if they once lose them I am afraid they never get them back again.

35516. What I was rather wanting to get is this, whether there is on the part of the skilled workman a desire to provide for later on, in the sense in which there is not on the part of the unskilled labourer ?—I do not see anything of it in Liverpool further than providing a better home.

35517. Then that person comes upon the Poor Law permanently later on in life the same as the unskilled ?—Later on in life he does, unless he has a family and he has brought them up well.

Maintenance of parents by children.

35518. The family provides for him when the children are grown up ?—Yes, that is the practice amongst them.

35519. That practice does prevail still ?—Yes, to a very great extent.

35520. As much as ever ?—I think so.

Method of getting work at docks and extent of such work.

35521. With regard to this habit of only three or four days' work in a week at the utmost practically in many cases, what is done by the people with the other days when they are not at work ?—They will be down at the docks at some particular stand: that is where they congregate to be selected for work.

35522. I presume it would be fairly well known whether there was a probability of work on a particular day ?—These men know almost the hour a ship is expected in. If they are standing down at the Princes Dock (I am just giving that as an illustration) word will come down to them that such a ship will be in at perhaps the Bramley Moore, or some other dock further afield, at such and such a time. Then they go over there, and if a ship should come in there they will be too many down there for it, and a ship may be neglected at another place.

35523. Supposing a man had had his three or four days in the week and had got sufficient for him to provide for his family, and so on, would the temptation be not to get more of it ?—No, he would have six days and six nights if he could get it, but it is not there for him.

35524. He would not go down and say, I have had enough for this week, and I will clear off ?—With very few exceptions they go down, but they do not get it: there is not the work for them.

Decreased employment at docks per ton of shipping.

35525. (Mr. Lansbury.) On the question of discharging the steamers, what you rather wanted to point out was that more work was done in a less time and with less men than formerly ?—Yes. In these large ships there are three hatches, that is about the general run, and for their discharge there is the same number of men at each hatch now as there was at each hatch for the small ships, but the appliances are so improved that they get it out in a remarkably short time.

35526. It is very much more expensive to keep a steamship waiting there now ?—It would be that, but it is mainly to show the quickness they do it with, and to show to you gentlemen how it lessens the employment for the men.

35527. And in the loading too, taking it off the wagons on to the quay and from the quay on to the ship; that is all done by very improved machinery ?—That is all done away with to a great extent, because even the railway trucks will come alongside and take in or discharge right into the ship.

35528. And in or out of the warehouse ?—There is not so much warehousing done in Liverpool now, I am sorry to say. Decrease of warehousing in Liverpool.

35529. They could do it ?—They could, but they send it off by railway right from the dock.

35530. That lessens the amount of labour to be done in Liverpool ?—To a very great extent it has done.

35531. Is all you say about the port quite consistent with what you say in your last paragraph, that the fact of port on Liverpool being a port adds very little to the numbers who apply for assistance ?—I am referring there to people coming into the town by ships. Effect of a with what you say in your last paragraph, that the fact of port on Liverpool being a port adds very little to the numbers who apply for assistance ?—I am referring there to people coming into the town by ships.

35532. The evil of casual employment is very much concerned with the docks, is it not ?—That has a good deal to do with it. That was recognised by the late Mr. William Rathbone, and he tried with some people about the town to have a staff of their own working about the docks, and some of the men said they were willing to go to work at a reduced scale, not the 5s. per day, but at a reduced scale, in order to have permanent employment, but there was something stepped in: I know Mr. Rathbone failed in his object. We never have any one of the employees of the steamers engaged in the coasting trade —never one. Possibility of decasualising
dock labour.

35533. Because those boats come in fairly regularly with a fairly regular quantity of stuff ?—I believe the men work at a slightly reduced scale, and I am doubtful whether they are tied to belonging to the union, or to "have the button," as they term it, but I am not quite positive of that: they seem to work independently of the union. Coasting trade labour fairly regular.

35534. There is no organisation on the part of the employers since Mr. Rathbone ?—No, they employ good steady men, and there they are as the ships come in: the same men go on.

35535. Your remedy for it would be better organisation of the work at the docks ?—Better organisation would meet it to a very great extent. Need for decasualising
dock labour.

35536. And also the employers employing a regular staff all the year round ?—Yes, that would certainly do away with a lot of distress.

35537. Do you find any casual labour in any other employment besides at the docks ?—There are many casuals about the warehouses. Casual labour in warehouse and building trades.

35538. In the building trade at all ?—The building trade depends a great deal upon the weather. A man may start out in the morning and before twelve o'clock it will turn out bad weather and he has to go off, and there is no work for him for some days.

35539. Have you not found that the same argument which is applied to the discharging of ships applies almost to all industries which employ men and women ?—No, I cannot say that I have.

35540. Do you put up any very big buildings in your parish of Liverpool ?—We have had a few put up very large, but I am afraid the greater part of the workmen came from Manchester: they say "No," but I certainly cannot agree with them, because I had it from people who would be likely to know; the foreman who put the men on: although they did not bring these men from Manchester, they know what came from Manchester and they were put on where people would naturally think they would put on Liverpool men. Liverpool building done by Manchester
workmen.

35541. Was that anything to do with the Liverpool men not being so good as the Manchester men at the work ?—I should think not.

35542. That is not quite what I meant: in a big building in London now they put up an arrangement in the centre of the site and hoist everything up ?—So they do in Liverpool. Machinery causes decreased employment in building
trade.

35543. That must displace a considerable amount of labour ?—Yes, it takes off more than one half the number, I should imagine. For the sort of building we have had up in Liverpool, and which they are erecting now, there is not above one-half the unskilled labour required to do it.

- Liverpool. 35544. And the job gets finished ever so much quicker ?
—In one-third of the time, I should think.
- Docks the chief source of casual labour. 35545. Would not you think that all that sort of thing is the cause of a large number of men being casually employed in all industries where unskilled labour has to be used ?—It is, but it does not add much to the parish of Liverpool ; we really have not very many of these building labourers.
35546. It is really the docks ?—That is the chief thing with us.
- Desire of the dockers for regular employment. 35547. And some better arrangement ought to be made there as to the taking on of labour ?—Yes, it would add a great deal to the comfort of the people.
35548. You really think that the bulk of the men do want to get regular work ?—The bulk do ; I have no hesitation in saying that the men would work and be glad to get it if they could get it.
- Details as to administration of out-relief. The cross visitor : and his functions. 35549. (Mr. Bentham.) How many relieving officers have you ?—Five. We had six, but they reduced them some years ago.
35550. Do you sit on the relief committees alternatively or on all that you can ?—Every one.
35551. You sit with every committee ?—Every committee.
35552. Will you tell us what method you adopt for supervising the work of the relieving officer ?—We have a cross visitor who goes over all their cases. The relieving officers give a daily report sheet in, but that I do not agree with. I think it of little value.
35553. Who decides which cases the cross visitor shall visit ?—He has to visit them all.
35554. He visits every case ?—Every case.
35555. In what other way do you supervise the work of the relieving officers ?—I see what applications they take each morning : there is a desk application book in which is written down the name of every person that comes to the desk and the time of their application and what it is for. Then I go over them when the time is up for the officer to leave the office, and I check the reports next morning and see what they have done with them.
35556. Does the cross visitor issue a separate report at any time apart altogether from the information received from the relieving officer ?—Apart from everybody.
35557. Where does he enter that ?—He has a book on purpose for it. You mean in the application book ?
35558. No ?—He has separate books entirely and the relieving officer has not access to them.
35559. And he makes no report except what appears in that book ?—In those books that he has and his daily report sheet : he has to report each case that he visits in the day, the cross-visiting.
35560. If you find any cases that are in receipt of relief which are against the rules which are generally understood, what action do you take ?—Report it to the committee : bring the case up to the committee.
35561. To the same relief committee that granted the relief ?—The same relief committee. If they rule that it is to be granted, then I have nothing further to say in the matter.
35562. It does not go before the board ?—No. The proceedings of the relief committee go before the board and are read out there for confirmation or otherwise.
35563. Cases which deviate to a considerable extent from the recognised rule, would you not report them to the board as a matter for their approval specially ?—No.
- Question of giving relief to applicants resident with well-to-do non-liable relatives. 35564. In cases where an application is made by a person residing with relatives where the income of the whole household is sufficient for the maintenance of all and there is no legal liability attaching to the relatives of the applicant, do you grant outdoor relief ?—No. If there is sufficient income coming into that house, that is
- to the family circle, those that are living together, I would suggest to the committee that they do not grant outdoor relief.
35565. That is where they are not legally liable ?—Yes, Liverpool. so long as the income is coming in there, and we have evidence they are all living together, at one table.
35566. Suppose an aged person living with a married daughter, where the income of the son-in-law and his children is sufficient for every comfort for the household, but the applicant has no resources of his own, would you give outdoor relief ?—I would. You will allow me perhaps to give my reasons for suggesting to the committee they should give out-relief in those cases : a woman is married, she is not using her own money in support of her father or mother, it is her husband's money, and to my knowledge it has frequently caused unhappiness between the man and his wife, whereas if they are getting 2s. or 3s. a week they seem to be content with that assistance.
35567. In a case like that you recognise there is no destitution and no want, but you give it in order to maintain the happiness of the family ?—That is my reason for suggesting it. It is not because I have reason for thinking there is any want, but in many instances if you do not give relief they will be cleared out of the house : that is what is said.
35568. You think Poor Law relief ought to be given ?—If it was a woman living with her son, say, I should say "No," but where it is with a daughter I would not object to it : I think it ought to be given.
35569. You ignore moral liability ; is that what it amounts to ?—I do not ignore moral liability, but I do not see where the moral liability comes in for a son-in-law to support his father-in-law or mother-in-law.
35570. You give relief at times to the cases where the parents have been sent to prison for not sending their children regularly to school ?—Yes.
35571. Is not that against the order that you shall not give relief to persons whose children do not attend school ?—I do not agree with them giving it. My contention is that the wrong person is in gaol ; the woman should be in gaol, not the man. When these children are kept from school that man is either at work or looking for work, and the woman keeps them away and he knows nothing about it in the majority of cases till he is taken out of his bed and taken to gaol.
35572. You think your board is wrong in giving outdoor relief in those cases ?—I am strongly of opinion that that is so.
35573. (Chairman.) The man would have notice before he was arrested and taken out of his bed ?—He is supposed to do.
35574. You do not think it is served on him ?—No, the wife gets it and it goes on the fire. She says nothing about it, and very seldom the man knows anything about it until he is taken from his bed ; it is invariably from his bed that he is locked up.
35575. (Mr. Bentham.) In the case of an able-bodied person who is temporarily disabled, do you insist upon having a doctor's certificate in every case ?—If they are temporarily disabled when they apply for it ; there is no renewal if it is only temporary. I would not take the word of a person that they are not fit for work without a medical certificate ; it costs them nothing.
35576. Is that the practice ?—It is the practice there.
35577. There is a system of district visitors organised by the central relief committee, is there not ?—Yes.
35578. Have your relieving officers and yourself any intimate touch with those visitors ?—One attends each relief committee providing we have any case that would be likely to be accepted by them. If what is coming up are new applications, if we know they are not, from character or otherwise, suitable cases for the Central Relief Society, we tell them so.
35579. Would you know in every case where a new application is made that these people have not been
- Mr. H. Ball.
14 Jan. 1907.
- Out-relief to families of school defaulters.
- Medical certificates in cases of relief to temporarily disabled able-bodied.
- Details of co-operation between Poor Law and charity.

Mr. H. Ball. relieved by the Central Relief Society?—We know that.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.

35580. In every case?—Yes, in every case I may say.

35581. Do they ask you if people are in receipt of outdoor relief before they relieve?—They do frequently.

35582. You think you have a good system of co-operation between charity and the Poor Law?—Very good indeed.

35583. You would know in every case where you were giving relief in what way your relief was being supplemented by charity?—To a great extent, not in every case, they keep that back from us. This refers to the recipients of relief.

35584. Leaving out the spontaneous charity between one individual and another, but including the Central Relief Committee and other organised charitable institutions who relieve in such cases?—In the case of sickness where a man is in the hospital and the wife applies to the Charity Organisation Society they will appeal to us for information about the husband; what he is suffering from, how long he is likely to be ill, so that we get in touch with them. If they are able-bodied we have nothing to do with it; it is a case of their going and working in their chip-yard.

35585. In a case where you are giving a small amount of outdoor relief and it is supplemented by an organised relief society, you know of it?—Not if we are giving relief; we do not relieve if the Charity Organisation relieve; only one of us. When they have done with it, if it has become a chronic case, then they will send a note up to me.

Undeclared means assumed in giving out-relief.

35586. I thought you said you gave outdoor relief upon the assumption that it would be supplemented from some other source?—It is not from the Charity Organisation, but from religious bodies; we know that they do give it. It is not from the Charity Organisation; if we relieve the case they stop; when they have finished with it they will send word up to us and they will not relieve again without communicating with us.

Effect of waiver of settlement between Liverpool unions.

35587. With regard to the arrangement for non-removal of persons, are there any disadvantages attached to that arrangement?—I do not think so. It saves a lot of expense all round. When I say all round that is to the three unions; it saves a lot of expense and unnecessary trouble.

35588. If a case comes into your district out of another which had been granted outdoor relief for a time and then offered the house finally, would you stick to the house order which the other committee had given?—It would depend on what the house was for.

35589. Then you would reconsider the case?—Yes.

35590. Is it possible people might move out of one district into another in order to get better treatment by one committee of another board?—That is a matter of suspicion. I have been under the impression that they do so, and I believe so now.

35591. Do you think the influx is towards your union?—I cannot say. There are a good many leave and go over. As a rule they get the same as they had before; sometimes they return: old women who say they have been told they have not been long enough in that particular union; whether there is any truth in it I do not know; they come back and our board relieves them at the same rate they had before they left us.

35592. It has not been so apparent as to warrant your making a separate inquiry into the matter?—No, the probability is, I have thought, that they have not been so comfortable where they have gone as they thought they would be.

Details of co-operation between Poor Law and charity

35593. (Miss Hill.) I gather you think the communication between the organised charity and yourself is pretty effectual and satisfactory?—It is very satisfactory from my point of view.

35594. But there is a good deal of charity which does not choose to link itself with the more organised body?—Yes. I would not expect the religious bodies to be organised with the Charity Organisation. They are only Liverpool. to give to their own flock or those who are supposed to be.

35595. Is there any reason why they should not communicate what they are giving?—I do not know that there is. I may say this, that if they know it they will not give it to one outside their own flock, as I might term it.

35596. I gather that forms a very great difficulty in Undeclared your deciding what money you ought to give—the dis- means as- organised charity is at the root of the difficulty in deter- summed in mining what the people ought to have?—If the board giving out- relief. could know for a fact what they were getting it would make it better all round.

35597. So the responsibility is pretty heavy on the disorganised charity for not communicating either with the organised charity or yourself with regard to what they are doing?—I would not expect them to communicate with our department, not from the churches and chapels. It is more of a private ground.

35598. You do not make any inquiries of the organisations in your own neighbourhood?—I do not ask them; I think they would come to the conclusion I was intruding if I did do so.

35599. In consequence of that you are obliged to give a smaller amount of relief, and you give up the hope of inquiring with regard to what is supplementing that?—We know that they do get it from these bodies because the visitors are seen going there.

35600. You do not know how much?—No.

35601. Therefore it leaves you to have to grant a sum which you hope may be enough, but you do not know very much about it?—All we really do know for a fact is that there is something coming in from some source; they will not tell us and do not tell us.

35602. Do you ask the people whether they are getting anything?—We ask, "Are you getting any assistance from any source whatever?"

35603. And they usually say no?—Yes.

35604. If you find out that they have not told the truth, do you cut them off?—No, as a rule it is reported to the committee and the committee will speak very strongly to them of the danger they are running. If it is anything glaring, they will do so.

35605. If there is any regular allowance from a church or chapel which they do not confess to when you ask them, how are they treated?—We caution them as a rule.

35606. (Mr. Phelps.) You have five relieving officers under you?—Yes.

35607. Are they appointed by the board?—Yes.

Appointment, training, and class of relieving officers.

35608. Have you any voice in their appointment?—No, I should be sorry if I had.

35609. What class of people do they come from?—As a rule they are men who have worked their way up. They have been warrant officers, and in two instances have been cross visitors.

35610. Have they, as a rule, had any previous training?—Yes, as warrant officers; warrant officers do the relieving officers' duties when they are away on their holidays or sick.

35611. How is a man appointed warrant officer?—He is appointed by the board.

35612. How many have you?—Two.

35613. They take the place of a relieving officer who falls out?—Yes.

35614. Is anything done with regard to their training after they are appointed?—They are supposed to know relieving the duties when they are appointed. As a rule they officers. are there several years before ever they are promoted.

35615. Do they, for instance, attend lectures at the Liverpool University College?—No.

Liverpool.

35616. They do not try to take any diploma or any certificate of knowledge?—No.

35617. Do you think that would be a good thing?—It is a business in which I find that common-sense goes before a lot of theory.

35618. You think that is enough to rely upon?—I think it is more serviceable to have good sound common-sense.

35619. You do not think a combination of the two would be stronger?—If you had a man filled with common-sense and scientific knowledge as well, that would work very well.

The proper number of cases for a relieving officer.

35620. How many cases do you think a relieving officer can look after?—What is your idea of full work?—300 to 350 cases.

35621. He could conduct the inquiries and keep a general supervision over as many as that?—Yes, I expect them to visit every case that is on their books once in eight or nine days.

35622. That implies visiting forty cases a day?—Well, there is a long time from twelve o'clock in the day when he gets his dinner and goes out. You must understand that in a place like Liverpool he has not far to walk about his district. The streets are all thickly packed. There are streets where there will be thirty families on the books.

Relieving officers' diary.

35623. He would have a good deal of book work to do as well as visiting?—There is not very much book-work; he does not enter up his cases.

35624. Does he keep a diary?—He has to keep a diary.

35625. An official diary; is that ever produced before the Committee?—It is.

35626. Do you look over it?—Yes.

Common lodging-houses as sources of pauperism.

35627. I see in one of your answers you say there are a great many model lodging-houses and they supply the majority of the inmates of the workhouse. Do you mean model lodging-houses or common lodging-houses?—Model common lodging-houses.

35628. What is a model lodging-house?—They are called model in Liverpool; I do not know what they call them in other towns. They go by the name of model lodging-houses; they will take in as many as 200 men in some of them.

35629. Are they run by the corporation or by societies?—No.

35630. By individuals?—There is one, the David Lewis Hostel, as to which I do not know who is running it; it was erected on an old market that belonged to the corporation by some money left by David Lewis. I do not know who is running that.

35631. That is a charitable institution at all events?—They pay more for lodging there than they do in the others, and there is a better class go to it.

35632. Your distinction is between a model lodging-house and a common lodging-house?—They could not be commoner than some of the model lodging-houses are.

35633. A common lodging-house owned by A. B. and run for a profit by him?—All the others with the exception of the David Lewis Hostel are run for a profit.

35634. They are common lodging-houses?—Yes.

35635. You find these attract a good many people to Liverpool?—I do not know about attract them; they come to Liverpool and that is where they get to, or the Salvation Army Barracks. They will sleep there a night in order to get into our workhouse or some particular workhouse. Those I am referring to will stop there a night to get into our workhouse.

35636. Supposing a tramp comes into Liverpool, he would go to the tramps' ward?—If they come into Liverpool we have no tramps' ward, it is up in the West Derby Union.

Common lodging-houses and free shelters and the classes using them.

35637. Would he go to one of these lodging-houses?—Mr. H. Ball. Not as a rule, that class of people will not part with their money. 14 Jan. 1907.

35638. Have you shelters that take people for nothing at night?—Yes. Liverpool.

35639. Do you think they attract them?—They attract them there; these I am referring to are in the Parish of Liverpool, and I know they have some in the West Derby Union, but what the result of their having them is I cannot say, but I know these two we have in the Parish of Liverpool attract a great many there; they sleep one night there and come to the relieving officer in the morning.

35640. Do people live in these model lodging-houses altogether month by month, or do they only live there temporarily?—If they take their lodgings by the week they save I think 4d. on the week's pay; and there are a great number that have been there for years.

35641. And they go out and they are part of the supply of labour that looks for work at the docks and elsewhere?—Yes.

35642. Have you anything to suggest with regard to them, as to how the evil which you think they cause could be diminished?—No, they are a class of men that are not fit to go into private lodgings.

35643. Single men as a rule?—No, married men who have run away from their wives and will not work; a drunken dissolute lot who run away from their wives. We find them there frequently when we wait them to lock them up when the wives become chargeable.

35644. That is not a very hopeful class?—No, I am afraid you would do no good with them.

35645. (Dr. Downes.) Have you any free distribution of food?—Do you mean from the parish? Charitable food distribution and its effects.

35646. I mean from philanthropic people?—There is a lot of that.

35647. In the winter time?—Yes, and also fuel.

35648. What is your view of that; do you think it does good, or does it attract these people?—That does a lot of good.

35649. You think it does good?—A lot of good. I think, as a rule, the people deserve to get it.

35650. How is it given?—There again the clergy will step in and give a recommendation of the names of the people who are suitable for it.

35651. What I had in mind was rather a free distribution of food to any casuals or anybody that might turn up?—No, I do not know anything of the kind in Liverpool.

35652. Do the guardians get any return of deaths from starvation or want of food?—I have not known of them. Infrequency of deaths from starvation in Liverpool.

35653. Have you any information as to the number of those in Liverpool?—Only what I see in the papers; they are very rare, very rare indeed. I may say that if a person died of starvation in a place like Liverpool it would be a case that was too proud to go and ask for food; it would be found dead in some quiet place, because nobody need die of starvation in Liverpool.

35654. They are cases that have not applied to the Poor Law?—Nor yet the Charity Organisation.

35655. I understand there are very few?—Very few indeed.

35656. Is the number of your orders for medical relief increasing in Liverpool?—Yes, it has increased greatly. Increase of medical relief in Liverpool and its causes.

35657. To what do you attribute that?—It started when the alteration was made. It used to be considered relief, and as soon as that was stopped and we had not to book that and interfere with the vote they rushed up. They will pass two dispensaries where they could be attended to for 1d. to come up and get a note for the parish doctor.

Mr. H. Ball. --35658. Can you suggest any reason why they should do that?—No I cannot, because the dispensaries are there with very clever doctors in them—very clever doctors.

Liverpool.

35659. Is it the possibility of getting medical extras?—No, it is so seldom that the doctors recommend any extras in Liverpool that it cannot be for what they receive; it is only the medicine. The only thing I can attribute it to is that the woman comes up for it for the children: the man is out doing a bit of work or looking for work, and the woman comes up because the child is ill and gets a note for the doctor to attend. They save 1d. If there were two children it would be 2d., first of all for the note to the dispensary, 1d. for each, and then for each article that the doctor orders they have to pay 1d.; if there were pills it would be 1d.; if a bottle 1d., and a powder 1d.

35660. They save all that?—Yes.

Degree of relieving officers' investigation into applications for medical relief.

35661. What inquiry is made into the medical relief in Liverpool?—You mean before they grant it?

35662. I am speaking of the inquiry by the relieving officers. What inquiries do they make?—They make inquiries to see whether the head of the family is in a position to pay for a doctor.

35663. How soon would they make that inquiry?—On the same day as the application.

35664. Would they visit again?—Not afterwards because by the time they would have been round there the doctor would have been and seen the patient; if he found the head of the family was in a position to pay for a doctor he would cancel that order.

35665. What would your view be as to the supervision of medical relief? Do you think it should be supervised with as much strictness as ordinary relief?—No, I do not because those persons might be able to keep their family, but could not pay for a doctor.

35666. You draw a distinction?—I do.

Medical relief as the first step to pauperism.

35667. Do you find that medical relief is often the first step to pauperism?—It has been frequently the case, but I have not seen much of it lately. People are in the habit of getting a note for the doctor with a view of getting a certificate; it is a very, very rare occurrence indeed for a medical officer to give a note that a person is able to work.

Method of admission to branch workhouses.

35668. You have a number of branch institutions in Liverpool in addition to Brownlow Hill?—Yes.

35669. How are the admissions regulated?—Through Brownlow Hill, every one.

35670. They distribute them?—Yes.

Unskilled labour a source of pauperism.

35671. (Mr. Chandler.) I think you stated that the majority of your cases are drawn from what we call the unskilled labouring classes?—Yes, the vast majority.

35672. That would be a class of men engaged in work where the employer would look rather more to muscular strength than brains?—It is muscular strength they look to rather than brains.

Effect of Workmen's Compensation Act on employment of aged workmen.

35673. Do you not think with reference to Paragraph 8 of your statement as to employers giving preference to young men, that is most likely to have arisen on that account?—No; since that Act came into force, as soon as these men show age, and their hair is grey, they find the difference; I have known them to dye their hair when they went to the docks looking for work if they were anywhere near grey; fine able-bodied men that I have felt confident if they could get work, would give a fair honest day's work.

35674. But the selection of the young men was the Liverpool prevailing practice long before the Act was passed?—That might be; then if I were a foreman putting them on I should say: "Here are these men, who have been working under me for years, I will not turn them away as long as they do their work," but now I should have to consider my employer's liability, and where there was any doubt about anyone getting aged I would turn them off.

35675. I think you have this morning deplored on more than one occasion the fact that there is not work for these men to do at the docks, that so many are turned away day by day?—There is no work.

35676. How would the question of the Employers' Liability Act or unions supply a greater volume of labour there?—I do not know that it would.

35677. There would still be the number turned away?—There are too many in the town; if every place was in full swing they could not employ all the labour there is in Liverpool.

Excess of unskilled labour in Liverpool.

35678. So it is not the trade unions or the Employers' Liability Act?—No, the labour is not there for them.

35679. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You said, I think, that since 1900 the out-relief has increased in amount?—It was about then.

Effect of Mr. Chaplin's Circular of 1900 as to aged and deserving poor.

35680. That was the time Mr. Chaplin's circular was issued?—I would not be sure of the date; you no doubt know what I am referring to.

35681. The result was an increased number of applications?—Yes, after it got known about that they got more relief.

35682. Was it supposed that the guardians would give relief more freely, not only in amount, but to persons to whom they previously would not give outdoor relief?—It was practically understood so by the board, that they were to be more easy with the people.

35683. Therefore they were not merely confining themselves to giving more adequate out-relief, but extending the class to those to whom they would not give outdoor relief before?—I take it so, both?

35684. Has that been continued?—It is not done so much now as it was, not to a great extent.

35685. Has the amount been increased since that time?—Yes, individually.

35686. It is larger than it was before?—Yes.

35687. Does that make any substantial difference?—It has done; but the committees now as a rule are working differently; they are not starting any, unless there is some exceptional reason for it, at more than half-a-crown. I am speaking now of the aged; they start them at half-a-crown, and then have them under observation.

35688. (Chairman.) What is the average attendance at your relief committees?—The average would be about five.

Attendance and speed of work at relief committees.

35689. (Mr. Gardiner.) How many cases do you get through in an hour on an average, do you think?—About sixty.

35690. That is renewals and new cases?—Yes.

35691. And medical orders?—The medical orders do not appear before the committee, only for confirmation in bulk.

Orders for medical relief confirmed in bulk.

Miss J. S. THORBURN, called; and Examined.

Miss J. S. Thorburn. 35692. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Select Vestry of Liverpool?—I am.

14 Jan. 1907.

35693. You have prepared so full and clear a statement that I shall only have to supplement it by very few questions if you will hand it in so that we can treat it as your examination-in-chief?—Certainly. (The Witness handed in the following statement.)

1. In 1894 three women, of whom I was one, were elected Lady to the Select Vestry of Liverpool for the first time. Poor guardians in Law work proved so interesting, and the opportunities Liverpool and their work.

Liverpool.

of being of use so many, that I, to a great extent, gave up my charitable and political work, and gave all my time to our workhouse and its many branches.

2. The good-will and patience shown by several of our head officials in teaching me how our various institutions were managed, and explaining many details of the Poor Law as it concerned us, helped me greatly; and my having good health and living within half a mile of the workhouse made my work easier.

Ladies' Committee.

3. We have no Ladies' Committee, but the filling of the subordinate posts among the women officers is almost always referred to "the ladies," and we do a good deal of the preliminary work of the Selection Committees for the higher posts, besides sharing in the final vote.

4. Many matters of detail are referred to "the chairman, vice-chairman and ladies."

5. All cases of young women or girls requiring help are referred to "one of the ladies."

6. We are authorised to visit all institutions containing women or children whenever we think fit, and to report directly to the various committees or quietly to the chairman or governor as we think best. (We go everywhere, except to Maghull, by tram and at our own expense.)

7. We keep an eye on the sewing rooms and laundries, and visit more particularly those parts of the hospitals and workhouse which the gentlemen very rarely visit.

8. All matters connected with the nurses' homes are discussed with us, and proposed changes in the working of the hospital which can be understood by persons without medical training are explained to one or two of us beforehand.

9. One of us talks over difficulties and changes on the women's side of the workhouses with the matrons in a similar way. This, however, is the result of friendly co-operation with the lady superintendent and matrons and has never been exactly authorised by the committees.

Non-Poor Law lady visitors for workhouse

10. N.B.—Before women were elected to the vestry, twenty ladies, ten Protestants and ten Catholic, were appointed by it as "lady visitors," but several of them had ceased to visit.

11. We have been careful never to interfere with the excellent work carried on by several of the remaining ladies, but just to try to help any lady when asked by her to do so. We have never had the slightest friction either among ourselves or with any of the lady visitors.

Curative Work.

Work of ladies in workhouse
lock wards.

12. The lock wards are visited by two lady visitors, one Protestant and one Catholic. Each lady hold a class for the women of her own faith, and does her best to influence them and to induce them to go into the institution for which they are best fitted when they leave the hospital.

13. The nurses help these two ladies so far as their official position permits, and many girls have been saved and are now earning honourable livelihoods.

14. I wish the law would authorise us to read and if necessary to ask the governor to withhold letters addressed to inmates of these wards. When good women are trying to save a girl it is discouraging for the law to oblige our nurse to hand her letters which we strongly suspect to come from some vile woman who is trying to get her back to a bad life.

15. The maternity wards are visited by ladies representing homes. Every unmarried woman who enters such a ward for the first time is given the chance of going to a home with her baby.

Ladies' curative work among fallen women in the
workhouse.

16. Those who consent to go, are cared for and trained, and when a time of probation is over are placed in situations, and helped to provide for the baby, for which a safe home is also found.

17. The vestry gives a grant after the mother has been three months in the home.

18. The Catholic Home is now full and there may be a difficulty as to Catholic girls soon.

Miss J. S.
Thorburn.

19. All hopeful cases among the blind, the deaf and dumb, the slightly epileptic, and the semi-imbecile are sent to special institutions at the cost of the vestry.

14 Jan. 1907.
Liverpool.

20. When girls first come into the workhouse every effort is made to get them out of it and into situations as soon as possible, and a girl gets more than one chance before we give up trying to help her.

21. Women who behave well in the place are helped out after a time, if suitable for service, and are often allowed to leave their children in our schools and to pay a nominal amount for them.

22. Any nurse who finds that one of her well-behaved patients is nearly well, and needs help in order to make a fresh start in the world, sends a message to a woman guardian who inquires into the circumstances and does her best to help.

23. Both the men guardians and the officials encourage us in all attempts to help individuals in this way.

Power of Detention.

24. Till our barrack schools were closed, the weak-minded girls brought up in them were detained till the age of twenty-one or older, and some very weak-minded girls are now detained in our "Dingle" Home.

Detention of feeble-minded girls in workhouse and need of legal powers.

25. In some "special cases" weak-minded girls have been detained in our workhouse by our late matron, who was exceedingly good in taking responsibility, in order to protect such girls.

26. All this has been done by both officials and guardians straining their powers and taking some little risk in order to protect some helpless girls.

27. If the law would give guardians power to detain weak-minded girls it would undoubtedly enable us to save a larger number of such girls, and would to a considerable extent reduce the number of the "unfit" in the next generation.

28. If the law would enable guardians to detain in hospital children with certain forms of eye disease, for a strictly limited length of time, it would save the eyes of some children. Their parents take them out when their eyes are half-cured and bring them back in a few days or weeks with their eyes much worse. This goes on till the eyes get too bad for cure to be possible. As it is only the eyes and not the life of the children that is endangered our doctors do not believe themselves to have a right to detain such children.

Need of
power to detain children suffering from ophthalmia.

Effect of Workhouse Life on Inmates.

29. In our workhouse I have known two or three of the best, bravest, and most truly Christian women that any country could produce, but apart from these very exceptional women there is a class of elderly or old women who seem to me to compare fairly with average women of their class outside.

Effect of workhouse life on inmates.

30. These women have generally drifted into the workhouse, in the first instance, through illness or some accidental circumstance.

31. Having no friends with whom to find a home outside, and being below the average in bodily strength, else lacking in initiative, they have found the warmth, regular food, and leisureliness of workhouse life, with its entire absence of anxiety or anything like "driving," more to their minds than the struggle and freedom of a world in which the weak go to the wall.

Attractions of workhouse to elderly
women.

32. They have settled down, made their homes in the workhouse, and found all their interests in its life.

33. These women are noticed, are given special duties under officers, and so get little privileges, and a small share of the authority over others, which seems particularly dear to the workhouse mind.

34. They are of much value in the working of the place, and are treated with consideration by the officers.

Miss J. S. Thorburn.
14 Jan. 1907.
Liverpool.

35. These women rarely "peach" on a sister inmate unless they have had a quarrel with her, but, short of this, they range themselves with guardians and officers and try to promote the well-being of the institution, of which they seem to be really proud.

36. They are apt to be jealous and suspicious of each other, and they pride themselves on their superiority to the rest of the women in a somewhat pharisaical manner, but I don't think the life has done them harm.

Apathy of aged women in workhouse and its causes.

37. There are many very old women both in house and hospital who are simply waiting for the end. Their chief desires are warmth and hot tea, and their chief dislike being bathed. They doze a good deal and sit or lie hour after hour, and year after year, doing nothing, and seem to me more like human vegetables than human beings. I think that the leisureliness of workhouse life must have produced in them this astonishing power of contentedly doing nothing.

Effect of workhouse on able-bodied women.

38. The general body of the able-bodied women consist of a few women who were simply unlucky in life, or weak of character when they first entered the workhouse, and who have undoubtedly degenerated from association with the very bad women and the general influence of the life.

Women "ins-and-outs."

39. Then there are the respectable ins and outs who really work at bag making or mending, at the cotton, at chip selling, or at hawking when there is work to be got, and who turn into the workhouse regularly and cheerfully whenever it fails. These women are rough and noisy, and they are so ignorant of domestic work or sewing that they are of little use in the work of the place. A large proportion of them are Irish. When they quarrel their language is more than strong, but I doubt whether they really understand or mean what they say. Many of these are fond of their children and kindly to others.

40. Then there are the ins and outs who simply cannot resist the temptation to drink; they go out whenever they think they can earn, beg, or get from friends a few coppers for drink, and come back when they can't get any more drink.

Vicious women in the workhouse and their effect on other inmates.

41. Then there are the very bad and vile women. These cannot be described, and the real hardship of workhouse life lies in moderately decent women having to live and continually associate with these wretches.

42. Many seem to be morally insane, and of these some eventually become so insane as to be sent to an asylum; others are known to be bad in the third generation, and seem to have been born so.

43. These are the curses of the place, and they have the whip hand of us, as they have a legal right to come in and go out as they like, and beyond sending one to the police court at times (which some don't mind) there is nothing that we now do to punish them.

44. The oldest officers tell me that these women are nothing like as bad to manage as their predecessors were twenty or thirty years ago. Pulling down walls, and so turning small wards and yards into large ones, and increasing the staff of nurses and officers, has so reduced their power for evil that they are now only "horrors" and not "horrors and terrors" as they used to be.

45. As they are kept sober and clean in the workhouse, and as many kinds of wickedness are impossible within its walls, workhouse life must do these women some good in a way.

Laziness and dishonesty of able-bodied women in workhouse.

46. The commonest faults of able-bodied workhouse women as a body are laziness and dishonesty. I have never yet seen a workhouse woman hurry. Every movement is taken in a leisurely way. Our best workers do not do in a day more than half of what a good char-woman outside would do. This is one of the difficulties in getting young women taken out of the workhouse to stop in the situations found for them. They cannot understand why the mistress objects to their dawdling through their work as they have always been used to do inside.

47. I fear that nearly all our able-bodied women steal when they get the chance. They steal the milk and eggs from the hospital; they steal the coppers, biscuits, sugar, and sweets given to the sick by their friends; they steal the nurses' clothes—even big things like coats, blouses, and Liverpool boots—they steal the little things that I bring in as presents; they steal the toys given to the children; they steal everything. In some cases they evidently steal in order to have the pleasure of giving the stolen thing away, and in some cases it seems to be the love of accumulating, as when they find a "hidey-hole" and collect in it pieces of coal, soap, brick for brick-dust, etc., etc. This generally recognised and almost universal dishonesty seems to me to be in great part the result of the women having no private property of their own when in the workhouse, and is to my mind the worst result of workhouse life.

Cause of dishonesty of able-bodied women in workhouse.

48. The views which workhouse habitués express from time to time are interesting as showing their point of view. One woman said to the portress in my hearing, "I lives here; you are only a paid person." Another said to a policeman, "You're a beggar come over from Ireland to live out of the rates, that's what you are." Another said to a gentleman holding an important post, "You're only a servant; I want to see your masters." A man told a group of our nurses, "If it wasn't for the likes of us the likes of you wouldn't be here."

Attitude of workhouse habitués to their dependence on the rates.

A woman said to me quite politely, "I've had four children born in here and four buried by the parish; the guardians ought to do something for me, miss." She spoke as a good customer to whom we were under an obligation.

49. It is the decent people who come in through misfortune who are friendly and grateful and to whom it is a pleasure to help.

50. It is difficult to believe, but it is an actual fact, that respectable young married women, who enter our "class" of marriage and maternity wards, not infrequently declare themselves unmarried, so that their husbands shall not run any risk of being asked to pay on their account.

Concealment of marriage by mothers in workhouse to avoid husbands being charged with maintenance.

51. We as a "port parish" get a certain number of foreigners who are sent into our workhouse or its hospital as soon as they reach Liverpool.

52. The number of these is not at any one time large as compared with the total number our inmates, but as almost every foreigner has to be treated more or less as a "special case" the trouble and difficulty caused by them is often serious.

Effect of the port on Liverpool's pauperism: foreigners becoming paupers.

53. These foreigners are:—

1st. Emigrants passing through Liverpool; (a) One or two members of a family get ill; then they come to us and stay with us till they are all well and able to go on. One family of six were in our hospital for over a year. (b) The "undesirable" members of families: these get as far as Liverpool with their relations. Then the ship's doctor, who knows they won't be let pass into the United States of America, refused to "pass" them. They are promptly sent up to our workhouse and stay with us till they die, while the rest of their families go on.

2nd. Foreigners rejected by the United States of America as "undesirable"; they are brought back to Liverpool by the ships, being sent up to us at once.

3rd. Foreigners who have never been in Liverpool at all, but who are sent to us by sea from ports all over the world, as the cheapest and easiest way of getting rid of them in a humane manner.

54. We get at times Russians, Poles, Finns, Scandinavians, Germans, Spaniards, U.S. Americans, South Americans, Arabs, people from the Holy Land, Jews, and negroes of whose legal nationality we are not certain. Very rarely we get an Italian; never a Frenchman.

55. The Germans and Scandinavians are generally decent people, who try to fall into our ways and are anxious to learn English, but the difficulty with some Poles, Armenians and Arabs is at times serious.

56. The poor creatures find themselves, as they think, imprisoned by people with whom they can't speak, and whose food, habits, and clothes are all strange to them. Sometimes they seem so nearly mad that the officers are half afraid of them. One or two cases of this kind will upset a whole division.

Liverpool.

57. The real lunatics sent up by the ships go on to the asylums after a few days, and as their names do not appear on our lunatic lists more than once, I do not know how many they are.

Defects.

Need for more inter-communication between Poor Law officers as to particulars of pauper cases.

58. The only serious defect I see in our own system is the way in which the different departments keep their knowledge of the individual inmates in information-tight departments. Any guardian can, by applying to from two to five different officers, collect a large and reliable amount of information about any particular case, and this is quite satisfactory, but the officers have neither the time nor the right to do this, and the result is that the head master at our cottage homes often knows nothing of the antecedents or circumstances of the children under his care.

59. The friendless decent woman passing into the workhouse through our hospital will be known to be decent by the outside officer and the nurse, but the workhouse officer over her won't know everything about her at first, and will have to find out about her gradually.

60. The outside officers may be spending much time and trouble in testing the story told by some woman who is systematically deceiving them, while the officer or nurse who is over the woman inside may have heard from her, when off her guard, facts which would put them on the right track at once.

Classes Obtaining Out-Door Relief.

The condition upon which out-relief is granted in Liverpool.

61. All destitute persons of fairly good character who are believed to be unable to support themselves owing to age or infirmity get out-door relief subject to certain conditions.

1st. They must lead moral and fairly sober lives.

2nd. They must keep themselves not too dirty, and must live under conditions not grossly objectionable as to over-crowding.

3rd. Children must be kept regularly to school.

4th. They must not deceive the officers as to serious matters.

62. We try to begin to give relief before the people have begun to pawn their things.

63. Some of our out-relief people come into our hospital for a few weeks when ill, or into the workhouse for warmth during the winter, and get their out-relief again as a matter of course when they go out.

64. When applicants are offered "the house" it is either because we feel sure that they are not in real need, and are only "trying it on," or else because one of our four conditions has been broken. We are not very strict. We rarely give out-relief to recently deserted wives and widows with only one child depending, but we sometimes keep the child at a nominal cost to the mother. In cases of consumption we give extra relief on the condition that the consumptive person sleeps in a separate room.

65. During the four coldest weeks in the year we give each "case" 1s. a week extra for coals.

Out-Relief and Charity.

Out-relief supplemented by wages or charity.

66. Very few persons on out-relief really live on their parish money. The young widows with children are of course expected to work as soon as the youngest child can go to school. Many of our old ladies still earn from 1s. to 4s. a week. Some still do two or three days charring in the week for neighbours or old employers. Some break up and sell chips, some do a little hawking, many do a little needlework. A few do casual and inferior sick nursing. Two act as canvassers. Two or three keep lodgers. Many help relatives with their children and get a room rent-free and some food in return.

67. Nearly all persons on out-relief receive charity as well, as indeed some of our charities practically refuse to help people unless we give them parish money first. The idea is that the parish keeps the people from destitution, and the charities then come in and make their lives comfortable in a small way.

68. The Seaman's Charity (for widows of seamen with young families), the Caledonian, the Foreigners' Aid, the St. Vincent de Paul, The Molyneux, the Needle-women's, the "poor funds" connected with most of our churches and chapels, and the almshouses all help numbers of people on our lists.

Miss J. S. Thorburn.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.

Occupants of almshouses in receipt of out-relief.

69. The history of these almshouses is complicated, but out of the eighty to eighty-six old ladies inhabiting them, forty-six now receive out-relief from us and seventeen of the remainder get 3s. 6d. a week as Warwick pensions. As this particular charity is managed by Mr. Hagger and seven trustees chosen by us, no one gets it and the parish money at the same time. The forty-six in the other almshouses generally get 6d. a week less than they would get if they had to pay rent. With the managers of the other charities we have a sort of understanding that they tell our officers what they give in each case, and that we do not refuse or reduce our out-relief on account of what they give.

70. Eight or ten old ladies are in private "Homes," each gets her weekly 2s. 6d. and hands it over to the "Homes." Out-relief supplemented by charity.

71. Besides these well-known charities there is an unknown, irregular, but very large amount of private charity given to many of the people on our lists. When I get on confidential terms with one of our old ladies, I almost always find that Mrs. A. allows 1s. or 6d. a week; that Mrs. B. gives scraps, or tea, or dripping; that Mrs. D. allows her to call for old boxes for firewood; coals are given once or twice in winter; that an old employer or absent relative "remembers" now and then. In many cases the church, chapel, priest, or mother's meeting lady gives something.

72. Except in the case of mourning out of club money, and a very rare pair of boots, none of our out-relief women seem ever to buy clothes. These are always given by some one.

73. I think many of our out-relief people look on Guardians tricking the guardians just as many ladies look on tricking deceived by the custom house officers. They dislike being found out, applicants for but do not look on their conduct as in any sense dishonest out-relief. or disgraceful.

74. The large majority are in burial clubs.

Paupers in burial clubs.

75. I live in and am elected for the district for which I help to give out-relief. This is generally held to be objectionable, but I find it a great saving of time in visiting special cases, in getting information from people who might not give it to a man officer, and in sometimes getting a little private help. It is also convenient at times to charitable ladies, who prefer speaking to me to going to the relief officer. As I am much the strictest member of my relief committee, it is good for the ratepayers, and even if two or three people vote against me at elections, because I have refused to help them or their relations to get out-relief, the advantages out-weigh the objections.

The pros and cons of guardians administering relief to their constituents.

35694. (Chairman.) You have given special attention to curative work, and I understand you find that curative work is very much marred by a lack of power of detention? —I think so. There are many cases of girls who are not entirely feeble-minded, but who are simple-minded, and it would be a great help if we could detain them.

Need of power to detain feeble-minded women.

35695. Would you wish to detain girls who had not gone wrong: before they have had children, or only after? —I think if a girl is so simple-minded that she cannot reasonably take care of herself, and if she has not any respectable relations, it is a pity she has a right to go out unless you are sure where she is going.

35696. In the old barrack school you kept the girls till they were twenty-one, I understand?—Those who were brought up with us; we never told them they had the right to go out, and they never found it out.

35697. You also dislike, in certain cases, to be compelled to hand letters to girls which you believe contain improper suggestions?—Yes, that is in certain wards of the infirmary.

Proposal to open letters addressed to inmates of lock wards.

35698. That is in the lock wards?—Yes, only in the lock parts.

Miss J. S.
Thorburn.
14 Jan. 1907.
Liverpool.

Various classes of women in workhouse and need for better classification.

Laziness of workhouse inmates.

Need of
power to detain feeble-minded
women.

Need for more intercommunication between Poor Law officers as to particulars of pauper cases.

35699. If you are right in your supposition the law would have the power of punishing those persons sending the letters, but you cannot tell till you have opened them?—As we cannot read the letters we cannot be sure they are wrong letters.

35700. In regard to the workhouse itself you go to the two extreme ends of the classes of women that are there. You state that you have known some very brave and truly Christian women?—Yes, I have.

35701. At the other end there are a certain number of very vile women?—Yes.

35702. That points of course to the necessity, if possible, of a more complete classification, does it not?—We do try to classify a little among the old women, but we cannot do it among the young or able-bodied at all.

35703. Either the buildings do not adapt themselves, or there is a lack of accommodation, is that the reason?—Most of the able-bodied women are working about the house, more or less; and it is difficult to get the work done, and it is difficult to get able-bodied women of good character to work there, there are not many of them.

35704. Would these women who thus come into contact be mostly able-bodied or old women?—Able-bodied mostly.

35705. You emphasise the fact that work in a workhouse even for the able-bodied is very detrimental, they never hurry?—Yes, they never hurry.

35706. I suppose the object is to kill time?—Yes, it is. They say they are not paid for their work so why should they do much.

35707. Is your board moving in the direction of further classification?—We are so crowded for space that at present we cannot do very much.

35708. That is in the great big workhouse on Brownlow Hill?—Yes. We have a separate place for the respectable old people.

35709. I suppose the opinion amongst those who, like yourself, work amongst the girls who come in for their confinement is almost unanimous that there should be increased powers of detention?—I am not quite sure about those who come in like that; because you would want such a tremendous amount of institutions to put them in.

35710. I should qualify that by saying the simple minded?—Yes, I think everybody is agreed about that.

35711. A considerable proportion of the illegitimate children come through them?—Certainly.

35712. The other of course is a much bigger and more difficult subject?—Yes.

35713. In paragraph 58 you say you think there is rather a serious defect in the want of inter-communication between the different departments. I understand that applies not only to communication between the officers connected with out-door relief and the workhouse officers, but between the various officers inside the workhouse?—Yes.

35714. Do you think that is due to the departments being so very large at Brownlow Hill, or have you heard at all that that is a common complaint in other workhouses?—I do not think I know enough of the inside working of other workhouses to tell, but we have over 5,000 people inside, and unless special attention is called to some particular case they do not bother much about it.

35715. That is 5,000, including the infirm?—Yes, the children and the sick.

35716. Have you any children in the workhouse?—Some who are sick; but that is all, and a few babies.

35717. To a large extent, that difficulty can be got over by a certain re-arrangement or certain orders issued?—It might be, but I have never been able to see that it could be got over.

35718. Is it reluctance on the part of the officers, or the Liverpool want of time?—Want of time, I think.

35719. They are so hard worked in these offices?—An officer is not supposed to go to the other side of the place unless she is specially asked to do it.

35720. So that a decent woman going from one part of the workhouse to another may get placed in contact with undesirable people simply through ignorance of her past history?—Yes, just at first.

35721. Now with regard to outdoor relief, apparently nearly all your persons on outdoor relief get assistance in addition?—I think so.

35722. That is a bad system, is it not?—I do not see how it can be prevented; charitable people will give money.

35723. Looked at from the Poor Law point of view also, does not the tendency to give a low amount of relief, a sort of dole, in the hope and belief that it will be supplemented, rather result in cases being run through instead of thorough investigation being made; if, on the other hand, there was adequate relief given, would not the disposition on the part of the guardians be to thoroughly well go into it?—No, I think not; there would be much greater pressure on the part of the poor persons and their friends to get it. If they gave an average of 5s. instead of 2s. 6d. there would be more applications, and it would be much harder to refuse them.

35724. Have you ever come across a case where a respectable woman was not in receipt of charity, and had to try and make this 2s. 6d. a week maintain her?—I think I heard of one case, and it was helped when we found it out.

35725. It seems to me that it puts the straightforward truthful person at rather a disadvantage with the person who is not, because the more she can conceal the better off she is?—I do not think so. If a person tells us what they are getting we are always more ready to give them relief at once, and give them perhaps an extra 6d.

35726. The charitable relief they get I understand comes largely from the religious societies?—Yes, and from several big charities.

35727. Endowed charities?—Yes.

35728. They do not work in connection with the Charity Organisation, do they?—I do not think so.

35729. Now take the Charity Organisation; have you been able to transfer any cases to them, which they have been able to take off your hands?—They generally take the cases before they come to us. If an application is made to us, and it is a case that the Charity Organisation officer thinks he could help, they do not get relief at all, or come on our books.

35730. It does not come to you?—No.

35731. In that way they help you in anticipation?—They do, distinctly.

35732. Then you add that it is very rare for anybody who is on out-relief to buy any clothes, because they get them from charity?—Yes, they do. I have never known anything but boots bought myself, and that very rarely.

35733. You are in favour of being on the Committee for the district which you represent as regards outdoor relief?—Yes. I have rather a special reason for that. The two women on our Board who are able to do much work both live in the district in which the almshouses and various other charitable institutions are placed, and it is necessary that one of the two of us should be connected with that, I think.

35734. I see you have the courage to be strict, in fact you say you are the strictest member of your relief committee?—I am sure I am, much.

35735. You have not found any evil result amongst your constituents in consequence?—Very, very little. Not enough to matter.

35736. We have had evidence that persons, perhaps not quite so conscientious, have worked in the reverse way?—I think if one were a small tradesman or anything Effect of out-relief supplemented by charity.

Co-operation of guardians with the Charity Organisation Society.

The effect of guardians administering relief to their own constituents.

Liverpool. of that sort it might be inconvenient to do it in your own district.

35737. In your case you are able to get information which otherwise very often would not be obtained?—Yes.

Provision for aged paupers at Liverpool. 35738. Is the Kirkdale Home a joint institution?—No, it is for our own old people.

35739. Entirely supported by the Liverpool Vestry?—Yes, quite.

35740. That you think is a satisfactory institution?—I think so, but then they do not keep very bad or very troublesome people there; they send them back to Brownlow Hill. If we get very bad or troublesome old people they are not kept there.

35741. Do any ladies from outside, prompted by charitable motives, come in and help these old people at Kirkdale?—The Brabazon Society goes there.

35742. Is the part you represent near the docks?—No.

35743. I dare say you have heard the evidence of the previous witness?—I have.

35744. I suppose your main trouble is with casual labour?—Yes, with regard to the men it is.

35745. And the women, I suppose, are their dependents more or less?—Some of them, but there are a good many basket women and cotton women.

35746. Have you ever worked amongst the casual labourers at all?—Not amongst the men at all, except just by listening.

35747. Have you any views about the system?—I do not think I know enough about it for my views to be of any value about the men.

Dishonesty of female workhouse inmates. 35748. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I see you say in paragraph 47 that there is much ground for complaint of the able-bodied women being dishonest. Does that appear chiefly when they are acting as pauper assistants in the infirmary wards?—Everywhere in the workhouse.

35749. It appears chiefly where they act as assistants?—Yes; everywhere where they get the chance.

35750. Is it impossible to select people who are honest to place in that position?—Almost impossible. One woman who was put in a position of considerable trust stole my things in a shameless way, and I complained, thinking she would be changed; but I was told they all stole and it was better to deal with one you had proved to be a thief than with one you had not found out.

35751. (Chairman.) I suppose they look on these things as a sort of perquisite?—Some things; they do not look on personal property as a perquisite; they look on the guardians' property as a perquisite.

35752. Everything they can pick up without being found out?—They know they will not be punished.

35753. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Are they never prosecuted?—They are never prosecuted for theft in our workhouses. I think in the case of one or two thefts of money they threatened to do it, but it never came to anything.

35754. (Chairman.) I suppose there were no means of making them refund?—No, the money was passed away, and you could not get hold of it.

35755. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you not think one or two prosecutions might have a deterrent effect?—It is very difficult to get proof, and then the officers and nurses are very unwilling to leave their work and go down to the court, and you cannot trust the word of many of the other inmates.

35756. I meant supposing it was worth while to do it, do you not think that the result of a successful prosecution or two might be that it would deter the inmates in this sort of thing?—It might, but nobody has ever taken the trouble to do it.

35757. You get a certain number of foreigners, do you not?—We do.

35758. Have you any difficulty in getting rid of them afterwards?—Sometimes great difficulty. Miss J. S. Thorburn.

35759. How do you get rid of them; do the foreign governments make any payment or the foreign consuls?—Never. 14 Jan. 1907. Liverpool.

35760. Is it done by charity, supposing the people are absolutely unable to look after themselves?—Sometimes it is charity, and once or twice the guardians have had to pay a good deal to get them away.

35761. Sometimes they pay to send them back to the countries from whence they came?—In the case of some negroes we succeeded somehow in getting rid of that party of negroes, but there was a payment of something like £60, I think.

35762. You think one difficulty in the administration is a want of knowledge on the part of one set of officers of particulars which are in the possession of another set of officers?—Yes. Lack of inter-communication by Poor Law officers as to cases.

35763. Have you considered how that difficulty could be met?—I have not.

35764. You have not thought out in your own mind any scheme for meeting difficulties of that kind?—No, because I do not think it would be good for the officers to be leaving their own divisions and talking to other officers about their cases.

35765. If there were some record kept would it not be well that the officers should have some means of access to those records?—It would take so many clerks and mean so much extra cost and expense to keep case papers. The expense of case paper system.

35766. You have not the case paper system?—No.

35767. If you had case papers there would be difficulties in one set of officers reading the case papers, because if the originals were about they might be lost, so they would have to be copied and you think the expense would be very great?—We have been told that the expense would be enormous.

35768. (Mr. Gardiner.) In paragraph 39 you tell us that there are respectable ins-and-outs who are engaged in chip selling. Is that what we call in the south, firewood?—They get hold of boxes and break them up and sell them as chips.

35769. Do they ever complain of the competition of the guardians?—Never. We only sold chips once, and that was for a very short time in connection with the stoneyard that was opened.

35770. But the Salvation Army and the Church Army are always selling firewood, are they not?—They are I believe. Effect of Salvation Army and Church Army chopping wood.

35771. Does not that tend to press heavily on these people?—Yes. I thought you meant the competition of the guardians. We only sold chips one winter.

35772. In paragraph 42 you refer to the morally insane. I understood you to tell the Chairman you rather hesitated about detaining them?—Not the morally insane, not the very, very wicked women. Morally insane women in the workhouse.

35773. You would like to detain them in special care?—I do not know whether it matters very much whether they are in the workhouse or in prison; they are always in one place or the other.

35774. Have you any theory as to how you would define who are morally insane?—If a woman has been convicted over forty times or so, and if she has been very troublesome in the house, I think you might fairly say there is something wrong.

35775. It is the number of convictions mostly?—I should think so, and long well known bad character.

35776. I notice in paragraph 37 you say the old women are only waiting for the end, they live more like vegetables than human beings?—They do, it is wonderful. Inertness of aged in workhouse.

35777. Do you not think an increased number of officers might lead to an increased interest in life and so on. I noticed when I had the pleasure of visiting at Kirkdale these old women sitting all round the room, and I wondered if you had more officers, whether you could not induce them to do something other than vegetate until they died ?—If they could be given anything to do, like someone reading aloud to them, or teaching them to do knitting. They do not complain themselves, or ask for it.

Miss J. S. Thorburn.
14 Jan. 1907.
Liverpool.

35778. They do not complain I know, but it is very bad, is it not ?—It is very bad for them.

35779. I suppose practically that administration with regard to the male side does not come under your notice ?—Not much.

35780. Not the sailors' home for instance ?—No.

Proposed detention of ophthalmic children.

35781. (Dr. Downes.) You suggest that children with certain forms of eye disease should be detained ?—Yes.

35782. What would you do with the parents ; would you detain them also ?—The parents are mostly outside.

35783. Have you known cases where the children have been taken out because the parents have taken their discharge ?—Sometimes you find cases, but parents are allowed to go out without the children.

35784. You are relieving the child ?—Yes, in the infirmary.

35785. Have you many of those cases ?—A good many.

The question of pauper scrubbers and ward maids in infirmaries.

35786. With reference to those able-bodied women who steal whenever they get a chance, I see that they apparently steal to a great extent in the infirmary and from the sick. In what capacity are they employed there ?—They go up as scrubbers in the morning, and they go up as messengers occasionally.

35787. Have you ever considered the possibility of supplying scrubbers from the outside ?—We have.

35788. Have you tried it ?—No, because we think the difficulty would be very much greater ; we could not search them in the same way, and the bringing in of drink would certainly be greater.

35789. Have you considered the possibility of employing ward maids ?—They are trying that in our new infirmary.

35790. How far is that succeeding ?—Three women from the consumptive ward had to be sent down for being half drunk. We have not yet found out who brought the drink in.

35791. You have not yet found out ?—No, we are not quite certain who brought it in. Of course no one suspects the wardmaids of bringing in the drink, but employing them has not prevented untrustworthy persons having easy access to the wards.

Kirkdale Home for the Aged.

35792. The Kirkdale Home was originally your school, was it not ?—Yes.

35793. Had you to make any extensive alterations to convert it for the old people ?—Yes, and more alterations are being made now.

35794. Do you know what the cost has been ?—I am afraid I could not say accurately ; I should have to look up the book.

35795. (Miss Hill.) I suppose your main work is among the women and children ?—Yes, almost entirely.

Charity supplemented by out-relief.

35796. You say that there is a great deal of charity given to the out-relief cases, I think ?—Yes.

35797. Do they divide them, I mean to say, is one set of people undertaken by the charities, and the other by the Poor Law ?—No, not at all.

35798. Do you think the mixture of the two is advisable ?—I do not see how we could prevent it. People will give charity where they choose.

35799. There are a good many charities that are not organised ; and I suppose the Central Relief Society does not do that ?—No, it does not.

35800. Do you happen to know the home for old men, Liverpool. the Seamen's Home, I think they call it ?—I have not visited it for some years, as there are no women there. Provision for aged paupers in the 35801. I did not ask the question when I was there, but I wonder whether the men are let out ; do you know ?—I think they are given a day out once a month. "Seamen's Home."

35802. But they are not let out on other days, are they ?—Not many of them.

35803. What arrangements are there for their exercise ?—The arrangements are not very good as we cannot get any open air yard connected with that place.

35804. You have not been able to secure any ?—No.

35805. So you have nothing but the leads up above, and the small yard below ?—Yes ; but we hope in another year they will be removed to Kirkdale.

35806. That is in contemplation, is it ?—Yes.

35807. Do the members of the Brabazon Society help you ? Are they at work there ?—No, not at that institution. Brabazon Society in Liverpool.

35808. Where are they working in Liverpool ?—In Brownlow Hill, Toxteth, West Derby, and at Kirkdale ; and they are just beginning in the new hospital at Highfield, but they are not properly started there yet. Union.

35809. They are very useful, are they not ?—Yes, they are.

35810. (Mr. Bentham.) In paragraph 15 you refer to a Charitable home which is provided for maternity cases ; do you mean a home for the mother to reside in with her baby, maternity or a home for the baby only ?—They take the mother and cases. the baby for so many months.

35811. Is it a special home provided for the purpose ?—Yes. It is provided by charity.

35812. Then you say in paragraph 17 : "The vestry gives a grant after the mother has been three months in the home ;" what form does that grant take ?—It is a grant of three guineas, generally.

35813. Is that put as a subscription to the home ?—No, it is a grant. They have relieved us of the person's keep for so long, and we give them the value of the keep for three months.

35814. That has been sanctioned, so far, has it, and it is quite in order ?—Yes ; we have been told that that is quite right.

35815. (Miss Hill.) Is it a certified home ?—I believe it is inspected.

35816. (Mr. Bentham.) In paragraph 33 you speak of the special duties of the inmates ; what are those special duties that you refer to ?—One woman really looks after all the bathing in a certain division. Pauper helpers in workhouses and infirmaries.

35817. Does she bath the inmates ?—She looks after the bath-room and sees that the fairly healthy inmates bath themselves. A great deal of the work is done by inmates, under officers, of course.

35818. Have you what are called wards-women in the hospitals ?—No. In the female hospital one old woman remains up all night to carry things for the nurse ; but that is all. She really acts as stoker.

35819. With regard to classification, does the visiting committee or any sub-committee consider all the new classification admissions to the workhouse for classification purposes ?—Some time ago it was arranged that the four relief committees should see all the people that came in for so many days ; but two of them said they could not give the time to it, so only two out of the four do it now. Extent of in Liverpool Union.

35820. Then there is really no classification committee, and it is all left to the workhouse master and matron ?—It is really.

35821. When a person has been admitted, the guardians do not know where that person is placed unless they happen to see him or her on their visits ?—That is so.

Liverpool.
Mr. Chaplin's Circular of 1900 and action taken thereon in Liverpool.

35822. Then really nothing has been done under the Circular Letter of 1900, which asked guardians to properly classify their inmates?—The respectable old people over sixty are in separate divisions.

35823. But that comes under the old form of classification, does it not?—Yes. There is no classification, for character, of the younger people.

35824. Are you familiar with the Aged and Deserving Poor Circular issued by the Local Government Board?—I know of it, but I cannot say that I am familiar with it.

35825. That suggests that sleeping accommodation in separate cubicles should be provided for them, that privileges should be given them as regards hours of going to bed and rising, that considerably increased liberty should be granted to them, together with greater facilities for visits by friends, that for each inmate a locker should be provided with a key to be retained by the inmate—but the contents of the locker should be open for proper inspection, and so forth. Has nothing of that sort been done?—It is done with a certain number of old ladies of what one would call the first class. There are sixty-nine of them.

35826. Where are those old ladies placed?—In small rooms in Brownlow Hill. I think these sixty-nine old ladies are very comfortable.

35827. Are those what you would call aged and deserving inmates?—A few of them. We think the Kirkdale people are mostly aged and deserving.

35828. Then really, to a certain extent, you have facilities for the proper classification according to character?—With the aged, but not with the younger ones.

Difficulties of classification :
effect of segregating
the bad characters.

35829. Is it not in the hands of the guardians to make what arrangements they please so far as the proper classification of the younger ones is concerned?—I suppose it would be, but we have not got the room, and the officers tell us that if you take away all the good women it will be almost impossible to control the bad ones in the place.

35830. The good ones, then, influence the conduct of the bad ones?—In the sewing-room, I am told, that if you had all the bad ones together they would be fighting all the time, and so you have to put the decenter ones between the others to keep them quiet. In my use of the word "bad," here I include badly behaved as well as wicked. Some of the most troublesome to manage are not quite sane.

35831. That arrangement is rather bad for the decent women, is it not?—It is very hard indeed.

Charity
supplemented by
out-relief.

35832. You say in paragraph 67, "Nearly all persons on out-relief receive charity as well, indeed some of our charities practically refuse to help people unless we give them parish money first"?—Yes, our officers tell us so.

35833. I think you heard the evidence of Mr. Ball this morning?—Yes.

35834. He said the contrary; he said that they did not give relief if they knew that assistance was being given to them by an organised charity?—I think he was referring to the Charity Organisation Society.

35835. Does not what is called the Central Relief Committee give relief to cases that you are relieving?—No, it does not.

35836. Then that is perhaps what he meant. As a matter of practice you do not give outdoor relief to cases that have been dealt with by the organised charitable societies, do you?—I think we do. For instance, seamen's widows get so much a month from the Seamen's Society, and we give them outdoor relief for their children, too.

35837. I was of course excepting the almshouses where you give relief, too.—Yes, I understood that.

Relief of
widows with children in
Liverpool.

35838. (Mrs. Webb.) I want to ask you whether you could give me any rough sort of idea of how many widows with children you have on your outdoor list?—I am afraid I cannot, because I have only to do with one of the four relief districts.

35839. Could you give us any of your experience with regard to widows with children; for instance, do you think it is satisfactory to give them outdoor relief?—I do not think it is, because there are a fair number of cases in which it has to be withdrawn after a time.

Miss J. S.
Thorburn.

14 Jan. 1907.

35840. What has happened?—The mother's character has not been satisfactory.

Liverpool.

35841. What is your exact procedure when a widow comes up to ask for relief for her children? How far do you have any systematic investigation and inspection of the case?—The officers visit and get all the information they can. We make enquiries whether the children are kept regularly at school, [and then we always give the relief unless there is something exceptionally bad in character.

Relief of
widows with children in Liverpool.

35842. You would always give it, do I understand, unless there was something exceptionally bad?—Yes.

35843. You would not consider whether the child would be better off in a Poor Law school, would you?—I think nearly all the children would be better off in our schools.

35844. But you do not see your way to refuse relief unless they bring them into the schools?—No, not if the mother is a fairly decent woman.

35845. What do you really think about it, because it is a very serious business, and there are 200,000 of these children?—I do not think the mothers would give the children up; and there would be a popular outcry if we forced them.

35846. Have you got any suggestion to make?—I do not quite see what suggestion can be made. Possibly more relief might be given, but I do not see what more we can do. We see the school books, and if the children are not kept at school the relief is stopped at once.

35847. They might be being brought up under shockingly bad influences?—If we have reason to think there is anything distinctly wrong we should stop the relief.

35848. As regards the amount of relief, I have had evidence that certainly in some cases the children suffer from want of food, or from want of proper relief to nourishment; do you think that ever happens?—I have never known any such case of my own knowledge; but children it might happen without my knowing it.

Question of 35849. Of course, on the face of it, you are not giving enough to nourish those children because you are only giving 1s. or 1s. 6d.?—We give 1s. 6d., and then there is 6d. worth of food given. (In reply to this question the witness subsequently wrote: "On going over some cases, I find that the 1s. 6d. often includes the food.")

35850. That is 2s. with nothing for the mother, but that is not enough?—No, it is not.

35851. Nourishment cannot be obtained on those terms, with rent and clothing?—But then you see they are always getting things from so many other sources. I have one case here where we give 8s. a week, the mother earns 10s. and she gets 8s. a week from the Seamen's Society; that is 26s. altogether.

35852. That of course is a very handsome allowance; but do you make no difference between the mother who is earning 10s. a week and getting another 8s., and a woman who is getting nothing? Supposing a woman has five children, two of them little babies under two or three years of age, she cannot earn anything, at least she ought not to?—We should probably give something extra until the youngest child was two or three, and then we should expect her to work certainly.

35853. Supposing she could not work, or supposing she was incapable of doing more than looking after the five children, which is rather a handful; what would you do then?—Some cases have occurred in which the women have given up out-relief, and said they would rather come in with the children.

35854. Would you wait for that?—I think we should wait for that. Then if the woman came in and remained discharged for some months, we should let her go out without the children, charging her perhaps 1s. a week, so as to have some sort of hold on her. We have done that in several cases.

Widows
discharged from workhouse without their children.

Miss J. S.
Thorburn.

35855. So that you have practically taken the children to board at 1s. a week ?—Yes.

14 Jan. 1907.

35856. (Mr. Lansbury.) Have you the Brabazon Society in your workhouse ?—Yes.

Liverpool.
Brabazon work and need for its extension.

35857. Would not an extension of that work get over the difficulty you have with these old ladies who are doing nothing ?—That does work at Kirkdale a little, but it is very difficult to get enough ladies to work it and to come regularly.

35858. But it is really an extension of that that you want, is it not ?—It would be very useful. It is very difficult to get enough ladies. We could have fifty more with advantage if we could get them.

35859. Could it not be organised by officers who gave their whole time to it if you could not get enough voluntary people ?—I do not know whether the board would stand our engaging officers to amuse the inmates. I do not think they would.

35860. Or to teach them things which would, I suppose, be amusement ? Do you not think that would be better than leaving them in this sort of way ?—I am afraid our board would not stand it.

35861. You say it is not a good thing for them to be in this position ; but they have no option if you leave things as they are, have they ? There is nothing for them to do but to simply fold their arms and wait for their meals ?—We find that we have to coax the old ladies to do the Brabazon work. Most of it is done by the men, who are much more willing to do it than the women, because the women think that if they show that they can do a little knitting or fancy-work they will be asked to do something for the house.

35862. Do not your old ladies do something in the way of mending ?—Some of them do something, and some do not like it.

35863. Is there not a rule that those who can shall ?—If an old woman over sixty-five says her sight is bad, and she cannot see, you cannot very well make her do it.

35864. I admit that ; but they are not all like that ?—No. They do a good lot.

35865. If you had more Brabazon women, they could do a great deal more perhaps ?—They might be coaxed to do a little more ; but it is among the men that this great increase of work would be if we could get the ladies.

Expense of case-paper system and difficulties attending it.

35866. As to not knowing the character or the history of cases as between one department and another, have you seen the case-paper system, and have you thought anything about that ?—I have heard about it. I have not seen any place in which it was worked so as to know the details of it.

35867. It occurred to me when you were speaking about that point, that you might have the original papers kept in the office, and then a copy sent to each department with the remarks of the department on a person when moved to another place. That would get over the difficulty altogether, do you not think ? It does not seem to me that it would be very expensive either ?—I am afraid it would be with all our institutions, and with, we may say, 5,000 people, and many of them coming in and out.

35868. Once you get the case-paper system established it would be very easy, because it would simply be something for an officer to write in ?—Mr. Hagger has always told us he thought it would not be practicable ; and, what is more, I find that when officers have to put a thing down in writing they very often do not tell you one-quarter of what they know.

35869. That is because we do not make the officers do their duty, is it not ?—No. I think they will tell you a thing in private conversation which they will not put down in writing, when they may be expected to prove it.

35870. I am wondering whether it is of very much value if it is not good enough to put down in writing ?—We find our officers are extremely unwilling to say anything to anybody's discredit officially, because the person may have a friend on the board and they will be required to prove it, and it may be very difficult to get the proof.

35871. You give outdoor relief, of course, in your union ?—Yes.

35872. But the person who gets outdoor relief must always have something coming in, I take it, besides the relief you are giving ?—We are sure that they must.

Undeclared means assumed in giving out-
relief.

35873. Do you take care that they must have more coming in ?—No, we do not take care ; they manage that themselves.

35874. I beg your pardon ; it is the manner in which I put it. Do you take it for granted or do they give some evidence that they have some income besides what you are giving ?—We know they could not live on what we are giving.

35875. Therefore you think that the relief you give is adequate for the maintenance of those people ?—They are visited about every eight or ten days, and if the officer sees any signs of real want he give casual relief and reports it, and we give a trifle more next time.

35876. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) In paragraph 67 you say, "The idea is that the parish keeps the people from destitution, and the charities then come in and make their lives comfortable in a small way." The amount of relief that you give would not keep them from destitution, would it ?—We generally find that if an old woman had 2s. 6d. she can get enough extra to get on with if she is able to get about at all.

35877. From the charities, do you mean ?—Yes, and from her work and her friends.

35878. The point that occurred to me was, that when you say the idea is that the parish keeps the people from destitution that is not done out of the relief that the parish gives, because they are not kept from destitution by the 2s. 6d. a week, which would not keep anybody from destitution ?—I think we have thought that if the person was fairly strong it did. If they are older they get up to 3s. 6d. and 4s. or 4s. 6d.

35879. Does it depend to some extent upon age ?—It depends upon age and physical capacity.

35880. Then when you come to the 2s. 6d. a week, do you presume there is going to be a certain amount of work done by the person to whom that is given ?—Yes.

35881. But if you give 4s., you presume that either by age or from want of charity they are incapacitated from doing anything to help themselves ?—They may be doing a little perhaps.

35882. It is the parish plus their work which keeps them from destitution ?—Yes.

35883. (Mr. Booth.) In effect, the small allowance from the parish is given assuming that other resources of one kind or another will keep that person going ?—Yes.

35884. And I gather you watch the case so that if that is not so, and destitution supervenes, you can either raise the allowance or offer the house ?—Yes. We should certainly raise the allowance unless the person was incapable of keeping herself clean and so on.

35885. At any rate, that small allowance which the parish gives is sufficient to deal with the case from that point of view ?—Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS P. CLEAVER, called ; and Examined.

Mr. H. P.
Cleaver.

35886. (Chairman.) You are the Clerk to the Guardians of the West Derby Union, I think ?—Yes.

14 Jan. 1907.

35887. You have prepared a statement which is subdivided into various heads, which we can take as your evidence-in-chief if you will hand it in ?—Yes. (The Witness landed in the following statement.)

CLASSIFICATION.

1. Having for many years been a strong advocate of the Combination scheme of combination of unions for the better classification of unions for purposes of classification, of unions for purposes of classification, I am very pleased to notice the apparent greater desire on the part of guardians to commend the system.

Liverpool.
Combination of unions for purposes of
classification.

2. I am convinced that its application would in a great measure solve many of the difficulties of the Poor Law problem.

3. Poor Law guardians are now called upon not only by the Local Government Board, but by public opinion, to effect a more perfect classification of the indoor poor and generally a higher state of efficiency is demanded as more in accord with modern ideas.

4. In the case of the large unions this is generally provided, but the smaller unions, by reason of the expense and also the smaller number of cases to be dealt with, are precluded from dealing with the various classes of inmates on the most approved lines.

5. Given a desire to deal with the question, I fail to understand that the difficulties of administration are in any appreciable degree a bar to its adoption.

Objections to larger Poor Law areas:
the visits of paupers,
friends, etc.

6. It is sometimes urged that it will create a hardship if cases are removed from their immediate district; but in these days of greater facilities of travelling, this is hardly an objection other than sentiment. The better treatment of special cases by special means far outweighs any slight inconvenience to the relatives. Experience goes to show that in some cases, especially as regards the children, the influence of the relatives is very undesirable, and the removal of such cases would be a distinct advantage.

Failure to use existing power of combination between unions, and its causes.

7. The great difficulty regarding the adoption of the scheme is due to the mistaken attitude of many of the smaller unions who, through motives of jealousy, refuse to co-operate with the neighbouring unions. If some guardians could be persuaded to take a more comprehensive view of the important duties of their office and overcome the parochial spirit so often displayed, the difficulties of dealing with many of the problems would be easily surmounted.

8. The existing law provides for the operation of the system either by the establishment of joint boards or mutual arrangement with the sanction of the Local Government Board. It is not an experiment, but is at present in existence in the case of many of the larger unions, with great benefit to the class of cases relieved and to the ratepayers of the unions combined.

Combinations of unions for special purposes in and near Liverpool.

9. In this district the following arrangements are at present in operation:—

Joint Hospital Committee, comprising Liverpool, Toxteth Park, and West Derby authorities for the open air treatment of cases suffering from tuberculosis.

By mutual arrangement the Liverpool parish send able-bodied cases to the West Derby Union Workhouse. Children remanded by the magistrates are also sent to the special children's school belonging to this union.

Toxteth Park children remanded by the magistrates are also maintained in the West Derby Union School.

Prescot Union have for many years had about seventy of their children in the cottage homes at Fazakerley belonging to this union.

The new vagrant wards adjoining Belmont Road Workhouse provide for the reception of vagrants from Liverpool and West Derby.

10. The above arrangements are provided for by special agreements which have received the sanction of the Local Government Board.

Scheme of combination between Liverpool and West Derby for dealing with imbeciles and epileptics.

11. A further scheme for the better accommodation of imbeciles and epileptics, whereby Liverpool parish undertake to provide for all epileptics of both authorities and West Derby for all the imbeciles, has been submitted to the Local Government Board for their sanction.

WAIVING OF SETTLEMENT AND ITS RESULTS.

12. I feel strongly that the abolition of the law of settlement would act very unfairly in regard to the ratepayers of this union. The populous districts situate in the county boroughs of Liverpool and Bootle with great docks, warehouses, and industries attract large numbers of the unskilled labouring classes from all parts of England, Wales, and Scotland, and particularly Ireland. Many of these become inmates of the workhouse.

13. This union, possessing a modern equipped infirmary, and up-to-date workhouse, with a large staff of efficient medical gentlemen and trained nurses, cannot but be an attraction to many requiring treatment, and cases have been known to have been brought from distant parts to be treated in the infirmary.

Mr. H. P.
Cleaver.

14 Jan. 1907.

14. The West Derby Union, having an extensive dock area is also largely affected by the landing of destitute persons from foreign parts, many of whom have impaired intellects.

Liverpool.
Objections to abolition of settlement.

15. But for the existing law of settlement and removal, this union would be mulcted in considerable expense in maintaining cases that have had no connection whatever with the district.

16. As evidence of this contention, may I point out that during the past five years 1,172 orders of removal to other unions have been obtained, whilst in the same period only 455 orders have been made on this union.

With these figures before you the enormous saving to this union will be obvious.

17. Whilst I am opposed to the abolition of settlement law, I am strongly in favour of its simplification and the avoidance of expensive and unnecessary litigation. I consider that it would be a great benefit to abolish the appeals to the Court and to constitute the Local Government Board as sole arbitrator between unions, as in the case of Scotland.

Need for simplification of Law of Settlement and decisions thereunder.

18. The removal of lunatics between England, Scotland and Ireland, the question of divided parishes, and the case of temporary medical relief breaking a settlement, are among some of the anomalies requiring adjustment.

19. With regard to the objection to settlement on the ground of hardship to the poor, I am of opinion that in actual practice it does not exist, but that on the contrary it is often of great benefit to the people themselves to be removed to their own districts where they are among friends.

20. At the same time it would be an advantage if the guardians were compelled to continue the relief as non-resident relief to suitable cases. Many unions do this, but there are some who refuse, and require the cases to be removed.

Propose
abolition of option to refuse non-resident
relief

RELIEF TO CHILDREN WITH RELATIVES.

21. As a main principle, I believe in endeavouring to maintain and preserve the family life, and in the case of widows with children who are relieved outside the workhouse I think it is very advisable that the women should be encouraged to maintain and train their own children.

Relief of
widows with
children.

22. In special cases where a widow is left with six or eight children of tender years, it would probably enable her to keep a home together if two or three were removed to the cottage homes, but from practical experience I would in no case advise that women, especially unmarried ones, with one or two children, should be relieved of the care of them.

23. In such cases, if the restraint that the duty and responsibility entails is removed, the effects are often disastrous.

24. In many cases, orphan or deserted children who have been maintained for many years in the cottage homes and have been placed in service or other means of earning their own living, the interference of relatives is most trying to the guardians and hurtful to the children.

25. Frequently the relatives not legally liable, and in many cases never previously interested, suddenly turn up when the children are of a monetary value and evince an interest which is often a great disadvantage to the children. The guardians are constrained to adopt various means of circumventing these undesirable influences, to prevent the good being undone, and would welcome additional powers.

Undesirable interference by relatives of Poor Law
children.

Need to retain and increase control of Local Government
Board.

SUPERVISION OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD.

26. The supervision of the work of unions by the Local Government Board tends to greater uniformity, and is productive of much good. I am strongly of opinion that it should be retained and with the exception of a few minor matters should be increased rather than diminished.

27. I cannot praise too highly the value of the representatives of the Local Government Board in their inspectors.

Value of Local Government Board's inspectors.

Mr. H. P.
Cleaver.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.
Proposed greater freedom to guardians to appoint minor officers.

inspectors. Their advice and assistance have been most valuable, and I am persuaded that they are most important factors in good and efficient administration.

28. The appointments of the more important officials should be under the sanction of the Local Government Board, but the frequent reports and sanctions of junior officers might with advantage be avoided by the Local Government Board approving of a scale such as exists in this union in the case of nurses and foster mothers. In place of reporting each appointment, the guardians are empowered to appoint and pay according to a scale sanctioned by the Local Government Board.

SYSTEMS OF OUT-RELIEF.

Objections to Superintendent Relieving Officer.—Rules and their Value.—Scale of Relief.

Objections to 29. I am not specially enamoured in favour of the superintendent relieving officer, though I have no particular objection to urge except that if the clerk to the guardians is actively engaged and in touch with the work, the office of superintendent relieving officer is unnecessary.

Advantages 30. Providing relieving officers are carefully selected and of system of have by experience proved themselves efficient officers, I consider that they should not be unduly hampered by officious interference which frequently leads to friction. The system of cross visiting, and supervision from the clerk's department by those who are directly in touch with the views of the guardians is more likely to lead to efficient administration than departmental schemes.

"Bye-laws" 31. I am in favour of the main principles of relief being as to relief governed by rules, and the following regulations in force in West Derby Union, in this union are, I submit, practical and useful.

WEST DERBY UNION.

Regulations for the Administration of Relief.

Except in cases of aged persons or of chronic sickness, no order for out-relief shall be given for a longer period than eight weeks.

Out-relief shall be refused to the following classes of applicants for relief, as far as practicable:—

- (a) Single able-bodied men.
- (b) Able-bodied men without children, or having only one child to support, except in cases of sickness.
- (c) Able-bodied men with families residing in furnished lodgings, except in cases of sickness.
- (d) Men of improvident or vicious habits, except in cases of sickness.
- (e) Men with families where there is reason to believe that they are of drunken or immoral habits except in cases of sickness.
- (f) Single able-bodied women.
- (g) Able-bodied widows without children.
- (h) Married women (with or without families) whose husbands, having been convicted of crime, are undergoing a term of imprisonment.
- (i) Persons residing with relatives where the united income of the family is sufficient for the support of all its members, whether such relatives are liable by law to support the applicant or not.
- (k) Widows with children, during the first six months of their widowhood, if on the death of their husband they receive money from a club, which in the opinion of the committee was lavishly spent in mourning or funeral expenses.
- (l) Any person who fails to satisfy the committee that their destitution has not been caused by improvidence or intemperance.

Objections to 32. I am not in favour of a scale of relief excepting scale of relief. perhaps in a few special cases. I believe in each case being dealt with on its merits. Few cases are alike in all particulars, and a set scale would operate unfairly.

ELBERFELD SYSTEM.

Objections to 33. As I understand it, the main principle of the Elberfeld System is to grant relief through voluntary agencies.

I am persuaded that it would be impracticable, owing to the fact that such agencies could not be held responsible.

34. The existing Poor Law officers are not only morally but legally responsible for the carrying out of their duties.

35. Voluntary agencies undoubtedly are very self-sacrificing and do a great deal of good, but I do not think that they are able to undertake and maintain the many and exacting duties devolving upon the paid officials.

36. I am quite in accord with the fullest co-operation with all voluntary agencies and I am pleased to say that the system is carried out in this union with great benefit to all concerned.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHILDREN.

37. I feel that it is the duty of the guardians themselves to provide for the maintenance and training of these children, having due regard to their religious beliefs.

38. In this union the children have for upwards of twenty years been maintained, and beyond the question of special arrangements for the observance of their religious rites no distinction is made.

39. This arrangement has met with the entire approval of the Roman Catholic members of the board and also of the Roman Catholic community in the district.

40. The Roman Catholic schools now existing for Poor Law children are excellent institutions but I submit, that it is the duty of the guardians to make the provision themselves, and if other boards had made provision such as this union I cannot help thinking that the special Roman Catholic schools would not have been provided by outside agencies.

35888. (Chairman.) As regards the first head, I see you are strongly in favour of classification, and you think the objection which is urged against it, that relieving officers would find a difficulty in visiting the different institutions, is an over-stated objection?—I think so.

35889. Looking at the immense difference between the classes of persons who are recipients of Poor Law relief you see no way of properly dealing with them unless classification is pushed a good deal further than it is at present?—I see no chance of proper classification taking place unless by means of combination.

35890. You have combined with the neighbouring unions to a certain extent; do you know what the financial effect of those combinations has been? Has it been to put up the rates?—No, it has not. The effect has been to reduce the rate; the cost has been smaller.

35891. Of course it enables you to make a much more satisfactory arrangement?—Much more satisfactory.

35892. Assuming that the areas were extended with the view of establishing classification, is it your experience that if it is properly done it would not increase the total cost?—Certainly.

35893. It would have the opposite effect, would it?—Yes.

35894. As regards settlement, I gather you do not think it would be possible to abolish it altogether without inflicting considerable injustice on certain unions, notably so on your own union?—Yes. In a seaport union I think it would be detrimental to the interests of that union.

35895. You have a legal remedy as regards aliens now, have you not?—We have.

35896. These orders of removal to other unions which you mention in your statement are exclusive of aliens, I take it?—They are.

35897. Going back to the point I left, namely, classification, I suppose it is possible that if a number of rural parishes were combined the rate for institutions might run up?—Per institution, do you mean?

35898. If you classify institutions and combine a number of rural parishes, would not the result probably be that there would be more people in institutions than there are now?—If a proper classification were made, that would lessen the number of institutions and consequently the cost would be lower.

35899. If you classify you would come down much more heavily on the wasters and ne'er-do-weels, would you not?—I am quite sure that at the present time the unions possibly may be working in an economical way, but they are not working in a manner to conduce to the carrying out efficiently of the Poor Law.

35900. You express a very strong opinion about the advantage of keeping children with their relatives, and

Liverpool.
Advantages of co-operation of guardians with voluntary agencies

Provision for Roman Catholic children in West Derby.

Need an financial effect of
combination of unions for purposes of
classification.

Objections to abolition of settlement.

Financial
effect of
combination of unions.

- Liverpool. that opinion is rather in the teeth of some of the evidence that we have had. Your contention is that if the parent is relieved from all responsibility during the immature years of the child, the parent tries to grab hold of it when the child is capable of working?—Yes. There are many such cases.
35901. If a woman was of that tendency and only wished to make something out of her children, might she not, as was suggested, either maltreat or rather starve her children before they arrived at the age at which they could work?—I am afraid I could hardly answer that question. I do not know of any such cases.
35902. As I understand it you would prefer to give larger out-door relief to widows with a certain number of children, than to take two of those children and put them in Poor Law institutions?—I think it is a great mistake to take away from a parent who is of good character her children, upon the ground that it may be more economical in the opinion of the guardians to take the children away.
35903. You believe, then, in the development of the maternal instinct?—I do.
35904. That is the result of your experience, and you have been a long time, have you not, at this work?—I have been clerk for twenty-seven years.
35905. Although there are cases where mothers try to make what they can out of their children, you think those are rather the exception than the rule?—Yes, I think those cases are rather over-rated.
35906. Should you say generally that the mothers prefer to keep their children and a roof over their heads?—I know of a great many cases where the parents are most anxious and most willing to keep their children, and in my opinion would keep them well, but the guardians in some instances think it better to take those children away and to send them into the homes. Of course I am only speaking now from an official's point of view, and I cannot speak from the guardians' point of view as to their reasons for doing it; but at any rate it is not done under my advice.
35907. If your policy was given effect to the scale of relief would have to be raised, would it not?—It would considerably.
35908. You would say, I suppose, speaking generally, that the scale of relief in West Derby is somewhat low?—Yes. I cannot speak too strongly on that matter. I think if out-relief is to be given it should be adequate. If out-relief is not to be given, then let them be dealt with by being sent into the house. I find that the average out-door relief given in the West Derby Union—I am ashamed to own it—is 3s. per week. That, the guardians are of opinion, is granting adequate relief; but really it is only making up the deficiency that has been created by charitable people and others, and it is not dealing with a case as it should be dealt with.
35909. What do you put the rent of these cases at?—As a rule I should say that the relief of 2s. 6d. practically covers the rent, and I do not know what they are to live on after that.
35910. When this small sum is given rather as a sort of conscience salve, is not the result, from the judicial point of view, unsatisfactory, because the cases are not thoroughly gone into?—The difficulty is that the class of men granting relief do not see through the same spectacles as myself in this matter. They consider that as long as they can salve their consciences by giving out-relief of some sort they have dealt with the case; but whether that is satisfactory or not I think it is for others to decide. I consider there are numberless cases in the West Derby Union who ought to be receiving considerably more than they are receiving; but it is very difficult to get guardians to understand that it is better to have 500 on out-door relief at 7s. 6d. than 1,500 at 2s. 6d.
35911. Do the relieving officers hold your view?—I think they hold my opinion. If I may allude to it, I find there is one case in the West Derby Union receiving 15s. a week and one receiving 10s. a week, but the average is 3s. per case.
35912. (Mrs. Webb.) Might we ask what the 15s. case is; is it a case of a widow with children?—I am afraid I have not got the particulars of it. These returns were sent up to me and so I cannot say. It is sure to be the case of a family, I think.
35913. (Chairman.) You do not like the superintendent relieving officer do you?—I have nothing very much to say against the practice of appointing superintendent relieving officers, but I consider that it is inadvisable for the guardians, as they very often do in unions, to appoint the senior relieving officer, whether he is suitable or not, to be superintendent relieving officer at a small increase of his salary. I think it would be much better to deal with the matter, if I may suggest it, as it is dealt with in the West Derby Union, namely, by having cross-visitors who are unknown practically to the relieving officers, and who visit all new cases as they arise. I have no great feeling against the superintendent relieving officers at all. They may in some instance be very useful, but in the West Derby Union we have a pay clerk as well, who pays every case of outdoor relief and who, if the people are sick, takes the money to their houses and delivers it to them there.
35914. There is no settlement between you and the neighbouring unions of Toxteth and Liverpool, is there?—On that point I wish to correct a statement which I think was made this morning. The three clerks of the three unions came to an arrangement by which no removals were to take place between the three unions, because we were combining for a great many purposes. But when it came to the question of tramp wards Toxteth Park could not see their way to joining with West Derby and Liverpool with regard to the tramps, and consequently we could not see our way to keep on with that arrangement, because the people in the tramp wards, if they became sick and had to go into hospital to be treated, became a great expense to us, and we had to protect ourselves. If Toxteth had agreed about the tramps this arrangement would have still been in force. Liverpool and West Derby make no orders upon each other.
35915. Assuming a case is removed from Liverpool to West Derby, would the out-door relief be continued?—If such a case was transferred, certainly; but we should not renew it without enquiring into it.
35916. That rather assumes that the scale of out-door relief is much the same in both parishes?—Practically it is. I think possibly West Derby may be a little higher than Liverpool. I should put Liverpool at 2s. 6d. a week and West Derby at 3s. I think that would be about it.
35917. As regards the Elberfeld system, I see you doubt its practicability on two grounds, first that you would not get sufficient people to work it, and secondly that you would not be able to make them sufficiently responsible?—That is so.
35918. Does your board of guardians work with the charitable institutions?—It works thoroughly with the Charity Organisation Society. We are entirely in harmony with them. They are of very great assistance to us, and I think we are of assistance to them. They deal with a great many widows with children, getting them into factories and so on. If we have cases that we think are just bordering on poverty we send them down to the Charity Organisation Society to see whether they can help us by keeping them off the Poor Law; but in many instances we give the case relief before it is sent to the Charity Organisation Society.
35919. You relieve first and you refer afterwards?—Yes. If it is a case that can wait for a few days perhaps we should not grant the relief, but generally speaking a person would be relieved prior to being sent to the Charity Organisation Society.
35920. On the other hand, I suppose you do sometimes transfer cases which you do not think proper cases for Poor Law relief?—Yes, there are very many such cases.
35921. Has the Act of 1894 made much difference as regards the status of boards of guardians?—It has made considerable difference.
35922. Do the committees represent the different wards or districts in which they give relief?—It is an unwritten law in the West Derby Union that the chairman of a quorum sitting in a particular district shall not be a representative of that district; but, as you are aware, the

Mr. H. P. Cleaver.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool. Objections to superintendent relieving officers.

West Derby pay clerk and his functions

Waiver of settlement between Liverpool unions.

Objections to Elberfeld system.

Co-operation of guardians with Charity Organisation Society.

Effect of Local Government Act, 1894, on class of guardians

The question of guardians administering relief to their constituents.

Mr. H. P. Cleaver. guardians cannot always attend, and I am afraid that rule is very often abused. But still it is a law that they do not sit for the township that they represent.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.

35923. (Mr. Bentham) That is as chairman of the relief committee only?—Yes. There may be two members on the quorum who may be representatives of the district, but the chairman who is appointed by the guardians cannot be representative of the district in which he sits.

35924. Do the other members of the committee usually live in the district?—No. The majority of the quorum must not live in the district; there must be a majority of the other guardians.

35925. (Miss Hill.) Does that mean on the committee or in attendance?—On the committee. I am afraid that not many attend who are not on the committee.

35926. Supposing those who represent the district are the only people present, can they carry through the business?—They could do it, certainly.

35927. I mean they would if the others were absent, would they not?—I really never remember such a case arising. I dare say they would do it.

Advantages of combination of unions and question of best size for Poor Law areas. 35928. (Mr. Booth.) As I gather, you consider that an enlargement of the area of combination of unions would both add to efficiency and be economical?—I do.

35929. Have you formed an idea of what is the size that you would aim at—the number of population that you would aim at in one administration?—I hope I may not be misunderstood. I do not suggest for one moment the swallowing up by the larger unions of the smaller unions. I mean a combination of unions in this way: For instance there are Liverpool, West Derby, and Toxteth Park; we have three sets of cottage homes and three sets of administrations all situate in the West Derby Union, whereas one set of cottage homes would be ample for all three. I do not suggest for one moment doing away with a union. I say that the local knowledge is very useful, but I also say that if unions would work together who naturally can combine for certain purposes, there would be much better classification.

35930. What amount of population aggregated together in that way would you think desirable in order to arrive at the greatest economy if they can work together?—I am afraid I have never considered that question.

35931. Take, for instance, the case of Liverpool; assuming that West Derby, Toxteth Park, and the Liverpool Vestry are combined, would you wish to bring Birkenhead into the same circle?—I think that the area of Liverpool, West Derby and Toxteth Park would be large enough.

35932. And that there would be no advantage in including Birkenhead?—That would entirely depend upon the accommodation that was given.

35933. There would be no advantage to the Liverpool side, but it might be an advantage perhaps to Birkenhead to be united with so large a body?—It might be an advantage to them, but I do not think it would be any advantage to the three unions of Liverpool.

35934. That is to say, you think their population is large enough?—Yes.

35935. But you have not thought out what degree of enlargement would be desirable?—It would so entirely depend upon circumstances and upon the number of children and the number of poor to be dealt with. I do not think the population is everything. The pauperism in the West Derby Union is 18 per 1000, but it might be different in other unions. I can hardly answer your question I am afraid.

Undisclosed means assumed in giving out-relief.

35936. With regard to out-relief, is it your ideal that the amount of out-relief given should be adequate in the sense of not being supplemented at all from other sources?—I do not say that. I think it is absolutely impossible to find out what comes into a poor person's house. I think in a great many instances guardians guess at the amount that is coming in and think that because there are charities in the neighbourhood these people must be getting some of it, whereas in some cases I fancy they do not get quite as much as the guardians imagine they do.

Inadequacy of out-relief in West Derby.

35937. Have you any system to suggest other than, in effect, guessing?—I would certainly suggest that the guardians should, in the first place, grant sufficient relief without taking into consideration what they may imagine is coming into the house, unless they have a perfect knowledge of it. Then if they found out that Liverpool more is coming into the house than they imagine, they can either reduce the amount or deal with it in any way they see fit. I find that the guardians at the present day do not err on the side of giving the advantage to the applicant for relief. They err on the side of being very strict as to the amount. They think that if they give 2s. 6d. or 3s. a week they have got rid of the case.

Inadequacy of out-relief in West Derby.

35938. And they leave it to take its chance?—Of course there are inquiries made into the case. It is a strange thing that these people manage to exist—I do not know whether it is living, but they do manage to exist. I have had a great many before me and have tried to get out of them how they do live upon it. They manage to breathe.

35939. Would you differentiate the amount according to what, after inquiry, was believed to be the amount of outside help?—I would.

35940. So your system would involve very close inquiry?—It would. We find continually now through effect of our cross-visitors that the amount of relief has to be increased or lowered; but the difficulty is to get the guardians to accept that view. They think the person has managed to live for six weeks upon 3s. a week, and might therefore as well live for six months upon it.

35941. Would the result of the sort of strict investigation which you suggest be to decrease altogether the number who get it?—I think it would be the means of increasing the amount and lessening the number. I believe that out of the many thousands that we have on outdoor relief there are a great number of them who would be much better without it; and I believe there would be found to be a great number who would deal very properly with more money if it were granted to them.

35942. And you do not think it is beyond the possibilities of careful inquiry to get correct information?—ascertaining I think it is absolutely impossible to get to know exactly what comes into a house. You may have a woman who has been a servant in a respectable family and her fellow-servants send her old dresses, and so on. You do not know what they get. You have ladies giving grocery tickets, and you cannot find that out. You may get some sort of idea, but it is very difficult to ascertain exactly what comes into the house.

Difficulty of ascertaining total means of applicants for relief.

35943. In that case how are you to wisely decide how much to give?—We find out as well as we can. I would rather err on the side of not taking into account something that I do not know is being received. I would rather err on the side of giving the people a little more until I find that it is not necessary—if out-relief is to be given at all.

35944. Would you rather not give it?—I certainly would be very sorry to see out-relief done away with. It would be absolutely impossible to do away with it. There are thousands of cases where it would be nothing but little less than cruelty to deal with them in any other way. I say out-relief cases ought to be dealt with very carefully; and if they are found to be deserving I think they ought to have adequate out-relief.

Objection to abolishing out-relief.

Out-relief should always be adequate.

35945. And you would arrive at that by continual watching?—Yes.

35946. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) May I take it from what you have said that your idea is that what the parish gives should keep people from destitution?—Yes.

35947. You would, as far as possible, ascertain what it is possible for people to live upon in the district, and that should be the amount of relief given in a deserving case?—Yes.

The criteria of adequate relief.

35948. (Mr. Booth.) Irrespective of every other resource?—No, certainly not; I did not understand that that was suggested.

35949. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) In the first place, then, you would take into consideration such things as the possibility of children doing something, and such legitimate resources as that?—Yes.

35950. But what you would not take into consideration is the uncertain product of charities?—That is so.

35951. You would have, would you not, to discriminate much more closely with regard to applicants if you are

Liverpool.
Capricious administration of out-
relief.

going to reduce the numbers under that system?—Yes, undoubtedly.

35952. Would it be fair to gather from your statement that the difficulty in the matter would be the class of guardian who has the administration of this outdoor relief?—The difficulty is in getting uniformity in the granting of outdoor relief. Of course every case has to be taken on its merits, but there are many cases that are exactly alike, and I do not think you will find that all these cases have been treated exactly alike.

35953. The guardians take, as you say, too parochial a view of the case?—Yes.

35954. And certainly not sufficiently comprehensive?—Yes.

Scheme of
combination between Liverpool and West Derby for dealing with imbeciles
and epileptics.

35955. In regard to the scheme for the better accommodation of imbeciles and epileptics to which you refer in paragraph 11, may I ask whether that is in print?—That was a scheme which was entered into between Liverpool and West Derby, by which Liverpool, having ground at Maghull, should build for epileptics, and West Derby should make accommodation for imbeciles. That was to save our having two buildings for epileptics and two for imbeciles. Unfortunately the Local Government Board found some legal difficulty in our scheme and they have, up to the present, refused their sanction. Had the West Derby Union built more accommodation than they required for their imbeciles they could have then offered to give that available accommodation to Liverpool; but they did not wish, if I may use the expression, to hoodwink the Local Government Board by making that accommodation and then letting it off to Liverpool; so they went to the Local Government Board and asked them whether they would sanction this scheme, but up to the present they have refused their sanction. Still, we hope that we shall have that accommodation, which is urgently needed.

35956. That is one of the cases in which you think combination is specially desirable, is it not?—It is. We feel that we could make better accommodation in that way than if both unions made their own separate accommodation for each class.

35957. And probably you would give a better chance to the patient?—A much better chance.

Relief of
widows with
children.

35958. With regard to the parent keeping the children under her own control, is not one of the difficulties in the way of that that she would be likely to start her child to work earlier in its life than the child would be started by the Poor Law authority? Would not the temptation be to get at the earnings of the child?—I do not like to feel that that is a probable contingency, but it is very possible.

35959. I was only thinking that there might be a very struggling case in which it would be desirable to get a wage-earner as soon as possible; and it occurred to me that that was possibly one danger?—Of course there is the danger of that possibility, but I think it is remote.

35960. (Mr. Gardiner.) I understood your whole contention was that the relief should be quite adequate?—Yes; and I think by that you would get over this difficulty.

35961. Because then it would cease to be a struggling case?—I do not think it would. It would be a struggling case as long as the woman had a large family. The relief that the guardians grant in such a case—take a woman with six children—would be 15s. a week, which would not be a very large amount.

35962. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Would you grant that amount of relief to as late an age in the child's life as the Poor Law authority now undertakes the charge of the child?—I would.

35963. (Mr. Lansbury.) As the children get older the woman's struggle would become keener, would it not?—It would; and that would have to be taken into consideration.

35964. Would you increase the amount of relief?—Certainly. It would entirely depend upon the condition of affairs, but it would have to be reconsidered and revised.

35965. Sometimes it operates that when you have taken the child into the school the mother is keen on getting the child out, in order that it should go to work; so that the same thing applies both ways, does it not?—Exactly the same.

35966. (Mrs. Webb.) Would you tell us what you would consider adequate relief for a widow with five children, assuming that she could not earn anything and had to look after the five children?—That would entirely depend upon the rent she had to pay, the neighbourhood, and indeed all her surroundings. I think it is against the interests of the Poor Law that they should grant such relief that it necessitates the woman becoming a hypocrite and going to the nearest chapel or church to gain the eye of the minister or the priest, and that the amount of money which the parish widows gives has to be eked out in that way. As to the amount with the guardians should give, if you get the right class of children, guardian he seems to me to be the best judge of what is absolutely necessary.

Mr. H. P.
Cleaver.
14 Jan. 1907.
Liverpool.

The criterion of adequate relief to widows with
children.

35967. Would you be inclined to put it anywhere near the boarding-out sum? At present if you board-out a child you give 4s. or 5s. a week, I think?—Yes.

35968. Would you be inclined to give a widow 4s. or 5s. a week for her child?—Yes; if the cases were analogous, if they were exactly the same, I would certainly do so. I see no difference between the two cases at all. I have in my mind now some cases in which the guardians, according to the order of the Local Government Board, would not allow a grandparent to take her grandchildren and receive the relief. The guardians got over the difficulty by allowing the grandmother to take the children, boarding the children out with her, and granting her 4s. in each case. If they had been allowed to grant relief, I rather fancy the guardians would possibly only have given about 2s.; but as they boarded them out they gave the proper amount, 4s. or 4s. 6d., I forget quite which it was.

35969. Has there been any difficulty with the auditor, because I think that is practically getting behind the Local Government Board?—He cannot object. We'd a perfectly legal thing. We have a right to board-out.

35970. Then that order really is waste-paper if the guardians choose?—I think the cases are very few and far between, as you will see when I tell you that that is the only case I know of in the West Derby Union. If there is a deserving case and the guardians think they ought to relieve in a particular way, I am quite sure they will try to find some back-door way to do it if they cannot do it in any other way.

35971. And that might be done with widows?—Certainly.

35972. I gather from what you said about outdoor relief that you would be against a definite scale being put down in black and white at so much per child?—I should say a definite scale is absolutely impossible. Of course cases differ very much. You may have some cases practically alike, but the majority of cases differ. You could not have a scale really. We have some regulations for the administration of relief which I drew up many years ago, but we cannot carry them out exactly, and we have put in the words, "as far as practicable."

Objections to scales of
relief.

35973. And even then you have not got anything in the nature of a scale?—No, not as to money. I am afraid the guardians would object to dictation.

35974. Even if they did not object, would you think that a scale was a mistake?—Yes, I think that a scale as a mistake. I think if the guardians go into a case thoroughly they will give the proper amount.

35975. I would rather suggest that even as it is at present administered there is too much tendency to give a mechanical sum?—I think they get it into their heads that 2s. 6d. or 3s. a week is the proper sum, and they give it to a great number. I hope I am not saying what is wrong.

35976. It has been suggested to us that if you gave more liberal relief you would have a great many more applicants and you would have a great deal more outdoor relief?—I do not think for one moment that you would. I think that the numbers would not increase at all, because the inquiries would be much more rigid and the guardians would attend much more keenly to the work of granting relief if they got into the way of voting larger sums of money.

Effect of increasing scale of
out-relief.

35977. Take the position of a person who wants to reform the Poor Law; would it be possible to secure that either outdoor relief should be adequate or should not be given?—I do not think there is very much difficulty

Mr. H. P.
Cleaver.

in deciding whether the case is a case of indoor or outdoor relief.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.
Difficulty of securing uniformity
as to
out-relief.

35978. I was thinking how, at the centre, we could secure that. Apart from a change of heart on the part of the guardians, how could we secure that outdoor relief should either not be given or should be adequate? How would you suggest that it should be secured by the central authority?—I do not know how I can answer that question.

35979. You see that is our problem?—It is entirely a question for the guardians to decide.

35980. You do not believe that there is any possibility of dealing with the will of the guardians, then? We have got to leave it absolutely at their option?—That is so. There is no other way of dealing with it at all. The guardians would absolutely resent any interference; they are all-powerful, and they have the power to grant or to refuse.

35981. Supposing we were at liberty to alter that condition of things, how could you draw up a Local Government Board regulation, or an Act of Parliament or anything else by which that could be secured?—Only by getting a body of men who would deal in a proper manner with this question.

35982. Then the only hope is to alter the men, not to alter the regulations?—There are some very good and some very bad. The difficulty is in getting hold of the men who will look into the cases.

35983. You do not suggest that it would be possible to in any way fetter them by a new Local Government Order?—I do not see how you can alter a man's opinions. One man will say one thing, and another man another.

35984. Could you not frame an order which forbade them to give outdoor relief except at a certain rate?—Then it would have to be a question of locality and of the particular surroundings. You could not frame an order that would embody all the difficulties that might arise.

35985. So that we must absolutely rely upon some change of opinion on the part of the guardians, and there is no possibility of getting it done by regulation?—I do not see that there is any possibility.

Question of allowing Local Government Board inspectors to interfere in specific cases of
relief.

35986. (Chairman.) At present there is rather a restraint put upon the inspectors going into individual cases; but supposing they were authorised to go into individual cases occasionally, and they reported that they considered the relief of a certain person inadequate and that some other person was not entitled to any relief at all, would that be of assistance?—I think it would be resented very much by boards of guardians. I myself take lots of cases before the quorums when they have been before them once, and try to get them to amend their orders. I do not think they quite like amending their own orders; they think they have given their time to it, and I think they rather resent any interference.

Objections to transferring out-relief to charitable agencies.

35987. (Mrs. Webb.) It has been suggested to us that one way out of the difficulty would be to forbid boards of guardians giving out-relief at all, and for them to hand all the out-relief cases over to voluntary agencies; what do you think about that?—I do not think it would be any better done than it is at present. I do not think the voluntary agencies would be able to deal with it in a better way.

35988. You do not think they would give superior wisdom to it?—I find that a great many of my guardians are on the Charity Organisation Society and the other charitable organisations. Practically the same men appear again.

35989. Then you do not think that voluntary agencies would treat the cases any more wisely?—No, I do not think they would treat them any more wisely. I think you would have exactly the same state of affairs.

Combination of unions for dealing with able-bodied poor.

35990. (Mr. Bentham.) I suppose the arrangement still holds good between your union and the Liverpool parish with regard to the able-bodied indoor poor?—That is so.*

35991. All the able-bodied in the Liverpool parish are sent to your workhouse I suppose?—No, I cannot say they are all sent. They have to keep a certain number themselves to do the work of the institution. We get no able-bodied women from them at all because they want Liverpool. them all as scrubbers in their own workhouse.

35992. Do you provide a task for the able-bodied belonging to both unions?—We do.*

35993. And that is acceptable to both?—It is approved by both. The Liverpool Select Vestry have a right to send three representatives to sit upon the committee of the West Derby Union at all their meetings, but without the power of voting; and anything they wish to bring forward they can bring forward.

35994. Are they paid for at so much per head?—Yes.

35995. The success of the combination of unions which you advocate very strongly depends upon the continuance of the mutual goodwill of the unions who are combined for special purposes, does it not? I suppose that is so. I do not know that there could be any ill-will between unions, and I do not see why there should be any ill-will between them. There might be parochial jealousy between them, but I do not think it would amount to ill-will. I have never found that any combination we have entered into has ever been given up.*

The question of friction between unions combined for special purposes.

35996. I thought there was an arrangement between the three Liverpool Unions which ended after a lapse of fifteen years? Was there not some such arrangement between Toxteth Park, Liverpool and West Derby with regard to the able-bodied?—No, not with regard to the able-bodied. We never had an arrangement at all with regard to them. There was an agreement in existence between the three unions that the three unions should not remove cases upon each other. We thought it was a hardship that a person living on one side of a street and going to the other side of the street should have to be removed to the union which they had gone to; but Toxteth Park would not agree to join with West Derby and Liverpool for the reception of vagrants. That being so, Liverpool and West Derby would not agree to allow Toxteth Park to come into our arrangement as to removing, for the reason that a person falling sick in the tramp wards and going into hospital, if it were a Toxteth case, would then become a charge upon Liverpool and West Derby.

35997. Did not an arrangement for dealing with the vagrants exist for fifteen years?—Oh, never.

35998. Then I am under a wrong impression?—Toxteth Park always had their vagrancy wards, but they had them at the workhouse. Then the police got to know that there were vagrancy wards for the whole of Liverpool, and so they sent the Toxteth cases to West Derby. But as I say, Toxteth Park have always had their own vagrancy wards.

35999. You are in combination with the other two unions for the provision of a sanatorium at Heswall, are you not?—Yes.

36000. Has that led to any friction at all between the three unions?—Not between Liverpool and West Derby, of unions for but it has led to slight friction with Toxteth Park. I do sanatorium not think there is anything very much in it except, as you purposes. can understand, that a small building capable of holding twenty-four beds is a very costly affair, and Toxteth Park, who have four beds out of the twenty-four, I believe, are of the opinion that they do not quite get their value out of it. But it has not amounted to very much.

36001. Is the arrangement terminable at the end of so many years?—No, but it can be terminated by the Local Government Board.

36002. Have the three medical men, that is to say, the medical officers of the three unions, each a share in the management of the institution, do they visit on alternate weeks?—No. They have nothing whatever to do with the institution. There is a medical man for the institution alone—Dr. Yeoman. The three medical men at Mill Road Infirmary, Brownlow Hill, and Toxteth Park recommend cases to the hospital; but the moment the cases enter the doors there those three medical men cease to visit. They used to visit the place, but that was found not to work satisfactorily and was given up, and now there is one medical man for the hospital.

Medical management of joint
Poor Law
sanatorium.

36003. Then after a case is sent to the institution the medical officers of the respective unions have nothing whatever to do with it?—Nothing.

* The Witness subsequently wrote as follows: "The Agreement for 15 years between the Parish of Liverpool had just lapsed and was replaced by two separate Agreements, (1) for the joint occupation of Casual Wards at Belmont Road Workhouse; (2) for the maintenance of able-bodied paupers belonging to the Parish of Liverpool. Combination was not given up, but varied only owing to new circumstances and conditions."

Liverpool.

Guardians should have more power to keep children from undesirable parents.

Bye-laws as to relief in West Derby Union.

Difficulty of ensuring continuity of policy on a board of guardians.

36004. You found the other system did not act?—We did.

36005. Because the three medical men did not agree as to the efficacy of a certain treatment?—That is to say, they varied in their ideas.

36006. In paragraph 25, you say, "The guardians are constrained to adopt various means of circumventing these undesirable influences"—that is the influences of undesirable parents—"to prevent the good being undone, and would welcome additional powers." In what direction were you thinking of additional powers?—My idea was that the Local Government Board might grant some power by which, in the case of children that had been maintained, say, in the cottage homes at Fazakerley for a great number of years whose parents and friends have never seen them at all, the guardians might be allowed to exercise some power over them in regard to sending them into suitable service afterwards, instead of their being taken away by the parents.

36007. They could still detain up to the age of sixteen, could they not?—They could.

36008. But you wanted beyond that?—Yes.

36009. Up to what age?—Seventeen.

36010. That is only a year?—Yes, but that would just do it.

36011. Do you board out children?—We do—at Amble-side.

36012. Do you board out the adopted children under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1899?—No.

36013. Do you send them to Fazakerley?—We do.

36014. Do you find the undesirable parents from whom the children have been taken keep up a communication with the children themselves?—The Roman Catholic children go out to service on Sunday to their own church, and I think some of the parents come out and waylay them if they can get to them. The officers have to watch them. With regard to the undesirables—the ins-and-outs—those children that are always going in and out of cottage homes—they are taken from the cottage homes and sent to a special home in Belmont Road so that we do not have the influence of difficult and undesirable children mixing with, and affecting the other children in the cottage homes.

36015. Do you not think it is desirable to keep away altogether the influence of those parents from whom the children have been taken?—Undoubtedly.

36016. Your cottage homes are rather a hindrance in that respect I suppose?—A little bit, but only to a small extent.

36017. How many children will you have adopted under that Act; do you remember?—Not very many, but I am afraid I could not give you the number.

36018. Have you still in force in the union the rules that you mention?—Yes, they are supposed to be in force.

36019. And they are not withdrawn by any resolution?—No.

36020. But the guardians do not act upon them, I think you say?—No. If you said they did not, I think, they would say they did, but I think they do not.

36021. I think on our visit they told us they did not. With regard to the scale of relief, a scale is evidently in the minds of the guardians when they are dealing with a case. Would it not be much better to have a written scale with a minimum scale below which they should not give relief at all, but above which they could give as much practically as the case demanded?—The minimum scale would very likely be 2s. 6d. a week, which is the average rental of the places that these poor people live in; and they would very likely go back to the same order of things. There would be a great many on the minimum and not many on the maximum.

36022. You say very likely they would go back, but if a resolution was passed by the board and it was insisted upon, they would not be likely to do so, would they?—You cannot bind a board by a minute of this year. You have new guardians coming in every year and the guardians of this year are not going to be bound by the guardians of two years ago.

36023. By that way of reasoning you may say it is impossible for a board of guardians to lay down any principle on which one may rely?—That is so, to carry it out strictly. They can lay down principles certainly; the only thing is whether they would abide by them when they were laid down.

36024. The only way of getting it uniformly administered would be by means of rules to be enforced by a higher authority than the board of guardians itself?—Yes—if that higher authority could frame such rules.

36025. Do you think it advisable that they should make an attempt?—I should be very glad to see the day when the starvation out-relief throughout the country was done away with. But how it is to be done I do not know.

36026. Then you despair of a board of guardians ever doing it of its own accord?—I think the boards of guardians could do it as well as anybody else if they would. I do not think anybody would be benefited by removing that duty to anybody else. I think everyone would fall into the same way.

36027. You have no hope practically of a board of guardians ever reforming itself then?—I am only speaking of my own experience. Boards of guardians at the present day, to my mind, do not deal with out-relief in an adequate way.

36028. If a board had to discuss the principles of out-door relief, and questions were referred to the whole board on any particular point which might be new and which raised a new difficulty, and those questions were subjects for discussion at the full board, would there not eventually get into the minds of the guardians a line upon which they might work in administering out-relief?—Certainly; and they do have those cases brought before them continually.

36029. Still your board does not improve in the respect of the amount of relief that is given per head?—I think they have improved the average by 6d. The average some years ago was 2s. 6d., now it is 3s.; so they have improved.

36030. What do you mean by the average? Do you mean that per man, woman and child in receipt of out-relief it would average 3s. per head?—I mean taking every case.

36031. Then what would it average per head?—I could not say that. I did not get that figure out, but I worked the other out, and it works out exactly to 3s.

36032. One week's relief and one week's numbers would give the average per head, would it not?—Yes, but I have not got those figures here, unfortunately.

36033. Have you never compared one district committee with another as to the amount per head that is given?—Yes. Every week a return is made out showing how much is given in each district as compared with other districts. We know exactly where the most relief is given. Taking it all through practically the average is the same.

36034. But you are taking the average per case?—Yes.

36035. In a district where there were a lot of old people each receiving 2s. 6d., of course the average would be much higher per head than in a district where there were a lot of children receiving 1s. each?—Yes, that would be so.

36036. So that to compare it per case would scarcely be fair, would it?—Anybody understanding outdoor relief would understand what was meant by 3s. per case.

36037. You have cross visitors, I think?—Yes.

36038. How many?—Four.

36039. Do they give their whole time to cross visiting?—No. They remove children to service, and they remove lunatics to the asylum as well.

36040. On whose instructions do they act?—They act on my own.

36041. What cases do you select for cross visiting?—All new cases and any cases we get any information about.

36042. Can we say that every new case is cross visited?—You can. There is a report from somebody, and every new case is cross visited.

36043. Does the cross-visitor go with a blank sheet of paper?—No, he goes with a note book.

Mr. H. P. Cleaver.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.

Need for more adequate out-relief.

Cross visitors and their functions.

- Mr. H. P. Cleaver.
14 Jan. 1907.
Liverpool.
Cross visitors and the r functions.
36044. What I mean by a blank sheet of paper is, does the cross visitor go with no knowledge of the case?—He has not the slightest knowledge of the case. He will have on his paper—"Mary Jones, 44, Field Street," and he will go and make all inquiries.
36045. Is that report made to you?—It is.
36046. What use do you make of it?—I take it to the guardians—to the quorums.
36047. That is, to the committee that granted the relief?—Yes.
36048. Is it compared with the relieving officer's book?—It is.
36049. And provided there are any discrepancies it would be rectified by the committee?—It would.
36050. Are any glaring cases reported to the whole board?—Yes—perhaps half a dozen in the year.
36051. On whose initiative are they reported?—Generally on my own.
36052. That, I take it, would be where the committee do not know what to do?—Where there is some disagreement and the committee do not quite know how to deal with the case.
- Supervision of work of relieving officers at West Derby.
36053. What method do you adopt for supervising the relieving officers' work?—The assistant clerk goes through the books of the relieving officer. As you are aware it is quite impossible to keep the relief order book in a large union like ours at the same time the guardians sit, for the reason that we should be obliged to have about ten clerks to do it. By the consent of the Local Government Board these relief order books are entered up the moment after the quorums have sat. It might be possibly more necessary to have those relief order books entered up at the moment were it not that we have a pay clerk, who is an additional check upon the relieving officers. The relieving officers' books are checked by the assistant clerk and compared with the relief order book; and then we have the double check of having the pay clerk who knows every case as well.
- Method of entering particulars in relief order book.
36054. The relieving officers do not pay any money at all, do they?—Nothing; they never handle a penny.
36055. Did you say it was by permission of the Local Government Board that the relief order book was dispensed with?—No, it is not dispensed with.
36056. I mean that the process of entering it at the time the relief was given was dispensed with?—It was reported to the Local Government Board; I do not know whether they gave a tacit sanction to it, but at any rate they said nothing about it. The auditor knows all about it. The relief order book is entered up directly after the quorums have arisen—the same afternoon and within two or three hours of the sitting.
- Class of children boarded out by West Derby Guardians.
36057. (Miss Hill.) What class of children is it that you board out at Ambleside, and how are they chosen?—They are orphan children that the guardians in their wisdom think are suitable for that particular treatment. They have done particularly well. We used to have a great many more than we have now when Miss Morse was at Ambleside. Now, unfortunately, Miss Morse is dead, and I think we have something like ten or twelve there, and that is all.
36058. In the case in which Mrs. Webb suggested that you might possibly board out children with the mother or the grandmother, did I understand you to say that you would pay as much to a mother for taking care of her children, supposing she were not at work, as you would to a stranger?—A grandmother, I think I said.
36059. Well, take a grandmother?—Yes, certainly.
- Proposal to assimilate scale of relief for children living with grandmothers or mothers to amount given for boarded-out children.
36060. You would not expect her to do any more for the children without payment?—It entirely depends upon her circumstances. Because she was the grandmother, if she was as poor as another woman I do not see why she should suffer simply because she happened to be a relation of the children.
36061. In the case which Mrs. Webb suggested of a mother, I gathered that you said you would be in favour of paying as much to the mother for her child as you would to a stranger?—If it was necessary. Of course, it all depends upon the conditions and circumstances. Certainly, I do not see why the mother should not have just as much if she was absolutely in want. If 4s. is necessary in the one case it would be necessary in the other.
36062. Surely you would expect the foster-mother to have something for her trouble, would you not? I mean to say the stranger with whom the child is boarded?—Of course, the mother might be able to work—there are so many circumstances that have to be taken into account. But I do not see any difference between paying the mother 4s. and paying a stranger 4s.; if it is necessary in the one case, to my mind it is necessary in the other.
36063. (Mr. Bentham.) In the one case the stranger might have to provide a home at her own expense and would also expect something for her trouble, but in the case of the mother, Miss Hill's point is that the mother's duty lies there and the stranger's duty does not?—Do I understand you to say that the mother has a home to go to, whereas the stranger has not? If the mother has a home to go to certainly she would not require the same amount of money.
36064. (Miss Hill.) The case put to you was this—If the mother is unable to go to work, would you give her as much to maintain her own children as you would give to a stranger to maintain them?—I would.
36065. (Mr. Phelps.) Your office stands in quite a peculiar relation, does it not, to the administration of the union?—I do not quite understand you, I am afraid.
- Supervision of relieving officer by clerk at West Derby.
36066. Your relations to the relieving officers are almost peculiar to your union, are they not?—In the way of supervision, I think they are.
36067. Is that a matter of tradition, or has it been built up during your time?—It has been built up bit by bit, I expect.
36068. Did you find it in existence or did you initiate it?—If I may use the word I think it has been perfected. We never had a superintendent relieving officer. There was a question at one time of raising one of the relieving officers to be a superintendent relieving officer, but it was not carried out.
36069. I gather that you practically check the action of the relieving officers?—And the assistant clerks.
36070. The assistant clerks check their payments, and so forth?—Yes.
36071. Practically the action of the relieving officer is controlled by your office?—Yes, that is so.
36072. I do not know whether you have any experience of it elsewhere or could quote another union where the system exists?—Very many unions are without pay-clerks, and that makes a great difference. Of course that is a tremendous check; the pay-clerk assists to check the relieving officer as much as anybody else.
36073. Where do your pay-clerks pay—at the pay stations?—At the different pay stations, and in the case of a person being ill he has to take the money to the house in which the person is ill. I should say that we have only one pay-clerk.
36074. Do you use him in any sense to report upon the case?—We use him for nothing else but paying, except that he has to take notice of the condition of the people who come to the pay-table and to see whether they are tidily dressed and so on. He reports upon that.
36075. I see from your statement that you feel rather strongly about the question of settlement?—I do.
36076. Total abolition would be impossible in your case I take it?—In a place like Liverpool it would.
36077. Do you think Liverpool is sufficiently exceptional to be specially dealt with?—In Sunderland and all those ports I think also that it would be absolutely impossible to abolish it. We should be absolutely overrun in Liverpool if it were abolished.
36078. So the case of the ports is exceptional?—Yes.
36079. In the cases in which you have removed, what proportion of those were removals to Ireland, do you know roughly?—Possibly sixty a year.
- Objections of seaport unions to abolishing settlement.
36080. You said in your statement there are anomalies in the removal, particularly of lunatics to Ireland; what were you thinking of there?—It is very difficult to remove lunatics to Ireland, in fact so many technical difficulties are raised that it is absolutely practically impossible to remove a case. I wish that the law as to appeals could be altered and that the Local Government Board might be asked to visit these cases and so save litigation.
- Difficulty as to removing lunatics to Ireland.

- Liverpool. 36031. Do you know that the Local Government Board can do that?—They do it in some cases, but you cannot get all the unions to agree to it. If it were a recognised fact that that was the mode of procedure, then every union would fall into line.
36082. At present, if I am correct in saying so, they can only adjudicate where the facts are agreed upon?—That is so. The difficulty is in getting both unions to agree to the facts.
36083. Is there not a great difference between a body like the Local Government Board deciding cases in which the facts are agreed and going into the facts of a case?—Yes.
36084. Do you not think the distinction is really a valid one for our purpose?—I do not know that there ought to be any great difficulty.
36085. They would require to set up a court of qualified persons for the purpose, would they not?—Yes, it would only necessitate an inquiry.
36086. Have you any difficulties with regard to Scotland?—No, not to any great extent.
36087. Have you ever suffered from the restriction that you cannot remove without the head of the family?—We have very few Scottish removals. The Irish removals in Liverpool are the great things.
36088. Would the other removals be mostly to other seaport towns?—The docks at a place like Liverpool attract so many men from all over the country. They think there is sure to be work at the docks, and they come there; then they are taken ill and when they become permanently ill, we have to do something with them. All unions, I presume, do what West Derby do, that is, they deal with the lunatics first as they are most expensive.
36089. I did not quite understand from your statement whether you mean that the persons that you remove come to you from the sea, or whether you mean that they come to you from the land to work at the docks. There are those two classes of cases, are there not?—Yes, and we have both classes.
36090. Have you many people that come over sea?—Yes. A great many people come over from America and they are dumped down in Bootle. They do not land them at the Liverpool landing stage, because they want to keep it all quiet; so they take them round to one of the big docks in Bootle and land them there, and they are sent up to the Mill Road Infirmary and we have to deal with them in that way.
36091. You cannot remove those?—No, but we make county cases of them.
36092. If a man comes from America, of course you cannot remove him; but are there many people who come from other English ports who are removed?—They come from every town—from the seaports as well as from the ordinary towns.
36093. Do you think, seriously, that towns with docks attract more people than towns which have manufactures?—Yes, undoubtedly. The docks have an attraction, though I do not know what it is. Then many of these cattlemen come over from America bringing cattle; they just get their passages paid over here, they spend the money that is given to them, and then they become chargeable to us.
36094. I am afraid no alteration of the law of settlement will save you in those cases?—No; but still we have them in great numbers.
36095. (Dr. Downes.) In point of population, I think your union is one of the largest in the United Kingdom, is it not?—It is.
36096. You had experience of a large union; what would be your views as to the size of unions from the administrative point of view?—Of course you can do far more in a large union than you can in a small union, because of your rateable value. Where 1d. in the £ brings in £11,000 a year, your classification and everything else is better, no doubt, than it would be in a small union where 1d. in the £ brings in so many hundreds a year. I daresay some of the smaller unions are equally as well managed as the larger unions for all I know, and I do not wish to say anything about them. I consider the West Derby Union is not too large.
36097. You think you could manage a larger union?—It just depends upon the conditions that the other unions are in. For instance, there is no question about it that if the unions would sink their petty parochial jealousies and would combine for these purposes, it might be as well to retain them as long as you get better classification by it. I think the local knowledge of these unions is very valuable. If you amalgamate a certain number of unions you lose a great deal of the interest that is taken by particular men in the affairs of their particular neighbourhood, and they would not care to take the trouble to attend if their union was done away with.
36098. Given the conditions of your own union I gather that you would not think you have reached the limit of size?—No.
36099. You can do more?—Yes.
36100. What is the number of your guardians?—Fifty-two. The proper size for a board of guardians.
36101. Do you consider that a good number?—Yes, I think it is a good number.
36102. Do you mean it is too many?—As you know, the work of the guardians generally devolves upon a certain number. The whole fifty-two do not do an equal proportion of the work, which generally devolves upon, say, about twenty of them. A board of fifty-two, to my mind, is perfectly unwieldy.
36103. Is there not a risk of men who do not take an active part turning up to vote sometimes on subjects they do not know anything about?—Yes, and they can upset the good work of the few who do know anything about it. The moment there is an appointment to be made you find the board very well attended.
36104. Given a board of working guardians, what would you fix as a good number?—I think twenty is amply large enough for any board.
36105. I think you have a population of 500,000?—We have a population of 600,000.
36106. What, according to your idea, should a relief committee consist of?—I hold the view that there ought to be a permanent relief committee and that the relief ought not to be deputed to various quorums. If there were one relief committee consisting of, say, twelve guardians you would then always get a quorum, and the same men would go about from place to place and there would be more uniformity in the granting of relief.
36107. I think you are in favour of having definite rules?—I am. Need for definite rules as to relief.
36108. In such a case as that would a departure from the rules be reported to the board?—Certainly.
36109. And the committee would have to justify it?—Yes. The board would have just the same check that they have at present time.
36110. Turning to the visiting committees for the management of the institutions, have you any views as to the constitution of these committees?—We have visiting committees consisting of thirty members on each visiting committee, and I should think, roughly speaking, eighteen to twenty attend every meeting—those never miss, and they are most attentive. I am speaking of the visiting committees for the Mill Road Infirmary and Belmont Road (which are grouped together), for the Walton Workhouse, and for the cottage homes at Fazakerley. I should think if there was a committee of about a dozen for each of those that would be ample.
36111. Do you find a difficulty in getting guardians to serve on some committees; is there any preference shown by them?—It is very difficult to get them to serve on the quorums, but they will serve on such committees as the contract committees.
36112. Notwithstanding the size of the West Derby Union it is still necessary for you to enter into arrangements with other unions for dealing with your cases?—Quite so. We could not classify as we ought to unless we did.
36113. I think you are, as you have said, a very large union indeed. You appear to use two methods of working with adjoining unions, the one by means of a joint board and the other by mutual arrangement?—Yes, that is so. The mutual arrangement is preferable.
36114. I was just going to ask you that?—The moment

Mr. H. P.
Cleaver.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.

The class of non-settled paupers in Liverpool.

The proper size for the Poor Law
area.

Proposal for permanent relief committee.

Need for definite rules as to relief.

Visiting committees
and attendance of guardians at committees.

Combination of unions a sine qua non for classification purposes and the two methods of such combination.

- Mr. H. P. Cleaver.
14 Jan. 1907.
Liverpool.
- they have appointed their representatives on a joint board the boards have practically done with the matter and they feel that they have lost control. That was our reason for applying to the Local Government Board to allow Liverpool to make one class of accommodation while West Derby did the other, so as to save expense.
36115. And it would keep the management practically in one hand?—Yes.
36116. (Chairman.) By "mutual arrangement" I suppose you mean that a contract price was fixed, but the institution is under the control of the local board?—That is so.
36117. (Dr. Downes.) You have mentioned the classification of imbeciles and epileptics; did you mean sane epileptics, because many imbeciles are epileptics?—That is a medical question, and I cannot of course go into that. We intended to deal with both classes of epileptics, the sane epileptics being sent to Maghull. They intended to have villas there and I believe that is rather an expensive scheme. We had to deal with the imbeciles only. They were going to deal with both classes, separating, of course, the sane epileptics from the other epileptics in different villas.
36118. But at Maghull epilepsy would be the dominant classification?—Yes.
36119. Have you had any experience of a joint school?—No, I have not.
36120. How do you arrange the cost in your joint boards?—According to the rateable value. Say for the Heswall Hospital there are twenty-four beds; West Derby takes ten, the parish of Liverpool takes ten, and Toxteth Park takes four; we should allocate, first, the cost according to the rateable value of the whole thing, and then there would come the maintenance charges according to the number of days each patient was in the hospital.
36121. And the maintenance would be charged per case to the different unions?—Yes.
36122. That being so, there is a certain tendency to get as much value as the union can get out of it, is there not?—Yes, quite so. I do not think we ever have a bed empty for a day.
36123. You take care to keep it filled?—Yes.
36124. (Mr. Gardiner.) Do you ever prosecute the people who receive out-relief and have kept back from the guardians certain sources of income?—Yes. We have had about twelve prosecutions or fifteen this last year. We have these cases printed upon forms, and put up in all the waiting rooms and in the quorum rooms.
36125. Do you think that does good?—I am sure it does.
36126. Similarly we have heard a good deal about stealing in workhouses; have you ever come across that in your institutions?—I think it goes on in every institution in a small way.
36127. Would you do the same thing there?—We employ scrubbers and wardmaids. All our scrubbers are widows, originally in receipt of relief, but we take them in and pay them 15s. a week as scrubbers; instead of putting them on relief we take them off relief and give them this 15s. a week. We had one of the women steal some things, we prosecuted her, and I think that did away with it for a long time.
36128. As regards the adoption of the ins-and-outs, have you very much of that?—Not very much, but we have a few cases where we have adopted. I do not think there is quite so much of that in towns as there is in country districts.
36129. Would you like to adopt more, if you could, in view of what would happen to the children afterwards?—I am afraid you lose touch with the children a great deal. You do not quite know what happens to them. It is different to boarding-out.
36130. You never board out within your own union, do you?—Yes, in the way I stated just now.
36131. That was with the grandmother?—That is all.
36132. But you do not do it as a practice?—No.
36133. (Mr. Chandler.) Has the method of administering outdoor relief, including the amount given as you have described it, been in operation for many years in your union?—Yes, to my knowledge since 1877.
36134. Then the change of personnel in 1894, which Liverpool you refer to, had no reference to this?—No. I might say that the ex officio magistrates never used to attend the quorum.
36135. (Mrs. Webb.) What effect did that change of membership have upon the policy of the board in 1894?—I do not know that there has been very much change as regards the policy of the board.
36136. Then what has the change been in?—If I may put it so, you have not the same class of men.
36137. Has it resulted in a different administration?—I am afraid that is a very difficult question for me to answer, and if you would allow me I would rather not answer it.
36138. (Mr. Loch.) Would your opinion be that clerks to the board of guardians should give their whole time to the work as a rule?—Undoubtedly. It would be impossible in a large union for a clerk to do anything else. It takes one man's time to reply to the queries from other unions.
36139. (Mr. Gardiner.) In small unions would you think it desirable to?—Certainly.
36140. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You must have a union of a certain size, must you not, because otherwise there would not be enough work for the clerk to do?—I am only speaking for my own union, and I say in the West Derby Union it takes one man's time to reply to the queries from other unions.
36141. (Mr. Loch.) That is to say there is a certain proportion of the population providing duties and work for a particular officer which requires his whole time?—That is so.
36142. With regard to your Poor Law hospital, do you find that applications come on to you which you have to send to the voluntary hospitals owing to your being full?—Unfortunately there are more beds in the Mill Road Infirmary than in all the voluntary hospitals in Liverpool combined, and these hospitals have no beds at their disposal. The consequence is that the voluntary hospitals are continually refusing cases and sending them to Mill Road. Mill Road has become now a general hospital and is no longer a Poor Law hospital. You will understand that when I tell you that we collect from relatives over £5,000 every year. You will see from that the class of people that unfortunately come to us.
36143. That is to say, you are getting a rather better class altogether?—Yes.
36144. When you say that your infirmary has more beds than the voluntary hospitals, what hospitals do you mean?—There are the Royal Infirmary and the Southern Hospital, for instance; they have not got the accommodation that we have. We have more beds than Bootle, Stanley, and all those.
36145. Then you receive every class of case that can find no perch anywhere else?—Yes. The danger is in the medical man refusing a case.
36146. In this way, the old position of, I suppose, twenty or twenty-five years ago is reversed; then, the voluntary hospitals had the larger number of cases, and now you have?—The old idea of its being a degradation or a disgrace to go into a Poor Law infirmary has quite ceased. Mill Road is known as the Mill Road Infirmary and not as the West Derby Union Hospital.
36147. How are the surgeons and physicians appointed?—There is a medical superintendent, Dr. N. Raw, and then there are three assistants under him who are appointed by the board.
36148. Is the medical superintendent really responsible for the whole thing?—He is responsible for everything connected with the medical portion of it.
36149. Do you say that the Liverpool Central Aid includes your district in its operation?—Are you referring to the Charity Organisation Society under Mr. Grisewood?
36150. Yes?—They help us tremendously.
36151. In regard to co-operation with them, have you sent to them certain cases which you think they can deal with better?—Yes, we always do that.
36152. Is that a kind of co-operation which you think it would be best to continue?—Much the best. They Desirability of "whole-time" clerks to guardians.

Cases refused by voluntary hospitals and sent on to Poor Law hospital. Use of Poor Law hospitals by non-poor class: amount of medical relief recovered from relatives at Liverpool.

Disappearance of deterrence of Poor Law hospitals.

Medical staff at Mill Road Infirmary.

Co-operation of guardians with Charity Organisation Society.

Separate classification of imbeciles and epileptics in Liverpool.

Apportionment of expenses as between unions combined for special purposes.

Prosecution of paupers for concealing sources of income.

Stealing in workhouses.

Workhouse scrubbing at wages substituted for out-relief to widows.

Adoption of children by guardians and objections thereto.

Effect of Local Government Act, 1894, on administration

Liverpool. have dealt with a great number of cases that we could not have dealt with properly, and they have saved people from coming upon the rates. There is no doubt about that. Then, on the other hand, they also send us up cases and we deal with them.

Application of Elberfeld system to England and its difficulties. 36153. You refer to Elberfeld in your statement; the method of Elberfeld is that the volunteer is the servant of the town committee?—That is so.

36154. Have you ever thought whether a change in that direction should take place, or whether it is better to keep this division of labour which you refer to?—I think it is much better to keep this present division of labour. I do not think the Elberfeld system could be worked here. I do not think we should get the voluntary assistants here that they can there.

36155. I presume you know that at Bradford, Bolton, and other places they are trying to get up a body of visitors in connection with many of the institutions, and particularly in connection with the Poor Law?—It is so with us. There is a suggestion from the Charity Organisation Society of Liverpool, which the guardians will fall in with I am sure, that they should allow their visitors to visit all the widows in the union. The guardians would be glad if they would do so.

36156. That is sometimes called the Elberfeld system, is it not?—Yes, but that is not quite the Elberfeld system.

36157. (Mr. Nunn.) Is it proposed that the widows should have the relief taken to them by these voluntary visitors?—I do not think there would be the slightest objection to that.

36158. But you do not know whether that is the proposal?—I do not know. Mr. Grisewood is coming before you, I think, and he will tell you.

36159. Are there any classes of cases which you think must be suitable for Charity Organisation to deal with?—Mr. Grisewood finds any amount of work at factories for widows with children and for men who are out of work undoubtedly through no fault of their own, and by just tiding over these men's difficulties for a little time they are possibly prevented from going upon the rates.

36160. You cannot assist people to go to another union, can you?—No.

36161. Yet I saw a notice up in your relief station giving an account of the families who had been sent away to various parts of the country?—Only to factories. What the guardians do is this: We cannot expect the Charity Organisation Society to pay for the outfit for a family, possibly some bedding, clothes and that sort of thing, so the guardians always make a grant to them for these families to go.

36162. What sort of grant?—Sometimes £3 per head. I think, if I may put it so, it is a very cheap get-out for them if they can get rid of them.

36163. (Chairman.) Do you make an open return as regards that expenditure, or what do you do?—I am afraid we do not make an open return. We grant it in the way of relief.

36164. It is just on the line, I suppose?—That is so; and we take the risk.

36165. (Mr. Loch.) The actual fare is paid by the Society, is it not?—I really cannot quite answer that. We have nothing to do with sending the case; Mr. Grisewood undertakes everything.

Mr. HAROLD GOAD CROSFIELD, called; and Examined.

36182. (Chairman.) You have been good enough, I think, to prepare for us a statement in which you make various suggestions, and which we can take as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes. (The Witness handed in the following statement.)

1. As the expenses of administration of poor relief are considered extravagant, I wish to point out the rather unsatisfactory way clerks of boards are remunerated. Filling plural offices is largely accountable for this.

2. I think it ought to be arranged that a clerk be appointed to all the offices requiring filling (all assistance necessary being provided), that he should get his Government or county council fees through the guardians, and 36166. (Mr. Nunn.) With regard to the visiting of cases, does your general relieving officer act as a cross-visitor?—We have no general relieving officer.

36167. Or your superintendent?—We have no superintendent relieving officer, but we have some cross-visitors.

36168. Have you cross-visitors acting under you?—Yes.

36169. I suppose neither you nor your assistant clerk ever visits any particular case?—I cannot say I have not done so. Once or twice when there has been a doubt as to a particular case I have visited, and so have my assistant clerks. There may be a case where there is a doubt between the cross-visitors and the relieving officer, and I should see that case.

36170. Do you examine all the fresh cases before they go to the committee?—The assistant clerks do, if I do not. My office does it. I cannot say I see every case myself.

36171. But they would report to you if there was anything exceptional?—Yes.

36172. Before the committee met?—Yes.

36173. Do you attend every committee meeting?—If there are any special cases, and I want to go down for them, I go; but I do not attend them as a rule, nor do the clerks.

36174. What would be the average attendance on your relief committees?—The average attendance is three; it ought to be five.

36175. Is that a quorum?—Three is a quorum.

36176. Is five the rota?—Five is supposed to be the number that ought to attend. They have six on the committee.

36177. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You have had a good deal of building in the West Derby Union and in connection with it, have you not?—Yes, we have.

36178. Have you any particulars as to the cost?—Cost of Poor Yes. The cost per bed for Belmont Road was £80; Law the cost for the Mill Road Infirmary, which, I think, is as well equipped as any other infirmary in the country, was £120; and the cost for the Cottage Homes was £133—you must know that they are all separate cottages, and that makes the cost greater. The cost of the Walton Workhouse was £100 per bed.

36179. Why was that more expensive than Belmont Road?—It was built long before Belmont, and possibly materials and everything else may have been dearer then.

36180. Mr. Phelps asked you about settlement cases and appeals to the Local Government Board being made compulsory; I take it there would be very little difficulty in that being done with regard to purely legal questions; but do you think with regard to questions of fact that they could be elicited at an inquiry?—I think the facts as adduced by both boards might be sent to the Local Government Board, and they would draw their own conclusions. They do not differ very materially, or may be there is only a very small point at issue.

36181. Then you think it might involve an inquiry in some cases only?—It would mean an inquiry in very few cases.

Mr. H. P. Cleaver.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.

Supervision of out-relief and cross visiting by clerk to the guardians.

Attendance on relief committees at West Derby.

Proposal that Local Government Board should decide all cases of disputed settlement.

Mr. H. G. Crosfield.

14 Jan. 1907.

that if he takes or is allowed to take such offices as clerks to burial boards, etc., these should come through guardians.

3. A clerk should not be allowed to farm out work and charge at a scale rate to a board.

4. I consider one thousand (£1,000) per annum ought to be the maximum for any clerk to any board (including every office he filled). I believe this would be ample inducement to draw a sufficient number of good men into the profession.

5. Not having a definite sum before a board, and paying by instalments, causes salaries to creep up imperceptibly. For instance, many on the board thought it appeared paltry to pay our new clerk less than £400.

Objections to pluralist clerks to guardians and to their present method of remuneration

Liverpool.

6. It is impossible to reduce, especially when new and amateur members have to face a professional in Poor Law.

6. It is impossible to reduce, especially when new and amateur members have to face a professional in Poor Law.

7. I think the Local Government Board should keep a strict account and perhaps publish for the public benefit the total emoluments of the clerks to boards.

13. Corporate bodies competing so much with private enterprise, it seems to me reasonable to keep the assessment an independent body.

16. There is a great deal of overlapping and a few charitable people in the community support the lot, which is hard on them.

I have given the Salvation Army quantities of such food, on condition no meat is used. All I advocate is keeping body and soul together on wholesome diet. I always refer any beggars or tramps to this shelter of the Salvation Army.

36193. Do you get any considerable sum by charging those who come?—I do not know what the sum is.

Liverpool.
Need to decrease deterrence of Poor Law
hospitals.

Proposal to place voluntary hospitals under control of guardians.

Use of voluntary hospitals by the non-poor.

Number of out-patients at West Toxteth
Homeopathic Hospital.
Payment for medicines dispensed by voluntary hospitals.

Lack of occupation for boys leaving school at Liverpool; and effect of docks in encouraging
boys to loaf.

36194. You say you would like to remove as many disabilities as possible from patients entering the hospitals; what do you mean by that?—I meant to say what Mr. Cleaver referred to, that any disparagement to a person entering a workhouse hospital is removed; and anything in that way which would stamp a person with the brand of pauperism I would do away with as much as possible.

36195. Do you mean that you would make Poor Law infirmaries practically free?—Yes, I would, the same as the charity hospitals are.

36196. Would you still retain them as a branch of the Poor Law?—Yes. The charity hospitals are so much overwrought that I think it is about time. It is so great a tie upon the few people who devote their energy and their time and their money to these charity hospitals that I think it is about time the public should take the work on to their own shoulders.

36197. You would try to municipalise the hospitals then?—Yes. I do not mean to say at one fell swoop, but I mean to say gradually the public should get control of them.

36198. If you did that would the authority which either had the control of, or which granted subventions to the charity hospital, be the board of guardians, or some other authority?—I think it might as well be the guardians.

36199. I suppose your reason for arriving at this conclusion is that hospital relief in wards is practically free both in the infirmaries and in the general hospitals?—Yes. I am a vice-chairman of one of the smaller hospitals in Liverpool, and practically we get very few patients who pay anything, except private cases.

36200. It is practically free?—Yes.

36201. What is the class who go there?—I suppose they are rather better than the class who go to the other hospitals?—It is a homeopathic hospital and it is rather a special thing. The doctors say they have cases there who ought to be paying cases, though they do not pay anything at all. They do not get into the workhouse hospitals without a proper visitation, and without the authorities finding out that they are proper people.

36202. Under the present system a person who can afford to pay is more likely to be made to pay if he is transferred to the infirmary than if he goes to a charity hospital, is he not?—Yes, that is so. That is just the view of the charity hospitals and of charitable people, and that is why it is such a great burden on them now.

36203. Do these charitable hospitals give much out-medical relief?—In this one that I am connected with, we give a tremendous lot, about 60,000 cases a year from the dispensaries.

36204. Do you charge anything for it?—Yes, we charge a very small sum.

36205. About what?—About 1d. or 2d. for the medicine.

36206. Is any of it free?—It is possible for the doctors who visit the homes of the people to administer it free; but mostly they are charged for the prescriptions 1d., 2d., or 3d.

36207. Do you know what the idea of that is? Is it so as not to interfere with the local practitioners' practice?—It is to derive an income from it. We derive quite a considerable income from it.

36208. Have you any medical provident society in Toxteth?—I do not think so.

36209. Now, coming to your paragraphs about children, you say that the majority of boys after they leave school do nothing but loaf?—I mean to say the boys in that block. It is only that particular division of Liverpool that I was speaking of, and my statement there has no reference to boys generally. The great fault after leaving school is that in those districts they do not at once get put into some sort of employment. The master told me the other day that a boy who had been the pride of the school for a long time, about a week or two after he left school (he was fourteen years of age) came up smoking cigarettes and out of hand altogether. Just after that remark had been made to me, a boy came in, and the inspector said to him, "How much have you worked?" he said "I have worked as a scaler." He was asked again how long he had worked since he had been out of the school—which was about sixteen months ago—and he said he had worked a fortnight. The inspector said, "That is the way with all of them in this block; they get no work at all."

36210. Can boys get employment in Liverpool?—A certain class of boys can get employment. There is a good demand for office boys, and there is a fair demand for boys in the plumbing trade, and trades akin to that. But it is very hard to get work for the boys from these low districts in Liverpool.

36211. They can get employment in the docks, I suppose, when they arrive at manhood?—Yes, when they get strong enough.

36212. Is it the case that they rather loaf until they get strong and become casual labourers?—Yes.

36213. Is it due to there not being many skilled trades in Liverpool?—Yes, that is just the fact of it. I have to do with a sort of shelter in Liverpool, a Newsboys' Home it is called. I do not know whether the Commission have visited it. A boy went from there the other day into a manufacturing district, and he got 10s. a week at once. There is a great demand in other parts of Lancashire for these boys, and if they could be removed to there, it would be a very good thing for them.

36214. That is another evil of casual labour, I presume, that the boys cannot get employment for some years after they leave school, and so they have to spend their time in loafing?—Yes, getting into bad habits and loafing. There is a good demand for the other boys of a better class for the offices, etc.

36215. Of course they would be of a superior class?—Yes.

36216. Then as regards feeding the children, I see you are in favour of giving them the very plainest food possible.—Yes. People make such a great mistake in giving them tea and bread and butter and jam. Very often when I was presiding during granting of relief, a woman would say, "I am suffering from nervous debility," and my son is suffering from nervous debility. It was just the effect of their feeding on improper food. I have come across it very largely all over the place.

People live on such improper food, and nearly all the children coming to those places have been fed on very improper food. If I gave them their breakfast I would see that they had a breakfast of porridge made with milk, or something of that sort. On no account should tea or coffee be given to children. Plain food like that is good enough for them. But that is what these parents do not understand, and they never take the trouble to give them this plain food at home, and the consequence is that there is a tremendous lot of physical degeneration. A very good article by a doctor on physical degeneration appeared in one of our newspapers last Monday, and that supports a great many of the points that I have laid before you. The stature of the boys is deficient, and so is the growth of the boys at these schools—

36217. What schools, may I ask?—This doctor has classified the various schools in a most able manner, and he shows how the children in these schools, like the one I visit, are inferior in physique to the children who are better off.

36218. Is he dealing with the schools of a particular district, or are the schools scattered over Liverpool?—He has made three classifications of three sorts of schools, and he says the children are being starved, and he asks what can be done? There is not the slightest doubt that the children in these third-class schools are being starved.

36219. And starved, you think, not merely from insufficient money, but from the ignorance of parents not knowing how to feed them?—That is it. They will not take the trouble to do it. They just give them a bit of bread and some very abominable tea for their breakfast. I have been in numbers of their homes, and that is the way they are brought up. The consequence is, their teeth and their stamina are gone altogether. And yet, as this doctor says, we are looking to that class for our physical labour in the docks, and it is deteriorating very quickly.

36220. The boys get tea to drink, you say?—Yes, Scale of stewed tea; they live on that.

36221. We have a good deal of evidence about outdoor relief; is there any scale in Toxteth?—I was listening to its adequacy.

Mr. H. G. Crosfield.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.
Lack of occupation for boys leaving school at Liverpool; and effect of docks in encouraging
boys to loaf.

Objections to rate supply of rich food to children.

Improper feeding of children a cause of physical degeneration.

Scale of relief in Toxteth and
question of its adequacy.

Mr. H. G. Crosfield. to the scale which previous witnesses were suggesting. That is just the scale they have in Toxteth.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.
Scale of relief in Toxteth and question of its adequacy.

36222. And the assumption I suppose is the same, namely, that there is something coming into the house in addition?—How they manage to live, I do not know. The assumption is that they manage to get some little help from relations, or something of that sort.

36223. You do not mean to say that in Toxteth they think the people can live on the outdoor relief given them, without getting other help?—Apparently it would be impossible for a person to do that, unless they have their rent free or something of that sort, because it would only leave about 1s. a week for sustenance.

36224. We have had two witnesses, one from West Derby and one from Liverpool, and they have both asserted that the outdoor relief in most cases was supplemented by charity, and in the case of Liverpool, I understand, it was given on that assumption; but that idea is not present to the minds of your guardians, you say?—Not by organised charity, but either a little help from friends or mutual assistance.

36225. And they think what they give is inadequate?—They think that these people will get something as well, and that some little work is done by them. Then, when they get a little bit older, the officer says, "I should advise an extra 6d. being given to this woman; she is getting older." That means to say that she is not able in any way whatever to get any relief from any other source.

36226. Would many of those children who are supposed to be underfed be the children of persons who are receiving this outdoor relief?—I do not think so exactly, but they may be. A great many mothers have come before me, and I have not, as far as I have cross-questioned them, come across any of them who were getting outdoor relief.

The suitability of the guardians or the town council as the assessing authority.

36227. (Sir Samuel Provis.) When you are speaking about the county council owning so many industrial undertakings, you are thinking, are you not, of town councils?—We call the Liverpool Council a county council.

36228. You are thinking of the councils of county boroughs?—Yes. We call ours a county council, and it is a county borough.

36229. In the case of Liverpool you have got three unions in the same borough, have you not?—Yes.

Uniformity of assessment in Liverpool.

36230. Do you find a difference of assessment in those three unions?—Of course every place is assessed on its own merits.

36231. In the principle applied do you find a difference?—No.

36232. Do they go on exactly the same lines?—We do. We have very much the same consulting professional valuers to guide us.

36233. Would not a good deal of your difficulty be met supposing you had professional valuers to value certain classes of property?—We do have them.

36234. You do that now?—Yes.

36235. Does that not very much meet the case of those classes of property that you are speaking of, like the tramway undertaking and the electric light undertaking?—Yes, but if they were to appoint the man to do it themselves, they would be their own judges. Before an assessment committee there are two valuations; one side puts one valuation forward, and the other another, and the assessment committee are the judges. They do not value the property, technically speaking.

36236. The Local Taxation Commission recommended in the case of properties of this kind that there should always be a professional valuer, and that the appeal should be to a special tribunal?—I did not know that.

36237. You have not considered that suggestion?—No, I have not. I think that would be all right.

Need for decreasing deterrence of medical relief.

36238. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to medical relief, I gather that you are against restricting it, and do not wish to make it more difficult to get?—Did you mean to say from a charity organisation?

36239. I meant rather altogether from the Poor Law?—No; I think that the more there is given to the people the better.

36240. Would you be in favour of handing over to the public health authority the medical inspection of homes, and medical treatment, in so far as sickness can be treated in the homes?—Yes, I should be quite willing to agree to that.

36241. There would be some advantages, you think, in getting the homes medically inspected?—There would be tremendous advantages in the lower parts of the city.

36242. And then it would be possible for the public health authority to send to the voluntary hospitals such cases as they wanted, and they would have hospitals of their own for such cases as the voluntary hospitals would not take?—Yes. It would be rather complicated perhaps, and the charity hospitals would not be agreeable to receive anything carte blanche.

36243. Would you not allow the voluntary hospitals to take all the cases they choose?—Yes.

36244. And then the public health authority would be responsible for providing institutions for the rest?—That would be so. That would be a very good principle to adopt, I think.

36245. But you do regard it as important to get some kind of inspection of the homes from the public health point of view?—Yes; the homes are simply terrible.

36246. And there would be a great advantage in combining that with a sort of first-aid treatment?—There would—a very great advantage. There is a great deal talked about charity organisation, but I think that charity organisation ought to be subvented in the same way. It is a very magnificent thing, but it is very hard to find the funds. Mr. Grisewood will tell you that they send out the most imploring appeals every Christmas.

36247. Would there not be some advantage in making one public officer responsible for the mortality and the health of the community?—Yes. Of course Dr. Hope in a way is responsible; but he cannot do anything—he can only suggest things.

36248. (Mr. Lansbury.) Have you any experience of The casual labour in Liverpool?—Yes. I am an employer of labour in Liverpool, and come across people. I am in constant touch with the docks, having stuff come up from the docks every day, and I meet a great many men who are working at the docks.

36249. Do you think the fact that you have the docks, with all their casual labour, adds to the trouble, the destitution, and the poverty of the district?—More than anything else is the consequent demoralisation of the people's character which is affected by this casual work. They go down to the docks, and they are not put on, and they feel very desolate, and if they have got any money left, they go into the public houses and spend the money. Then, besides that, there are a great many men who come over fresh from Ireland, coming from places there where they have had very little opportunity of indulging themselves, and they may happen to get good work at the docks for a short time, which pleases them very much; and they too spend a great deal of their earnings in the public houses very quickly. Casual labour is terribly demoralising to the character of the people in the Liverpool docks; there is not any doubt about that at all.

36250. A lot of these boys that you speak of, I suppose, get first of all a kind of apprenticeship to loafing?—Yes. Boys become casual labourers.

36251. And then a good many of them go to that kind of occupation?—Yes, they do. Every man in Liverpool directly he is out of a job goes to the docks. If I discharge any man from my mill, he at once goes down to the docks and looks out for casual work there.

36252. It is a kind of reservoir for them?—That is it. The He perhaps gets three days a week. It is very noticeable that men who work diligently at the docks have a work at the docks.

36253. There is no remedy for that, is there, only better organisation, so as to provide regular employment and stable wages? Wages in Liverpool were raised some years ago from 4s. to 5s. a day, and that brought a great deal more casual labour into the city, did not it?

Liverpool.
Question of transferring to sanitary authority the visitation of, and treatment of, illness in the homes of the people.

Proposal that sanitary authority should provide hospitals for all cases not dealt with by the voluntary hospitals.

The demoralisation resulting from casual labour.

Boys become casual labourers.

Liverpool.

By better organisation, I mean providing regular employment instead of casual employment?—If that could only be done more systematically, and if everybody had their turn at it, instead of there being favourites with the foremen, it would obviate a great deal of this difficulty. If the men need not go down and hunt round the pitches where they go to, if they could only be sure of getting their work when they went, and if they knew when they were not required, it would not be half so demoralising to them as it is now.

36254. At present it is very often quite an accident whether a man gets a job or not, is it not?—Yes, it is so.

"Preference list" men at the docks.

36255. (Chairman.) Is it not the fact that nearly all the great steam companies have got a preferential list, so to speak, and the men on that list are almost certain of getting employment?—Yes.

36256. And the men who come afterwards are the inferior men?—Yes.

36257. Is it not one of the difficulties of the system that the men who are getting these high wages, and who are on the first list, can discharge themselves periodically for a day or two without losing their work, and they like the combination of high wages and liberty?—I do not know whether that is one of the difficulties.

Mr. H. G. Crosfield.

14 Jan. 1907.

Liverpool.
"Preference list" men at the docks.

36258. Have you never heard of it?—I did not know of that. I know a man very intimately who works in my mill now, who was working with the White Star Company. He was a very diligent man, but his work was more or less casual. The probability is that these men would discharge themselves when a ship went out, but would not discharge themselves when a ship was there; then they would wait till another ship was ready, and would come back again.

36259. (Mr. Booth.) If they do not consider the foreman, the foreman will not consider them?—That is it. The men that are diligent get the first opportunity.

36260. Every foreman likes to have a set of good men whom he can rely upon?—That is it.

36261. And if they do not come up when he wants them, he does not think of them again?—Yes. There are at work in Liverpool men who come from parts in Ireland where they have never been in systematic work, and that helps to make them casual.

SEVENTY-THIRD DAY.

Tuesday, 15th January, 1907.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT :

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S. (in the Chair).
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. C. S. LOCH.

Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.

Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARD SKIVINGTON, called; and Examined.

36262. (Mr. Booth.) You are a Guardian of the Chorlton Union?—I am.

36263. We have the memorandum which you have been good enough to submit, and according to our custom we will treat that as your evidence-in-chief?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following statement.)

1. For most purposes of out-relief committees guardians have ample powers, but, in the discretionary application of such powers my views differ very much from those generally held by guardians.

Capricious administration of out-relief and need for uniform policy.

2. There is a lack of uniformity in dealing with cases, and, as a consequence, it depends upon which guardians are present, whether, in certain cases, outdoor relief is granted or an order for the "house" offered. Outdoor relief granted on one occasion may on the next be reversed without there being any change in the circumstances but owing to different guardians being present. This matter ought not to depend on the views held by individual guardians, but upon a general policy of the whole, otherwise preferential treatment is obtained by some and in other cases the reverse.

Cases proper for out-relief given indoor relief and causes thereof.

3. My experience leads me to conclude that there are many inmates of the "house" who ought to be recipients of outdoor relief. In some instances I have advised inmates to take their discharge and afterwards apply for outdoor relief.

4. I am inclined to believe that relief officers too readily admit persons to the "house" when, from a proper consideration of the case, outdoor relief would be found more suitable. This may be due, in some measure, to the form of the application from inexperienced persons, but I submit any misapprehension should be corrected by relief officers who should advise if they consider a case can be dealt with on more suitable lines. Whether by applicants entering the "house" relief officers are saved further trouble in the matter enters into their consideration I am not in a position to say, but certainly if such a policy were adopted they would be relieved of additional work.

Mr. W. E. Skivington.

15 Jan. 1907.

Cases proper for out-relief given indoor relief and causes thereof.

5. On the 21st ultimo I had occasion to write to an inmate of Withington workhouse. He is quite a respectable person, sixty-two years of age, and had not previously been in receipt of Poor Law relief. I advised him to take his discharge and make an application to the relief officer for outdoor aid, and said that he had been very badly advised in entering the "house." His case required contributions from his sons which did not necessitate his entrance to the "house" at all.

6. When at meetings of the House Visiting Committee I noted the number of aged persons who had been admitted to the "house" by order of relief officers. Many had not previously been recipients of Poor Law relief, others had not had recourse to Poor Law relief before reaching the age of sixty years. I was so impressed with these cases that I submitted the following resolution to the meeting of the Board of the 29th June, 1906:—"That the circumstances of aged inmates of the "house" who are over sixty years of age and who have not before attaining that age had recourse to the Poor Law Relief—other than medical relief—be reconsidered with a view to ascertaining whether outdoor relief would be more suitable in such cases." I regret the resolution was not adopted. I refer to this matter to show I am distinctly in favour of outdoor relief when relief is decided upon and is applicable to the case.

Mr. W. E. Skivington.

15 Jan. 1907.

Out-relief should be given more freely to the aged. Payments by paupers for carriage of their out-relief to them. Contributions from relatives. Question of out-relief to parents residing with sons-in-law.

Question of out-relief to dwellers in lodging-houses.

Cases of undiscovered destitution.

Out-relief and the maintenance of the "home."

Unemployment as a cause of pauperism.

Suitability of distress committees for dealing entirely with able-bodied.

7. Aged persons who require Poor Law relief and who can reside with friends, or who are not incapable of looking after themselves should, if they do not elect to go into the "house," be allowed outdoor relief and such relief should be adequate in amount as expressed in a Local Government Board circular in 1900.

8. An aged recipient of 3s. weekly, owing to illness paid 3d. each time the relief was brought for her. I have reason to believe there are other similar cases. These aged recipients cannot afford to pay in this manner and I submit the relief should be delivered to them.

9. Contributions from sons, or other persons, towards the maintenance of relatives chargeable should not be enforced where the weekly income for a family is 30s. or less.

10. The cases of aged applicants who reside at the home of a son-in-law should be considered as if the applicant were in lodgings. The responsibility of maintenance should not be thrust upon a son-in-law, by offering the "house" which is declined. Very often a son-in-law will give accommodation in such cases but be unable to give maintenance also without impoverishing his family, especially in the case of working men. As there is no legal liability upon him in such a case the applicant may be considered a suitable case for outdoor relief.

11. To exclude from outdoor relief applicants who reside in registered houses, in which different rooms are sublet, because of the likelihood of relief knowledge being transmitted to others, is to penalise the poorest of the poor because of their deep poverty which necessitates them to incur only the lowest possible rental; such houses are a boon to the very poor. The possibility of increasing pauperism in this sense can apply equally well to a row of cottage houses, but even so if there are other persons whose circumstances are such as to require relief, the information given would be useful in bringing to light another case of undiscovered destitution. Guardians are not responsible for the volume of poverty prevalent, they have not to suppress destitution, their duty is to relieve it.

12. I have just returned from visiting an undiscovered case of destitution where an old couple each sixty-two years of age are living on bread and tea for every meal. I was shewn a testimonial for twelve years under the Salford Corporation. They have never had relief before and did not want to go to the union. I have prevailed upon them to go to-morrow morning.

13. I do not agree with a statement made by an inspector of the Local Government Board in my hearing, that "they have no home to break up," used as an argument against outdoor relief. The poor have not good homes but if they are broken up it is a terrible task for them to get one together again, even as good as the last.

14. I am of the opinion that "want of work" is responsible for a large number of applicants for relief although in many cases the application may not take that form. It is responsible for many applications on account of sickness brought on through depression and want of food though want of work, and I believe many forms of applications could be traced to the same cause. I need hardly say anything with regard to want of work at the present time, as relief committees are unable to cope with the difficulty. It is a difficult matter but the necessity for dealing with it somehow is urgent.

15. My view briefly is that one authority only should receive applications from able-bodied persons. That authority should be empowered to deal with the cases as they think fit, either in the matter of setting them to work provide any tool that may be required in obtaining work, or grant relief in temporary cases. For this purpose I think distress committees if given further powers are admirable. They can give the question their undivided attention and they have the advantage of the labour registries for placing applicants in employment.

36264. (Mr. Booth.) I note that you deal chiefly with the subject of out-relief, and I gather you think that uniformity of treatment of the poor in that direction is of great importance?—I refer to uniformity here with regard to the relief committees, because the different guardians sitting on different days treat similar cases differently.

36265. Have you any suggestion to make as to how uniformity should be arrived at?—Yes. I speak more with regard to the aged people, and at the very least I think we might recognise a minimum of 5s. for the maintenance of each aged person, and that if they have any means coming in, to the extent of 2s. say, at the very least that ought to be supplemented up to 5s. If they have nothing coming in at all, they ought to have at least 5s. I was pleased to be able to get 5s. for an old gentleman yesterday from our committee.

36266. Your suggestion is that the uniformity should take the form of raising the minimum limit?—Maintaining a minimum subsistence.

36267. But to raise the present minimum?—There is no minimum at the present time; there is neither minimum nor maximum.

36268. Where little is given now you would make it more uniform by giving more?—What is given now is altogether inadequate; there ought to be some minimum recognised. A matter of 3s. given to an aged person who has no other means coming in at all is inadequate. There was one case I know particularly where an old lady paid 2s. for her room and lived, or attempted to live, on 1s. a week; that old lady has had to go into the hospital through starvation, I think. If she comes out I am going to endeavour to get her 5s. a week.

36269. Your suggestion is that there should be greater uniformity in the direction of the amount given?—Yes.

36270. In addition to that there is the question of whether there should be out-relief or not. Is it not well to have uniformity on the principle whether it should be given or no?—I do not quite follow you.

36271. When there are the alternatives of offering the house or giving out-relief, is it not necessary that the same uniformity of decision should apply to that also, and that one committee should not refuse to give at all where another committee agrees to give?—I do not see the necessity for sending aged people into the house at all; I can hardly speak of uniformity with regard to sending aged people to the house; to me they are all eligible for out-relief.

36272. You would give it to them all?—I would abolish out-relief altogether with regard to old people and give them pensions of 10s. a week. I think they ought to have it. Of course here I am dealing with out-relief.

36273. That would not be from the Poor Law?—I would give pensions of 10s. to all aged persons over sixty years of age rather than any Poor Law relief. In the absence of pensions we ought to deal with them adequately and not in the house, unless they cannot look after themselves, or have no friends to attend to them, but where there are friends who can give them accommodation or attend to them at all, if they elect to remain outside they ought not to be forced to go into the house.

36274. With regard to the out-relief that is now given in other cases besides the old, does your demand that there should be greater uniformity and greater liberality in treatment apply also to widows, for instance?—Yes; out-relief. if we could have uniformity, but it is very difficult. If I am on the Committee there is more adequate relief given, but if I am absent similar cases do not get as adequate treatment. Some guardians are more economical of the rates, I may say.

36275. Let me ask you once more have you any suggestion to make as to how, with the great variety of unions all over the country, uniformity of treatment could be obtained?—I think upon the same principle; that we should attempt to supplement the earnings, if it is a widow with children, say, to a given amount per head.

36276. That would involve very careful inquiries as to what other resources were available?—We have the same enquiries now. We have to ascertain what is the income, and in some cases with the relief and the moneys coming in it will come to, say 3s. per head, in some cases over that, but in other cases it does not reach 2s. per head. Thus we lack uniformity.

36277. You think the inquiries can be trusted to disclose the facts?—They can be trusted equally as much as at present if we were to supplement the income to so much per head they would be equally as reliable as they Inadequate out-relief and need of increased minimum scale of relief for aged.

Old age pensions should be substituted for out-relief to the aged.

Capricious should be greater uniformity and greater liberality in treatment of out-relief. if we could have uniformity, but it is very difficult. If I am on the Committee there is more adequate relief given, but if I am absent similar cases do not get as adequate treatment. Some guardians are more economical of the rates, I may say.

Widows with children: need for minimum scale of relief proportionate to earnings.

are at the present time. I do not see that there is any reason to relieve inadequately on the supposition that there may be more than you know of.

Need of non-Poor Law homes for friendless and infirm aged poor. 36278. (Mr. Lansbury.) With regard to the question of aged people, of course there are a large number who could not maintain themselves outside, whatever pensions were given, are there not; I mean from infirmity of various descriptions?—Certainly, in the cases where they have no friends.

36279. And in cases of physical infirmities?—That is so.

36280. Those you would not advocate being dealt with in workhouses, as understood now?—Not as understood at the present time, but more almshouses, or poor-houses proper.

36281. You are advocating old age pensions for those who can take care of themselves, or have friends to take care of them. Would you agree that whatever institutions were set up for those for whom an institution is necessary should be administered by an authority apart from pauperism?—Certainly; there is no need to pauperise them, their pension could be used for their maintenance.

Proposed transfer of Poor Law children to the Education Authorities. 36282. With regard to the children of widows, and orphans and deserted children, would you be in favour of removing them altogether from the sphere of the Poor Law and placing the charges of them on the education authority?—It would be far better, I agree. I have not thought of the point, if we could bring the children up more in connection with the schools; if there was some boarding system in connection with the municipal schools, I would be inclined to favour anything of that kind.

36283. I meant removing the children away from the pauper area altogether, so that the stigma of pauperism in no way attached to the children?—I would favour the children being taken away from the Poor Law workhouse system as much as it is possible to so.

36284. You would agree that the education authority should be the proper authority to look after the children?—Yes.

Proposed transfer of medical relief to non-Poor Law authority. 36285. With regard to the sick, do you give much outdoor relief to sick people in Manchester?—Yes, a great deal.

36286. Have you thought at all as to whether the whole of the arrangements with regard to public health might be brought under one authority?—Not the Poor Law authority.

36287. I mean a Public Health Department?—I would not go so far as to say what authority, but I do think that the union infirmaries should be separated from the Poor Law administration altogether; I have very strong reasons for that opinion from inquiry and observation in our union.

36288. You know there is a Public Health Department in connection with your Corporation?—Yes.

36289. Is there any objection to handing the whole of the arrangements, so far as public health is concerned, to that authority to deal with?—None whatever; I had not just thought of that, I had looked upon it as under the corporation, but what department of the corporation I had not formed an opinion upon previously.

Unemployment as a cause of pauperism. 36290. In Paragraph 14 of your statement you say that want of work is responsible for a large number of applicants for relief; is that prevalent throughout Manchester, do you think?—It seems to me that it must be very general. I have two cases in my mind just now, one is the case of a man who had been out of work for, perhaps, about fourteen weeks—I think that is the number—and the doctor reported the case as one of starvation. The man was taken into the infirmary, and the family was maintained outside. That was a case of infirmary treatment through the lack of work. Another case is, that a week or two ago a man came before our Committee who wanted some help. We could see starvation in his face. We granted him 4s. a week, and a week or two afterwards he came and asked to go into the infirmary; and I expect he is in the infirmary now.

36291. What you mean is that directly and indirectly want of work is a reason for a good deal of the pauperism, whether it comes to you in the form of sickness or relief for destitution?—Yes. Lack of work brings on depression, and sickness follows it; it is a thing I could not demonstrate, but I have observed it so much. I may say that I live in a very poor neighbourhood of Manchester, practically in the slums, and I can see these people; one man has gone into the Withington now for hospital treatment. I think a few good dinners and the provision of employment would make a different man of him altogether.

36292. I notice you think the authority that deals with able-bodied people would be a single authority, instead of the Poor Law and a Distress Committee; you want one or the other to deal with them all, is that so?—Not the Poor Law; one authority to deal with all able-bodied, because to me it is a very large matter, and it is necessary that it should be dealt with; and I think that one authority which can devote special attention to it would be better than an authority the same as the Poor Law, which has such a lot of matters to deal with that from my observation they do not pay sufficient attention to the persons who come to them through lack of work.

36293. You do not mind what authority it is so long as it is apart from the Poor Law, and that that is its special business?—I do not mind what authority. After careful consideration of the distress committees I understand the Act pretty thoroughly, and what is possible, not what the distress committees do, but what it is possible for them to do, I am inclined to think that that is an authority which, with an extension of powers, would be very satisfactory.

36294. Do you think that committees of that kind are the proper committees to carry out the huge pieces of work that are necessary to put the unemployed to work?—I cannot think of any better system.

36295. Have you ever thought of a national system where the whole thing could be done from one centre upon national works?—Yes, but is a local question as well as a national one. I agree that the question of unemployment ought to be dealt with on national lines, yet at the same time in the case of persons temporarily unemployed they would not want to be taken away hundreds of miles; they would want to be dealt with locally; but chronic out of work cases might be dealt with on national lines.

36296. Is there not an objection to dealing with them locally in so far as the work is very circumscribed that you can give them locally?—At the present it is, but if there was one authority empowered to deal properly with relief and the question they would have to take into consideration proper methods, not the present inadequate methods, dealing with unemployment.

36297. (Mr. Bentham.) How long have you been a guardian?—One year and nine months; before becoming a guardian I paid some attention to the Poor Laws.

36298. I notice in paragraph 2 of your statement that you say there is a want of uniformity in dealing with cases. May I take it from that remark that you are in favour of a uniform treatment of all applicants?—I am in favour of treating similar cases similarly, as far as it is possible to do so, and I do not think they are so dealt with at the present time.

36299. How many relief committees sit in your union?—Four.

36300. They have no rules or regulations at all to guide the committees in order to get uniformity?—Yes, they have some, but I have never paid any special attention to them, because I do not think they are worth following.

36301. Have you any better method of getting uniformity than by having rules or regulations laid down, so that each committee may follow them?—No, I have no better method; but still they should be considered from time to time and revised; these are not up-to-date.

36302. Have they been reconsidered since you have become a guardian?—No.

36303. You have never suggested a reconsideration of them, have you?—No, but it has been in my mind for all

Mr. W. E. Skivington.
15 Jan. 1907.

Mr. W. E. Skivington. that. We can only consider them annually, and I have only been there at one period when they could have been considered.

15 Jan. 1907.

36304. Are the rules in print ?—Yes.

36305. Have you a copy with you ?—Yes, these are the "Instructions to Relief Committees." (Produced, see Appendix No. I. (A) p. 543.) 36306. As I understand you, these rules are not followed by any of the relief committees ?—I am only on one relief committee.

36307. You have been on one all the time ?—Yes.

36308. Is it within your knowledge that they are not followed ?—I have never seen the book used by any guardian whilst I have been on the relief committee.

Scale of relief.

36309. I see there is a scale of relief here ; you ignore this scale of relief altogether, do you ?—Yes.

36310. Is not this scale in the book actually higher than the amount given on the average ?—I do not think so.

36311. Have you taken any number of cases that would come within this scale and ascertained the exact amount of relief that is being given and compared it with this scale ; have you ever done that systematically and carefully ?—I have gone more by the practice, and the practice has been to give aged persons (and I am more concerned about the aged) half-a-crown, and I have endeavoured to lift it up to 5s., I have been successful on some few occasions, I think it is quite little enough.

36312. You really do not know whether the amount given on the average is less than the scale printed, or more ?—I could not say. I tell you I have not looked at that for some time, because no one uses it ; I am going by the practice.

Capricious administration of out-relief and need for uniform policy.

36313. You say in paragraph 2 : "This matter ought not to depend on the views held by individual guardians but upon a general policy of the whole, otherwise preferential treatment is obtained by some and in other cases the reverse" ?—Yes.

36314. When you endeavour to get 5s. for a particular case, is not that preferential treatment ?—No.

Inadequate out-relief and need of increased minimum scale of relief for the aged.

36315. What is it ?—I am carrying out the Local Government Board suggestion, it is the others who are not carrying it out. We want the relief lifting up. I am carrying out the right way, they are not doing so.

36316. Supposing you got certain cases lifted up to 5s., and other cases, exactly similar in character, are not lifted up to 5s., is that not preferential treatment ?—Certainly it appears as if some are getting preferential treatment, perhaps I am the cause to some extent of their getting that preferential treatment ; it is not that they are getting anything unduly, but the others are not getting adequate, which gives colour to making it preferential, which it is not altogether.

36317. In what way would you get the guardians to agree upon a general policy ; and how would you lay down that policy ?—With regard to the aged, the very least we should do is we ought to supplement whatever they have coming in to make it up to 5s. ; it costs more to keep them in the house.

36318. Would you have that policy put down in a code of rules ?—I would like to know it was carried out by all committees.

36319. In order that a policy might be carried out it is necessary that it should be always in the minds of the guardians who are sitting on the committees, the scale must be written down so that they may refer to it when they forget the amounts ?—Yes.

Need for "byelaws" as to relief and scale of relief.

36320. Therefore you would be in favour of having a code of rules to work upon ?—Yes.

36321. So that all committees could work alike as far as possible ?—For that purpose I would.

36322. And a scale of relief ?—Yes, to supplement up to a given standard 36323. That means really a scale ?—Yes.

36324. The case you have mentioned of old people does not cover the whole field ?—Certainly not.

Out-door relief to single able-bodied men.

36325. There are an enormous number of cases they have to deal with besides old people. What exception do you take to these rules ? Take the first, single able-bodied men : Would you give out-door relief to single able-bodied men ?—Yes, certainly.

36326. You would, living in common lodging-houses, Residence in say ?—I did not say that, living at home or in lodgings, or lodging even, if they are forced to it, in common lodging houses, house should because they are driven there by circumstances ; and why not bar out-relief. they should be boxed up in the workhouse and kept from any opportunity of getting into regular employment I do not know.

36327. The same would apply to single able-bodied women ?—Certainly.

36328. There is one rule here which says : That persons residing with relatives where the united income of the family is sufficient for the support of all its members, whether such relatives are liable by law to support the applicant or not, should not have out-door relief. I think in one of your paragraphs, paragraphs 10, you mention the same sort of thing and say that you would give relief under such circumstances ?—Where an applicant is living in the home of her son-in-law.

Question of out-relief to persons residing with non-lia-ble relatives.

36329. It says, "with relatives" in your rules, not particularly the son-in-law ?—I have seen so many cases of persons who reside with the son-in-law and have been refused on that account that I made a special note of it.

36330. Even if the income is sufficient for all its members, without question it is amply sufficient, you would say still the person should have relief from the Poor Law ?—It is not amply sufficient ; I am talking of working-class families.

36331. I am putting a proposition to you where the aged person is living in a household where the income is amply sufficient for all ?—I have not seen it yet.

36332. You have not come across such a case ?—No, we do not with the working-class people in Hulme.

36333. Would you say in such a case they ought to be recipients of Poor Law relief ?—I do not think those cases are likely to come before the guardians. I have not experienced it. I am not going to commit myself, where they have ample means they are not likely to let a person in their homes be a recipient of Poor Law relief. Where we get the applications from is from working-class families where the man has sufficient to do to maintain his own. I will stand by this, even in the case of an artisan or a mechanic.

36334. You mean where the income is slender and there is not ample means to provide for the aged person in the home, that then of course they ought to be eligible for relief, that is what you really mean, is it ?—Yes, I do not think a working man can afford to keep anyone above his own family, if he wishes not to be a recipient of Poor Law relief himself.

36335. You think there must be a little more moral obligation towards relatives than towards strangers, do you not ?—Yes, I do, but there is a moral obligation upon society to maintain the aged person.

Need for old-age pensions

36336. You get over that by recommending old age pensions ?—Certainly, a very just thing.

36337. That would meet such cases, would it not ?—Yes, in fact I do not desire to argue for relief for the aged.

36338. Do you leave out of account altogether in the case of the persons that you consider as eligible for out-door relief their conduct in life. Do you leave that out of the question altogether ?—I do not leave it out at all, but the persons who have not such good characters are the products of our society ; they are made by the social conditions, and I can see every day children now who in a few years will be mere corner boys because they are brought up in the slums : they do not put themselves there, the conditions are such that they will become militiamen for a few years and loafers so-called, and it is society that allows such conditions. Mainly the lack of employment is responsible for it, and I do not think we ought to further victimise these people who are the products of such conditions as that, even although they have not good characters.

The question of merit as a condition of relief.

36339. Leaving out of question altogether what has caused their present condition ?—I cannot leave that out.

36340. Supposing you have a man who leads a drunken disorderly life and he neglects his family, has been before the court for neglecting his children and neglects his work, do you consider he would be equally eligible for out-door relief with a person who has led a respectable life?—You are carrying my idea of out-door relief too far. I believe with men of that kind, in setting them to work. There is more than out-relief; in speaking of able-bodied I prefer work and not out-relief at all. I would go so far as to refuse to deal with them on out-relief; if we provide them with work it does not matter so much about character if you are going to make them earn their wages.

The question of merit as a condition of relief.

36341. Supposing a man was ill, and a respectable man, you would have no questions as to giving out-door relief, would you therefore give out-door relief to a disorderly person similarly circumstanced?—When he was ill?

36342. Yes?—Most likely; hospital treatment might be better, I could not say; I do not see why we should require to give out-door relief to a sick person if we have got hospitals capable of dealing with the case and making them fit for work quicker.

36343. Supposing a case in which you would not in the ordinary way order the infirmary, where it was not necessary to order the infirmary, would you give out-door relief or in-door relief because of the man's previous life?—In a case of sickness?

36344. Yes?—It is to society's advantage, and to the advantage of the individual to get him well as soon as possible. I do not see but what he could have hospital treatment, and if we are not going to give him adequate treatment medically then let us deal with him by out-relief if we are so foolish.

36345. The point is would you decide whether you would give out-door or in-door relief by a man's character at all?—Do you mean put a man in a workhouse and not in an infirmary, if so I say put him in the infirmary if anywhere.

36346. Would you decide whether a person should be given out-door or in-door relief upon his character in any way? Would you leave character out of the question altogether?—No, I cannot, not altogether.

Medical expediency as the determinant of the nature of medical relief.

36347. (Mr. Lansbury.) Would you not say that with regard to a person who is sick, whatever treatment the doctor considered the best for the case was the treatment you would support whether in-door or out-door?—The doctor would be a better judge certainly.

36348. Is that not really what you would want to do with any case of sickness that came up: it would depend upon the expert as to how the person should be treated? Yes, that is all right, but the doctor's recommendation would not be with regard to the house in-door, it would be for the infirmary.

36349. I meant whatever the doctor thought was best?—If the doctor says inside, it is a case for the infirmary.

36350. That is all I meant, out-door as against in-door?—I cannot understand a case of sickness going into the body of the house at all.

36351. It would go into the sick ward then?—The infirmary ought to be separate from the house: it would be no use to put it into the sick part as it is to-day.

36352. (Mr. Booth.) I understand Mr. Bentham's question to be with regard to a person not so sick as to be under the doctor's care, but to be incapable of earning money, and whether the past history of that person was to be taken into consideration with regard to the treatment of the case.

36353. (Mr. Bentham.) That is so far as the decision whether you should give in-door or out-door relief. Take a man who is partly incapable through his past life, drink or otherwise, and the medical officer says this man can get no better treatment inside than outside, he is weak and so on, but he drinks away his money when he gets it, would you give that person out-door relief, or would you say because of his conduct he must come inside?—I am not going to defend a drunkard at all, but people who are in receipt of 15s. a week cannot drink that much, and very often their employment necessitates that they shall drink: chemical workers have to drink.

36354. In cases of known drunkards where you have reason to believe that the money that is given in relief will not go for the maintenance of the family you would not give relief?—No, not outside relief.

Need for infirmary separate from workhouse.

Drunkenness as a bar to out-relief.

36355. You say you would not give relief on the assumption that the relief would be supplemented from other sources. In order to ascertain whether relief is being supplemented from other sources, or whether there are any sources of income, you would favour a very strict enquiry, I suppose?—Certainly, it is done to-day.

36356. You think the enquiry that is already made by the relieving officers is quite sufficient?—I am not going to say sufficient; they ascertain all they can and it may be all that there is to ascertain. We have increased the number of relieving officers in our union so as to give them less to do in order that they can pay better attention to enquiries into the cases.

36357. You believe in thorough enquiry?—Certainly.

36358. With regard to children, you agree to a certain extent that children should be removed as far from the workhouse precincts as possible?—Yes.

36359. Are not all children that are admitted to the Chorlton Union sent first of all to the workhouse?—Yes.

36360. Before they are drafted to the schools?—Yes.

36361. They are kept in receiving wards at the workhouse?—Yes.

36362. Where there are adults?—Yes.

36363. Do you consider that a satisfactory arrangement?—No, and the Chorlton Union have under consideration the erection of receiving wards for children to be in two sections, one for them to be brought in at the commencement and then transferred to another part before they are transferred to the children's home at Styal and they will be separated from the adults. Of course it needs building, but it is in contemplation.

36364. With regard to classification generally are you in favour of classifying inmates by separate institutions, that is one institution for one class of inmate, say your able-bodied of the worst character, which would be a test house in a sense, and then another for the aged people, which would be more comfortable, and another institution for your sick, and others for special cases?—No, I am not in favour of such classification in the workhouse at all. I prefer that we should take the infirmary entirely away from the Poor Law administration; and place the able-bodied under a body that will set them to work. Why maintain them if they will work? They have not the opportunity to work, hence they become loafers and vagrants.

The sick and able-bodied dealt with by non-Poor Law authorities.

36365. What would you do with a man who will not work?—I have not learned yet that there are people who will not work.

Work-shirkers, their numbers, explanation, and treatment.

36366. You have never come across one?—You should take into consideration the conditions for the years past that have produced a person who shirks work, but there is such a thing as putting a shirker to compulsory work. From my experience, knowing the working class as I do, the main thing they lack is the opportunity to work. These people, so called idlers at the present day, I know very well would work. The odd ones, if there are any, could be dealt with by compulsion.

36367. You have in your mind there may be some odd ones?—There are other people at the other end of the scale who will not work and never intend to. I am not going to condemn the lower end because they have been compelled to be idle for so many years, compelled on account of work being prohibited to them. Because they appear now to have got chronic it is said they never will. Give them an opportunity of work at 18s. a week and there will be a change.

36368. It is not a matter of condemning them so much as ascertaining whether they exist or not, whether such a class of persons does exist?—I have not made my mind up that they do exist, as I say my knowledge of them is that a person, a so-called idler, if offered work will do it, but if you offer work when they cannot get a livelihood out of it it is a different thing.

36369. You think if proper work were offered to all able-bodied men under any other authority than the Poor Law that the men would work their hardest, that is work as hard as is necessary in proportion to their strength, for the public good?—And for their own good.

Suitability of distress committees for dealing entirely with able-bodied.

36370. For their own good in the first instance. Do you think it is possible for distress committees under

Mr. W. E. Skivington.

15 Jan. 1907.

Need for strict enquiry into circumstances of applicants for relief.

Mr. W. E. Skivington.

15 Jan. 1907.

State provision against sickness and unemployment and its effect on Trade Unions, etc.

The motives of refusal to give out-relief.

The minimum living income for the aged.

your plan to find sufficient work for all men who may apply?—I am not concerned whether it is possible or not. It is a thing that is necessary to be done by someone, and the distress committees in commencing to deal with this great problem are the best at the present time. If we can extend the powers, and if they learn by experience how to handle a large number of persons, all the better.

36371. You would make it possible for all men to apply for work and you would make it imperative on the part of the authorities to provide those men with work and wages?—Certainly.

36372. What effect would that have on men at the present time who do to a certain extent insure against unemployment by joining various trade unions, friendly societies, and so on in order to provide an income when work is scarce? Would the men continue to join those trade unions and insure against unemployment if there was work ready for them without?—They only join the trade unions and combine in the trade unions on account of the fear of unemployment.

36373. If you take that fear away by providing constant work from a public authority which they can always fly to, there would be no necessity to join the trade unions?—No.

36374. You do not think they are necessary in that respect?—No.

36375. You would let the State take the whole responsibility for all exigencies of life, for sickness and for unemployment I mean?—I will say Yes, for sickness and unemployment.

36376. You would make unemployment and sickness a State charge as it were?—Yes.

36377. Therefore no one need in the future prepare for either of those two contingencies?—No.

36378. (Miss Hill.) You spoke about a difference of opinion sometimes occurring on the relief committees with regard to whether it was wise or unwise to offer the house, and you said some guardians were in favour of economy?—Yes.

36379. I suppose you realise that it would not be only a question of economy with a good many people; that they really do think that men as a rule can better provide for their own families than any State can do it, and that we must be very careful not to interfere with that sense of responsibility and duty and the affection which comes from the fulfilment of it; it is not by any means only a question of economy that is in the minds of those people; they may be right or wrong, but it is a different view of things: you realise that, do you not?—Not as you put it.

36380. You do not think there are people who really believe that we will, say, lavish outdoor relief, or extensive outdoor relief, has really supplemented wages and therefore lowered them?—I say these people do not understand the real position of the persons they are dealing with.

36381. That may be so, but their motive is not economy?—Yes it is, they must be careful of the rates.

36382. I do know about individuals, but surely you recognise that some are instigated by other motives than those of economy?—They care about the poor ratepayer instead of the poor people the rates are levied for. I might say in answer to that if you are speaking of persons who are unemployed, compulsorily unemployed, all the persons that there is work for are employed, and there is a surplus, they are in different grades, and unless society offers work to these people they must find maintenance for them and not niggardly maintenance even at that.

36383. I was not speaking about a particular policy which it might be wise to adopt, but I was saying that there are people who see these other reasons for throwing people to a certain extent on their own resources and for taking care they do not paralyse their energies?—Throwing them on their own resources in that manner means that if they do get up one fine morning and bestir themselves very actively and get a shop they get someone else's job and there is no change; you have another person out of work instead of that one.

36384. (Mr. Phelps.) When you said you thought 5s. was the point to which you would work up for relief per head, had you any particular reason for taking 5s.?—Only that I think that is as much as I can attempt to demand for the aged people at the present time, but I do not think it is sufficient.

36385. You know the working-classes in Manchester, I gather?—Very well indeed.

36386. What do you think is the sum that a person can live upon, take a single couple, a man and his wife, under conditions which are tolerable from your point of view?—To be comfortable?

36387. Under conditions which are tolerable?—Workless or aged?

36388. Aged?—I do not think they could live at all comfortably on less than 10s. each.

36389. A married couple?—Yes, comfortably.

36390. What would you put their rent at?—5s. to maintain the house which they had in their younger days I will say.

36391. What I meant was that they should be lodged suitably according to one's notions?—I do not see why their home should be broken up after a life of toil, say forty or forty-five years' working. I do not see why we should take into consideration putting them in rooms. In speaking of adequate means, I do not believe in the 5s. pensions at all; if there is any justification for a pension let it be an adequate pension.

36392. You only took 5s. as the maximum that you hoped?—?—Not the maximum.

36393. The maximum that you hoped your board might be induced to give?—I should like to see that 5s. attained, because it might be a starting place to get more.

36394. Quite so; on the whole you think that £1 a week for an aged couple is about what the State ought to give in the way of assistance?—Yes.

36395. With regard to the conditions under which people live, are you prepared to be stern on that point if you find people living in surroundings which are not tolerable?—I should like to improve the surroundings, certainly.

36396. How would you secure that people should live in surroundings which were good?—If we did give 10s. pensions to aged people we could stipulate that they should not reside in the slums, because it would be something reasonable to live upon.

36397. That is to say that you would say they should break up the home?—I should stipulate that they would live in the suburbs and get the fresh air; it would prolong their lives and they would get the pensions longer.

36398. You would break up their homes if it was for their benefit?—It would be desirable for them not to live in the slums.

36399. You would not consult their wishes on that point?—Under certain circumstances I might do; in the poorer districts, which I have in mind, certainly there are conditions that it is very desirable to get away from if you can. I have not managed yet to get away from them, but I can see it is quite possible for another person's good to insist that they shall leave those conditions.

36400. Take another point, with regard to medical relief you said you would be guided by the doctor practically whether persons would be best treated in their own homes or an institution?—In an infirmary, yes.

36401. I dare say you have come across cases of phthisis where doctors urge very strongly the removal of the patient?—Yes.

36402. Would you be prepared to effect that removal by force?—No, I could not commit myself to that at present, although I recognise the force of it.

36403. You would not lay it down as a general rule that the doctor's advice should always be taken?—I may be wrong on that point, but I should try to persuade them perhaps. Take the father of a family, although it is for his own good it means he has to be taken away compulsorily altogether from his family.

36404. I am not thinking of his own good, but the good of his children?—That is the point I am looking at it from.

36405. You would be prepared to see them affected by phthisis?—No, I would not.

36406. I only ask what course you would adopt in those cases. However, I do not want to press it. It is very difficult, I quite agree?—I know the reason, and see the force—I have seen it before—of saving the children, and yet there is the other sentimental question. We have not the power to force them at the present time.

The minimum living income for the aged.

The relation of relief and old-age pensions to housing conditions.

Question of compulsory removal of phthisis cases to infirmary.

36407. No, you have not. Take another thing, which is not physical but moral, a certain amount of unworthiness on the part of the parent, proved unworthiness, would you think that was a reason for separating them?—No, I should rather tackle the conditions which made them unworthy.

36408. It might take a long time to improve those conditions, and the children might be lost in the interval?—I do not think if we take a given case it would take long if tackled in a proper manner.

36409. Do your guardians ever adopt children?—Yes.

36410. Do you think that is a wise course?—Yes, save the children, yet the parents are the creatures of circumstance, and we allow the conditions to remain which necessitate that other people will follow in the same footsteps, and we shall have to take their children away from them. We never learn by having taken the children away from the parents to alter the conditions which made those parents unworthy.

36411. That is quite true, but still there may be cases in which the alteration of circumstances might come too late to save the parents. However, I do not want to press it in that direction. With regard to the finding of employment, I heard all you said in answer to Mr. Bentham. Have you read much of the history of the Poor Law before 1834?—A little.

36412. Do you think on the whole experience really goes to confirm your view that people would work as well employed by the State as if they were employed by outside individuals?—I do not think they are parallel cases.

36413. How do they differ?—From my little knowledge of it, Poor Law was given to subsidise wages.

36414. An immense deal of employment was found under the Poor Law, was it not?—Not that I am aware of. There was relief given, but the persons that relief was given to were working for farmers, and it was simply subsidising cheap labour; the farmers were getting the benefit. No one would advocate that silly system now, but it is different to provide employment upon a standard of 18s. a week and the men have got to do the work; I do not mean unnecessary work.

36415. Do you not find a good many cases in which the parish actually gave direct employment?—It may have been so. That is the main point.

36416. (Mr. Booth.) You would maintain the rate of wages below that of the ordinary market rate by the rate of wages offered for the national employment?—No.

36417. Is not 18s. below the market rate?—No, I can find people working for 16s. 10d. a week, men with families, and I can find you a dozen married men with families working at 15s. a week under private employment.

36418. (Mr. Phelps.) I gather you would not trust yourself to speak much about the employment before 1834?—Certainly not. I am not very well acquainted with that, but the principle, I think, I have gathered.

36419. I quite see. You say, in your statement, that, in your opinion, you have a good many people in your workhouse at Chorlton who would be better maintained outside?—Yes.

36420. What do you base that on?—I have come across many people in the workhouse who have never been to the union before or never been to the union prior to attaining sixty years of age, and they have not had the option of out-relief. To my mind, those cases ought to be reconsidered, and out-relief given to them if they can live suitably on, say, 5s. per week. I do not think they ought to be in the House.

36421. My own experience has been so different, that I am asking the question. You think there are in Chorlton Workhouse a good many people, whose relatives are ready to receive them, who could be carefully looked after and tended outside the workhouse?—Yes.

36422. Have you any idea what sort of percentage those would be?—No, I have not; but I am not mixing this up with actually living with their relatives, if there is adequate out-relief. Out-relief is not limited even to 5s. a week. We get respectable cases which have never been to the Poor Law in their younger days, and only come now on account of age; they ought not to be sent into the workhouse if they are willing to live outside on adequate out-relief, never mind their living with friends.

36423. You think there are a large number of those cases in your workhouse?—Yes, I do.

36424. What sort of percentage?—I could not give you an average, but I went round one of the rooms in one of the aged blocks the other day, and I asked at what age they had come in, and there were a few cases under sixty, but 75 per cent. of those cases had not been there before attaining sixty years of age.

36425. That does not quite answer my question?—No, because I have never ascertained the figures of the proportion; but we have had many applications, and I can give you one instance of a man named Williams. He had been prior to that in receipt of half a crown; he could not manage on that, and he came into the workhouse. He appealed to me and to Mrs. Garrett, a lady guardian, to see if we could get him more than half a crown. That man is now getting 5s. out-relief, and he does not want to go back into the workhouse. That is a case where half a crown was inadequate, and he had to go into the workhouse. We got it raised for him, and he is out of the workhouse and living with his wife.

36426. Living with his wife?—Yes, she was younger than he. She could earn something, but could not earn sufficient to maintain the two.

36427. Did she come in when he came in?—No, she was living outside.

36428. I quite agree that is a strong case. Have you many married couples in your house?—There are three married couples living together, and there are a few more desirous of doing so; but I could not say how many married couples there are who are separated.

36429. To what extent do you make provision for them?—Very little provision is made for them. There are only three rooms.

36430. Are they generally occupied?—Yes.

36431. You find people desirous of living there?—Yes. I know of one room occupied by a couple, the husband died, and it was filled up. When the man died the widow had to leave the room immediately and go into the body of the house, and another couple was put in, showing that another couple was ready, and also showing that provision had not been made although the law provides for it.

36432. Do you think there are many people in the position of the man Williams whose case you quote, with wives outside?—No.

36433. You think it is a rare instance?—Yes.

36434. (Mr. Bentham.) Was your union one that was selected to make an inquiry of all aged people in the house who might be got out upon the payment of 5s., 6s., or 7s. a week, if suitable homes were found for them? Was Chorlton one of the unions selected?—No, I do not remember: if so, it was before I was there.

36435. It was four or five years ago?—I have been there under two.

36436. You have not heard whether it was?—No.

36437. (Mr. Phelps.) In Paragraph 12, you say you have just returned from visiting an undiscovered case of destitution. I do not know Manchester well enough to say, but do you think those cases of undiscovered destitution are common?—I think there is more than I care to see.

36438. You have in Manchester a considerable network of charitable and other institutions, parochial and what not?—Yes, but there is more trouble to get money from some of these charitable institutions than to get it from a Poor Law union.

36439. When you say undiscovered cases of destitution, do you think it is easy for a person in an ordinary English town to be destitute without it being discovered, I do not say relieved, but discovered?—This was the second case within a very short period.

Mr. W. E. Skivington.

15 Jan. 1907.

Aged inmates of Chorlton Workhouse who might properly receive out-relief.

The proper method of dealing with the children of vicious parents.

Comparison of State provision of work and the subsidisation of wages under the old Poor Law.

Rates of wages in Manchester.

Aged inmates of Chorlton Workhouse who might properly receive out-relief.

Mr. W. E. Skivington. 36440. How do you satisfy yourself that it had never been discovered?—They had not had any help.

15 Jan. 1907. 36441. They had not been relieved, you mean?—The man had been in fairly good circumstances a few years ago: he had worked twelve years for the Salford Corporation, and after that he had been in a chip-potato business, which he set up out of his savings, and he had done pretty well, but there came opposition the same as there is in all businesses and it dwindled his takings, till he had to leave it without anything, and seeing that old age had come upon him, he had gradually gone down till, when I was requested to call at that house, the man was going out finding paper amongst the warehouses and putting it into a bag and making a few shillings per week by that to maintain the two. It was a very respectable case indeed which shirked going to the parish for any help. I was in that house about an hour and a half: I had been told that the people were starving: I got the address, and I went there, and I went away understanding that he would go to the union in the morning, but I impressed it upon his wife that, if he changed his mind, she should go herself.

36442. When you say to the union, you mean to the relieving officer?—Yes.

36443. You do not mean into the workhouse?—No, for out-relief.

36444. I do not want to press the point too far, but how were you informed of it?—There was a case close by us of an aged woman and her daughter who were starving and had been to the office and were refused out-door relief. I lived in a shop. This case was spoken of in the shop, not while I was there, but while my wife was there, and a party who lives a few streets away was in the shop, and she said, "I know a case where they are starving."

36445. Do you think these people had not been visited by any district visitor, or any person of that sort?—I do not think anyone had visited them with any help at all.

Proposed transfer of medical relief to the Sanitary Authority. 36446. (Mr. Gardiner.) I think you told us you would like to transfer the infirmaries to the health authority?—Yes.

36447. On the ground of a better chance of improved administration?—There are really a good many reasons for that.

36448. Would you mind telling us what they are?—One reason is that the relief committees as well as the medical officers send cases to the infirmary: in some cases the relief committee will urge upon the applicant to go into the infirmary, because they will be dealt with better. In other cases the medical officer outside sends cases to the infirmary which he thinks right, and they are kept in the body of the house in many instances.

36449. My question was this, why do you presume you would get better administration from the corporation or the municipal authority than you do from the board of guardians?—There would be no workhouse to put them in.

Medical relief resulting in non-medical relief. 36450. That would not improve the administration?—It would improve the treatment: they would not be put in the body of the house when it is a case for the infirmary. In many of these cases they would not have gone in to go into the body of the house. I have a note here of one on January 7th: "A. S., aged 27, suffering from rheumatic." He was discharged to the body of the house. Very handy is the body of the house to put people in from the infirmary: if it was under a different authority, they would not have the house to put them in.

36451. (Mr. Bentham.) What would become of them?—They would provide some place for convalescents.

The reasons for dissociating medical relief from the Poor Law: absence of convalescent homes: pauper wardsmen: the pauper stigma, etc. 36452. They can do that now, cannot they?—The body of the house is not a fit place.

36453. It is within the power of the guardians to provide convalescent places?—While the house is adjacent I do not think that is likely to come about; but there are many other reasons for it.

36454. (Mr. Gardiner.) It depends upon the guardians whether it is likely to take place?—There are other reasons I would like to give, because I feel very strongly on this. One is the pauper help in the infirmaries. That lies with the guardians; and while the pauper help is so handy, it will be used—these ward-men and ward-women; and there is a lot of pilfering goes on and trucking or trading in a small way. These pauper wards-men manage to save money by that means, and they go out now and again and spend it; they also initiate gambling into the infirmary wards, they become experts being there so long. That is another reason. Not only that, but there is a certain stigma attaching to a citizen entering the union infirmary, the rate-maintained hospital, the hospital that is maintained by compulsory payments from citizens, but there is not in entering a voluntary hospital. Not only so, but the union hospital is our main accommodation. We provide two or three times more accommodation in our union hospital in Manchester than in all the other hospitals put together. It is the main hospital for hospital cases, and our main supply of accommodation for sick treatment should not have any stigma attached to it at all; it should not be on a lower level than any voluntary institution. In fact, I think it should be on a higher level. If it is separated from the Poor Law administration, that would place the citizens' hospital on a level that no citizen would hesitate to go into it for treatment.

36455. (Mr. Chandler.) You have spoken of the scale of out-relief in the Chorlton Union. Do you think that scale which you have handed to Mr. Bentham is a liberal scale and, if acted up to, would be adequate for those cases?—I candidly say, as I told Mr. Bentham, that I did not follow that scale, that I had not seen it used, and that no guardians follow it.

36456. Do you think it is based on a fairly liberal scale of allowances?—Yes, that appears to be so.

36457. So that each guardian having a copy of that recommendation, if it was acted up to generally, you would be prepared yourself to admit that out-relief was granted fairly liberally?—It starts with two persons; it is not adequate, it is not sufficient. There is no one person marked. In respect of aged people, six shillings is not sufficient for two persons.

36458. In some cases you think it is insufficient?—Yes.

36459. As far as securing uniformity of treatment by the various committees, the superintendent relieving officer attends each out-relief committee, I believe?—Yes.

36460. That scale in its origin was to secure uniformity of treatment from the various committees?—Yes, there is no doubt, but what I said applies more to aged people. Whatever guardians are there, no one seems to treat the aged people with adequate out-relief.

36461. The superintendent at least should be able to point out to each committee the general practice of the other one, and so on, so as to secure uniform treatment all along the line. I think you will admit that Chorlton Union has the reputation of being extremely liberal in granting out-relief?—Yes. I believe so, although I have no experience of any other.

36462. The dividing line between Chorlton Union and Manchester is only an imaginary one as far as the City is concerned; have you ever thought that there should be uniformity of treatment throughout the whole of Manchester?—No, but I have no doubt there could be if we would fix upon a certain amount for each individual, i.e., what a doctor would certify that people could live upon. We could then supplement their income to an average that people could live upon without starving.

36463. That was not exactly my point. My point is: Effect of you will admit, I think, and I am sure the Manchester variety in Guardians will admit, that their treatment of out-relief scales of cases is less liberal than that in the Chorlton Union, relief consequently the more Chorlton Union is increased is it not possible that people will go over to qualify in that union instead of remaining in Manchester?—I do not think it will attract in that way. There are other circumstances that are forcing the people from Manchester into the Chorlton area. They are pulling down so much property in the centre of the town. There is the railway there and places like that, and it is rather old property, and the demolition of dwellings of that kind is forcing people from the city, and especially into the Hulme district. It is not the attraction of the out-relief, I think it is more the force of other circumstances.

The reasons for dissociating medical relief from the Poor Law: absence of convalescent homes: pauper wardsmen: the pauper stigma, etc.

The scale of relief in Chorlton Union.

Proposed scale of relief based on minimum living income.

Effect of movements of population. Other causes of such movements.

36464. I agree with you, but what I mean is, as long as Manchester remains on the same scale, with the same treatment of out-relief cases, if your policy of improvement and extending out-relief in Chorlton is successful it looks to me that there will be an inducement for people to qualify for that?—I am arguing, I must repeat again, for adequate relief for aged people, till we get old age pensions.

36465. (Mr. Loch.) Have you many instances in which gambling and that sort of thing has been carried on through the intervention of pauper officials?—They know me now, and it is very difficult to get hold of anything like that, but I have got indirect information and I know it is done. I have actually seen it; I have seen the money change hands.

36466. It is done to such an extent that, so far as you can judge from your own opinion, it is a prevalent evil?—I do not say it is done extensively, but so long as these wardmen are allowed to introduce it and play with the inmates they become experts, the inmates come, and go; and the wardmen remain, they become experts and there is no doubt the upshot of it all is that the coppers find their way into the wardmen's pocket—honestly.

36467. Do you mean playing at cards?—Dominoes.

36468. That is what they gamble with?—Yes, a halfpenny a game.

36469. Does this to your knowledge, escape the knowledge of the workhouse officials. Have you spoken to the master of the workhouse about it?—No.

36470. Have you brought it before the guardians?—No, I took it into consideration; I consulted some friends, and I was advised not to bother with it, yet I do not like to see it.

36471. I am speaking of the paupers who are employed; I understand you are only referring to them?—Yes, I do not think it would operate with paid servants.

36472. Therefore the remedy of employing paid officers instead of paupers would meet your point?—Certainly, and more than that, because that is the lesser of the two. I have been informed on very good grounds, because no guardian can get to know these things for himself, that these pauper helps will detain say eggs from sick people and sell them to others, and of course there is a profit on the transaction; they take a few days liberty now and then and have a good time with the money that they have got together, which must have been extracted from the sick inmates.

36473. Are these paupers who are assistants ins-and-outs in the sense that they go out for a month and come back?—They remain there for years; they ask for a few days liberty every two or three months.

36474. And they get a short holiday that way?—Yes.

36475. Is that the ordinary practice in your workhouse?—The ordinary practice.

36476. Does that come before the guardians at all?—The application for liberty is submitted to the relief committee, they do not know when a wardman applies.

36477. Does it come before the house committee?—No.

36478. It is left entirely in the hands of the officials?—Yes, it is left alone. I have been making enquiries—of course you recognise that I have only been there under two years—and last Wednesday on the workhouse committee, through some misconduct on the part of two men who had been there about two years each, I and another guardian took advantage of it to order those men to Tame Street, which they would not accept. That was a means of getting them out. They were young men who had been in too long; they had been in there over two years. There was one younger still who had been there over five years, and he seemed to me to be making the workhouse his home. I do believe that these people ought to be helped outside rather than they should be given institutional relief.

36479. It is that type of man you think is making the mischief you refer to?—Yes. You will find plenty in the workhouse who have been there years, they get into some little billet, they do not work for wages, but they can always make something and go out and take a little holiday, they are content to work like that, it may be on account of the difficulty of obtaining work outside. Mr. W. E. Skivington.

36480. You have not said anything to the master of the workhouse about this?—No. 15 Jan. 1907

36481. Would the leave be given by him alone without referring to the house committee or the board?—No, it is not given by the master, it is given by the guardians. Pauper wardmen and evils connected with their employment in sick wards.

36482. Therefore the case would come before the guardians at the point when the persons ask for leave?—Yes.

36483. (Mr. Lansbury.) Would it be leave they take, or would they take their discharge?—A few days liberty.

36484. They do not take their discharge?—No. You will understand I do not want to give a wrong impression, I do not know this for myself, but my information is very reliable. I mean to say, if I could say that this is done I could stop it. I know one particular person whom I have known for over twenty years, he is a wardman, or he was, because I think he is taken sick and is in the infirmary; he has been a wardman for a long time in one of the pavilions, and I am led to believe that he took about a week's liberty, and he had close upon £5. That looks like being exaggerated, but I do not think it was.

36485. (Mr. Loch.) Practically it points to something like possible speculation going on?—I have been told this also by a reliable person that going to visit anyone if they want a cup of tea inside they can get it from one of these wardmen; I cannot get a cup of tea there, but for a penny they will find them a cup of tea.

36486. Would that cup of tea be available on an ordinary afternoon apart from any little meal that was available for the aged?—I think so.

36487. Are you satisfied that the enquiries made by relieving officers are sufficiently good?—For out-relief? The comparative effectiveness of enquiries into out-relief and in-relief cases.

36488. Generally, for all cases which come before the board?—I do not think they are for inside.

36489. You think they are for outside?—They are far better, they make more enquiries outside. There is a tendency not to make sufficient enquiries for inside.

36490. You mean certain indoor cases appear and are offered the house, and so are not enquired into, is that it?—Yes.

36491. There ought to be the same enquiry relatively in those cases as in others?—Yes, for this reason, in the case of aged people it may be that if the case were better considered it might not be sent into the house at all, it might be given out-relief.

36492. You think that the enquiry with regard to the out-relief cases is sufficient?—Yes; there may be some cases where it is not.

36493. Take the application and report book, do you think the enquiries in that are sufficiently filled up?—In what book?

36494. The application and report book, you know the book?—No, I do not. We have application forms which take the place of an application book.

36495. Taking the application form, that, I presume, has got on it all that is in the application and report book?—As much as the relieving officer can get.

36496. Do you think that is sufficiently filled up?—Yes, I do, I mean, speaking generally; there may be cases when something else is added afterwards, something overlooked. Generally speaking, I think it is pretty well filled up.

36497. Take a point like the actual amount of the wages, do you find that the employer has been asked with regard to that?—We are very careful in our union in sending to the employers.

36498. That is the point I wanted to get out?—We are very careful indeed, perhaps too much so. In cases where they corroborate the statement, the employer, in the case of a relative, has got to know he is concerned in some matters in connection with the Poor Law.

36499. And also with regard to the children. Not only those who are actually liable to pay, but with regard Pauper wardmen and evils connected with their employment in sick wards.

Mr. W. E. Skivington. to relations that may possibly be able to help, although they are not liable to pay, do you take any account of them?—I should not like to.

15 Jan. 1907. 36500. You would object to it?—I should not like to see it was going to be done.

The question of taking into account the earnings of non-labile relatives resident with applicants for relief. 36501. You do not think it better for aged people that other relations than those legally responsible should help?—Why should a person help if he is not legally responsible?

36502. You mean that the line of duty is the line of legality?—The line of duty rests upon society equally as much or more; you are speaking now of those that have worked, say, for forty, forty-five, or fifty years. There is a moral obligation upon society to look after the aged without impoverishing their children.

36503. Take it quite generally apart from the aged, take comparatively young people if you like—I only want to get your view—would your view hold equally well with regard to that case?—I do not think we ought to enter into the circumstances of any person not legally responsible.

36504. Nor rely upon them at all for help?—Certainly not, unless they volunteer it themselves.

Residence in common lodging house as a bar to relief. 36505. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to Paragraph 11 of your statement, is it the case that when a person is living in a registered house the guardians will not give him out-relief if he becomes destitute?—That is where a lack of uniformity occurs because that is only so with regard to some. In some cases it is given, in other cases it is refused. I had in my mind one particular case in which it was refused on that account when I knew of cases where it had been given. Residence in common lodging house as a bar to relief.

36506. What was the ground for the refusal?—Generally it is said that they do not give relief in lodging houses.

36507. On what ground is the refusal, do you know? Why do the guardians refuse to give relief in cases of that kind?—I do not know; it is said it is on that ground, I cannot imply it is on any other.

36508. You do not know what the underlying objection is?—I take it it is what they say.

36509. I mean the objection that is taken where persons are living in houses of that kind, is it that the sanitary conditions of the place are unfavourable?—No; the reason that has been given to me is that on account of the house being sublet Mrs. So-and-so gets to hear of relief being given and she thinks she will apply for relief too.

36510. Therefore the fear is that other people living in the same tenement will apply?—That is the reason, I believe.

36511. Do you think there is ground for that objection in your own experience?—No, I do not.

Mr. ALEXANDER McDUGALL, called; and Examined.

Mr. A. McDougall. 36512. (Mr. Booth.) You are an alderman of the City of Manchester and a guardian of the township of Manchester?—I am.

5 Jan. 1907. 36513. You have prepared a statement giving an expression of your views which is extremely interesting and valuable, and we propose to take as your evidence-in-chief; I understand that you have mentioned that you wish to revise it in some small particulars, but I hope you will not take too much out?—I do not think I have done so.

(The Witness handed in the following statement.)

CLASSIFICATION OF PAUPERS AND RELIEF OF PASSIVE POVERTY.

The objects of the Poor Law. 1. The main purpose of Poor Law administration is to afford relief to destitute persons in the manner best suited to supply their need, without holding out inducements to neglect self-support.

Need for discrimination in the method of relief. 2. Guardians have to deal with applications from persons of most varied character, and yet can refuse none, if there be sufficient evidence of destitution. Relief must be given in some form; the only distinction to be made between claims that arise from indolence and vice, and those that are the outcome of sheer misfortune and the grip of forces which the applicant has been too weak to cope with, is found in the method of affording the relief.

Relief must be adequate yet deterrent. 3. The relief must not be of such a kind as would put the recipient in as good, or at any rate a better position, than any wage-earner who is industrious and thrifty. Also it must not be continued longer than is absolutely necessary, every inducement being given to return to efforts of self-support. Guardians must be prepared to meet with promptitude the needs of applicants, whether as regards food, shelter, clothing, medical aid, or nursing.

4. Briefly, the great mass of Poor Law relief distributed throughout the country consists of either shelter, food, clothing, and medical treatment within the workhouse, or grants of food and money with necessary medical aid at the houses of the applicants.

Need for classification in the work-house. 5. It is not my intention here to enter upon a discussion of the relative merits of indoor and outdoor relief, but as the desirability for classification is greater and more apparent in the administration of indoor relief, I shall allude to that method more particularly.

6. It may be taken that generally throughout the country the authorities of workhouses have to deal with persons differing widely in character.

7. Being gathered into one establishment, all must be subject to regulations framed to be deterrent to the lazily disposed, and to prevent preference of the workhouse to labour. Where arrangements are not made to classify the inmates with regard to character the day rooms and dormitories are necessarily shared by good and bad, and close association is inevitable.

8. This aggregation of inmates is not at all unpleasant or irksome to the loafer, to the vicious, to the drunkard seeking the comfort of the workhouse after debauch, or to the careless idler, who is ever preying upon the labour of others. Their chief objection to the workhouse is the curtailment of liberty and the absence of opportunity of self-indulgence. But to the reputable, clean-minded inmate this association with the depraved is the bitterest and most humiliating experience of life.

9. The Consolidated Orders of the Local Government Board contain general instructions for classification which relate to sex, age, condition of health, and are as follows:—

Classification of Paupers.

10. "Article 98.—The paupers, so far as the workhouse admits thereof, shall be classed as follows:—

"Class 1. Men infirm through age or any other cause."

"Class 2. Able-bodied men, and youths above the age of fifteen years."

"Class 3. Boys above the age of seven years and under that of fifteen."

"Class 4. Women infirm through age or any other cause."

"Class 5. Able-bodied women, and girls above the age of fifteen years."

"Class 6. Girls above the age of seven years and under that of fifteen."

"Class 7. Children under seven years of age."

11. "To each class shall be assigned that ward or separate building and yard which may be best fitted for the reception of such class, and each class of paupers shall remain therein, without communication with those of any other class."

12. "Article 99.—Provides.

"Firstly, That the guardians shall from time to time, after consulting the medical officer, make such arrangements as they may deem necessary with regard to persons labouring under any disease of body or mind."

"Secondly, the guardians shall, so far as circumstances will permit, further subdivide any of the classes enumerated in Article 98, with reference to the moral character or behaviour or the previous habits of the inmates, or to such other grounds as may seem expedient."

Provision in Local Government Board Orders as to pauper classification and defects thereof.

13. This classification fails lamentably to meet the reasonable claims of the respectable and deserving poor.

The deterrence of the Poor Law to the worthy poor and reasons there-
for.

14. Two things are deeply impressed on the minds of guardians and relieving officers; first, the conviction that a large proportion of the persons who obtain relief—though legally entitled to claim it—are undeserving of it, and are kept from effort and self-denial by the certainty of food and shelter in, to them, not uncongenial surroundings; and second, that many very poor persons, for whom they would most readily recommend relief, do not come to apply for it, and are existing in circumstances of sharp penury and all but absolute want.

15. The unwillingness of such persons to apply for relief does not, as far as I am able to form a judgment, arise in the majority of cases so much from unwillingness to be assisted by public funds, or from fear of harsh treatment by union officers, as from repugnance to be associated with mentally filthy and abominable men and women in the workhouse.

16. Under present methods boards of guardians do relieve a vast amount of destitution produced by idleness, drunkenness, and vice, and yet fail to reach many cases in which destitution is the outcome of misfortune and of failure in the struggle of life through causes not arising from personal fault or improvidence.

Large number of destitute women who will not seek relief.

17. The large majority of those who endure biting poverty without seeking relief from the guardians are women. Men do not so frequently attain to old age under disadvantageous circumstances as women do. Old men go more readily into the workhouse than old women. Women struggle longer and with greater determination with the difficulties of poverty and the incapacities of old age. Families in poor circumstances find it is less possible to provide food and shelter for an old man who is a relative than for an old woman. He is more in the way, he expects not only a larger portion of the food, but to share in the better portions. He does not fit into the household of a working family as an old woman does, and is not so useful in domestic matters. His welcome is colder, and he desires to get out of the way, and goes to the workhouse. A decent old woman will cling to a home where she may be regarded as the drudge rather than as the grandmother or the aunt, and she will exist on the plainer portions of the meals, and will wedge in both day and night without encroaching much on the means of the family.

18. There are in every union aged women of good character, who belong to no families into whose domestic life they can fit, and on whom they can depend—women who have been domestic servants, assistants in shops, mill hands, nurses, seamstresses, women who have denied themselves in their younger days to support parents and bring up younger sisters and brothers, widows of good repute who have out-lived husbands and children, daughters of fathers who have failed in business, and women left with some provision which has been exhausted.

19. If absolutely unable to earn small sums, they must, of course, apply for relief, but many of them do manage by sewing, knitting, washing, hawking of small articles, or minding children for mothers going to work, to eke out a very scanty living. They dread the associations of pauper life. Having been self-supporting up to old age, they have the most intense desire to keep from even out-door relief, and an utter repugnance to entering the workhouse. Yet they have the daily fear that the workhouse must be the final refuge, and this fear is harder to bear than the pinch of hunger, the cold of insufficient clothing, or the poverty of their surroundings. They fear illness more since it may mean "going into the house" than because it brings suffering and pain.

Absence of
classification in the workhouse the chief deterrent to the worthy poor.

20. Where guardians classify applicants for relief according to character, and in dealing with them have regard to mental and moral qualities, much of this dread is removed.

21. The comfort and food of the workhouses are in most cases far better than they can obtain. Many scarcely ever taste meat. Tea with bread and dripping, a little butter, herrings, and occasionally a little bacon, potatoes, and milk are the articles of food in which changes can be made. Two meals daily, very small fires, insufficient clothing and bedding are the best they can have. Rent of rooms or lodgings is with many the great and first object; food must come after rent and fire are found.

Medical practitioners in dense working-class neighbourhoods know well how many patients die, whose chance of recovery from illness would have been good if they had previously been well fed; no strength is left to battle with disease, and though there may be few deaths that would appear on the certificates as directly caused by starvation, yet many deaths are hastened owing to lack of sufficient nourishment.

22. The workhouse is often the most proper place for such persons, and they do not avoid it to the extent that is supposed from dislike to discipline. I hear few fears of bad treatment expressed; the aversion to the workhouse arises from the fear of being forced into close contact day and night with inmates whose conversation is often beastly, and whose tempers and moods must be borne by those who are so unfortunate as to come within their environment. Is it right to present such a test to decent, struggling, and often wearied poverty? No guardian wishes such a test to be offered, but unless there be classification of character in addition to classification of bodily conditions, it must continue its hard pressure. A convict is spared much of the miserable and evil influence of the viciously disposed in the same prison as himself. Vagrants also have had lately their position in this respect much improved.

23. Of late years much has been done to prevent contagion and infection from disease. Isolation is carried out resolutely when the body is in danger. We must regard mental and moral health as quite as much a necessity of life as food or shelter.

24. The main hindrance to the adoption of the system of classification according to character has hitherto arisen from the practice of gathering paupers of all classes into one establishment. Such classification is now, however, in operation in a number of unions and it is generally recognised that the difficulties surrounding its adoption can be overcome. It is gratifying too to find that some boards of guardians (Manchester amongst others) are urging that such classification should be made compulsory on guardians. This would in many cases involve an extension of the workhouse or the combination of two or more unions for the provision of joint accommodation for inmates of good character. The expense which would be incurred would no doubt in some cases be considerable, but this fact should not be allowed to stand in the way of preventing the continuance of an infliction to which so many worthy persons are exposed through no fault of their own.

25. It may be thought that an extension of outdoor relief to respectable persons would prevent the necessity of putting into the workhouse so many upon whom its associations bear hardly. But however willingly guardians may grant out-door relief in suitable cases there are a large number of aged persons who are not capable of domestic work, and whose health, though not needing infirmity treatment, renders oversight and attendance imperative, and others, capable of managing themselves, that cannot be left with either food or money in the midst of relatives who will at least seek to share their scanty provision, and whose habits make quiet and rest impossible. Under present social conditions, there must be indoor sustenance available for the immediate and often permanent needs of well-conducted citizens.

26. There are, however, a number of women, and a lesser number of men anxious to avoid Poor Law relief, who seek to hide the fact of their poverty, and who can be assisted quite apart from the guardians. Many of these are worthy of the highest esteem; their lives are admirable for patience and rectitude. About twelve years ago I became so thoroughly convinced that this was the case in Manchester that I began to search for women and men in circumstances such as Poor Law relief is intended to meet, but who do not apply for it. Those with whom I became acquainted were few at first; they are passive, not readily found, make no noise, and give little sign of their deep want. I made very careful inquiries into their circumstances, and also into the items of the daily expenditure of their small means, and was amazed to find on what small sums life can be maintained in cleanliness and apparent comfort. I will give two cases in which there had been but very little change for years, except the advantage of cheaper provisions in the latter part of the time, and which may be relied upon as actual experiences for long periods.

Mr. A.
McDougall.

15 Jan. 1907.

Absence of
classification in the workhouse the chief deterrent to the worthy poor.

Need for compulsory
classification.

Large number of aged deserving poor unsuitable for out-
relief.

Undiscovered cases of destitution.

Mr. A. McDougall. 27. Widow over sixty years of age, no family, unable to earn more than 1s. weekly, to whom 2s. 6d. is given and rent of room paid. Her average expenditure is :—

15 Jan. 1907
Specimen household budgets of Manchester poor.

	s.	d.
Coal (winter 7d., summer 3d.) average	0	5
Firewood - - - - -	0	1
Bread, 4 lb. (two 2 lb. loaves)	0	4
Tea, 2 oz. - - - - -	0	3
Sugar $\frac{3}{4}$ lb. - - - - -	0	1 $\frac{3}{4}$
Potatoes, 5 lb. - - - - -	0	3
Butter, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. - - - - -	0	4
Bacon, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. - - - - -	0	3
Meat, 1 lb. - - - - -	0	6
Onions - - - - -	0	1
Milk, $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per day - - - - -	0	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
Soap, soda, blacklead - - - - -	0	3
Light 1d., sewing materials 1d. - - - - -	0	2
	3	4 $\frac{1}{4}$

(The only variation being the occasional substitution of fish for meat or bacon.)

This left only 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. per week for clothing and shoes. When any actual necessity for these had to be met, food had to be less to save for it. She obtained some calico every year from a charity. She had no other help beyond about ten good meals in the year at the houses of well-to-do friends, who would send her home with food that would last her a day or two. She received tickets for about six tea parties in the year. With these exceptions her food was as stated, varying very little from week to week. I found out that of her poverty she gave odd meals to others poorer than herself. She had again and again sheltered young women out of work for days.

28. Widow, sixty-eight years of age, in poorer circumstances, who had not more than 3s. 9d. per week and no help with rent. Her expenditure had long averaged :—

	s.	d.
Rent - - - - -	1	3
Coal and firewood - - - - -	0	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
Bread, 4 lb. (only buys best quality)	0	5
Tea, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ oz. - - - - -	0	3
Sugar, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. - - - - -	0	1
Potatoes, 5 lb. - - - - -	0	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
Meat or bacon, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. - - - - -	0	3
Onions and pepper - - - - -	0	1 $\frac{1}{2}$
Butter, 5 oz. - - - - -	0	3 $\frac{1}{2}$
Soap and sundries - - - - -	0	1 $\frac{3}{4}$
Candles 1d., sewing materials $\frac{1}{2}$ d. - - - - -	0	1 $\frac{1}{2}$
	3	6

This left only 3d. for clothing and shoes. The bright spot to her was a gift of half a sovereign at Christmas yearly, on which she could confidently rely. She had little or no aid of any other kind, no houses to visit, no tea parties (being very independent). She bought only of the best quality. She was cheerful and uncomplaining, and was supposed from her appearance to have plenty. Frequently she made a kind of soup of bread boiled in water, into which she sprinkled a little pepper.

Charitable assistance to destitute persons unwilling to apply for relief.

29. I found that the promise of a little money aid regularly given, and to be relied upon, made all the difference between anxiety and contentment, and brightened to an extent that was wonderful lives otherwise darkened by daily fear of want. Care for to-morrow is often a sharper trial than the pinch of to-day. I therefore undertook the periodical visitation of such cases as I then knew about, and after as careful inquiries as are made into the circumstances of applicants for Poor Law relief, and with every precaution against helping any having relatives who were able to sustain them, I made definite promises of sums of from 1s. 3d. to 3s. per week that should not be discontinued without some notice.

30. After I had an experience of several months, and had visited regularly about twenty such persons, I was so impressed with the change made in their lives by my small but regular grants of money that I was desirous of doing more. One generous friend told me he would gladly be responsible for the cost of fifty cases if I would ensure the careful selection and visitation. This enabled me to widen my sphere of inquiry. I explained my purpose to the relieving officers of the Manchester and also the Chorlton Boards of Guardians, each of whom has kindly assisted me in finding cases of the right kind. Whilst investigating Poor Law cases, they hear of aged persons of respectable life falling into necessitous circumstances, and send me the names and addresses with opinions as to character. In this way, and also by similar information obtained from district nurses and others, I have come to have an average of about eighty persons, whom I visit regularly, giving sums to ensure with small earnings, or in some cases church or chapel aid, bare necessities. I find that monthly visits are generally sufficient, as persons of that character have almost all during a long life been accustomed to careful economy of money, so that a four weeks' grant is made to last until the next visit.

31. As will be expected with old persons, illnesses occur and some oversight is needed to make sure that they are attended to; but I have not known a case where neighbours or acquaintances have not been most willing to help in the attendance and household work at such times. A good character up to old age attracts respect and good will. One of the greatest pleasures I have had in these visitations has been to see the deep satisfaction and thankfulness that expected sickness has come whilst still at home, and that death may be met in the midst of friends. It is noteworthy that in every instance of death, provision had been made for the funeral by payments to burial clubs, often commenced in early life.

Provision by the poor against burial expenses.

32. To encourage the desire for independence and self-reliance is most essential in any efforts to assist those who are in poverty. They are not at all times in the same distressed condition, they have their better and their worse weeks. At times some relatives are able to assist, who cannot do so constantly. There is a great amount of kindness and readiness to help friends and neighbours among the wage-earning classes. Next to this comes the assistance given in connection with churches, chapels, and mission rooms, then a smaller portion given by benevolently disposed well-to-do persons. All these things need to be inquired about in a friendly way. I see no way of giving assistance without lowering the status and moral condition of the persons helped except by an individual undertaking the work as a social and sacred duty, second only to that of providing for himself and his own family, by becoming as a matter of duty responsible for one necessitous person. The evil results of indiscriminate, slovenly, idle giving are such as to make it a crime against society, but the appropriation of some portion of income to the sustenance of some esteemed neighbour who has "waxed poor and fallen into decay" if carried out discreetly by a tithe of the persons well able to do so would far more than meet all the needs of the reputable poor.

Evils of indiscriminate charity and need for individual care of individual poor.

33. There is sufficient willingness to give, but the misfortune is that this very willingness, unaccompanied by diligence and discretion, causes of itself a considerable addition to the chronic poverty of the nation. The clamorous obtain by far the greater share of what is given, and only a small portion reaches the really deserving and suffering poor. The fact needs to be well pondered that in those towns where the largest number of almshouses and doles have been provided by legacies, and have been continued in accordance with the will of the testators, often of much larger amount (owing to increase of value) than ever contemplated by the testators, the proportion of paupers to population is much larger than in other districts without such benefactions.

34. Every person in comfortable circumstances could know, and could assist some one person or family in such a way as to prevent destitution. Personal knowledge and willingness to understand the particular need, so as to shape the aid in the most suitable manner, is essential to the doing of the duty in a way that will make it a pleasure both to giver and receiver. To the willingness to give requires to be added the determination to find each for himself the person who can best be aided. Give help in no way that will encourage others to ask. To give where others are giving may do great mischief.

35. Whilst the fact of giving should not be made known generally, there would be admirable scope for societies in large towns under efficient management to make independent investigation with which to compare the information obtained by private inquiries, and also to keep records of persons assisted by private gifts, so that overlapping could be prevented and imposture detected ; but the constant visitations should be of a personal and friendly character.

Need for organisations for investigating and verifying cases of destitution.

36514. (Mr. Booth.) I do not propose myself to trouble you with any questions as your statement is so extremely complete, but I will leave it to any members of the Commission to develop it further if they so desire ?—Very well.

Evil conversation in workhouse dormitories an argument for classification.

36515. (Mr. Loch.) In Paragraph 22 of the first draft of your statement you start a question which you refer to more or less throughout the whole: "The day rooms and dormitories are necessarily shared by good and bad, and close association is inevitable." You work out the point that the aged people coming into the house have to mix with people whom it would be very undesirable from any general point of view that they should mix with ?—Yes.

36516. What is the evidence, you have said something about it here, upon which you base that fact ?—I find in visiting people who would otherwise make application, whilst not complaining of any fear of ill-treatment, they will not associate with many of the persons they know will be there.

36517. You think that conversation of an entirely undesirable kind goes on in the wards at night ?—Yes, in the wards, not in the infirmary, because there is someone in charge there.

36518. It is not in the infirmary but in the wards ?—In the dormitories.

36519. Is that due to the fact that there is not supervision at night in the dormitories ?—It arises from speaking from bed to bed.

36520. It could not be stopped, you think, even by better supervision ?—It could not be stopped.

Need for separate accommodation for the aged paupers and for women.

36521. Therefore it means a better classification of those that speak decently and those that do not, as it were, in the workhouse itself is necessary ?—I should like to recommend that there should be special homes for aged persons ; they should not be in the wards at all.

36522. These people are all aged together, there are some aged that are objectionable, and some aged that are not ?—I should like that the aged should be separated and put into homes. The others who are not aged will have to submit unless what I am very much in earnest about recommending takes place, which is, that every woman should have a cubicle, that the dormitories should be divided into cubicles like they are in lodging-houses.

36523. You would like to have a separate workhouse for aged persons, or a separate house for the men and women who are aged ?—I would like that all persons over sixty-five years of age applying for relief should be treated quite separately from all other applicants for relief, just as we take childhood as a reason for dealing with children and sending them away from the workhouse, and just as we deal separately with the sick and infirm, I would like every person over sixty-five years of age to be seen by a special committee and a special officer, and that they should be treated on rules that might be agreed upon.

36524. To keep this question of the workhouse before one, you would wish an institution separate from the body of the workhouse we might say, for them ?—I should not like it to be larger than is necessary ; and where they are sent into homes in the workhouse grounds there should not be more than four or six in one home, it should not be a large institution itself, but a series of cottages.

36525. Practically something like what would be an almshouse within the precincts ?—An almshouse within the grounds if necessary.

36526. Do you not find difficulties with the aged people too that some speak ill and some do the reverse ?—That is just where the discrimination would come in if they were treated by a separate committee who would have time to go into these matters, they would not place the decent with the indecent, and those who were not fit to be in the home would go to the workhouse, but in the workhouse, for women I would have cubicles.

Charity given to out-relief cases.

36527. You give us some details here in regard to what you yourself are engaged in in helping people who are in receipt of outdoor relief, who are themselves aged ?—They are not in receipt of outdoor relief except in very few cases.

36528. There are a few ?—Yes, but only a few.

36529. Are you of opinion that the persons in receipt of outdoor relief who are aged are receiving too little for proper maintenance ?—There is always something else coming in from either those who are legally responsible, or those who care to make themselves responsible and kindly treat them.

36530. Therefore, do you think by enquiry and other data that there is enough received by them if you take that into account ?—If you take into account the surroundings, I should frequently like to give more to special cases than we do, but I should think it is fair.

36531. What would you say you ordinarily give in the case of a married couple ?—Aged persons ?

36532. Yes, for outdoor relief ?—About 6s. it might be ; but part of that would be in food.

36533. The 6s. would cover rent ?—It would have to cover rent, although we do not take rent into account, still we know it has to be paid.

36534. The rent would be about 2s. 6d. ?—Scarcely 2s. 6d. ; a couple receiving outdoor relief would not have a house, they would have a room in someone else's house.

36535. That would be about what ?—2s.

36536. Practically so far as the guardians are concerned they would have to rely on 4s. ?—And whatever else there may be.

36537. Do you think that that is sufficiently brought into the statement of the guardians when the enquiry is made ?—I think so, because when an order for out-relief is being given which is likely to continue for some time, all those matters are carefully considered.

36538. Do you not sometimes get the reply by the enquiry officers ; we do not know what there is, but we are satisfied something is coming in ?—The guardians when listening to the application enquire into those matters.

36539. You find the guardians do press that point ?—Yes. We have not many cases of married couples having out-relief permanently, we have frequent cases where it has been temporary.

36540. I only took that as an instance to raise the question, but you really are of opinion that the guardians at the relief committee ask the crucial questions to get at the root of the matter ?—Certainly, and we have a superintendent of relief who is present at all relief committees.

36541. That is true. I confess that my general feeling would be that a good deal that ought to be more precise is hardly sufficiently pressed and it is rather difficult to do it with the applicant before you, as it were at the bar ?—That could be done better if they came before a special committee and the order were intended to continue for some time ; I should give six months orders to people who were known to be in need of caring for during the remainder of their lives unless circumstances entirely changed.

36542. Would you alter the whole of the procedure where the applicant comes, and a sort of certificate of merit may be read in her or his presence ; would you alter that procedure so that it would be less formal ?—I would not do it so formally as to have testimonials or letters of recommendation from outside. We do not make orders which are likely to be lengthy till the cases have been before us several times. The orders are made short at first, say, two weeks. They do not go to four or eight weeks until there has been considerable experience of the case.

36543. You think out of the Board in some way there should be appointed a committee specially interested in the case of the aged and ready to spend a great deal of time going into details with regard to them, and all the matters concerning them ?—Yes, the committee would meet to deal with the aged applicants. At present there is a large number of applicants of all kinds and the business has to be got through.

36544. You would have this committee for the whole union ?—Yes.

Mr. A. McDougall.
15 Jan. 1907.
Question of adequacy of relief to aged.

Mr. A.
McDougall.
15 Jan. 1907.

The conditions to be attached to old age pensions.

36545. So as to have uniformity?—Yes.

36546. I want to ask you what conditions you would suggest as conditions for what we may call pensioners. I understand you have been helping a good many people as pensioners one way and another?—Yes.

36547. You would say they should be of good general character?—Yes.

36548. You would say they should be over sixty years of age except in a case where there has been incapacity owing to accident?—I am dealing myself with persons over sixty. I take sixty-five when speaking of Poor Law matters, because there might be difficulty in getting sixty agreed to.

36549. I am taking your own view?—Personally I think sixty years of age.

36550. Unless there has been some accident or something exceptional?—There are a few exceptional cases.

36551. They all get a medical certificate?—No.

36552. You would take as a condition that they are unable to support themselves by their own exertions?—Some of them are earning a little by knitting or some light work.

36553. But they are unable to support themselves?—They are unable to support themselves.

36554. Do you make enquiries as to their having made reasonable efforts to provide for old age?—When I go to see a person I say very little about future help, I give a little and then go again. I do not put them on the list till I have had some three or four months' experience of them.

36555. I am only thinking of your conditions; would you make reasonable provision for old age, belonging to a savings bank, trade union or friendly society, a condition?—It is frequently the case that there is a little money in the bank that is being kept for burial. That is a reason for helping where there is a little. When a burial club subscription has to be paid that is a reason for giving a little more.

36556. You take that into account?—Yes.

36557. And as to relatives and employers and others on whom there may be some claim, I am speaking of your own cases, the personal matter, do you get help from employers?—No.

36558. Do you ask them?—No.

36559. Do you call on the relatives?—Yes, I sometimes take a good deal of pains to get the relatives to assist.

36560. Does that mean going round to a little group of people?—Either writing to, or seeing them; sometimes there are relatives who are not assisting, and I say, "You ought to assist; I will do so much if you will also contribute."

The minimum living income.

36561. Take another point; as to the amount, would you have an idea as to what you think is sufficient, I mean sufficient to enable the recipient to live decently and in comparative comfort?—There is almost always something else. I do not give more than 3s. 6d. as a rule, although I have gone up to 5s.

36562. You have before you what is sufficient to cover rent and all?—Yes, for such rent as they may have to pay.

36563. Three shillings and sixpence plus what?—Something else coming in.

36564. Say 5s. in all?—About 5s. altogether.

36565. You think that is enough?—They get through upon it.

36566. How do you give the allowances that you undertake personally?—They are either taken by myself or by my daughters; sometimes they are sent by post.

The uncertainty of charitable pensions.

36567. Practically they act as almoners?—Yes, they go to see them and take the money. The people always know they will get it next time, but there is no promise of anything like a pension. The last three years I have got about twenty-two or twenty-three pensions from other funds. I was anxious in these particular cases that there should be something certain for them so that they might not be troubled with anxiety. My friend and I cannot promise to continue these payments permanently, but these people always know they will get the next payment whatever happens.

36568. Granting that to be your charitable method, and granting the want of a committee such as you describe on the part of the Poor Law, do you think you could make a division of labour between such people as yourselves and the guardians on the other hand, you taking cases which are of a better type and leaving the guardians perhaps those who are not of such a good type?—I did hope in the beginning we should find those who could well afford the money and could spare the time, to take one or two cases and visit them regularly, but I confess that I have not pressed this as the number of cases is not large.

36569. Did you find there were too few people came forward?—I have said very little about it for a long time.

36570. Do you think if it were better known, and there was established a recognised system, recognised I mean in connection with Poor Law work, that the system which you have initiated could be extended?—I believe if there was a committee appointed to deal with aged persons it might take up such a matter. That is the reason I have been anxious to mention it. None of these people know that I visit anyone else. I have been all along desiring that there should be a special committee of the guardians to go into the cases of old persons where these matters could be discussed.

Proposal for special committee of guardians with staff of volunteers to deal with aged.

36571. These cases that can be treated outside in the manner you have treated them would be cases notified by the guardians and that could be arranged?—Yes, by a special committee.

36572. Have you thought at all whether a system of visiting on what is called Elberfeld lines could be applicable to Manchester?—I think so, as far as old people are concerned.

36573. I am thinking of that too; would they be people volunteering who would be recognised by the Poor Law or some authority?—I should like them to be guardians, to be a special committee of the board of guardians to deal with aged persons.

36574. You would not find enough members on the board?—A number of private persons would perhaps come and assist, not to be upon the board or take part in the management, but to assist in the work.

36575. Then you would have a recognised staff working round this committee of yours?—Yes, for cases dealt with by that committee I would not have the usual relieving officer to visit.

36576. Practically you will have a staff of your own for this class?—The special committee should have a staff of its own. I should suggest that the persons dealt with should, if possible, be assisted in their own homes or with relations.

Possibility of enlisting the help of relatives of aged poor.

36577. I understand you propose co-operation with relatives in every way?—In every way: it is astonishing what relatives will do if there is a little something more being done.

36578. Now taking classes lying outside the aged, do you think that a system of visiting roughly on Elberfeld lines in addition to the inquiries made by the staff of the guardians, and so on, would be of service in any of those cases?—Those cases in Manchester at first are dealt with by the Charity Organisation and District Provident Society, and they are working with the guardians very fairly.

The Manchester Charity Organisation and District Provident Societies and their work.

36579. Do you find that co-operation is increasing?—It is increasing.

36580. You would trust rather to that as your co-operative agent?—Exactly.

36581. Would you have the development of any system of visitors on any new lines?—The Manchester District Provident Society have lately formed a register and asked persons who are doing anything at all towards giving assistance to give the names of those with whom they are dealing; they have got pretty fairly the names of all those in Manchester who are receiving aid publicly and even privately.

Register of recipients of charity.

36582. Do you find the Manchester Provident has touch of enough persons to help, for instance in such a scheme as you have before you?—I think so: they have now an Association of Visitors for their pensioners: those who visit are not to give any money, but they go and see the people and take flowers.

Question of official recognition of charitable agencies. 36583. Therefore they are working on lines which are quite consistent with your own proposals?—Quite.

36584. Would it make any difference to them as a recognised body working in the district if they had any kind of status recognised. I mean if they were recognised officially more or less as undertaking this part of the work?—It is almost so now, because the Lord Mayor sends to the Society if there is anything special. It is now becoming rather the practice for those who desire to assist poor people at special times to inquire first from the Society: they may not wish to be known personally. That is growing.

Increased co-operation between Poor Law and Charity. 36585. I conclude from what you say that there has been very satisfactory progress between them and the board of guardians?—Yes, it has now fairly commenced, I think.

Proposal that four Manchester Unions should combine for purposes of classification. 36586. When you say in the first draft in your statement that one house could be an infirmary for sickness induced by depraved habits and one an infirmary for the deserving sick, you mean, besides those institutions, to have an institution more like the hospital at Chorlton, do you?—This was my own idea, when it was first suggested that the Manchester Unions should be combined and I was simply giving my views as to how the houses could be used. What has occurred is that the Chorlton and Manchester Guardians have been combined under orders of the Local Government Board for two special purposes, namely, the erection of a tramp ward and test house, and an institution for epileptics, with a joint Committee to manage each.

Effect and desirability of increasing the Poor Law area. 36587. Are you in favour of pushing this combination further, and having a single union for institutional purposes with outdoor relief areas?—I was, but now we have got together for some of the principal purposes, one does not seem so anxious. The area is very big, and it might become too big. The guardians would scarcely know the whole of it.

36588. Do you think, if you centralised in the way suggested, local interest would be less?—I think it would be lessened.

36589. If you had the institutions for a larger area? I do not at all recommend that now for these four large unions which are increasing rapidly.

36590. Having smaller institutions in smaller areas would keep up the local interest to a greater extent?—I think so, but there might be still more union for special purposes.

36591. Are you in favour of the suggestion of making practically Poor Law hospitals; not merely infirmaries, but hospitals where acute cases are received?—I do not quite understand.

Proposal to increase functions of Sanitary Authority as to infectious disease. 36592. For instance, at West Derby there is a large hospital which is a Poor Law institution, but to all intents and purposes it is a hospital just as the Royal Infirmary might be. It is taking new work. It is the principal hospital of the place now. Are you in favour of a movement of that sort?—I should rather be in favour of more hospitals under the health department. We have a sanitary committee in Manchester.

36593. Like the puerperal hospital you have created at Manchester?—Yes.

36594. You would not be in favour of the Poor Law creating a larger number of general hospitals?—I should not recommend that. The corporation are now taking care of the infectious diseases in the municipal hospitals. Personally I am very anxious that we should deal with consumption, very anxious indeed. We are now taking some cases in a small municipal hospital that happens to be available, but it is only for persons who cannot be cared for in their own homes.

36595. As I understand you, you would keep the hospitals which are under the health authority hospitals for infectious diseases and such like, as coming under a different category?—Yes, and consumption, which is not notifiable as an infectious disease yet.

36596. That would be your view?—Yes; I should be very wishful to include consumption.

The Manchester Rules. 36597. Do you, on the whole, adhere to the Manchester rules?—Yes; but when bad times come, of course we have to relax.

36598. But you adhere to the principle as to the house test, and so on?—Yes.

36599. (Mr. Chandler.) You are not in favour of combining the groups of unions in Manchester for any other purpose than they are already?—Except for special purposes that might arise. We have already combined for two purposes with Chorlton.

36600. You have heard the evidence this morning of a member of our board with regard to out-relief; do you recognise in that lack of combination any evil in that connection, a lack of uniformity?—One does not want to speak of another union, but we do think perhaps there is too great liberality in out-relief in Chorlton, but I do not want to say that.

36601. (Mr. Booth.) You may say at least there is a lack of uniformity?—There is a lack of uniformity, but I do not want to say that in the way of blame.

36602. (Mr. Chandler.) Combination will alter that?—Amalgamation for all purposes I should still be in favour of if we were not getting so very large.

36603. I was anxious to know your view?—I think it would be too large a union, although in 1889 I thought otherwise.

36604. The disadvantages would outweigh the advantages, you think?—Yes.

36605. (Mr. Gardiner.) I did not quite understand when you were answering Mr. Loch why in theory you objected to the transfer of Poor Law infirmaries to the health authority?—We have got so very much to do. As I am Chairman of the infectious hospital, I have more to do with hospital matters probably as a member of the corporation than as a guardian. We have so very much to do with other things that we cannot get on. It is a matter of cost that prevents us getting on with regard to consumption, for instance.

36606. Supposing all the hospitals were under one authority, say the municipal authority: you noticed that the last witness mentioned that?—There are such numbers of matters wanting attending to, and to say that the municipality is to provide for all sickness is a thing one could not imagine.

36607. All the sick poor have to be provided for now, have they not, by the infirmaries?—Yes. For instance, some eight or nine years ago we had a great difficulty in persuading parents to allow their children to go to the fever hospital, very great difficulty, but they want them to come now: they have learned to have faith in the infectious hospitals, the nursing and the medical attention, and now they absolutely come and demand admission for fever cases. They cannot claim that we shall take every infectious case in, but we are having demands. They think they are better there than at their homes. It is not want of care for the children, but they believe the children's comfort and safety will be better. If the municipality had to take over the hospitals, we should get people leaving their own medical men and coming to the public place. The number would be very large.

36608. With regard to Poor Law infirmaries now, when people are seriously ill, they are always recommended among the poor to go to the infirmary?—That is amongst poor people: we do not find in the infectious hospitals that it is only the poor people that object to go. The other people think the children are better there. We have a good number of children who are not at all of the pauper class in the hospital for infectious diseases and that is increasing. We are having to enlarge considerably. We do not make any charge for infectious cases.

36609. (Mr. Phelps.) When you were talking of classification in the workhouse I did not quite gather whether you meant to classify people according to their conduct in the house or before they came into it?—I should begin with aged persons, and then beginning in that way I think the classification would not stay with the aged persons.

36610. What I rather meant is would you take as the basis of your classification how they had behaved in the workhouse, or before they came into the workhouse? As regards persons of sixty-five years of age I would not make much inquiry what their conduct had been. But I would not begin by putting them in the workhouse if it could be avoided.

Mr. A. McDougall.

15 Jan. 1907.

Question of further combination of Manchester Unions.

Lack of uniformity as to out-relief between neighbouring unions.

The pros and cons of amalgamating unions.

Objections to transfer of medical relief to the Sanitary Authority.

Increasing popularity of the Sanitary Authority's hospitals.

Objections to transfer of medical relief to the Sanitary Authority.

The question of classification by present or previous merit.

Mr. A.
McDougall.
15 Jan. 1907.

Changes in the condition of the poor in the last generation and question of need of consequent changes in Poor Law
administration.

Effect to which the Poor Law affects the lives of the poor.

Effect on thrif of reducing deterrence of
Poor Law.

The control of the Local Government Board satisfactory.

Advantages of "barrack" schools.

36611. In the workhouse itself would you classify the inmates according to conduct?—I do not see how to do it, but should be very glad if it could be done.

36612. You have been a guardian a great many years, have you not?—Yes, thirty years.

36613. Do you find much change in the condition of the poor in Manchester in that time?—I do not know that I can say there is a change in the degree of poverty, there is a great change in the condition in which they meet poverty; they are better able to make the best of things, they are more intelligent than they were, they have been in schools. Unless they are really vicious they meet their difficulties very much better and the children are very much more cared for.

36614. Do you think those changes have called for any change in the administration of the Poor Law?—No.

36615. Do you think for instance the standard of comfort in the workhouses could safely be raised?—I would not like to say that because the food is good, and the warmth is good, but it is more the association that is objected to, that makes the real workhouse test.

36616. That you would propose now to really modify?—I would with aged persons. I would take care that all women at any rate have a separate bedroom.

36617. Do you think with regard to outdoor relief that the rising standard makes any change desirable?—Food is cheap. It makes a great difference when a 4 lb. loaf can be got for 4d., (it is supplied at about 4d. by the guardians) than when it is dearer.

36618. What about rent?—We were giving something about the same when bread was dear.

36619. Has the rent of houses gone up?—Yes.

36620. Do you think the guardians should recognise that in their relief?—One regards out-relief as an exceptional matter. One regards relief as being the providing of shelter and everything else; one does not want to depart from that without some good reason; therefore I am not prepared to say what we would do about paying rent. It is looking forward to giving out-relief for a considerable time to the same person. In theory we only give out-relief, except to aged persons, as a temporary matter till they get into work again.

36621. Do you think in Manchester the Poor Law vista enters much into the lives of people; do they look forward to it in old age?—I do not think they do.

36622. Or count upon it?—I do not think it is a matter that comes into their calculation of the future. There is always the workhouse before everyone that is not able to provide for themselves, but not more than that.

36623. We are always told that these things should be a great deterrent in order that they shall not prevent people saving?—I think that thrifty people would always save if they could.

36624. Do you think there has been much change in the board of guardians in your experience?—When I go back thirty years I should not like to make any comparison. I think boards of guardians are endeavouring to do their duty quite as well as any other public representatives.

36625. Are there any directions in which you think the control of the Local Government Board might be modified now?—I should not like to say that. The inspectors of the Local Government Board are always very willing to listen to anything the guardians may say.

36626. You find on the whole it works well in Manchester, and without friction?—It may be that at times we feel we might get answers earlier, but that is all.

36627. (Miss Hill.) You have a large school for children at Swinton?—Yes.

36628. Have you found any drawbacks from its size?—No, I am afraid that I shall not be thought to be at all well instructed in Poor Law matters when I say that our so-called barrack-schools, which we are not ashamed of at all, I think have advantages in having the children together; it brings them under the care of the master and matron in a way they cannot be in a cottage home under a mother.

36629. And you have found the results satisfactory?—Yes.

36630. So that you would not be in favour of any alteration of that?—If we had to build a new school, we should certainly do more in the way of cottage homes for instance. We have two cottage homes for girls who are going out to service. They live for six months in a cottage home and each has her own bedroom.

36631. That is to train them in the work of an establishment?—Yes, to fit them for household duties.

36632. Do you find that the boys and girls that go out are satisfactory?—Yes, in fact we are sorry for some boys and girls that are going back to their own homes. We find situations for the others and visit them up till the age of eighteen years: although some children have very good mothers and good homes, they are with us because the mother is not able to earn sufficient to keep them, and we think the best relief to the mother is having the child trained and educated and made ready for work.

36633. A good many of the respectable widows realise that?—They do when they have once begun. The only difficulty is in inducing them to let them go. When the children have gone and they have visited them at the schools then they become quite content.

36634. With regard to the housing conditions in Manchester, I gather your corporation has not gone into any expensive speculative scheme in the provision of the houses?—The ratepayers think we have; those of us on the committee do not think we have done enough. We have been much hindered by the amount of the estimates we have brought out, and we have not been allowed to have the amount of money we asked for.

36635. What you have done to supply the need is to build when clearances have arisen?—We have taken down one or two very congested and insanitary areas. That is exceedingly expensive, and in Lancashire it is rather different to other towns through the country: it is a cottage town, that is to say the workpeople live in cottages near the large manufactories and the mills: those cottages have become insanitary, many of them have been built for a long time. Instead of clearing the area, we have repaired those cottages and made them sanitary by taking perhaps one in four down and brought light and air to every house and brought sanitary appliances to every house.

36636. You have found that satisfactory in accommodating the poorer class of tenants?—Yes. They were called back-to-back houses, or practically that. We have dealt with about 12,000 insanitary houses of that class, and we think they are fairly satisfactory.

36637. Have you seen this pamphlet on the housing conditions of Manchester by Mr. Marr?—Yes, I have.

36638. Have you any remarks to make upon it?—No, I have not seen sufficient of it, but Mr. Marr is a very active and useful member of our committee.

36639. You have not any very strong philanthropic or private effort undertakings in Manchester for the housing accommodation of the people?—There is an old mill where they began to work.

36640. There would be an opening for such a body wisely managed I should think, if the corporation have not done anything to discourage private enterprise?—There has been no discouragement.

36641. The mere fact of a great municipality building is a discouragement; but I gather you have not that?—We have a considerable amount of property where it was really necessary to do it: we have taken it in order to repair the old insanitary houses, because the money would go further in doing that and fewer people would be displaced.

36642. You could accommodate the poor people better?—We thought there would not be so many of them displaced.

36643. (Mr. Bentham.) Have you noticed that the number of people in receipt of relief has increased considerably since 1895, taking the figures of 1905 as compared with 1895?—Yes, but in 1905 we were having bad times and there was a good deal of charity being given and a distress committee which induced a good many people to come into Manchester. I do not think the Manchester township pauperism would have been increased had we been left only with the Manchester people.

Cottage training homes for
Poor Law girls and their results.

Methods of relief of widows with
children.

Housing conditions in Manchester and policy of the corporation.

Increase in paupers and in proportion of out-paupers in Manchester, and its causes.

36644. Do you think more people came into Manchester because of the distress, or because of the charity that was given at the time or what?—Very many people did come, and some of them are still in Manchester.

36645. Then the proportion of outdoor relief to indoor relief, that is to the total number of paupers, increased very largely?—Yes, it did. Are you speaking of the Manchester township now?

36646. Yes. You do not think that is owing to any change of policy on the part of the guardians?—No, except that it was a hard time, and there were a great many people coming and they had to give more readily.

36647. You do not know if it is lower now, do you?—We have been going down week by week.

The failure of pauper classification under the existing system.

36648. With regard to the question of classification after quoting Articles 98 and 99, you say in paragraph 13 "This classification fails lamentably to meet the reasonable claims of the respectable and deserving poor"?—That kept up the association of the decent with the others.

36649. Under Article 99 you are empowered to subdivide the classes as the guardians think fit; was it not rather the fault of the guardians that this classification failed lamentably? How could they be divided? The Manchester population is constantly going down. We always have before us in the Manchester township that the people are going away into other places, and there is no willingness to find the money required for the purpose of erecting new buildings or making necessary changes.

36650. Then the fault was on the part of the guardians was it?—I would not call it fault.

36651. Failure?—I do not admit the guardians say it is a failure. I cannot say there was a failure for which the guardians were responsible.

36652. I wanted to ascertain whether you considered the articles in the order quoted did not meet the case or that those who are responsible for carrying them out did not carry the sub-divisions and classification to the extent they might have done?—You see when one is speaking about a personal opinion you cannot blame a body for not having had that same opinion or endeavouring to carry it out. This is not a statement by the guardians: I want to enable a decent woman to keep herself to herself in the workhouse, and keep her from bad associations in the dormitory.

36653. You are not blaming the order then?—No.

36654. The order did give power to the guardians to sub-divide classes according to character?—Unfortunately some of my draft statement requires amendment.

36655. May we take it as your opinion that the classification ought to be more according to character than it has been in the past? Yes. That would necessitate additional buildings and alterations. If we could take these old people away and give cubicles to the women, I think it would go far to meet it.

36656. You think the question of cost has hindered to a certain extent the proper classification of inmates?—I must be clear about the position of the guardians. We intended to have all epileptics and all imbeciles taken away; that would have left a good deal of room in the workhouse that could have been used for these purposes. The joint committee was formed and tenders were obtained for sufficient buildings at the epileptic colony for both imbeciles and epileptics. Then when the estimates came, the matter was reconsidered, and, I am sorry to say, it was decided only to go on with a portion of the scheme, for a few epileptics only, 220 instead of some 600. That left us with a large number of patients we expected would have been removed and deprived us of the expected vacant rooms; it is not an unwillingness, but a stress of circumstances. At the same time the lunatic asylum authority has been considering the taking of the chronic cases, and we were expecting to have room from that cause; we have not got the room from either of those two causes, and, therefore the attempts at classification have not, so far, been possible.

36657. According to your statement we may take it you approve of the system of classification by institution?—Yes.

36658. That is, having a separate institution for each class of case as far as possible?—Yes.

36659. Does not that mean in practice that when dealing with an application the committee dealing with it would have to decide to which institution it would have to be sent, that is to say the classification would really take place before entering into the institution?—You see very frequently we have a call-over of the workhouse when the cases of the inmates come up for further consideration by visiting committees, after they have been in the workhouse some little time. This can only be done after the applicant has entered the workhouse.

36660. In Paragraph 29 of the first draft of your statement you say, "One house could become a real home for worthy and self-respecting inmates; one house a real test house, with tasks of work and plain food for the idle and dissolute; one infirmary for the deserving sick, one infirmary for sickness induced by depraved habits." If those were separate and distinct buildings?—I am very sorry; but that is a matter which you will see is altered in the amended statement I am handing in to-day.

36661. Have you not the opinion now that an improvement in the Poor Law might take place on those lines? Not upon those lines, but by a combination for special purposes just as we have done for epileptics and in providing a tramp ward and test house.

36662. That a combination of unions for special purposes should take place rather than having separate institutions for separate classes?—That is so.

36663. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to segregation of good people in one ward or workhouse and bad people in another, it has been represented to us that it is very difficult from an administrative point of view to deal with a lot of bad people without any good people between?—What I am now proposing is that women should have cubicles.

Combinations of unions for special purposes.

Need and effect of separate cubicles for female paupers.

36664. You would isolate the bad people?—I should put all women into cubicles.

36665. With regard to the day-room, what would you do with them?—The objectionable conduct is not so much in the day-room, because there are officers about in the daytime.

36666. You do not regard it then as a serious difficulty if you attempt to keep the good people to themselves and thus had to leave the bad people to themselves?—I never like to call anybody bad.

36667. I mean the less worthy people, people more disorderly and dirty; you do not think they would deteriorate each other more?—I believe if a woman going into the workhouse could be certain that she would have a bed room to herself quite apart from any other it would remove a great deal of the unwillingness and aversion.

36668. You would be removing the deterrent character of the workhouse to an extent?—I do not believe in stigma and deterrent.

Objections to stigma attached to indoor relief.

36669. You do not?—I think a person comes for that which is really a necessity; many of those in the deepest necessity are exceedingly decent people. Many people in the workhouses are good citizens.

36670. It is not the habit of most working class families to have cubicles for each person; it is introducing a higher standard?—Yes, but they are members of the same family or at any rate friends or lodgers.

36671. You have no fear of making the workhouse less deterrent?—Not at all; I would not make it attractive. I would not give them better food, or use them better than they were before.

Question of workhouse diet and its deterrence.

36672. You do give them better food already—That is a matter of opinion.

36673. You must give them better food, because the other people have not enough?—The cooking is somewhat better of course.

36674. The food is more generous in quality?—I would not say that.

36675. Would you not suggest that the diet of the workhouse is better than the ordinary diet of the poorest class?—I would not say the diet of the workhouse is preferable, because in the poorest house they have some special meal, and they have just what they like instead of what is given; it is not very pleasant to know that on Tuesday you will get this and on Wednesday the other

Mr. A. McDougall.
15 Jan. 1907.

Need for more classification by character.

Obstacles to classification by institutions in Manchester.

Classification by institutions and its procedure.

Mr. A. 36676. You would keep that uniformity, you do not McDougall. want to vary it?—I would vary it if I could. I do not see 15 Jan. 1907. how it can be varied.

36677. You would vary it; you would give them surprises?—I would not have it as a seven days' dietary;
I would have it a five-day or a six-day, so that on Wednesday or Tuesday it would not always come to the same thing.

36678. You would surprise them about the diet?—If possible.

36679. So you do not want to make that deterrent?—
I do not think we have any right to make the legal provision for a person's necessities deterrent.

Question of ensuring uniformity in Poor Law
administration.

36680. It has been brought before us that there is a very great lack of uniformity in the amount of out-relief given in different unions. Do you see any way at all to check that want of uniformity by any Local Government Board Orders?—I should not interfere with the discretion of the guardians so long as they conform to the Consolidated Orders.

36681. From a practical point of view you want no alteration?—No; there are certain suggestions for new legislation, but they do not run in that direction.

36682. About these suggestions; you are in favour of old age pensions, are you not?—I do not know. It all depends on what is intended and who are to have them.

Combination
of unions for special purposes, and their working.

36683. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You have joint committees, have you not, between the unions in Manchester?
—Yes.

36684. Do they work pretty well?—They work very well.

36685. Do you have friction?—No, the only thing I am personally sorry about is that when we were going to build for the 600 epileptics and imbeciles there were such strong representations made about the cost that we were threatened with opposition if we did not reduce it; that is all.

Mr. HENRY ISHERWOOD COOPER, called; and Examined.

Mr. Henry 36692. (Mr. Booth.) We understand you are Clerk
I. Cooper. to the Guardians of the Bolton Union, Secretary to the 15 Jan. 1907. Distress Committee for the county borough of Bolton, and Divisional Chairman of the county borough of Bolton Guild of Help?—Yes.

36693. I believe you have been so good as to prepare for us a proof of your evidence, which it is our custom to take as the evidence-in-chief, if you will hand it in?—
Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. Administration of Relief.

Poor Law
infirmaries should be entirely separate from the workhouse.

1. In large unions the entire separation of the indoor sick poor, requiring hospital treatment, from workhouse buildings, in which the able-bodied are housed, is most desirable for ensuring the efficient treatment of the sick.
The complete supervision and control of the hospitals should be placed under the medical officer, with a superintendent nurse and steward. The dual control now exercised by the workhouse master, matron, medical officer, and superintendent nurse gives rise to friction, and is not to the advantage of the sick poor. Difficulties arising from this dual control have been experienced frequently in this union within the last few years.

Distance as an obstacle to combination of unions for special purposes.

2. Combination of unions for certain purposes is undoubtedly advantageous, but might inflict hardship on poor persons if carried out generally in regard to workhouses, by removing them beyond a distance within which their relatives and friends could afford to visit them; and, in addition, considerable expense might be incurred by the unions in the combination in the payment of railway fares to and from the institution in respect of paupers who habitually discharge themselves from the workhouse.

Need to completely remove all children from the workhouse.

3. The removal of all children from workhouse surroundings by the adoption of the "Boarding-out System"

36686. Practically in the carrying out of the work of a joint committee you do not have any difficulty?—Not in the least; the members appointed by each union work very well together.

36687. The guardians of the unions do not feel they are ousted by the fact that there is a joint committee?—
Not in the least; it is a great relief to the guardians that the work is done in that way.

36688. It has been represented to us that that might be the case or was the case elsewhere; that is not your experience?—Our experience has been the reverse.

36689. (Mr. Booth.) I do not want to ask you any questions about old age pensions, but if there is anything you would like to say on that subject the Commission would be interested to hear it?—The Manchester Board sent representations in reply to your request; I should like those representations to be in some way brought into your proceedings at some time; perhaps they will be.

36690. Is that something that has already been in our hands?—Yes, you will have had it. These are our suggestions for new legislation. For myself, I would remove the procedure under the Vaccination Act from the guardians altogether and give it to the health authority.

36691. My point was this: Mrs. Webb asked you a direct question about old age pensions; old age pensions were not mentioned in your statement, and I do not propose to ask you any direct question on the point, but if you have any opinion which you would wish to express we as a Commission would be extremely glad that you should do so, so that we may have the benefit of your opinion on this vexed question of old age pensions?—
The only thing I should wish to say with regard to my suggestions for provision for necessitous old age is that they propose that a portion of the money might be paid by the Treasury, that was because the old age pension question had been discussed in that sense and there seemed to be an expectation of grants from the Treasury. I thought that certain of these proposals might enable the guardians to obtain some money from the Treasury in order to carry that out.

or "Scattered Homes" or "Grouped Cottage Homes" should be enforced as far as possible. In this union there are about 120 children boarded out within the union.
These children in the cottage homes in connection with the workhouse who are old enough attend the public elementary schools in Bolton, but they frequently come in contact with the adult inmates, and would be brought up more in the style of an ordinary working man's children if placed in scattered homes with a suitable foster mother.

4. The removal of children from workhouse surroundings would give greater facilities for better classification of the aged and able-bodied poor in the institution.

5. Classification of the deserving and undeserving indoor poor has been provided for at the workhouse in this union to a certain extent, and special privileges are given to the more deserving.

6. In the workhouse of this union there are a great many illegitimate children born—children of young single women who go to the workhouse for the purpose of confinement. During the year ended June, 1906, there were thirty-two births in the workhouse, of which eight children only were legitimate and twenty-four illegitimate.
This points to the necessity for some further powers being given to boards of guardians to proceed against the putative fathers of such children, not only for the maintenance of the child but for the maintenance of the mother before and after the birth of the child while maintained at the expense of the rates; and in cases of feeble-minded women giving birth to illegitimate children, to obtain orders of justices for the detention of such women.

7. It is often the case at the workhouse of this union that inmates are insured for burial purposes by their relatives and friends. Sometimes a burial policy will have been obtained by the pauper himself with a view to ensuring that he shall not be buried at the workhouse or at the expense of the union funds, and he is unable to

Proposal to transfer vaccination to the Sanitary Authorities.

Question of grant from Treasury towards cost of classification by institutions.

Classification
by merit.

Large number of illegitimate births in workhouse, and need of further powers against puta-tive fathers and of power to detain feeble-minded
mothers

Paupers' burial insurances, appropriated by relatives,
and remedies.

keep up the contributions required by the terms of the policy, although he may perhaps be able to do so up to within a few months of his death. The remaining payments are frequently made by some relatives or friend, who receives the benefit of the policy on the death of the pauper, unknown to the guardians, and the pauper insured is buried at the expense of the guardians. I think that where a pauper insured for burial purposes dies in the workhouse the insurance company should be required to pay the guardians the burial expenses before satisfying the claim on the policy—such expenses to be deducted from the amount payable to the policy holder.

8. More generous treatment should be meted out to the aged deserving outdoor poor and a greater distinction should be drawn between the deserving and the undeserving, as in the case of the indoor poor.

2. Emigration.

9. Boards of guardians are now empowered to expend money subject to the sanction of the Local Government Board for the emigration of adult paupers. Distress committees may do so without any such sanction, and I see no reason why this power should not be given to boards of guardians and more freely exercised without the sanction of the Local Government Board.

3. Children of Vagrants.

10. Whatever may be the outcome of the Report of the Departmental Committee on Vagrancy, it is in my opinion essential that powers should be given to boards of guardians to rescue and deal with the children of habitual vagrants. The guardians of this union do rescue the children of vagrants as far as the law will permit. I desire to instance the case of a woman named Jones, who some time ago was admitted to the Bolton casual wards with an infant in arms. She had been carrying the child about from town to town begging, and on arrival at the Bolton casual wards the child was very emaciated, its flesh almost raw, and its legs temporarily deformed and stiffened by continually being held in one position on the mother's arm. It was with difficulty that this woman was persuaded to go into the workhouse hospital with her child for treatment, but ultimately she did so.

4. The Case Paper System, or Record Paper.

11. What is known as the case paper system was adopted by the guardians of the Bolton union on the 1st April last. I have had considerable experience of this system, not only in regard to the correspondence of the guardians, which I have kept in similar form since the year 1882, but also for some two or three years when I was vaccination officer in regard to cases requiring vaccination, and I have found it most effectual for reference and also in supplying a continuous record of any particular case. I use it now in connection with all my business. It is also, under the order of the Local Government Board, imperative in connection with the Distress Committee's office.

12. About two years ago, one of the relieving officers of this union was prevented from performing his duties by sickness for some months, and his office was filled by a temporary substitute. There were no "history" or "record" sheets relating to his relief cases, and no particulars of cases beyond the very meagre information given in the application and report book, which it was difficult to refer to for want of continuity. As a consequence a number of persons obtained outdoor relief who would not have been so relieved had this temporary officer been in possession of their previous history.

13. This Case Paper System is also kept at the office of the Guild of Help, hereinafter referred to.

5. Maintenance of Relatives and Recovery of Contributions under Justices' Orders.

14. Under the existing law, sums due to boards of guardians from relatives of paupers in respect of the maintenance of such paupers are to be recovered as civil debts. The following is the process which has to be gone through at the County Petty Sessions Court in the Bolton Union.

1. Summons and order on liable relatives.

2. Upon non payment, summons for arrears and order for payment of arrears.

3. Upon disobedience of the order for payment of arrears application to be made to court for distress warrant.

4. In case there are no effects to distrain upon, another summons is necessary, calling upon the defendant to show cause why he should not be committed to prison.

5. Upon defendant appearing, the onus of proof that the defendant has had means wherewith to pay is upon the guardians, and it is very difficult to prove in some cases.

15. These proceedings are cumbersome and expensive; often the relatives of paupers are without goods on which to distrain. The proceedings might be simplified by making it compulsory upon the defendant, after the first order is made, to prove to the magistrates that since the making of the order he has had no means wherewith to obey it, or to be committed to prison failing such proof. It is also, in my opinion, very desirable that poor persons not able to work, mentioned in Section 7 of the Statute 43, Elizabeth Cap. 2, should be empowered by law to themselves proceed against their relatives liable to contribute to their maintenance for orders of justices requiring them to so contribute and for enforcing such orders. As the law at present stands it is necessary for these poor persons to become chargeable to the union funds before any proceedings against their liable relatives in respect of their maintenance can be instituted. It is now enacted that a married woman may herself proceed against her husband for an order of maintenance in case of desertion, and there does not appear to me to be any reason why this should not be extended to poor persons mentioned in the statute quoted. It would be the means of preventing a large number of poor people becoming chargeable to the rates, and would save the rates expense in legal proceedings.

Charitable Societies.

16. Societies dispensing charity ought to be an aid to the statutory authority for relieving the destitute, and very often are, but in some cases they may be acting in conflict with that authority. In Bolton there are seven societies assisting the poor and needy, viz.:—

1. Bolton, Bury, Rochdale, and District Deaf and Dumb Society.
2. Queen Street Mission.
3. Bolton Poor Protection and Benevolent Society.
4. Bolton Wesleyan Mission.
5. Schools and Workshops for the Blind.
6. Committee for dealing with the outside blind of Bolton.
7. Church Army Home.

All these societies are working in the same area.

17. It may happen, and no doubt does frequently happen, that relief is being given to the same family by more than one society in addition to what is allowed by the board of guardians as the statutory authority. To prevent this I would suggest that all charities collecting monies from the public and dispensing relief should only be allowed to do so under regulations to be prescribed by the statutory authority charged with the relief of the destitute, and that one of such regulations should be that each society should keep a register of the cases they are relieving and a record paper for each of the cases they assist. This register and record paper should be open at all times to the inspection of the officers of the guardians or other authority charged with the relief of the destitute.

7. County Borough of Bolton Guild of Help.

18. In consequence of the exceptional distress in Bolton and district in the autumn of 1904, I suggested to the board of guardians that measures should be taken with a view to finding employment for the unemployed, and a conference of representatives of local governing bodies, charitable societies, and others interested, was convened by the guardians in October, 1904, when it was decided to prepare a register for the unemployed. This was prepared, and I acted as secretary to the committee. Whilst acting in this capacity my attention was, on more than one occasion, attracted by the circumstances of the applicants for employment, and, after

Mr. Henry I. Cooper.
15 Jan. 1907.

Need for classification of out-door paupers.

Proposed further power of emigration for guardians.

Need for further power to deal with children of habitual vagrants.

The case-paper system at Bolton and its advantages.

Need for simpler process of recovering maintenance from relatives.

The Bolton Guild of Help its origin and work.

a discussion by the committee it was arranged that I should go over to Bradford and ascertain what was being done there by the Guild of Help. As the result of my report on my visit to Bradford a public meeting was convened by the Mayor of Bolton, and a Guild of Help established for the county borough and parish of Bolton (one of the parishes in the Bolton Union).

19. The objects of the Guild are :—

- (a) To provide a friend for all in need of help and advice.
- (b) To secure timely aid for the suffering and needy.
- (c) To bring about, if possible, lasting improvement in the condition of each case, by patient study and wise methods of help.
- (d.) To prevent overlapping and waste of charitable effort.

20. It is a modified form of the "Elberfeld" system, but no relief is dispensed by the helpers—it is their duty to secure it from others. As supplemental to the statutory authority it is most useful, and is the means of preventing many poor people from becoming paupers who would otherwise do so but for the Guild's timely assistance. There are now 300 helpers and about 600 cases; one helper is not allowed to take more than four cases.

8. County Borough of Bolton Distress Committee.

Unemployment in Bolton, its extent, and how dealt with.

21. The Joint Committee appointed at the Conference convened by the guardians of Bolton Union in October, 1904, were doing the work in the union as far as possible that is now authorised by the Unemployed Workmen Act of 1905.

22. In the Winter 1904-5, owing to the exceptional distress there were 2,483 men registered and employment found for 464. The statutory committee was appointed in 1905 and 1,279 unemployed registered their names through the Winter 1905-6. Relating to the work of the Winter 1905-6, I append a comparative statement of the 1,279 unemployed in trades and occupations. (See Appendix No. II. (A).)

Numbers of unemployed in Trade Unions or Benefit Societies.

23. Of the foregoing 1,279 unemployed 131 only had been in trade union or benefit societies and fifty-seven of those were not in benefit owing to their having been unable to continue their contributions.

Voters, paupers, casuals, and degenerates amongst the unemployed.

24. 909 of the 1,279 unemployed referred to were also on the Voluntary Committee's Register for the previous winter, and only 468 of this 1,279 unemployed were on the Voters' List. 44 of the 1,279 on the Register of Unemployed for the Winter 1905-6 have since applied to the guardians for relief.

25. A great many of the men who register their names are physically unfit to do a day's labour, and a number are those who never follow any regular employment, but do an odd job occasionally.

Need for further powers as to Labour colonies.

26. Greater powers for establishing Joint Labour Colonies, with suitable regulations, would doubtless result in some success in dealing with certain of the unemployed.

Distance as an obstacle to combination of unions.

36694. (Mr. Booth.) I shall not myself, in the absence of our proper chairman, trouble you with many questions, but I shall take your statement as sufficient, bearing in mind also that many of those present have been recently visiting your neighbourhood, and will be able to ask you questions with more judgment than I could. Still there are one or two things that I should like to put to you. In paragraph 2 you speak of the disadvantage from the combination of unions arising from the possible necessity of persons going great distances to reach the institution to which their friends have been sent; but it does not follow, does it, that because there is a combination of unions there should not be re-duplication of such institutions as it is important should be accessible?—No.

36695. I imagine that the object of combination is to get uniformity of administration and strength of authority; that the administration of the Poor Law locally needs to have a strength and an authority which, in some cases, it now lacks if we are to get the responsibility that we want, and the uniformity that we want; that, therefore, a combination of unions does not merely mean combining necessarily upon the one institution; and so those institutions which it is important to have near this or that neighbourhood can be duplicated?—

Quite so. I think I say in paragraph 2 that for certain purposes combination is advantageous; but those purposes are somewhat limited.

Mr. Henry Cooper.

15 Jan. 1907.

36696. With regard to the difficulty connected with those who habitually discharge themselves from the workhouse, which is a difficulty arising in any case, do you think it would be possible to check that action of frequent self-discharge?—The Poor Law Act of 1899 gives power to boards of guardians to require, I think it is, 168 hours' notice by an inmate who repeatedly discharged himself. That means, I think, that in cases where a man repeatedly goes in and out of the workhouse, he may be called upon to give 168 hours' notice before he discharges himself. I think that might be extended in certain cases, and then you would be able to deal with them; but I do not think it ought to be extended so as to give powers to boards of guardians to keep a man or woman for a longer period than seven days. I think the case ought to go before the court.

Method of dealing with ins-and-outs proposed compulsory committal to an institution.

36697. But supposing the case had gone before the court, and supposing that the admission of paupers under certain conditions was for a period by order, or under some sanction, of the court, would that meet it?—I think so; at any rate, it would help it.

36698. Those that had shown themselves impracticable to treat with any degree of liberty, provided it were properly decided by a court, might be as it were committed to an institution for a lengthened period?—I think so.

36699. You would not be afraid of that?—No, I do not think so at all. I have considered the class of cases that might, in my opinion, be suitable for combination. Of course, a great deal depends on the union, whether it is an urban union or a rural union, and also on the distances. I think it might be desirable in the cases of orphan and deserted children.

Purposes for which combination of unions desirable.

36700. That is to say, that, leaving the existing unions, they should combine together to carry out certain purposes for certain classes of paupers?—For certain classes they might do so advantageously, I think, such as the consumptive patients and also imbeciles and epileptics.

36701. Would you suggest a joint administration, or an administration by some one or two districts, certain of the unions boarding-out their paupers with another union?—It might be done that way by agreement. Of course, the combination would be just as effective by agreement, that is, by boarding-out arrangements, as by a joint order for three or more unions.

Combination of unions for special purposes: alternative methods.

36702. And would have some advantages?—Yes, I think so.

36703. Especially in the case of a rural and rather detached union?—More so there, because they are at the disadvantage of not having the room for classification.

36704. But it would be more difficult to get a really concentrated management?—I think so. It is more difficult in a rural union than in an urban union; and, therefore, it becomes more desirable to have combination in a rural union for the classes that they could combine for, than it is desirable in an urban union, because in an urban union you get a large workhouse, and you are able pretty well to classify there on account of the numbers. I am not so very much impressed with the desirability of combination for imbeciles and epileptics, although that is a class which it is generally considered should be kept separate; but it is a question to my mind whether it is really desirable to separate the same epileptics from the other inmates.

The best treatment for epileptics.

36705. Does your experience go to show that they are more helpfully treated if they are not isolated?—If there are only a few, I think they are as well with the ordinary inmates, because when the epileptics are all put together, there is no chance of their improving themselves at all.

36706. There is apparently a difference of opinion as to that?—I think there is a great difference of opinion, medical and otherwise.

36707. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you mean that they should be placed with the ordinary inmates of the house, and not mixed with other epileptics?—It would have to be carefully decided what inmates to put them with; but, judging from my experience, I think the epileptics are better if they are carefully placed with the ordinary inmates, than if they are herded together in a separate institution.

33708. (Mr. Booth.) Without making it anything very fixed or rigid, is it your idea that there should be an enlargement of area with combination for certain purposes amongst the unions?—For certain purposes, where it can be done, yes; but the classes are very limited where it can be done generally without difficulty and expense.

36709. Do you consider the actual number of guardians too great for the individual unions?—I think they are too great under the Act of 1894, but I do not think they were before.

36710. So there would be in that case an advantage in definite amalgamation, in so far as it might result in one board for a larger area with perhaps not more guardians than each board now has?—That is, as regards the management of the institution, of course? I think a small committee of management is far better than a large one.

36711. But it would probably be necessary to supplement that by breaking up the districts for local management in the case of out-relief?—For out-relief, certainly, and for other purposes. I do not see that you want a greater number of guardians for that, but you do want some one who takes an interest in the poor in order to supplement the action of the guardians who administer the relief.

36712. You want a local organisation of some kind?—Yes, certainly—in order to supplement the board of guardians.

36713. That is to say, supposing you had a joint or a united board for a larger district, they would have to appoint local committees for certain local work, whose members would include those who are not guardians?—It might be done in that way, but that is not my idea of doing it—if I may explain my idea.

36714. Pray do?—I think the board of guardians might well be less in number than they are in some unions—not in all unions, because there is no general rule. The numbers are fixed now by the county councils and the county borough councils. Some county councils fix a small number and some a large number. In my own union they have fixed a large number. I think a small number of guardians for management purposes is better, supplemented for out-relief purposes by some such society as the Guild of Help, or by what is known as the Elberfeld system.

36715. A society that would have its eye on the prevention of pauperism?—Yes, that is what I mean.

36716. Which should be working side by side with the local administration of the guardians?—Yes.

36717. But if several unions should be united in one, the total number of guardians necessary would be probably less than the aggregate of the existing unions?—Yes, if they were united for all purposes; but I do not think they could be.

36718. So far as the number of guardians should be reduced, you would think it necessary to supplement their action by local committees of some kind?—Yes.

36719. In paragraph 12 you speak of the breach in continuity by the fact of a relieving officer performing his duties and there being no consistent record of the information he obtains. Have you got the case paper system at Bolton?—Yes.

36720. Would that not give you a record?—We had not the case paper system at Bolton at the time to which that paragraph refers. I was giving there an instance where it would have been useful if we had been in possession of it.

36721. The information that would be gathered by the case-paper system would be supplemented by the information gathered by the Guild of Help, or whatever this other organisation was?—Yes.

36722. In Paragraph 15 you speak of the proceedings against relatives being cumbersome and expensive, and you say that often the relatives are without goods on which to distrain. If they are so poor as to be without goods on which to distrain, is there much hope of getting anything out of them in any case?—Yes. You see, some of those relatives get a great deal of money, but they spend it much more freely than middle-class people spend their money. very often they live in apartments, or they live with some relatives, and they have no furniture of their own; but they have certainly enough money to contribute towards their relative's maintenance.

36723. Although they have really nothing to show?—Although they have nothing to show and nothing to distrain upon.

36724. Do they do that merely because it is their way of life, or on purpose, in order not to be shot at?—It is their way of life. All-ged thriftlessness of single artisans.

36725. That is to me almost astonishing. Are they family people, married people, who live without homes?—No, they are single people.

36726. That is to say, an unmarried son who might be responsible would spend all his money week by week and have nothing whatever left?—Very often. In some cases they get a fair amount of money, but they have no furniture that is really worth selling.

36727. In such cases do you get an order for so much a week?—The first time the case goes to the court their earnings are proved, either by evidence of the foreman or by their own admission, and an order is made upon them to contribute. If they disobey the order, then the earnings since the order was made, say for three months, are proved again, to show that they have been able to obey the order if they would have done so. Then an order is made upon them to pay. If they do not obey that order, you have to go into court again for another order to distrain. You find they have no goods to distrain upon, and all the expenses has been wasted. That is my point.

36728. Is there any form of summary jurisdiction, or of collection of money, that would assist you?—There is imprisonment.

36729. But that is not available, is it?—Imprisonment is available, but then it is not satisfactory.

36730. (Mr. Bentham.) In speaking of the Bolton Guild of Help, when you say that it might supplement the work of the guardians, you do not mean by granting pecuniary assistance, do you?—No. The work of a guild of help in preventing pauperism.

36731. Do you find in Bolton that the City Guild of Help has been the means of preventing people sinking down to the level at which boards of guardians have to deal with them?—In the short time it has been in existence, yes.

36732. Then you have hope that it might assist materially in reducing pauperism?—Certainly it will. I am certain of that from what I have seen already of it.

36733. With regard to emigration, you suggest that guardians might have more liberty for dealing with the question. Have you ever found the Local Government Board refuse to sanction?—No. We have not done much on my board in this way, and I have never found the Local Government Board refuse. Proposed extended powers of emigration for guardians.

36734. Then what is the object in making this suggestion?—Only that I fail to see why one committee should not have the same power as another.

36735. The guardians have the same powers as the distress committees, have they not?—No, they have not. The guardians are elected by the ratepayers; but without referring to the mode of election, there are two authorities dealing with the poor, one dealing with them in the shape of a distress committee and the other as a board of guardians. And while one authority, the distress committee, may emigrate families to Canada or other places, the other authority, the board of guardians, may not do it without sending a long history of the case to the Local Government Board, and waiting till they sanction it. I fail to see why one should have the authority and not the other.

36736. You yourself personally have not experienced any disadvantage from that arrangement, or from any delay on the part of the Local Government Board in sanctioning, have you?—No. I am not making any complaint at all about it.

36737. Speaking generally, would you give more liberty to boards of guardians in dealing with the various classes of cases that come under their notice; or would you place more power in the hands of the Local Government Board over boards of guardians?—I think in some cases Need to increase discretionary powers of Guardians

Size of boards of guardians.

Value of voluntary organisations co-operating with guardians as to out-relief.

Advantage of case-paper system.

Need for simpler process of recovering maintenance from relatives.

Mr. Henry
I. Cooper.

15 Jan. 1907.

I should give the board of guardians, or whatever authority is distributing the relief, more latitude. I am not able to speak as to the powers required by the Local Government Board.

36738. In what direction would you give them more latitude?—In regard to Clause 9 I should give them the same power in emigration as the distress committees have. There are other little things I cannot remember just now. There are a good many small matters in which I think the approval of the Local Government Board might be dispensed with.

Need of Government
Audit of Poor
Law accounts.

36739. You do not say anything in your statement about the audit?—No; that is not a question which I thought it necessary to mention.

36740. Have you no observations to make on it?—No; I think the audit is very necessary.

Bolton
method of dealing with
children.

36741. Will you tell us how the children are dealt with when an application is made by a man with a family. An order, say, has been given for the house, but what happens next, in those cases where the order for the workhouse has been accepted?—If they go in, the children go to the cottage homes and are sent to the public elementary school.

36742. Does that mean that the children do not go into the workhouse at all?—The cottage homes adjoin the workhouse and are administered from the workhouse, but they are inside a separate boundary wall, so really the children are separated from the able-bodied and infirm adults. But it is not a separate system of cottage homes away from the workhouse; it is within a stone's-throw of the workhouse.

36743. They do not go into the workhouse for a probationary period, do they?—No.

Bolton Guild of Help and its work.

36744. (Miss Hill.) With regard to the City Guild of Help, is there an interchange of cases between them and the board of guardians?—Between the Guild of Help and the relieving officers, yes, daily.

36745. So that cases in which there is a hope that they might be kept off the Poor Law are referred to the Guild of Help?—That is it.

36746. Have you found that very helpful?—Very.

36747. The Guild does not, I gather, take any part in anything that is done within the institutions?—That is so.

36748. They do not visit, then, the schools, or the infirm wards, or anything of that kind?—Not as a member of the Guild of Help. There may be some members of the Guild who are on the Brabazon committees or some of the other committees who visit the institutions; but they do not visit as members of the Guild of Help.

36749. Have you a good number of visitors who are visiting the institutions?—Yes.

36750. And you have found no friction or difficulty with the officials and others in consequence?—None at all.

36751. Do they welcome them?—Certainly.

36752. That is a very important thing to get done, is it not?—I think so.

Periodical
"call-over" of relief
cases.

36753. The amount of personal work which is wanted in institutions can hardly be supplied by the guardians themselves, because they have too many administrative duties to perform?—Yes; it is impossible for them to do it all.

36754. Are these visitors at all instrumental in considering whether cases can be taken out of those institutions? Have you any call-over which they can attend, or anything of that kind?—No. The relief committee have a call-over of the indoor cases every twelve months, and of the outdoor cases every three months.

36755. Do any representatives of the Guild of Help or any other charitable agencies meet the relief committee when they are reconsidering cases?—They have not done so up to now. The Guild of Help has only been established since last April. They have about 690 or more cases to deal with, I think, and they have about 300 or 400 helpers.

The Bolton
Queen Street
Mission and its effect on pauperism.

36756. (Mr. Phelps.) When we were at Bolton we went over a large institution connected with the Queen Street Mission; do you know anything of the working of that?—Yes, I know a little of it.

36757. Do you think that that particular mission helps you in the Poor Law?—No, I do not think so.

36758. Do you think it attracts people to the town who become paupers afterwards?—Yes, I think it does.

36759. In what way?—I will give you an instance that came under my notice, some two years ago I think it was, of a proceeding that took place at this mission on a Sunday evening. My attention was called to it by the master of the casual wards. They supply buns and coffee to any people who will attend their meetings and listen to the preaching that takes place, irrespective of whether those people belong to Bolton or elsewhere. Upon this particular night a certain number of tramps had come into the town—and this was only one Sunday night out of a good many—and immediately after they had been supplied with these buns and coffee they all went into the casual ward. The tramp-wardmaster pointed out to me the numbers that were going in as a consequence. Nothing spreads faster among the casual poor than the knowledge of any help of that kind.

36760. The casual ward is next door to the mission, I think?—Yes, it is.

36761. I can quite understand what you say in that connection; but has the Queen Street Mission done anything to meet the unemployed question in Bolton?—I do not think so, beyond their chip-cutting place.

36762. They employ a good many people, do they not?—Yes. I forget the number, I think it does give some little help.

36763. Has your distress committee worked with the Queen Street Mission at all?—No.

36764. I see that in two or three cases you recommend, or would you be in favour of compulsory powers being given to guardians. That is quite a new departure in the Poor Law, is it not?—Over charities, do you mean?

36765. No, I am on quite a different topic. I am referring to compulsory powers, for instance, with regard to the feeble-minded women who come in to be confined?—I think it is desirable to have them in those cases.

36766. You recommend it with regard to those women?—Yes, I do.

36767. What safeguards would you propose?—I should not give the power to a board of guardians to detain anybody, but I should give power in this way—that they might apply to the court and the case might be properly laid before the court, and if the court concluded upon the evidence that it was a case of a woman who was likely to suffer through not being taken care of, then the court might order her detention for a limited period. I think that would be a great help to that class of women.

36768. What kind of evidence do you think the court ought to require in a case of that sort?—Evidence of past life.

36769. With regard to the feeble-mindedness of the woman?—Medical evidence.

36770. Then it would practically be the medical evidence and the evidence of the relieving officer?—Yes; with such other evidence of past life as might be thought desirable.

36771. (Mr. Booth.) You say there should be detention for a limited period; what kind of limit would you put upon it? I should leave that to the discretion of the court. But a great deal would depend upon the particular case, would it not and upon the medical evidence.

36772. (Mr. Phelps.) You do not mean until they are past the child-bearing period?—No, I should not limit the period like that; I should say a period of probation.

36773. Have you ever considered the question of detaining feeble-minded women permanently?—Yes, I have considered it; but there is such a wide difference between women who are called feeble-minded. A good many people are thought to be feeble-minded, but not even medical opinion can always distinguish between one case and another. One woman may be extremely feeble-minded and another may be only slightly so.

36774. Then do you think it would be very difficult to classify people in that way?—Very.

The Bolton
Queen Street
Mission and its effect on pauperism.

Proposal for compulsory power to detain unmarried mothers in workhouse and its difficulties.

Proposal to give guardians power to adopt the children of vagrants and effect thereof in increasing number of chargeable children.

36775. With regard to the children of vagrants, do think it would be a good thing if the guardians had any powers of detention there?—I think it has been decided that the Act of 1899 does not apply to vagrants, but I think that it might be extended so as to apply to vagrants. That is the Act empowering a board of guardians to take away children from their parents and assume the control of them themselves.

36776. To adopt the children, in fact?—Yes.

36777. You see, of course, the reason why it would not apply to vagrants?—Yes, on account of their settlement.

36778. It would not be practicable to enforce it, at any rate it would be very difficult for guardians to enforce it and to adopt those children?—They do not adopt them and they will not, because they do not belong to their particular place.

36779. How would you get over that difficulty?—I should remove them to their place of settlement.

36780. In the case of a vagrant is that possible?—If they adopt, then the child becomes chargeable and you remove the child to the place of settlement and transfer the power of control to the other board.

36781. Would you be prepared to make that a national charge?—No, I do not think so.

36782. The settlement of a vagrant is a most difficult thing to determine, is it not?—There is always the birth settlement.

36783. Then you do not think the difficulties in the way of doing that would practically make the powers a dead letter?—No, I do not think so. I think it is worth trying.

36784. You do not think it would be worth while to make the maintenance of such children a national charge, do you?—It might be done in that way, but I do not see why exception should be made in the case of those children.

36785. I only suggested it because of the difficulty of settlement?—There would be a difficulty about the settlement, but still it would not be very much more difficult than a great many cases that we already have.

36786. It has been represented that if steps of that kind were taken, the number of children who would become so chargeable would increase very largely; do you think that would be so?—I do not think it would in the end, but it might be so at first, because they would not realise it. I think a good many parents would do a good deal to remedy their ways rather than lose their children.

36787. You do not think there is a very large class of people who are only too anxious to get rid of their children?—No.

36788. (Mr. Booth.) On the other hand, those who acquire children in order to make use of them, would lose the benefit of that if they were to be taken from them?—Yes, it would have a beneficial effect in that way instantly.

36789. I suppose there are a considerable number of vagrants who go with people who are not their parents?—Yes.

36790. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you ever sent to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children in the case of vagrant children?—Yes, very often.

36791. With good results?—Yes.

36792. Do you work cordially with them?—Yes. Their inspector keeps a register at my office.

36793. And your porter or someone would inform the inspector?—The superintendent of the tramp ward would.

36794. And their inspector would be ready for them when they came out?—Yes.

36795. To follow up a question which Mr. Bentham asked, I do not quite understand how you determine whether a child is to be boarded-out in the union, or go to your cottage homes?—In the first instance, the indoor cases go to the cottage homes, and then the boarding-out committee go there and select the children from the cottage homes for boarding-out.

36796. At what age does the boarding-out begin?—At two up to about twelve.

36797. Do you look forward to having the older children in the cottage homes, or to the older children being boarded out?—We make no distinction in that way.

36798. You do not distinguish them on those lines then? Mr. Henry I. Cooper.

36799. On what grounds do the committee select the child for boarding-out?—They generally select the orphan and deserted children. 15 Jan. 1907.

36800. Leaving the ins-and-outs, or the children whose parents are in the house, in the cottage homes?—Yes; but they take also those children whose parents have, on account of immorality, been determined to be unfit to have control over them.

36801. And they board those out within the union?—Yes.

36802. Do you think on the whole that that is a good system?—It has acted very well with us.

36803. How are they inspected?—By the boarding-out committee. Inspection of boarded-out children.

36804. How is your boarding-out committee constituted?—It is constituted partly of members of the board of guardians, and partly of other persons.

36805. Is it a statutory committee or not?—It is a committee appointed by the Local Government Board.

36806. Does the relieving officer also visit the children?—No, never. We are rather exceptionally well situated in that respect, because a lady, Miss Barlow, who has taken a great interest in these children, acts as secretary to the boarding-out committee, and she spends a great deal of her own time and money upon the children; otherwise we should not be able to do it without appointing officials for it.

36807. Then practically she discharges all those duties?—She does. We have 102 or more children boarded-out in that way.

36808. On the whole, you are satisfied with it, are you?—Yes. Comparative merits of cottage homes and boarding-out for children.

36809. How long has that system been working?—Ten years.

36810. And of course the results are now before you?—Yes, we get an annual report.

36811. Would you be inclined to draw any distinction between boarding-out and cottage homes in regard to the effects, the results?—I should prefer boarding-out wherever it can be done.

36812. You think, on the whole, it has worked better than cottage homes?—Certainly.

36813. Your cottage homes, if I remember aright, are practically within the walls of the workhouse?—They are within the boundary of the workhouse land, but there is a separate boundary wall between them, and the workhouse itself. Details of Bolton cottage homes for children.

36814. Do the children mix with the outer world?—Yes, now they do. Since 1902 we have sent them to the public elementary schools.

36815. And there they mix with other children?—Yes.

36816. Is there any industrial training given to them?—No, not now. We have a carpenter, and he teaches them some wood-cutting and wood carving, and that sort of thing, but only to keep them occupied out of school. It is not really industrial training, it is simply a pastime.

36817. What do most of your boys do when they go out?—We send them out to farms, and the girls go as servants generally. Difficulties as to apprenticing Poor Law boys.

36818. Do you apprentice any?—We have apprenticed some.

36819. Do you find that answer?—It did not answer very well.

36820. Was there difficulty about the home?—There was a difficulty about the home. Since the apprenticeship laws were made, the circumstances have become very different. Now, the work is in large factories and in large places—not in places where the child can reside with the master. Therefore, we have a difficulty in finding the homes; although we have recently apprenticed a boy out to a builder in Bolton, and he is going on very satisfactorily.

36821. What about the girls?—We send the girls out to service. Poor Law girls trained for service.

Co-operation of guardians with Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

Method of dealing with children at Bolton.

Mr. Henry
I. Cooper.

15 Jan. 1907.

Bolton Poor
Law Infirmary and question of its attractiveness.

Decreased deterrence of Poor Law
infirmary.

Need to dissociate infirmary from
workhouse.
Disfranchisement and
question of its effect as a deterrent to medical relief.

Need to give persons power to recover maintenance from relatives before becoming chargeable.

36822. Are they trained for service before they go?—The Miss Barlow that I have mentioned, has, with some other ladies, a training home.

36823. They would be there for how long—twelve months?—About twelve or eighteen months.

36824. And the results there are quite satisfactory you say?—She finds them places and they get very good places.

36825. We were very much struck at Bolton with the infirmary, which is attached to your workhouse; do you find that there has been an increase in the number of people who have come for indoor medical relief?—It may have increased the number that the guardians have sent there.

36826. How do the guardians send them there?—By the relief committees. I think you sat with one of the relief committees; they are sent from that meeting.

36827. That is to say, a person would come and ask for medical relief, and they would offer him the infirmary?—In certain cases.

36828. And in most cases it would be accepted?—It would very often be accepted.

36829. Do you have a very large number of people coming now into the workhouse infirmary, just as they would go to a hospital?—A larger number now come than used to be the case in my time.

36830. Do you think that number will grow?—Yes, I do think so, because the facilities for treating them and getting them better more quickly are so much greater in a hospital or an infirmary than they are in their own homes, even if they are attended at home by the district medical officer.

36831. On the whole, do you think that is a desirable trend of things?—I think so, because they get better much more quickly, and so they are able to get back to their work.

36832. Do you think it would be a good thing if the infirmary was dissociated from the workhouse?—Yes, I do.

36833. And if the disqualification of disfranchisement were removed?—I have often thought of the question of disfranchisement. I think it is rather hard on people that they should be disfranchised on account of sickness.

36834. And you do not think the effects would be bad if that disqualification were to be removed?—No, I do not think so.

36835. You do not think it would increase the numbers very much that come to the infirmary?—No, I do not.

36836. You do not think people are deterred now by it from coming to the infirmary?—No. There is the check of the relief committees. We had a case the other day where they would not send a case. They do not send every case to the infirmary.

36837. Do you have some cases brought in directly now?—Sudden cases, yes.

36838. I see with regard to the charges on relatives you object to the expensiveness of the present procedure; do you think it would be a good thing if people could take their relatives straight to the magistrates on their own initiative without coming to the guardians?—Yes.

36839. Do you think that could be managed?—It used to be the case that wives had to go to the guardians before they could get an order on their husbands, and the change has been found to be very beneficial in those cases where the wife now is allowed to take her own proceedings. There was a Bill, I believe, brought in some time ago to enable relatives to take their own proceedings, but it was either dropped or thrown out, I forget which.

36840. Do you think a procedure could be formulated which would allow of that?—Yes. A great many cases would never apply for relief at all, because if a parent had the power to go to the court to ask for an order to be made upon children who were well able to contribute, it would be found that the children would never let it get to that point, but that they would contribute before. Now, they know that the parent must come to the board of guardians before they can be made to pay anything towards their parent's maintenance, and therefore they really have the whip hand, and if they are so inclined, they treat their parent badly.

36841. Do you think that the publicity of the proceedings would help in that direction?—Yes.

36842. Do you find that a great deal of your time is taken up with what I may call attempts to compel a single member of a family to contribute? The case I have in my mind is a family of four sons, who are all able to contribute, but one refused and the other three then refused because the fourth had, and so the case had to come before the board of guardians. Do you find a great deal of your time taken up with cases of that sort?—We have a great many cases of that kind.

36843. Does your board always offer the house in those cases?—Not always.

36844. Do you think that is a wise proceeding?—Often more than not they do offer the house, but there are occasions where they give the relief, and when they give the relief, or even if the parent takes the offer of the house, proceedings are taken against the whole four relatives, although three of them are willing to contribute.

36845. Have you ever followed up any of the cases in which the house was offered, and seen what the result has been?—Yes.

36846. Has it generally been salutary?—Very often they do not go in, but they come to an arrangement between themselves.

36847. That is to say, the offer of the house is a real deterrent in that case?—Yes, very often.

36848. It is really effective?—Yes.

36849. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you ever notify the sons, prior to giving the relief, that an application has been made?—Always.

36850. In order to give them the opportunity of paying direct without becoming chargeable?—Yes, we always do that.

36851. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to Bolton, is there a hospital there as well, or a Royal Infirmary, or anything of that kind?—Yes, there is an infirmary.

36852. If you separated the present Poor Law infirmary from the Poor Law, would you bring it into the position of a kind of second hospital; is that your idea?—I think Poor Law hospitals or infirmaries are becoming that generally now in large towns.

36853. What is the number that you would deal with in your infirmary, as compared with the number that would be dealt with in the hospitals?—The Bolton infirmary has about 150 beds and we have 550.

36854. Would you take in all the infirm cases, the sick, and the aged, as well as the acute cases?—Yes.

36855. Speaking of the Poor Law infirmary, you have relief committees, and you said, I think, to Mr. Phelps, that the orders which were given for the infirmary arose out of the work of the relief committees, so that they went from there to the Poor Law hospital?—Yes.

36856. Do you find that that is a check on admissions to the Poor Law hospital?—Yes. It is a check in the ordinary way on granting relief at all. It is just the same check as there is on outdoor relief, because the committee say whether it should be given or not. Of course in urgent cases the relieving officer sends the case in direct.

36857. If you made your Poor Law hospital a general hospital for the place, you would give up that check, would you not?—I do not mean that. When I answered Mr. Phelps's question, I meant to say that we should separate the hospital from the workhouse proper.

36858. (Mr. Bentham.) You meant merely a separate administration?—Yes, but it would still be a Poor Law hospital.

36859. (Mr. Loch.) I did not understand it so; I thought you meant making it entirely a separate institution? No, it was the separate administration I was thinking of.

36860. Then under those terms you would keep it much as it is?—Yes, just the same.

36861. With regard to vagrants, do you think that vagrancy might be a county charge, or would you prefer leaving it as it is?—I do not know that the charge would Effect of an offer of indoor relief when relatives refuse to contribute to maintenance.

Poor Law Hospitals as General Hospitals.

Comparative size of Bolton Poor Law and voluntary hospitals.

The check of the guardians upon indoor medical relief.

Need to dissociate Poor Law Infirmary from the workhouse.

The best area of chargeability for vagrants.

greatly matter. Some towns or places would benefit, others would not; but probably it would be fairer on the whole of the towns in the county to make it a county charge, for this reason, that some towns have more advantages for that class of paupers than others, and they go there, and so a greater charge comes upon that town naturally; whereas if it were made a county charge, every town and place would bear its own proportion.

36862. With regard to bastardy cases, do you find that in the majority of instances you actually make the putative father pay, or does he get off?—He gets off. I do not mean that he gets off when we manage to get hold of him. We get the order certainly, but then when we get an order he goes away, and we do not get any money from him.

36863. Is there any suggestion you can make for meeting that difficulty?—Yes, I should make a punishment applicable, I should also make it the law that we could proceed against him as soon as the mother goes into the workhouse to be confined, and that we should not be compelled to wait. We are not compelled now to wait until the child is born, but then we cannot make any order upon him for the maintenance of the mother, only for the maintenance of the child, although we may keep the mother for three months at the very least before we take any proceedings at all.

36864. Do you see any difficulty in the procedure that would follow if the law were altered so as to allow you, directly the mother came, to give notice at any rate, and so to hold the case in your hands from the time of her applying for relief?—No, I do not see any difficulty in it.

36865. That would enable you to deal with the bulk of the cases, would it not?—We should get better results from the proceedings if we were able to take proceedings so quickly as that, certainly. A great many of these men know all about it, and they make their arrangements with the woman. She goes into the workhouse, and we are put to all the expense between the birth of the child and the woman going in; and then she goes out and we cannot get a penny. If we could prosecute as soon as the woman goes in, we should stop a great many of those cases.

36866. Taking the cases that you refer to in paragraph 14, how long does a case against the relatives of a pauper in respect to his maintenance usually take before the County Petty Sessions Court?—Do you mean in the hearing of the case?

36867. In all the various proceedings until it is finally done with?—We can take out a summons and get an order within seven days.

36868. And then the question of non-payment arises?—Yes.

36869. How long does that hold?—We could go for non-payment in a month, if we liked, but as a rule we go at the end of three months. That is what the Court asks us to do.

36870. That is another three months spent?—Yes, three months is spent and we get nothing.

36871. And then when it comes to distraining there is nothing to distrain on?—Yes.

36872. Would your suggestion be to proceed as under the Bastardy Acts?—There should be similar proceedings allowed in these cases. The provisions of those Acts have been extended to other cases. Of course the cases we are talking about now are only exceptional, and they do not form the majority. In a good many of the cases we get the money week by week, and there is no difficulty at all. I am speaking now of cases where there is a determination on the part of the relative not to contribute, although he is well able to contribute. There are many of those cases.

36873. Do you find your Church Army Home of service in dealing with the able-bodied cases?—Yes.

36874. You refer to them, do you?—They are referred to by the relieving officers in some cases; but they cannot take a great number, they can only take a few.

36875. Have you ever thought whether there should be some kind of control as to the establishment of institutions which tend to create pauperism, as some of these shelter institutions do?—Yes. In paragraph 16 of my Statement I have mentioned this society. All societies that deal with the poor in any shape or form ought to be under control.

36876. And ought to have a set and recognised position?—Yes, I think so.

36877. Have you ever thought how that might be realised?—By registration.

36878. The same as you would do in the case of friendly societies?—Yes, and then there should be rules.

36879. And the rules should be passed by whom?—By the governing body.

36880. By the governing body of the Society, do you mean?—No, by the governing body administering the relief, I should say, or by the authority of some larger area.

36881. You mean by the governing body of the town area or borough area?—Of the Union. I say it on this ground, that if a society collected money from the public for distribution amongst the poor, or amongst such people as they may consider are poor, that money ought to be distributed on a sound basis and after very careful inquiry, otherwise the society which does it is creating paupers. I have known cases of that kind that have arisen, and they cause me to speak in this way.

36882. Would you say the same with regard to the endowed charities—that they ought to be brought under the same procedure?—Not quite, because those charities are very often for a certain purpose, and the money is given for certain cases. Of course there are various kinds of endowed charities, but I think now there is a list of all of them in a Government paper. If those charities collected money from the public to make up the endowment, then I think they ought to come within the same category.

36883. Are there large sums, do you think, paid for the pauper funerals to which you refer in paragraph 7 of your statement?—Sometimes, yes.

36884. You think, therefore, there is justification in fact for this proposed change of paying over the money to the guardians?—Yes, I do. We have a great many instances. I had three cases at one time brought under my notice in our workhouse, and we could not get a penny.

36885. Would it be, as far as you know, the opinion generally of Clerks that this is a question to be dealt with?—From what conversation I have had with them yes.

36886. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you emigrate cases much in your union?—We used to do. Some years ago we emigrated some children to Canada, but we were never able to get any satisfactory reports of them, so we ceased emigrating till last year, when we emigrated a youth of about nineteen or twenty, I think he would be.

36887. I think your cases were before the present arrangement was in force?—Yes, they were about 1893 and 1894, I think.

36888. Do you ever emigrate adults?—We have only emigrated this one, but the distress committee last year emigrated some forty.

36889. Is there not some difference, do you not think between emigrating adults and emigrating children?—Yes.

36890. Is there not some ground for saying that the sanction of the Local Government Board might be desirable in the case of children, although it might not be necessary in the case of adults?—Possibly, but then in the case of children you have to go to the court for your authority.

36891. It is the sanction of the Local Government Board, is it not, that makes sure that that is done; it is a guarantee that the law is complied with, is it not?—Undoubtedly.

36892. Is there not some advantage in that for the children?—Possibly; although the auditor would be able to check it, would he not?

36893. He would if it was brought to his knowledge, no doubt, but that would be after the children had gone, would it not?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. Henry I. Cooper.

15 Jan. 1907.

Need for registration and control of unendowed charitable societies.

Paupers' burial insurances appropriated by relatives.

Question of need of Local Government Board sanction to emigration of paupers by guardians.

Mr. Henry I. Cooper. 36894. Do you have many settlement and removal cases?—Yes.

15 Jan. 1907. 36895. Have you considered at all whether it would be desirable to abolish the law of settlement, or to make an alteration in the law so as to practically abolish it?—In my opinion it would not generally make much difference, but of course in places like Liverpool and other seaport towns it would. I have considered it to that extent. Probably, in my own union, there would be a slight loss to us, but not an appreciable loss.

36896. Your people would be rather pleased perhaps to see certain things done in inland places, while treating the seaport places rather exceptionally in this respect?—Yes. I think it might be abolished in inland unions.

Nature of employment found for Poor Law children, factory work, etc. 36897. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the employments that you have obtained for your pauper children when they come of age for employment, you mentioned farm work for the boys and domestic service for the girls, I think?—Yes.

36898. You are in the neighbourhood of factory districts; does factory work not come in for either sex?—Yes, and we have sent some for factory work; but there is rather a difficulty about it—the same difficulty that we experienced in dealing with apprentices. There is a difficulty in finding a suitable home for a boy whilst he is going to the factory.

36899. On the farms they live with the farmer, do they not?—Yes.

36900. And learn the work in connection with their daily life?—Yes.

36901. It is the same with the girls and domestic service?—Yes.

36902. In the south of England a very large proportion of the boys go into the Army on the musical side as bands boys; having in the schools got a very thorough musical training, there seems to be an easy opening for them in that direction. Has that happened with you?—No.

36903. The Navy also in the south of England seems to offer a considerable opening for these boys; do you send any boys to the training ships?—We do; we send them to the “Indefatigable.”

36904. Both for the Navy and for the mercantile service there is a certain number of boys who could go into sea work?—Yes, but of course they have to be up to the physical standard.

36905. In every case I take it, you seek employment for them where they will get a home as well as work?—Yes, if possible. As I mentioned, we have cases where we have found a suitable home and been able to send them to a mill.

36906. Are the earnings of the young people in the mills sufficient to keep them if they have a home?—They are not to begin with, and that is where we have a difficulty. In this case that I mentioned, the people with whom they went to reside maintained them without relief until they began to earn something, and that was for a period of about three months, I think.

36907. Until then it was really all learning?—Yes.

36908. (Mr. Phelps.) Would you wish to see your Board have power to keep the children in the schools while they went out in the day to a mill learning a trade? Difficulty as—No, not in the schools I think; but I think they might have power to pay the money for apartments. Poor Law working boys.

36909. To board them out in fact?—To board them out while they went into the mill.

36910. That is, while they were learning the trade?—Yes.

36911. (Mr. Booth.) When they have learned something, after the first three to six months are the earnings pretty good?—They are quite sufficient.

36912. So that it is only a question of bridging over an interval?—That is all.

36913. (Mr. Bentham.) Really you have power to do that now, have you not?—I think so, with the sanction of the Local Government Board; but it is in the shape of relief you know, and we do not like to do it.

36914. It need not be paid through the relieving officer though?—Then how would you pay it?

36915. It might be paid by the clerk direct to the foster-mother with whom the child is residing.—There would have to be an exceptional sanction of the Local Government Board then, I do not know whether they would sanction that or not; we have never asked for that.

36916. Are you not aware that it is done in many places?—No. As I say, we have not had many instances of the kind, but where we had one the people were kind enough to take the children and keep them until they earned sufficient.

36917. (Mr. Booth.) It cannot be done by loan in any way, can it?—No, it cannot be done on loan.

36918. Because it is not recoverable?—That is so.

36919. (Mr. Gardiner.) Would you like to detain your girls longer than you do now before sending them out to service?—No, I do not think so, because we are well situated with the training home for servants, which is under some of our own lady guardians and the secretary of the boarding-out committee. Question of best age for sending Poor Law girls out to service.

36920. Then you have a training home in Bolton?—Yes.

36921. Do you pay for them there?—Yes; we pay 5s. a week.

36922. Up to what age do they stay in the training home?—We pay for them until they are fourteen, but they keep the girls longer at their own expense.

36923. Do you not think it is a mistake to send girls out to service so young as fourteen?—They do not send them out at fourteen.

36924. You cannot get them started properly at that age, can you?—No, but we cannot pay for them longer than fourteen. It is a registered home, and it is only registered up to fourteen, I think.

36925. But it might be registered up to sixteen?—Yes, it might. They do keep them until they are sixteen, and the results have been good.

36926. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you think it would be an advantage to have the time extended to sixteen?—Yes, it would.

Dr. ARNOLD W. W. LEA, called; and Examined.

Dr. A. W. W. Lea. 36927. (Mr. Booth.) You have kindly offered to give us some evidence, on medical relief, particularly in connection with the Manchester Union; would you please tell us what your experience has been?—My experience is mainly that of a hospital surgeon. I am not in any way connected with the Poor Law. I am a Member of the Committee of the Corporation of Manchester for administering the Midwives Act of 1902.

36928. We have found that the words “hospital” and “infirmary” are used in a very mixed way; you are now referring to voluntary hospitals?—Yes.

36929. So that you come in contact with the medical needs of the population?—Yes.

36930. But not specially through the Poor Law, or in fact not through the Poor Law at all?—That is so.

36931. I believe you have prepared for us a short statement, which if you will hand in, we shall be glad to take as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

(a) Assistance given from the Rates.

1. At present, this is only given by the Poor Law medical officers. It is of special importance that they should be allowed to order food, and that it should be given freely in cases where needed. District medical officers should be allowed to order food, and should not provide drugs, etc.

If outdoor medical attendance is provided all drugs and appliances should be supplied by the authorities and not at the cost of the medical officer.

2. In Manchester, during the last year, under the new Midwives Act, the supervising committee of the corporation, of which I am a co-opted member, have obtained a grant from the rates for the provision of medical attendance to poor women in labour. The Corporation pays for medical assistance in all cases where the income does not exceed a certain limit. This has been found of great value.

Municipal midwifery and medical assistance to the poor of Manchester.

(b) and (c). Assistance given to Charitable Funds.

Inadequacy of Manchester Voluntary Hospital accommodation and proposal to make patients' pay.

3. My experience is mainly limited to surgical assistance given in hospitals. The hospital accommodation in Manchester and elsewhere, is inadequate, and one reason of this is, that comparatively few people are able to afford the expense of surgical treatment at home. The result is that the vast majority of the artisan population occupy the beds in hospitals, and do not contribute adequately towards their maintenance.

4. The average cost of a patient per bed in hospital varies from £50 to £60 per annum, and many patients could afford to pay £1 a week. This, if adopted more extensively, would relieve the financial strain on the hospitals very much, especially as many of these patients are not proper subjects for charitable relief.

Need of enquiry into financial position of applicants to Voluntary Hospitals.

5. Enquiry as to financial position of patients applying at hospital. A special enquiry officer should be appointed at each hospital.

Out-Patients.

6. The decision as to suitability or otherwise of treatment being undertaken must depend upon—

- (1) The financial report.
- (2) The medical aspect of the applicant.

The criterion of suitability for Voluntary Hospital treatment.

7. Decision must ultimately rest with the medical officer.

Voluntary Hospital Medical Officers should have power to order food for out-patients.

Many out-patients are in urgent need of food and home nursing. At present hospitals only supply medicines. It would be desirable for medical officers of recognised hospitals to be able to order food through the Relieving officers in certain cases.

In-patients.

Need of investigation of and contributions from Voluntary Hospital in-patients.

8. These patients should be visited by the hospital enquiry officer before admission or immediately afterwards, and a report of their financial position obtained.

Need of investigation of and contributions from Voluntary Hospital in-patients.

9. Suitable contributions may be legitimately demanded.

Paying Hospitals.

10. Self-supporting paying wards might be attached to each hospital for people with incomes of £2 to £3 per week who are unable to afford the expense of private nursing and operations. At present these individuals occupy many beds to the exclusion of deserving poor.

Proposed paying wards for all Voluntary Hospitals. Provident Convalescent Homes for work-people. Proposal for Friendly Societies to include Hospital treatment in their benefits.

In Manchester a scheme of convalescent homes for work-people has been adopted which will be self-supporting. I should advocate that this system be extended in the form of Provident hospitals. A payment of £1 per week would ensure these being almost self-supporting. Friendly societies might adopt a system of insurance to pay for medical and surgical hospital treatment as in Germany.

11. This system is in extensive use in America and on the Continent.

Rate-aid to Hospitals.

Conditions of rate-aid to Voluntary Hospitals.

12. This could only be given to hospitals willing to accept the conditions laid down by a "hospital board" under municipal control.

Poor Law Hospitals.

13. These hospitals provide for a large number of chronic cases, which at present are crowded out of the hospitals maintained by charity.

Visiting Medical Staff for Poor Law Hospitals. Poor Law hospitals should be open to medical students.

14. It is very desirable that visiting physicians and surgeons should be appointed generally, in large cities to provide the best medical and surgical skill available.

15. In Manchester physicians and surgeons are appointed to visit the institutions daily and to supervise the treatment of the resident staff.

16. I am of opinion that these institutions should be available for the instruction of medical students under certain conditions.

Hospitals and Public Health.

17. The following diseases should be under municipal hospital control.

1. Acute infectious diseases.
2. Phthisis.
3. Puerperal fever.

18. With reference to puerperal fever I am of opinion that Special Municipal Hospitals should be provided in all large centres of population.

19. This disease is very fatal—

- (a) Unless efficiently treated from the first.
- (b) It cannot be treated in the homes of the poor.
- (c) Expert advice should be available.

36932. (Mr. Booth.) How does the subject suggest itself to you? Do you think that the Poor Law work with regard to medical relief might be left entirely in the hands of the other authorities, and not be mixed up with Poor Law relief at all?—I think the present system of outdoor Poor Law medical relief by medical officers is very unsatisfactory in many ways, and the work is overlapped. Some hospitals have visiting medical officers, so that in some instances there is a great deal of overlapping.

Dr. A. W. W. Lea.
15 Jan. 1907.
Diseases needing Municipal Hospitals.

Overlapping between work of District Medical Officers and home-visiting Medical Officers of Voluntary Hospitals.

36933. The voluntary hospitals have their out-patients, have they not?—Yes, they have out-patients, and several of them have visiting medical officers also who visit poor persons in their homes, quite independently of the Poor Law Medical Officers. The Poor Law appoints doctors in each district to supply medicine to persons who can come to his surgery, and on receipt of an order to visit people at their own homes. On the other hand, the hospital and dispensary doctors can do nothing but supply medicines, whereas the Poor Law officer is allowed to order food, and to relieve in that way. It is desirable that out-door medical relief should be co-ordinated. One of the most essential things it seems to me is that the doctors should not be supposed to provide drugs and so on at their own cost, because that results in a very primitive kind of treatment in many cases. Out-door Poor Law medical relief should be given more on the lines of the dispensary with the drugs and appliances provided by the guardians. It is very difficult for voluntary hospitals to arrange any satisfactory system of visiting out-patients at their own homes.

36934. Would you say that these two systems, whether there be overlapping or not, would, between them, cover the whole ground?—They do not efficiently cover the ground.

36935. Could either system cover it?—Yes. The Poor Law system could, if it were extended and made efficient, that is, the Poor Law guardians should supply drugs and appliances, and, through an order on the relieving officer, the medical officer would supply milk, food and so on in a case where it was wanted. The hospitals never attempt that; the hospitals simply give drugs.

36936. If you had one system, do you contemplate the hospital undertaking that form of relief, so to speak?—No. My impression is that that form of relief would be much better taken up by an extension of the Poor Law. The growth of out-patients at hospitals is enormous.

36937. So you do not suggest that the Poor Law system should be absorbed and replaced entirely by a hospital system?—Not by a hospital system. It might be replaced by another authority possibly, but not by a voluntary hospital.

36938. Now let us consider some of these other possible authorities. First of all, dispensaries; have you got provident dispensaries or other forms of cheap dispensaries in Manchester?—We have got free dispensaries, that is dispensaries supported by charity, and Provident dispensaries.

36939. They also attack the same problem?—Yes; but the Provident dispensaries only attack the problem where the people pay; a weekly contribution is made by the people.

36940. They have to pay something?—Yes.

36941. But I presume it is partly charity in their case?—There is very little charity there; the Provident dis-

Deficiency in existing system of out-medical assistance for the poor. Proposal that Poor Law should undertake all non-institutional medical assistance of the poor.

Free and provident dispensaries, their functions and defects

Dr. A. W. W. Lea. dispensary is almost self-supporting. The members have to pay so many shillings when they enter, and it is practically a Friendly Society.

15 Jan. 1907.

Home visiting by medical officers of voluntary hospitals.

36942. In addition to these Provident dispensaries, there are also dispensaries of a more charitable character, I think?—There are also two or three free dispensaries, and three of the hospitals, at any rate, have visiting medical officers who visit people free.

36943. Do they do that in connection with the hospital?—Yes, in certain districts.

36944. That is a separate organisation, is it?—It is altogether separate.

Free and provident dispensaries and their defects.

36945. Although connected with the hospital?—Yes.

36946. Again, these charitable or provident institutions do not cover the whole ground either?—They do not cover it effectually. They give people a bottle of medicine, but they do not do much else. They take no supervision of their home surroundings, and no supervision of the general hygiene, and they never provide anything in the way of food and nourishment. It is very often much more food that is wanted, for instance, with the children. The cost of feeding an infant alone is three shillings a week, and the people cannot always afford it. They only get an attempt at food in the shape of cod-liver oil or some thing of that kind from the hospital. No hospital undertakes to provide any food or nourishment.

Municipal medical assistance of the poor and its functions.

36947. There is a fourth possibly which I suppose is working also in Manchester, and that is, the organisation of a municipal service through the medical officer of health?—Yes, but that is for another class of cases.

36948. And an entirely different class of cases?—Yes.

36949. Do they do any health visiting?—Yes. This is also carried out by the Ladies' Public Health Society.

36950. In some places that includes the giving of milk to children does it not?—I am not quite sure whether they give food in Manchester, but I do not think the health authority do. They give one or two simple ointments sometimes and a diarrhoea mixture in summer.

36951. That is, with a view of the prevention of disease?—Yes, they are dealing more with the prevention of disease.

36952. And above everything, they are preventing it spreading?—Yes. Any case of infectious disease is at once visited by the corporation authorities.

36953. So, to some extent, they have a distinct sphere from either the voluntary hospitals, the poor law infirmaries, or the provident dispensaries?—Yes. They limit themselves practically to infectious disease.

The question of extending medical out-relief and removing the pauper stigma.

36954. Is it your ideal that these various systems should be maintained, but should, in some way, be co-ordinated so as to cover the work; or do you wish to see one or other of them swallow the rest?—The Poor Law visiting seems to me, theoretically, to meet the case, only you must have the taint of pauperism absolutely removed, and it would have to be made much more thorough than it is now.

36955. Would you stop altogether the out-door work of the hospitals?—No, there would still be a considerable amount of out-door hospital relief in the case of the out-patients of hospitals.

36956. But that could be co-ordinated with it, could it not?—Yes, it could.

36957. Should it be co-ordinated with the provident dispensary work?—No. The provident dispensary would go on as it is, because that is practically self-supporting. Its patients are its members, and they pay for their medical treatment. The poorest of the artisan population do not go to the provident dispensaries at all.

36958. There should be some test or definition of destitution at the bottom of what Poor Law should do, should there not?—Yes.

36959. You say it must be separated altogether from the stigma of pauperism?—Yes, I do.

36960. You do not mean by that that there is to be no test evidently, because you say that the provident dispensary for which the people themselves pay is to be distinct?—The members of a provident dispensary are really members of a friendly society, and it is only members who can go to these provident dispensaries and be treated.

The other people have to go to the hospitals and get free advice there, or they can also go to the Poor Law infirmary.

The classes dealt with by provident dispensaries and voluntary hospitals respectively.

36961. Does that not necessarily differentiate the Poor Law patients from the people who go to where they have paid?—The only people who pay at all are the members of the provident dispensaries. Those dispensaries are self-supporting, and, as I say, are practically friendly societies. The poorest people never go to these provident dispensaries; they all come to the hospitals.

36962. You must have a practical definition of poverty connected with it, though you do not treat it exactly as pauperism?—That is so. The really poor are treated as out-patients of hospitals, and practically all hospitals now make inquiry. We have a financial statement of the patients' means, and if we find they are above a certain scale, our practice is to mark a card P.D. or some initials of that kind. That shows that they are able to pay, that they are above our scale, and that they ought to join a provident dispensary.

36963. Do you get people in rather a rough and ready haphazard fashion, or have you visitors who study the question?—The list of patients applying at the hospital is sent to the provident dispensary officials who visit and report within a few days to the hospital.

Co-operation between voluntary hospitals and provident dispensaries.

36964. Do you work with the provident dispensaries?—Yes, practically all the hospitals do that.

36965. I suppose immediate relief is given when it is required?—Immediate relief is always given when necessary, and the question whether the patient should be retained or not is left to the final discretion of the medical officer, because it may be a case requiring special treatment.

36966. If it is not a suitable case for the voluntary hospital, do you relegate it to the Poor Law?—No. We simply tell them that they must go elsewhere. We practically send none to the Poor Law at all; we work absolutely apart from them.

36967. Still, I gather that the solution of the difficulty is that the Poor Law should be so amplified and arranged that it fills up all the interstices, and does everything that is not done by the voluntary hospitals or the provident dispensaries?—Yes. Then, especially, the doctors of the Poor Law should be given a fixed salary, and should not be supposed to provide drugs and appliances for their patients, because by the present method the medical treatment has to be carried out very economically, for the doctor might very well spend all his salary in providing efficient medical treatment.

Proposal to extend medical out-relief; to provide drugs for district medical officers and to pay them by fees.

36968. Your own experience is with the voluntary hospitals, is it not?—Yes.

36969. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Your plan, if I understand it rightly, would be that the Poor Law should deal with cases of destitution as at present, but in an improved fashion?—Yes, that is so.

36970. Are you thinking of outdoor relief and indoor relief both, or are you only referring to outdoor relief?—I am only referring at present to outdoor relief. Indoor relief is a question for Poor Law infirmaries.

36971. How would you deal with Poor Law infirmaries according to your plan?—The Poor Law infirmaries have grown up into very large hospitals, and they now take a large number of chronic and acute cases. Their most significant feature it seems to me is that they have become largely surgical. The suggestion I should make is that these Poor Law infirmaries should have special surgeons and physicians appointed to them, and that they should not be left altogether in the hands of the resident superintendents.

Need of visiting medical staff for Poor Law Hospitals.

36972. You suggest that they should have, as other hospitals have, physicians and surgeons visiting?—They should have a visiting medical staff.

36973. Now, going to the out-door cases, I gather that your view is that the chief difficulty in regard to the dispensing of the drugs is that the district medical officer provides his own drugs?—Yes.

Difficulty as to Poor Law dispensaries in rural areas.

36974. Do you think that in a large district it would be practicable to have any other arrangement?—I think it would be practicable to have any other arrangement.

suppose the arrangement you contemplate would be a dispensary?—It would have to be a dispensary 36975. And the patient would then, would he not, have to send to the dispensary for the medicine which was prescribed by the doctor?—Yes.

36976. Would that not be rather difficult in the case of a country union?—I was only speaking from the point of view of a large city.

36977. If you apply the principle to a rural district, would there not be a difficulty, which does not exist, I admit, in the case of a large city?—Yes, I think there would.

36978. Then with regard to another point, namely the outdoor medical relief; you say, I understand, that you think there should be no stigma of pauperism attaching to that?—I do not think there should.

36979. Do you mean to carry that at all further than saying that a man should not be disqualified for voting for Members of Parliament because he has been in receipt of medical relief?—Yes. I think it is just the same as accepting charity; he accepts charity without any qualm.

36980. Of course you are aware that he is not disqualified now?—I know he is not.

36981. Have you something further in your mind as regards the stigma? Have you got it in your mind that the application to a Poor Law authority is in itself a stigma which you would wish to avoid?—I think it is a stigma to have to go to the relieving officer and get an order, but I do not quite see any practical way of avoiding that.

36982. Would you think it was desirable from that point of view to substitute some other authority for the guardians in the matter of the administration of medical relief?—I think the question whether it should be put under the Public Health Authority should be very seriously considered, though I am not prepared to make any absolute statement about it.

36983. Either way it might be easier, might it not, in the case of a large town than in the case of a rural district?—It would be much easier.

36984. (Mr. Loch.) As to your suggestions as to hospitals, have you not in your mind the proposals of the medical service which have been bruited about a good deal, namely, that every patient should pay according to his ability, and that in the hospital there would be accommodation provided according to certain scales, so that instead of having a large voluntary hospital, the hospital might be to a very large extent a pay hospital, or at any rate there might be pay accommodation available? Is that what is in your mind?—It is so certainly, from the point of view of a hospital surgeon.

36985. Then that would be practically a new system of medical relief, that is to say, it would be a pay system?—Yes. At present the hospitals are largely charities, and they have no extensive pay system.

36986. That would bring to the hospitals, as paying patients up to their ability, the middle-class, who now find it difficult to pay the large sum necessarily or naturally demanded for expensive operations?—Yes. But it is not quite the middle class who would be affected; it is the whole artisan class, who are rather below the middle class. The whole class of people with incomes up to £3 a week practically become charitable patients directly they are ill.

36987. The preliminary that there should be a maximum paying system instead of a minimum paying system is almost essential to your suggestions?—Yes.

36988. Your provident dispensary goes hypothetically into that organisation because it is a provident dispensary?—Yes, but that only treats the patients at home.

36989. Then you have the voluntary hospital, as we call it, managed partly on this basis, too; therefore, would you not require to give honoraria to your medical man at the hospital?—I do not think as long as the patients only paid the cost of maintenance, which varies from £1 to 30s. a week in every hospital, that the medical staff would require any payment.

36990. Would they have to pay something like a quid pro quo for the operation performed?—There would have to be special wards attached to the hospitals, like there are in many French and American hospitals.

36991. I believe you have visited France?—Yes.

36992. And Germany, too, I think?—Yes.

36993. Can you tell us whether there is any reason to the contrary, any criticism of the method adopted there, which I understand is this pay system, introduced as far as possible? Is it harmful in any way? Is it criticised for any reason?—No, not at all—from the point of view of the public, at any rate. The hospitals in any German city are controlled by the municipality. They have no hospitals corresponding to our charity hospitals, and the people there pay according to their means. Practically, all of them pay if they can. The people who really pay definite fees to the visiting doctors have a part of the hospital set apart for them, and they pay some fees commensurate with the advantage they get.

36994. Does the municipality act as a sort of central board for hospitals in a German town? I mean, is their relation so strong that the various hospitals are practically brought into co-ordination?—They are brought into co-ordination, but of course there are only one or two large hospitals of that kind in each town—I mean public hospitals under a special committee of the municipality.

36995. Would you propose that in a large urban centre like Manchester there should be a municipal or other board which would bring these hospitals into co-ordination? What sort of idea would you have?—Of course nothing of that sort could be introduced suddenly, because all the hospitals have their own committees and men who are very much interested in them, and I do not think it would be practicable to replace them all by a board.

36996. There was no question of replacing the staff, but I was just thinking rather that one could do one duty and another another; for instance, I think you have at Manchester a new public health hospital for puerperal disease; now is that used generally by the other hospitals?—As a matter of fact, puerperal fever is admitted into the general fever hospital, and they take patients from the other hospitals and from the whole town. That is an extension of the public health hospital.

36997. And that is a piece of co-ordination?—Yes.

36998. Do the hospitals co-ordinate, that is to say, do they send up their cases?—As a matter of fact, very few cases of that disease occur in hospitals, but they do send them when they occur. Most of those cases are sent from the patients' houses.

36999. To go one step further, friendly societies all pay for sickness, and therefore as they stand they ought to come into your idea of a medical service, just as the provident dispensaries do?—The friendly societies now pay nothing for their members who are in hospital.

37000. They pay nothing to the hospitals; they only pay for themselves through their payments to their doctor?—That is so, and directly a member has to be admitted into a hospital for an operation, then it is all charity and they do not pay anything.

37001. So that is a point also for adjustment?—Yes. If the friendly societies adopted an insurance system of some kind, so that their members should pay the cost of their maintenance in the hospitals, that would relieve the financial position of hospitals very much.

37002. As to the public health system, I put this difficulty to you: As a matter of fact, a great deal of the ordinary applications to the Poor Law comes through sickness?—Yes, that is so.

37003. If you had your system of institutional medical relief apart from the Poor Law, you would find it was nevertheless a part of the daily current work of the Poor Law authority, would you not?—Yes.

37004. So that they would have constantly to refer to another authority for admission into an institution, which it would be an almost daily occurrence to want?—Yes.

37005. Would that not lead rather to greater delay or difficulty, than if they had for their own purposes, on lines of co-ordination, an institution of their own, such as the present Poor Law infirmary?—I am not sure that I have quite grasped your question.

Dr. A. W.
W. Lea.

15 Jan. 1907.

German system of municipal paying hospitals.

The co-ordination of voluntary and other hospitals and its difficulties.

Proposal that Friendly Societies should provide for hospital treatment

Difficulty of dissociating Poor Law infirmaries from the Poor Law.

Dr. A. W.
W. Lsa.

15 Jan. 1907.

Question of transferring
Poor Law
and voluntary hospitals to Sanitary
Authorities.
Grants from Sanitary
Authorities to voluntary hospitals.

No almoners to Manchester
voluntary
hospitals.

Attitude of medical profession to a system of paying hospitals.

Need of obtaining payment from artisan class for hospital treatment.

37006. It has been proposed to put all the hospitals under a public health authority; but you do not, I think, pronounce any opinion on that?—No, I do not.

37007. I am now only taking that point up and discussing it?—I think it might be possible to put the Poor Law hospitals under the public health authority, and to co-ordinate those. But the other hospitals would have to exist as they are now, unless they were in some way brought into co-ordination with the Poor Law hospitals. At present they are not in any co-ordination.

37008. If, as I think has happened in Liverpool, a voluntary hospital receives a grant from the municipality, then you have the beginnings of a possible co-ordination with a municipal hospital?—Yes. I believe that co-ordination in that way is a step in the right direction.

37009. With regard to the out-patient cases in which you say food and other things are wanted, you have no almoner system in Manchester, have you?—Absolutely none, except through the Poor Law.

37010. So that in normal out-patient hospital cases there is no one to see that either the person who ought not to come is sent away, or that the case is rightly treated?—That is so. There is no one.

37011. Does it not seem to you that something of that kind is essential for proper treatment?—Yes, I consider that it is.

37012. Speaking in a general way, do you think that members of your profession are inclined to stand by such a proposal for a medical service as we have been discussing just now, that is to say, a system of payment according to ability to pay, running right through the whole of the medical institutions?—Yes, I think they would be. It would require care, and of course each case would have to be inquired into and decided by the hospital authority; but the medical men would certainly not be averse to it.

37013. That is at the very basis of what you propose, is it not? Therefore if the medical men were not willing to adopt it, or it fell through, we should have, if not chaos, at any rate something not very much better than we have now?—Do you suggest payment throughout the hospitals?

37014. I mean pay wards at the hospitals, and a system of payment according to the ability to pay?—That is so now at some hospitals. At some hospitals now they charge people according to their income. My point is that the whole artisan class is treated in hospitals now, and that the hospitals are put to a very great financial strain to pay for that, and that in some way or other this class ought to pay adequately for their maintenance, which in the case in question is something like £1 or 30s. a week. But that whole class is at present contributing nothing.

37015. Practically that is the basis of a reform, and if that is not done, nothing is done, as it were?—If that is not done, charitable hospitals cannot keep pace with the increased amount of work.

37016. And the burden of responsibility will not fall upon those who ought to bear it, namely, the artisans?—That is so.

37017. I only wish to press it that that is the cardinal point in your suggestions?—That is so.

37018. So that one might fairly understand that if that does not come about, either an entirely different method must be adopted or one must give up the problem?—I think so. Either you must have hospitals frankly free to everybody, or some such payment must be derived from the artisan class.

37019. And the sense of the profession now is that it should not be a free system, but a pay system, and it is that which they are aiming at for the great mass of the artisan classes?—That would be my impression, but I should not like to answer for the profession.

37020. (Mr. Booth.) But there is a class below for which it would be free?—And for which all hospitals would be absolutely free.

37021. (Mr. Loch.) And that would be as the result of inquiry?—Yes.

37022. (Mr. Gardiner.) Who is to decide as to the amount to be paid?—I think that people getting over a certain income should pay for the cost of their maintenance.

37023. That is, a man earning 50s. a week would pay so much—for the man, so much; for his wife, so much; and for his child, so much—and a man earning 45s. a week would pay so much, so much, and so much?—There are several ways of working it, but I think free wards and pay wards the best way.

37024. But who is to decide the amount of contribution which an artisan earning 50s. a week should pay as against an artisan earning only 40s.?—They would not both pay the same amount, would they?—I think that would be decided by the hospital official.

37025. By the almoner of the hospital, to use Mr. Loch's words?—Yes.

37026. And from his judgment there would be no appeal?—It is done now. They are asked for a contribution at many charitable hospitals.

37027. Practically on Mr. Loch's system it would be a matter of legal obligation?—Yes.

37028. (Mr. Loch.) It would be an engagement entered into as a matter of business when he came into the hospital?—Yes.

37029. (Mr. Gardiner.) The patients would undertake to pay so much?—Yes.

37030. But if they refuse to pay, or say "We are unable to pay?"—If they were unable to pay they would have to go to the free wards.

37031. Or they would have to go to the Poor Law infirmary?—Yes. The Poor Law infirmaries now provide beds and accommodation just as good as the general hospitals do. Poor Law hospital accommodation equal to voluntary hospital accommodation 37032. Therefore Mr. Loch's suggestion does not quite meet the case. Assume I earned 50s. a week, and I said, "No, I cannot afford this and I will go to the infirmary?"—But the Poor Law infirmary does not provide all that the hospital does, because it does not provide the special skill.

37033. But the public will require you at no distant date to provide this special skill?—That is what I am strongly advocating.

37034. Otherwise when there are special cases, they would have to be referred to the hospital?—It used to be that the Poor Law patients were transferred for operations to the general hospitals, and I think one of the reforms that are needed is that the Poor Law infirmaries, as they are being well fitted up in every way, should have a special visiting staff provided the same as the hospitals have. Need of visiting staff for Poor Law infirmaries.

37035. (Mr. Loch.) I understood you just now to take the line that if the Poor Law hospital was developed, a similar service would have to be applied to it?—No. I was speaking strictly of charitable hospitals then, and referring to the financial strain. The Poor Law hospitals, I imagine, would be kept entirely on the rates. Question of a payment according to ability in Poor Law or municipal hospitals.

37036. Even so, from the point of view of the rates, you could charge persons with the expenses if they are able to pay?—Yes. The guardians do that now.

37037. Might I suggest that there might be ways of charging as much as they charge abroad, if the Poor Law institution becomes practically a municipal institution?—Yes.

37038. As I take it, you are making an institution from a Poor Law institution of an old type into what is something very like a municipal institution of a new type?—Yes.

37039. And it is possible that the same condition, if that be the cardinal condition, might be brought into play in one form or another?—If you mean payment, certainly.

37040. (Mr. Booth.) But still there would be a class that would not pay?—Yes.

37041. (Mr. Loch.) Whatever happened, it would be either paid for at the quasi-voluntary institution, or it would be paid for at the Poor Law institutions?—Yes.

37042. (Mr. Booth.) The difference being that the Poor Law institution would collect what it could, and the other institution would ask for what it could get?—Yes.

Question of placing Sanitary and Poor Law hospitals under one authority.

37043. (Mr. Bentham.) I take it that you do not advocate a system of municipal hospitals which would make it unnecessary for the Poor Law authorities to have hospitals; is that so?—I certainly have not advocated that. To my mind the Poor Law and the municipality are different branches of the same public control. I think the question has to be discussed whether it should be all under one authority.

37044. As to which authority, you have not thought that out?—No, I have not. The authority which I think would be the best would be the public health authority.

37045. If all hospital treatment is placed under one authority, would you prefer that it should be the public health authority?—Yes, or that there should be State hospital treatment; but of course the charitable hospitals are apart at present.

37046. Accompanying that, would you suggest that that there should be a repayment on the part of the people who take advantage of it, according to means?—Yes.

37047. And in order to ascertain what people are able to pay, would you set up a system of inquiry? That would be necessary, would it not?—Yes.

37048. The system of inquiry would be similar to the system of inquiry which obtains at present under the Poor Law, would it not?—Certainly.

37049. Therefore there would be almost the same machinery which exists at present under the Poor Law, set up under another authority. What advantage would accrue from that?—The whole of the management of a big hospital, and the whole of the management of health and of such acute diseases as phthisis and puerperal fever, would be under one hospital authority, who would have special knowledge and powers.

37050. You advocate this purely on medical grounds, do you not?—On the ground of the efficient treatment of the poor, and of the improvement of the health of the community.

37051. Those are medical grounds?—Yes.

The need of removing deterrence from medical relief

37052. The moral effect upon the people you have not taken into account at all in proposing this change, have you?—Yes, I have. It would take away, as far as sickness is concerned, all the stigma of pauperism. It would be a municipal system of complete medical relief.

37053. That means that it would rather encourage people to have access to these institutions, instead of deterring them from doing so, as at present?—It would.

37054. Have you considered what effect that would have upon what I should call the moral strength of the community, that is, the feeling of independence on the part of the community, and the desire to avoid all assistance at the public expense?—In a case of sickness, medical relief is the main thing that is wanted, and I think no deterrent should be used in cases of sickness.

37055. You think then that practically all persons that are sick and need treating should be considered as a State charge?—All persons who are unable to afford payment for private treatment at home.

37056. And the only qualification that would be necessary to get assistance would be that the patient should be poor?—Yes.

37057. And there should be no stigma attaching to it?—Quite so.

37058. Does that not, to a certain extent, give an advantage to the people who are poor and who have avoided making any provision for themselves, either through provident medical dispensaries or through friendly societies, or in any other way? Does it not, to a certain extent, give a premium to that class if no such thing as stigma is to be attached to them, even though you intend making those pay who can pay?—At present, neither the friendly society nor any other organisation arranges for the hospital treatment of patients inside. The friendly societies make no arrangements of that kind.

37059. Then you confine your suggestion entirely to treatment inside?—Yes, as far as the hospitals are concerned.

37060. Would you abolish out-patients and home-patients altogether?—No. I said earlier that efficient dispensary treatment under the Poor Law would extend to out-patients.

37061. Would you leave out-medical relief to the Poor Law?—The whole thing would have to be under one authority, both the out-visiting relief, and the hospitals.

37062. We have got to this point, I think—that you suggest that the hospital should be under the health authority, and you now suggest that out-patients, if there are to be any, should be under the health authority too; that would take all sick cases from the Poor Law, would it not?—It would. There would have to be an authority, but that authority need not be absolutely the public health authority as at present existing.

37063. (Mr. Loch.) When you speak of the health authority, do you regard the municipality as being the health authority?—Yes.

37064. You do not mean a department of the municipality which deals with health solely?—There would have to be a special department of the municipality for that.

37065. (Mr. Bentham.) That brings us to the suggestion that all medical relief will be under an authority other than the Poor Law, does it not?—Yes.

37066. If you are to have a system of inquiry to ascertain what people are able to pay for this medical assistance, that means that a system analogous to the present inquiry system under the Poor Law would have to be set up under the health authority, does it not?—Yes.

37067. And there still would remain the Poor Law system of inquiry for cases which were not sick?—Yes.

37068. That would mean a duplicate system of inquiry would it not?—I should say that the whole system could be worked as one.

37069. I put the suggestion this way: Would it make any difference, in your opinion, in attaining the same object, by having all hospitals retained under Poor Law management, but not necessarily as part and parcel of the workhouse?—No. There is no authority absolutely existing at present which, I think, could manage the hospitals on the lines suggested. It would have to be a municipal hospital authority which would not be either precisely what the public health authority is now or precisely what the board of guardians is now.

37070. Let me suggest a new authority. If a new authority is set up, which might not be called a Poor Law authority at all, which would deal with all institutional relief, and would have separate institutions for sick cases of various kinds, could it not be quite as well managed by such an authority as by the municipality or the Poor Law as it exists at present? I am suggesting an authority which is dealing with institutional relief of all kinds?—It would have to be an authority connected with the public health.

37071. You would adhere to that then?—I adhere to a public health authority, but not absolutely to the public health authority as it exists at present. Perhaps there might be co-opted members, and so it might be made a little more complete, like the Municipal Council of Public Health in Paris.

37072. Is not the greatest objection at the present time to free medical treatment under the Poor Law the amount of inquiry that one has to undergo? Would not the same amount of inquiry have to be undergone under the public health authority, and would that not become a stigma and be a deterrent in itself?—The only alternative system to inquiry, of course, is to provide absolutely free medical relief.

37073. Is that not really what you are driven to?—Yes; we are driven to one of those two alternatives.

37074. You suggest that it might be analogous to the system that obtains on the Continent and in America; have you any experience of the American system?—I did not mention America in this connection.

37075. You referred to America, I think, in paragraph 12?—I was speaking with regard to the hospitals then.

37076. The point I am referring to now has regard to the public dispensaries. Have you any experience of the

Dr. A. W. W. Leo.

15 Jan. 1897.

The question of transferring medical relief to non-Poor Law authority.

The machinery for enforcing inquiry under a system of paying hospitals.

Proposed new authority for dealing with medical relief.

The Parisian municipal council of Public Health.

Enquiry as to patients' means essential to system of paying hospitals.

Defects of American paying hospital system.

Dr. A. W. American system?—I have experience in conversation
W. Lea. and in visiting them ; that is all.

15 Jan. 1907. 37077. Is it within your knowledge that people have taken undue advantage of them, and have not paid to the extent that they might have done, and that, consequently, a special Act has had to be passed in the State of New York, and every patient's card has a warning printed on it that there is a heavy penalty and a liability to imprisonment for taking undue advantage of medical relief?—I was not aware as to that, but I have no doubt it is taken advantage of.

37078. Therefore, although they have got a national system, which is a paying system, a safeguard has had to be invented to prevent people taking undue advantage of it?—That would be absolutely essential in England ; there would have to be some safeguard unless we should give it frankly to everybody.

37079. That is unless you give it free?—Yes.

37080. Inquiry as to means in itself becomes objectionable?—Yes.

Proposed special hospitals for puerperal fever.

37081. You suggest a special municipal hospital for puerperal fever ; what is the percentage of deaths in puerperal cases?—Puerperal fever is one of the worst. The mortality is something from 20 to 40 per cent. of the cases.

37082. (Miss Hill.) That is of the people attacked?—Yes.

37083. (Mr. Bentham.) I am thinking of the general death-rate?—It is a small proportion of the general death-rate, but it costs 2,000 women annually at least.

37084. That is over the whole country?—Yes.

37085. How many will there be in Manchester?—In Manchester, eighty cases were notified in 1905 and half of these were admitted to hospital.

37086. Would it not require a very large populous area to make it practicable to have a special hospital for that purpose?—Yes. It is only required for large cities such as London and Manchester.

37087. Is not the percentage of attack something like one in 1,000 births?—The mortality is over two per 1,000 births.

37088. No more?—No more.

Special and general voluntary hospitals and proportion of their incomes derived from patients.

37089. (Mr. Phelps.) When you say that you want to co-ordinate the hospitals, do you see your way in Manchester to classify the hospitals according to diseases or treatment? Could you draw out a plan by which you could arrange the hospitals of Manchester according to diseases, instead of according to the principle that is followed now?—Yes, Hospitals are roughly divided into general and special.

37090. You would make them mostly special, would you not?—The special hospitals require rather special treatment, because many people who can afford to pay go to the special hospitals. The special hospitals get a fair proportion of their funds from patients. Some years ago I made an investigation into the finances of the Manchester hospitals, and I found that some of the special hospitals received a third—some even more than that—of their income from patients, whereas the average general hospital only receives from 2 per cent. to 5 per cent.

37091. I see you state that a large number of beds in the hospitals are occupied by the artisan population. The evidence which was given to us when we were in the North of England was rather to the effect that the hospitals are now occupied by the clerk class and that the artisans go into the infirmaries?—I am quite prepared to accept the statement that it has gone as high as the clerk class, in fact nobody can get an operation performed in his house or in a nursing home, unless he can provide something like £20 or £30 down, and the patients who cannot do that go to the hospitals.

37092. Have you inquired into the system at Leicester?—No.

37093. You have not inquired into their Hospital Saturday Fund and the way in which it has been worked by the working classes?—No, not at Leicester.

37094. You say that the municipal authorities should have the control of phthisis ; have you faced all the questions that would involve?—Yes.

Proposal for sanitary authority to deal with phthisis, and difficulties.

37095. Would you be prepared to take a man and treat him for twenty years in isolation?—Very few cases of phthisis would live twenty years.

37096. You think that would be practically inconceivable?—Yes. We have a hospital in Manchester for phthisis at present, but we are only able to take the chronic and hopeless cases.

37097. How long would you give for the chronic cases?—We get them there in order to keep them from doing any further harm by infection.

37098. For the public safety you wish to keep them till the end of their lives?—Yes.

37099. A long interval might arise between the time when they became dangerous and the time of death, might it not?—It would not be usual to have a long interval. It might be so with very chronic cases, but we should keep them in order to prevent them infecting other people.

37100. There is a great difference on that ground between phthisis and ordinary infectious diseases is there not?—There is a very great difference. At present we can only keep the most chronic and hopeless cases.

37101. But you think it would be worth while to do that?—Yes, because phthisis causes such a high mortality. It would be expensive however.

37102. Should you be in favour of having a public hospital in Manchester for confinements to which people could go and be confined?—At present in Manchester we have a voluntary hospital which admits maternity cases and has forty beds, shortly to be increased to 100.

Voluntary lying-in hospital at Manchester.

37103. What proportion of the poorer classes would that provide for?—This, together with those attended by the visiting staff, and the fact that all bad cases are taken into hospital, provides for a large proportion, but I should not like to say how many. I should like to mention that under the new Midwives Act the Corporation of Manchester has arranged to pay for medical attendance on women during confinement at their own homes, subject to a wage limit. The sum of £1 1s. is paid for each case.

Municipal medical assistance in confinement cases.

37104. Would you say that the loss of life in confinements, in consequence of bad surroundings and inadequate preparation is sufficient to warrant you in opening an institution in which all confinements should take place?—No, I do not think so.

Question of need of special lying-in hospitals.

SEVENTY-FOURTH DAY.

Monday, 21st January, 1907.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. Sir HENRY A. ROBINSON, K.C.B.
 The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
 Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
 Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
 The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
 Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
 Mr. C. S. LOCK.

Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL, C.B.
 Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
 The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
 Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
 Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
 Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
 Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. WILLIAM GRISEWOOD, called ; and Examined.

37105. (Chairman.) You have been good enough to prepare for us a most interesting paper which, if you will hand in, we will take as your evidence in chief?—This is the statement which I have prepared. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I understand it will be agreeable to the Commission that I should furnish briefly a general view of the industrial conditions of Liverpool, especially in their bearing on the poverty of the city.

Industries.

2. The principal sources of work are shipping and its allied branches, viz., shipbuilding and repairing, engineering, boiler-making, rope and sail making, loading and discharging of cargoes, employing stevedores and porters, freight clerks and carters, seamen, stewards, firemen, coal trimmers, coal heavers. An important branch is the import of cotton, employing porters to warehouse and deliver the cotton and samplers. A considerable number of porters are also employed in the provision, fruit, grain, timber, salt, and general produce trades.

3. The building trades in Liverpool employ a large number both of skilled mechanics and labourers, viz., bricklayers, masons, plasterers, slaters, joiners, plumbers, painters, and paperhangers. In these and other skilled trades the mechanics usually have a trades union, but with all these branches of trade are associated labourers only some of whom are in unions. Men of this class are employed more or less regularly when trade is good. All the building trades are liable to stoppage through frost or continued bad weather, in addition to the usual fluctuations in the demand.

4. Factories of various kinds are carried on, such as soap, chemicals, manure, biscuits, seed-crushing, flour milling, sugar, cigar, pickles, jam, and rubber goods. I may also name printing and allied trades, the clothing trades, including tailors and bootmakers, and general clerks, many of whom are engaged temporarily. Each of these trades is subject to fluctuation and depression, and when the depression is long continued distress may arise. For some time past the building trades have especially suffered, the burden falling naturally with the greatest severity on the unskilled labourers without a union to provide out-of-work allowance.

Dock Labour.

5. The industry, however, which contributes the largest number of unemployed is dock labour. The men in this trade consist principally of stevedores, or men who work at the cargo on board ship, and whose wages are 5s. per day, and labourers, or quay porters, who work on the quay at wages of 4s. 6d. per day. A few of these men are permanent to the extent of being taken on regularly day by day so long as there is work for them, but by far the greatest proportion are casual men, taken on for the day or half day as required. Under this system, therefore, there is a market for more or less unskilled labour, open to all strong men, at wages which compare favourably with those paid in other unskilled work, and the consequence is that men from other trades which may be slack are drawn to the docks in the hope of obtaining a sufficient share of work to make up a fair week's wage. The number of dock labourers is thus swelled beyond all ordinary requirements. This state of things has prevailed for many years until at present there is reason to suppose that there is a permanent surplus over the number that is likely to be required in the near future for the ordinary work of the port. In the course of their investigations into the actual state of employment in December, 1905, the City Council Distress Committee ascertained that on a given morning thirty-six firms which engaged 7,709 men left 2,013 unemployed on their "stands" or hiring places, while there was a shortage of eighty-seven men only at three stands. The total unemployed throughout the docks must have largely exceeded the above number. This was at a time when there was a fair and even large amount of work at the docks.

6. It is evident that while such a condition of things prevails, there will necessarily be a considerable number of labourers and their dependents always on the verge of want and ready to be plunged into distress whenever the inevitable depression of trade still further reduces the amount of work available for division over the whole class.

Organisation of Labour.

7. Now to introduce any artificial system of providing work for the unemployed of this class, except temporarily to meet an emergency, tends only to keep the men where they are not wanted and to perpetuate the bad conditions. The true remedy is to endeavour, by organisation, to increase the number of permanent men, and, while leaving a sufficient number to meet the fluctuating demand for casual labour, to draw off the surplus men and provide for them either by sending them to other parts of the country, where it may be ascertained through the City Council Labour Bureau that a demand exists, or to assist them to emigrate, when there is a demand in the Colonies, as is the case at present.

8. This subject, although not strictly relating to measures of relief, is of so much moment in regard to the origin of distress that I venture to submit a print of suggestions for the better organisation of labour at the docks, prepared for the consideration of a conference of employers and workmen, by the Chairman of the Liverpool Central Relief Society and myself. (Appendix No. III. (A.))

Mr. W. Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907:

Surplusage of casual labour at docks.

Futility of artificial work for unemployed.

Need for decasualisation of dock labour and dispersal of surplus labourers.

Liverpool industrial conditions.

Liverpool industrial conditions attractiveness of dock labour.

Mr. W.
Grisewood.

Relief of the Unemployed.

21 Jan. 1907.

Poor Law labour farms managed by a Voluntary Committee the best method of dealing with unemployed.

9. So far as it may be found needful to provide temporarily for the relief of men in distress from unemployment, I feel convinced that the provision of the Poor Law requiring that able-bodied men in distress should be set to work is the only sound policy, but it must be carried out under such supervision as will ensure a proper day's work being performed, and other means of self-support should be sought. I am disposed to think that work on the land on a labour farm will be found to be the best, inasmuch as, if properly organised, the labour will be productive and will, to some extent, prepare the men for work in the colonies and probably make them more disposed to try it. Labour farms may also be useful as places of detention for the tramp and vagrant classes, with a view to their being habituated to regular habits of work, which most of them have lost.

10. To obtain the best results, however, from such institutions, they should be under the management of a voluntary committee, actuated by a desire for the moral improvement and uplifting of the men, and willing to take trouble with the individual cases to secure this.

Need of increased facilities for training the young for sea and country life.

Desirability of decreasing juvenile labour.

11. With a view to stop the production of inefficient and useless people, further provision is necessary for the training of boys for sea, and of both boys and girls for a country life, while their nature is plastic, confining this, of course, to such as show a disposition in these directions.

12. It would further be a distinct advantage if child labour were greatly reduced or wholly abolished.

Poor Law Divisions.

Poor Law topography of Liverpool.

13. The city is divided for Poor Law purposes into three divisions:—(1) The Parish of Liverpool, occupying the centre and west, bounded on the north by Boundary Street, on the east by Great Homer Street and Crown Street, on the south by Parliament Street, and on the west by the docks. (2) Toxteth Park Parish, bounded on the north by Parliament Street, on the east by Smithdown Road, on the south by a point in Aigburth, and on the west by the docks. (3) West Derby Union, which envelopes the others, and extends beyond the boundary of the city on the north, east, and south.

Poor Areas.

14. The areas principally occupied by the poorer portion of the working classes are, roughly speaking, a portion of the city lying between Netherfield Road, Shaw Street, Moss Street, Brownlow Street, Great Orford Street, St. James' Road, and the docks. This district is principally taken up by business premises, houses of the poor, and residences of tradespeople providing for them. At the south end, the district between Park Road and the docks up to Park Street on the south, and in the West Derby Union the district around Tue Brook, Old Swan, and Rice Lane, Walton, have a considerable number of very poor people. There are also, besides these, smaller districts inhabited by very poor persons.

15. The areas named occupy portions of each of the Poor Law unions.

Voluntary Charity.

Charity in
Liverpool.

16. There is a very extensive system of voluntary charitable institutions in the city, including hospitals, both general and special, district nursing institutions, free dispensaries, children's homes, sheltering, training, and reformatory institutions, homes for the aged and afflicted, funds giving annuities and grants to certain classes, and, as the principal voluntary agency for giving relief in the homes of the poor, the Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society (or, shortly, the Central Relief Society). There is also a society for the aid of foreigners in distress and a Roman Catholic Organisation, the Society of St. Vincent de Paul.

17. The Central Relief Society receives contributions (last year, £34,289) for 125 of these institutions, comprising almost all the established secular charities of the city. I submit a list of these, giving particulars of the income and expenditure, investments, and balances for the year 1905 of 119 of these institutions, the reports of the remainder not being to hand. (Appendix No. III. (B).)

18. The totals shown in this statement are as follows:—

STATEMENT SHOWING AMOUNTS RECEIVED AND EXPENDED, AND BALANCES OF 119 OF THE PRINCIPAL LIVERPOOL CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

Income from:—

	£
Subscriptions - - - - -	54,505
Donations - - - - -	84,804
Legacies - - - - -	10,573
Interest on Investments - - - - -	47,283
Payments by patients and inmates - - - - -	37,387
Earnings - - - - -	36,342
Total Income - - - - -	270,894

Expenditure on:—

(a) Capital, Buildings, etc. - - - - -	4,589
Maintenance - - - - -	236,414
Total Expenditure - - - - -	241,003

Investments:—

Made - - - - -	28,542
Realised - - - - -	6,134
Net Investments - - - - -	22,408

Balances at end of year:—

Debits - - - - -	32,862
Credits - - - - -	9,290
Difference—Excess of Debits - - - - -	23,572

(a) This includes such capital expenditure only as appears in the general accounts, and does not include special building funds.

19. A few of these institutions are situated outside Liverpool. They are, however, largely supplied by and for Liverpool people, and are therefore included. Their exclusion would not materially affect the result. Practically nearly a quarter of a million pounds is spent yearly in Liverpool on the maintenance of secular charities, exclusive of institutions having a definitely religious object or associated with a religious denomination.

Estimate of annual expe-diture on Liverpool
secular charities.

The Liverpool Central Relief Society.

20. This society was formed in the year 1863 by the amalgamation of three societies which at that time were giving relief in the same area to the same classes of persons. The immediate result of the amalgamation was to stop overlapping and imposition. At that time crises of distress frequently occurred in consequence of the detention at sea of ships—at that time largely sailing ships—by long continued east winds. As the sailing ships were gradually replaced by steamers the crises became fewer and less intense, although from other causes, such as general slackness of trade, combined with excessive or long continued severe weather, times of severe distress have arisen, notably in the winters of 1878–9, 1892–3, and 1894–5.

The Central Relief Society: its origin and work.

21. I submit reports, prepared at the time, of these three periods of distress.

22. Ordinarily, the work of the society consists in relieving distress of a temporary kind in whatever way is likely to restore the distressed to self-support. Persons in distress are brought under the society's notice by ministers of religion, missionaries, nurses, school attendance officers, or private persons, or personal application is made. Careful investigation is made as to the antecedents and character of the applicants, and the prospects of self-support being resumed, and appropriate action is taken. I submit report of the society's operations for year 1904–5 for details of the work. (For copy of rules of the Society see App. No. III. (C).)

23. Recognising unavoidable want of work on the part of respectable men as a fitting ground for relief, the society in 1870 acquired workshops where a simple description of work—firewood making—is given to the men. The average wage earned is 2s. per day of seven hours. Relief at the home is given to the family when required.

District Committees on Elberfeld Lines.

The Elberfeld system in Liverpool.

24. Twenty years ago it became apparent to the committee that while a small staff of experienced official agents could do much of the work of the society in a safe and effective manner, in order to bring out the best results from work of this kind it was necessary to enlist the interest and practical help of persons with some little leisure, willing to undertake the duty of visiting a few families, entering into their circumstances, the conditions of the home and family life and the special difficulties which beset them, and, in co-operation with others of like mind, consulting as to the best course to follow and carrying out the decision come to. At that time the committee's attention was called to the organisation under which the Poor Law is administered in Elberfeld in Germany, and they set up, experimentally, three district committees composed of Voluntary Friendly Visitors, each of whom had charge of an allotted section calculated to furnish not more than five cases of distress at one time. Meantime, Mr. A. F. Hanewinkel, the society's assistant secretary, had accompanied a commission of inquiry into the system followed in Elberfeld and other German towns, and he having reported favourably, it was decided to gradually extend the system over the city. This has now been almost accomplished, the number of committees (including one in course of formation being eighteen, with a total of about 250 voluntary friendly visitors. This number the committee hope shortly to raise to at least 500.

25. Each district committee consists nominally of fifteen visitors, including chairman, vice-chairman, and hon. secretary. They usually meet monthly for the consideration of cases. Preliminary inquiry into each case is made by the society's official agent, and the reports and case papers are then handed over to the friendly visitor of the section in which the applicant resides, who visits the home, reports the case to the district committee, and takes instructions. The cost of assistance, if not specifically subscribed for the applicant by relatives, friends, employers, or benevolent persons, is met out of the general funds of the society.

26. I submit a copy of regulations for district committees (see Appendix No. III. (D.)), and a manual of instruction for friendly visitors (for extracts from Manual, see App. No. III. (E.)), and also a lecture on German methods of relief and their applicability to this country (for extracts from lecture, see App. No. III. (J.)).

Co-operation with Poor Law.

27. For many years past arrangements have existed between the three boards of guardians and the society, by which any persons applying to the guardians, who may appear to be more suitable for charitable than Poor Law help, are handed over to the society.

28. On the other hand, cases eligible for Poor Law help, usually of a chronic kind, are reported by the society to the guardians, with satisfactory results. Co-operation of a close kind exists between the respective bodies.

29. It has been stated that the society's aid is available in any form likely to prove serviceable and lead to self-support. In no way has this been so entirely realised as in the plan under which widows with children, some of whom are of working age, have been transferred to the factory districts. In all the cases dealt with the family has been unable to properly maintain itself in Liverpool, in many instances, indeed, it has been in receipt of parish relief; in every case it has been ensured self-support and ultimate comfort in its new sphere. The number of persons thus transferred in the last thirty-five years has been 2,268.

Co-operation with Local Charities.

30. It has been mentioned that the Central Relief Society receives and collects contributions to the principal secular charities. This close connection with the various institutions necessarily affords the society a very full knowledge of their work—a knowledge of primary importance in the carrying out of its own work in the amelioration of the condition of the poor.

31. An Association of Charities exists for the purpose of enabling the various institutions to take united action in matters of common interest, the Central Relief Society having the office of summoning them together as required. It would be of great advantage if a wider purpose could be given to this association and a representative Council of Charity could be established with the object of bringing about more effective co-operation between them.

32. This appears to me to be the direction in which the improved administration of voluntary charity can best be secured. Such a council might also undertake the duty of inquiring into the bona fides and necessity of proposed new charities, appealing for public funds. At present it is open to anyone to set up an institution, without any responsible committee to answer for its genuineness.

Mr. W. Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

Poor Law Reorganisation.

33. The organisation which has been found so effective in the administration of voluntary charity in the form of voluntary friendly visitors working in a definite district, and forming district committees for consultation, points out the direction in which the administration of the Poor Law may be improved. It cannot, I think, be seriously questioned that, considering its immense resources and field of operations, the Poor Law, as it at present exists, does not produce the good it might.

Disappointing results of the Poor Law.

34. Having for many years had an opportunity of observing the working of the Poor Law, and for several years attended the regular meetings of the relief committees of one board, I must bear testimony to the general care and attention which is given by Liverpool guardians to the difficult subject of out-relief. My observation leads me to think that whatever fault there may be is largely due to prevalent theories of the function of public relief and its proper application and limitation.

35. It is generally assumed (1) that the Poor Law should provide for the relief of the destitute only; (2) that no distinction should be made between one class of destitute and another—no advantage should be gained by the thrifty, moral, and temperate over the opposite class; (3) that in order to prevent dependence on State relief its receipt should be made as unacceptable as possible. "The State," it is said, "must be cold, hard, and mechanical in its action." The reception of State relief has been looked upon as necessarily demoralising, and the possibility of its being used in such a way as to have preventive, remedial, and ameliorative results has been largely discredited. Such a narrow view of the Poor Law needs revision. The Poor Law for good or evil occupies a large place in the social life of the nation, and it would be sound policy to so apply it as not only to relieve existing distress, but to remove the distress as far as this may be possible, by carefully ascertaining the special abilities and possibilities for self-support in each case and taking advantage of these favourable factors. Fortunately, its administration has been better than the theories regarding it, and, in several directions, improved conditions have been made a distinct aim. This is seen in the treatment of children, their separation from adults in the workhouses, the boarding-out system, and the institution of cottage homes.

Prevailing theories as to functions of the Poor Law and need for their revision.

The Poor Law generally should be made curative as in case of children.

36. Now what has taken place in regard to children may serve as an example of what may be done for other classes. The various classes should be more carefully distinguished. The unfortunate should not be confounded with the inefficient, nor these with the indolent, intemperate, and vicious, not with a view of rewarding merit and punishing demerit, but in order that each class may be appropriately treated, with a view to their restoration, if possible, to independence.

Need for better discrimination and classification in Poor Law.

37. With respect to those of defective and vicious character, it will be always necessary to make Poor Law relief distasteful. This is part of any treatment which aims at their good; it is the cold air that is necessary to brace up their character.

The Poor Law should be disagreeable, tonic, or ameliorative, according to character of applicant.

38. With regard to the inefficient, another régime must be adopted, with a view to remedying their deficiency of energy, or aptitude for settled work, or whatever the defect may be.

39. But in regard to those who suffer from unavoidable misfortune, the purpose of relief may with safety be ameliorative, remedial, and restorative. In short, throughout Poor Law there appears to be a need to work for an improvement in the individual family or person by measures adapted to the special character and surroundings in each case—to trust less in "deterrent" measures and more in what may be called "reconstructive" measures, applied to each case according to its circumstances.

Co-operation charity and Poor Law at Liverpool.

Transfer of cases with children to factory districts.

Co-operation with local charities in Liverpool.

Representative Council of Charities.

Mr. W.
Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

Advantage of removing widows with children to factory districts.

Need for individual treatment of poor according to their needs.

Need and value of Elberfeld system.

Need of voluntary committees to co-operate with guardians.

Objection to pay stations.

Need for supervision of widows with children in receipt of relief.

Need of voluntary committees to co-operate with guardians.

40. Take the case of a widow left with five children, ages sixteen, fourteen, twelve, ten, eight. She might be allowed 3s. 6d. per week parish relief in supplementation of what she and her two eldest children might earn, and wages and allowance together in Liverpool might fail to amount to healthy subsistence. At the end of a year there would be but little change in the circumstances, yet £9 2s. would have been spent. On the other hand, send her to the factory district, having previously arranged for work to be provided, and spend £9 2s. in paying fares and providing a few articles of clothing and furniture, and if she and her family have health she will require no more Poor Law relief. In three months she will be self-supporting, and in a year in comfort, and coming over to Liverpool to tell her friends her good fortune. This has been actually realised in Liverpool: experience many times over by the co-operation of the guardians and the Central Relief Society.

41. Every family is not adapted for factory work, but it should be the duty of someone to find out, with the assistance of the family itself, what it is suited for, and try to rebuild its self dependence, so far as this is possible.

42. Now this individual treatment of the poor, discovering their capabilities and their weaknesses, and aiding or urging them in the direction of self-help, cannot be undertaken by a limited staff of relieving officers, each in charge perhaps of 300 cases and having many other duties devolving upon him, and herein is the value of the Elberfeld system of voluntary visitors, each charged with the care of a few families only. Even when self-support could not be looked for, the regular weekly visit of such a friend aiming at producing the best condition in the family could not fail to produce a beneficial effect. There are many other points besides the question of income to be considered in securing a healthy home and self-respecting family life.

43. The conditions in Germany are so different from those in England that it would probably be impossible in connection with the Poor Law to reproduce here the system exactly as it exists in Elberfeld, and, in the first instance, it might be well to endeavour to form voluntary committees, or utilise those already existing, to undertake under the guardians certain duties, with well defined limits, as, for instance, the oversight of persons receiving out-relief, such as widows with families, aged persons, and the sick and disabled. They might ultimately be entrusted with the carrying of the weekly allowance to the home, and so supersede the objectionable feature of the assemblage of persons of such mixed classes at the "pay table." In all cases they should direct their attention to the restoration of the persons to independence at the earliest possible moment, and should consult together in district committees as to the best means to this end. They should in every case report at fixed intervals to the guardians.

44. The experience of the Central Relief Society in the supervision of cases of widows with young children granted out-relief by the guardians has shown that there is a considerable number of cases in which needful advice and effective help can be given and the home conditions generally greatly improved.

45. It would seem desirable that a permissive law should be passed enabling guardians to make experiments in the direction of utilising voluntary help, under suitable restrictions, and from these experiments, after five or ten years' working, a choice might be made of such as seem to result most satisfactorily.

46. The advantages of such a system of careful supervision of the families receiving relief and the application of thought and ingenuity in trying to discover the means of furthering their self-support would include the following:—

(a) A knowledge of the actual practice of the Poor Law would, through the voluntary visitors, become widely spread, and would replace the present very general ignorance on the subject.

(b) Greater confidence would then be felt in the administration of the Poor Law, and there would be less giving to beggars, in consequence of the knowledge that there was sufficient legal provision for them.

(c) The individual cases of want would be dealt with in a way which would bring dependence to an end at the earliest possible moment.

(1) There would be more power to deal effectively with large numbers of persons in crises of distress, and in this matter also the public confidence would be established and the harm done by ill-advised public action would be avoided.

47. It is sometimes recommended that voluntary charity should be substituted for out-relief by the guardians. To my mind the principal safeguard in voluntary charity lies in the carefulness of its investigations and in its adapting its aid to the necessity of the case with the definite aim of restoring independence or adequately providing for the actual ascertained needs. If this were the practice and aim of Poor Law administration, I see no reason for thinking its effect would be less beneficial. The lack of this practice and aim constitutes a far greater obstacle in the way of good results than the fact that the money is provided from public funds.

48. Similarly in regard to the question what authority should undertake the treatment of the unemployed, it is apparent that the authority which can best take in hand this difficult problem is the one which can best bring to bear on the individual unemployed workman the helpful personal influence which will give him aim and hope, and afford such practical help as may be requisite to put him in the way of getting on his feet again and working for his own support. The Poor Law with an organisation which provided this would be better than an independent body without it and which treated the unemployed as a class for whom work and support must be found at the cost of the ratepayers without any further outlook.

49. It is probably due to the absence of a system of dealing with the individual cases in this way that the provisions of the Poor Law for taking land to set men to work and for emigrating suitable persons have fallen into disuse. These provisions re-enacted and included in the powers of Distress Committees under the Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905, are proving, so far as emigration, at all events, is concerned, to be of great service.

50. It may be asked whether it will be possible to obtain the services of a sufficient number of ladies and gentlemen willing to take the necessary trouble and undergo the needful sacrifice to enable them to carry out the work of a voluntary friendly visitor in connection with the Poor Law satisfactorily.

51. It may throw some light upon this matter if I mention that, with a view to obtain information of the work of relieving the poor in their own homes and apart from institutional relief as carried out in this country, my committee took the liberty in February last of addressing a circular letter asking for particulars of their objects, methods, and organisation to all the charity organisation and other kindred societies in the list prepared by the London Charity Organisation Society. One of the items on which light was sought was how far voluntary visitors were made use of. Of the sixty-two societies who have made returns, thirty-two make use of voluntary help (apart from the executive of the society) in dealing with their cases. In many instances this help is limited to acting as an almoner, and seems to be intended to interest persons in their poorer brethren rather than as an efficient means of carrying out the work. Still the voluntary help is there, and may easily be extended and brought to a working system.

52. In many large cities the use of volunteers is an integral and very important part of the organisation, and in others, where the plan has not been definitely adopted, there is evidently a disposition to progress in that direction.

53. There is considerable diversity in the status of the voluntary visitors and the duties assigned to them. The following may serve as examples.

54. In the London Charity Organisation Society there are thirty-nine district committees, each occupying an area equal to a large town. Each committee has an hon. secretary and frequently a paid secretary and inquiry agent. The committees are composed of ladies and gentlemen, some of whom attend as advisers only, while others undertake such practical work in the treatment of cases or in office work as may be assigned to them. A point is made of the volunteers being first trained under the instruction of the regular office staff, after which they may have any branch of work allotted to them.

The superiority of charity over out-relief and reasons therefor.

Advantage and disadvantages of the Poor Law dealing with the unemployed.

Value of emigration and other work of Distress Committee.

The extension and the use of voluntary visitors or helpers acting in co-operation with the Charity Organisation Society and other kindred societies in the United Kingdom.

The extent and the supply of voluntary visitors or helpers acting in co-operation with the Charity Organisation Society and other kindred societies in the United Kingdom.

55. The Liverpool system, in connection with the Central Relief Society, has been fully described in this statement.

56. In the Glasgow Charity Organisation Society, the city is divided into districts, each in charge of a committee, with hon. secretary, paid agent, and voluntary workers—the latter do not appear as a rule to be members of the committees, who are advisory only. Investigations are made by the agents, and the voluntary visitors follow up their work as almoners, being responsible to the district committees.

57. In Edinburgh the Charity Organisation Society has been reconstructed and greatly extended in the direction, inter alia, of using voluntary visitors.

58. In the Birkenhead Charity Organisation Society the Liverpool system has recently been adopted, and fifty-four visitors now act in four district committees.

59. In the Aberdeen Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, thirty ladies and ninety gentlemen act as voluntary visitors working in district committees. They share with the official staff the duties of receiving and investigating applications, visiting the homes, and carrying out the plan of relief decided upon.

60. The Bristol Charity Organisation Society has recently reorganised and has three district committees, on each of which are voluntary visitors, acting under a referee, who reports cases needing help to the general committee, the friendly visitors following up cases decided by the general committee.

61. The Colchester Charity Organisation Society has organised ten district committees with a lady president to each, who may, if she desired, associate voluntary helpers with her to act as almoners and advisers, and some do so.

62. The most recent development, however, is what is called the City Guild of Help, of which Bradford may be taken as an example.

63. In Bradford the chief aim of the guild is to secure personal sympathy, interest, and, if need be, material help for every family or person who is from any cause in need of help or advice. The desire is to provide a friend for each case. Accordingly in a population of 283,000, voluntary visitors to the number of 205 gentlemen and 250 ladies have been provided. Probably these will suffice to ensure that no one will be burdened with more than one case. It is not contemplated to have any fund for relief except a loan fund, but it is hoped that relief will be obtained, as required, from benevolent persons or from other charities, including the Charity Organisation Society, which carries on independent work.

64. I have very little doubt that if the guardians were authorised to avail of voluntary help in their work, and appealed for such help from the local organisations undertaking the assistance of the poor in their own homes, a sufficient body of voluntary aid could be secured. The guardians might provide office accommodation and give a subsidy towards the working expenses of the organisation which undertook these duties for them.

65. It must be borne in mind, however, that the best results are not to be secured merely by the passing of good laws and the setting up of organisation. It is not mere mechanical action that is required.

66. In regard to many of our institutions, both Poor Law and charitable, which attempt to deal with the delicate question of assisting people who fall into distress, the chief cause of failure appears to be that laws and regulations are passed with the very best intent and adapted to the circumstances, but they are expected to work automatically. All experience shows that if men and women are to be recovered after they have fallen into a distressed condition it can only be done by patient application of tried methods of help, and that special attention should be given to the antecedents and capabilities of each individual who may be dealt with.

67. Everything will depend on the spirit in which this work is undertaken by the guardians, the official staff, and the voluntary helpers. We have not yet fully realised the economic value of kindness and sympathy towards those who have failed in life, and of hopefulness aroused in those whom misfortune has crushed.

37106. (Chairman.) The organisation of which you have been for thirty-five years secretary, is known as the Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society, I understand?—That is so.

37107. You are also a member, I think, of the Liverpool Distress Committee?—Yes.

37108. I understand that the Liverpool Central Relief and Charity Organisation Society receives and transmits contributions for a good many of the charitable institutions in Liverpool?—That is so.

37109. Why are subscriptions sent to the society instead of directly to the institutions?—The arrangement was organised some years ago with a view to facilitating the payment of subscriptions to these institutions. The arrangement was made entirely on that account.

37110. I suppose you simply facilitate the transmission of contributions to these different institutions?—Yes. (For further particulars as to the Liverpool system of collecting charitable subscriptions, see App. No. III. (F).)

37111. According to your statement, there is about a quarter of a million annually spent in Liverpool in support of the secular charities and, therefore, independently of the religious charities?—That is so.

37112. Is your institution in touch with the guardians?—We are in touch with all the three boards of guardians dealing with the City of Liverpool. In the case of one, the parish of Liverpool, one of our officers is in attendance upon each of the relief committees, and in the case of the other two boards of guardians, we have an understanding with them that they should send on any cases which seem more proper for charity to deal with than the Poor Law.

37113. Does your officer always attend the meetings of the parish of Liverpool?—Yes, he does, unless there are no cases for us. If there are no cases coming before them that are likely to be suitable for us, he does not attend. In point of fact, I suppose he attends five out of six meetings.

37114. He was not there the other day when we were present?—He was not. I am aware of that, and I am extremely sorry. I have inquired into that, and I find that he had received a notification the night before that there would be no cases for us.

37115. We have had evidence from Poor Law guardians or officials in Liverpool and the adjoining unions as to the scale of outdoor relief, and we are told that it is very low, the justification for that low scale being that it is supplemented by charity. Were you aware of that plea?—I was not aware of that plea, and of course it does not apply to the Central Relief Society, I mean that the charity referred to as supplementing the Poor Law relief is not the charity of the Central Relief Society.

37116. Would it be charity which is afforded by the other organisations which you have enumerated in your statement?—It is not likely to be that; it is more likely to be occasional alms giving.

37117. Or religious charity perhaps?—It might be that it comes from some of the religious bodies.

37118. According to the evidence it seemed to be almost an accepted principle that the scale is low because it is supposed to be supplemented by charity?—I was not aware of that, and I have not heard it stated so.

37119. But you are aware that the scale is low, I suppose?—I am aware that the scale is low.

37120. Would you like to get charity in closer communication with Poor Law relief than it is at present?—That would be desirable.

37121. It seems to me that there are two methods by which that might be done. One is that there should be a charity committee associated say with outdoor relief on which there should be representatives of the different charitable bodies; and there is the other system which you seem rather to favour, the system, namely, which exists in Elberfeld, where there should be voluntary committees who should undertake, under the guardians, certain duties within well-defined limits. The latter is rather your idea, is it not?—That is my idea.

37122. Assuming as I think we all will agree, that it is desirable there should be this closer inter-communication, is there not this essential difference between what you propose, and the Elberfeld system, that in the Elberfeld system there is one common fund from which they

Mr. W. Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

Functions of Liverpool Central Relief Society: the central collection of subscriptions for charitable purposes.

Co-operation of Central Relief Society with guardians.

Inadequate relief and question of its supplementation by charity.

Desirability and difficulty of applying the Elberfeld system to England.

Mr. W.
Grisewood.
21 Jan. 1907.

draw, and here you would have two funds, the Poor Law fund and the charitable fund?—Yes, there is that difference.

37123. Is that not rather a vital difference?—The Poor Law fund is so much the larger fund that it is not a difference of such importance as it would appear to be at first sight. Taking Liverpool, for instance, the voluntary fund there is comparatively small. When we speak of a quarter of a million we speak of the hospitals and of the large asylums, and so on.

37124. And that figure includes the cost of maintenance?—Yes.

37125. I was thinking of the administrative difficulties. In Germany, as I understand it, you have paid officials at the top?—Yes.

37126. And then you have voluntary organisations below them, working?—You have a system of voluntary assistants, as we may call them, almoners, working in district committees. They are practically official or semi-official visitors.

Voluntary visiting of widows with families receiving relief in
Liverpool.

37127. Here you have, so to say, the voluntary element, that is, the people who offer themselves for election, at the head, and paid officials underneath. Would it be possible to associate with these paid officials the voluntary element?—I think so. We are trying in Liverpool something of this kind. We already have a system of voluntary friendly visitors working in connection with the Central Relief Society; we have some 250 of those. Now we have approached the boards of guardians, and we have asked them to give us a list of the widows with families receiving parish relief and we have undertaken to visit them. It has been done, I am bound to say, very imperfectly up to the present, but, so far as it has been done it has given very satisfactory results. I am certainly of opinion that that might be very greatly extended, and that these voluntary visitors might be distinctly placed in contact with the Poor Law organisation and be, say, semi-official visitors.

37128. Do you think that these visitors might take the weekly allowance?—They could even take the weekly allowance, and that would save gathering all the recipients together. That would be a great advantage.

The removal of widows with children to factory districts.

37129. You mention in Paragraph 29 of your statement that you have been successful in getting widows and children removed from Liverpool to places where they are more likely to get work, and that a very considerable number of those have been so removed. Were any of them paupers?—I have not got the proportions, but a considerable number were in receipt of parish relief.

37130. The Charity Organisation Society, I suppose, paid for their journey?—The society paid their railway fares to the place of destination.

37131. And as far as you know the great mass of those so transferred have done well since?—They have done well since. I have personally visited some of them in one or two places to see how they are doing, and have found that they are doing well.

37132. I think that, in one of your paragraphs, looking at the practice simply from an economical point of view, you illustrate how much more advantageous such an expenditure of money is than if it had gone in out-relief, because if it had gone in out-relief the cases would have remained in the city in the same condition as before, whereas the money spent in this way, which amounted to less than the out-relief probably, has been made use of in transferring them to a place where they have been able to maintain themselves?—Yes, I could give you examples, if you thought it well to hear them, of cases which have been removed within the last six months.

Need for development of system of voluntary visitors.

37133. Taking this work as a class of work which legitimately falls under the category of organised charity, then the only question is, in what way can the work be best done and what would be the most effective combination?—Yes, that is so.

37134. You think that the voluntary assistance could be co-ordinated, so to say, with the work of the relieving officers?—I think some effort should be made to do it. What form it might ultimately take I cannot say, as I have not definitely worked it out; but I think some effort should be made to bring that about.

37135. If it were done, I think there would have to be a transfer as regards certain duties. You could not well have two persons belonging to different organisations visiting the same person and reporting on him, could you?—No; it would be desirable to avoid that.

37136. But, subject to that, you think that the idea you have sketched out can be a great deal more developed?—Decidedly.

37137. In your statement you give a number of illustrations of the different methods or systems which have been adopted by charity organisations in different parts of England. The most recent development, you think, is that which has taken place in Bradford by the formation of the City Guild of Help?—Yes.

37138. That is very much on the lines you are suggesting, is it not?—It is very much on the same lines, except that they have not at present the relations with the Poor Law which I think might be brought about.

37139. Do they work quite independently?—They work at present independently of the Poor Law.

37140. There is a similar guild at Bolton, is there not?—I think so.

37141. But you have no personal knowledge of it?—No, I have not, and I cannot be sure about it.

37142. As regards the Poor Law generally, I gather that you are in favour of a further classification so as to enable a distinctive treatment to be given to different classes?—Yes. I think anything that we can do in the direction of classification would be an advantage.

37143. That carries with it, does it not, the same idea as your other suggestions, namely, that what is wanted is more personal knowledge of the individuals?—Yes; we want a more definite knowledge, together with a more definite aim to restore them to self-support.

37144. I assume you would contend that it would be impossible to get that personal knowledge of the individual simply through paid official agents, as it would involve an amount of work which would be beyond the numbers that it is possible so to employ?—I think so. In Elberfeld, for instance, there are close upon 600, in a population of about 163,000.

37145. I forget the number of workers you have in Liverpool?—We have 250, but we are endeavouring to extend the number to 500.

37146. The earlier part of your statement deals with casual labour in Liverpool; and we have already received evidence a great deal of evidence much to the same effect. Is there any organised labour or factory labour in Liverpool?—There are no textile industries in Liverpool, but there are factories of a smaller kind such as I have referred to in my statement.

37147. There is no field for comparison between, say, the savings of those who have been employed in casual labour and the savings of those who have been employed in organised industries, is there?—I hardly think so. We could hardly compare Liverpool with any of the Lancashire factory towns, for instance, where the work and wages are more regular.

37148. Have you any knowledge of what the savings of the working classes in Liverpool are as compared, say, with their savings in a town of somewhat similar dimensions where there is organised industry?—I am sorry that I have not directed my attention to that point. We have a District Provident Society which collects the savings of the poor, and we have also a large system of penny banks.

37149. Have those penny banks answered?—Yes. Progress of These penny banks are scattered about in the elementary penny bank and schools and in the Christian missions.

37150. Are the deposits increasing, do you know?—I think they are.

37151. Are they increasing relatively to the population?—It did not occur to me to prepare myself on this particular point, but it will be quite easy for me to obtain the information for the Commission.

37152. I think it would be interesting if you could give it to us, because it seems that one of the indirect evil results of this casual labour is that it tends to discourage thrift?—That is so undoubtedly. We can easily get the information about the penny banks and the district provident societies and send it to you. (See Appendix No. III. (G.).) Then there are the friendly societies which you will find in the Registrar's list.

Failure of the co-operative movement in Liverpool. 37153. (Mr. Gardiner.) The co-operative movement has failed in Liverpool, I think, and you have no successful store there?—We have no co-operative store of any consequence.

Need for a curative Poor Law. 37154. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the co-operation of voluntary work with that of the Poor Law, is there not this difficulty that the aim of the voluntary societies is actually to prevent pauperism, and that to co-operate with the Poor Law would be to extend the sphere of pauperism?—My idea is that the Poor Law should take up that point of view as well as charity, that is, that when a case comes definitely under the operation of the Poor Law Guardians they should address themselves to restoring the person to self-support in precisely the same way as well-organised charity does. Take the case of a widow with a family fit to be sent to the factories; there is really no reason why the Poor Law should not send them.

37155. Would it not be apt to be treated or considered in the same way as pauperisation if it was the effort of the same body?—I do not see why it should. At all events, the direct advantages of doing it would be very great.

37156. Is it not possible to get co-operation by divergent action, if I may say so, that is to say, that voluntary effort should be concerted in order to take away from the action of the Poor Law cases which need not be treated under the Poor Law?—That is the plan we are going upon at present.

37157. You think more definite results would come by the direct action of the Poor Law in what may be called the charitable sphere?—I do think so. I think that if the attention of boards of guardians were more largely given to the question how a person could be restored to self-support than it is at present, good would follow from that action.

37158. And some voluntary organisation under their supervision could be devised?—Yes; some voluntary organisation which would enable them to carry that out.

Transfer of widows with children to manufacturing districts. 37159. With regard to the success that has been achieved in moving widows and children to the manufacturing districts where work was available for them, that, I suppose, has been partly due to the fact that such work in the manufacturing districts has been very active recently?—That is so. There is at the present time a very great demand for labour, and we could place more families in the manufacturing districts than we can possibly find in Liverpool willing to go.

37160. Do you suppose that if families were sent from further afield they would be equally successful, or is the fact that they are all Lancashire together some assistance in enabling them to settle down in their new conditions?—I am quite certain that employers would welcome as hands suitable families coming from any direction.

37161. I do not doubt that, but the point I have in my mind is whether the families would settle down happily if they came from an altogether different county, that is, whether they would get on comfortably with their neighbours?—That is a more difficult question to answer.

37162. At any rate it has been perfectly successful under the present conditions?—That is so. Perhaps I might just give an illustration of the sort of work we are doing. Here, for instance, is a woman, S. O., a widow with three children, whose respective ages are sixteen, fourteen and twelve. She was earning, with the older children, 10s. per week, and she had 3s. per week in parish relief. We have sent her up the country and the family is now earning £1 2s.; they have no parish relief, and they are quite comfortable. Here is another case in which there were six children. In this case there was a crippled father, and the father was practically only able to earn, I suppose, a few shillings. The whole family of six children and the father were supposed to be only earning 15s. per week in Liverpool. We sent them away to a factory six weeks ago, and they are now earning £2 16s. per week. I have that on the testimony of the employer himself.

37163. Was the expense of the removal charged to the rates?—No. In that case we paid for the cost of the removal.

37164. By "we" do you mean your society?—Yes, our society did that. Boards of guardians do not assist us out of the rates in regard to the cost of travelling. They are precluded from doing so; they cannot pay railway fares in these cases.

37165. Would you, in connection with your wish that the guardians should do this kind of thing, suggest that they should pay the railway fares and charge them to the rates?—Yes, they should have the power to do so.

37166. (Chairman.) Does the Charity Organisation Society give any pensions in Liverpool?—We have a limited number of very decent people that we have come across in the ordinary course of our visitation, and we have organised what may be called pensions for them, or weekly allowances. We call it extended relief.

37167. How do you get the funds for those pensions?—We apply, first of all, to their own relatives and then to employers and to anyone that we know to be interested in them. Then we add to that ourselves a sufficient amount.

37168. Do you think there are many more people to whom you could legitimately give pensions if you had the funds?—I have no doubt that is the case, but we have none before us. We have been able to deal with all that have come before us up to the present time.

37169. (Mr. Nunn.) I believe that in collecting subscriptions for the various charities of Liverpool you generally have a certain surplus of unallotted subscriptions; is that so?—Yes.

37170. May I ask how they are dealt with?—We appoint a sub-committee of our own committee, and that sub-committee has before it a statement similar to the one I have presented of the income and expenditure of the charities, and upon the immediate financial position of the charities the surplus is apportioned.

37171. Do you consider only their financial position or do you consider their scheme and how far they are carrying it out successfully?—We consider their financial position. Our committee exercise a discretion as to the charities placed upon the list in the first instance, and they only place upon the list those in which they have confidence.

37172. Is there much competition amongst the charities to be placed upon your list?—Practically we have most of the established charities upon the list.

37173. What is the amount of the unallotted fund that you have to deal with?—Generally it is something like £300. It was £355 in 1905.

37174. No attempt is made to increase that amount, I suppose?—No; beyond referring to it in the circular that we issue each New Year. We issue about 12,000 copies of our circular and we set out the objects of this fund in it; but beyond that we do not attempt to increase the amount. But in fact that was not the original purpose with which we started. We only intended to facilitate the payment of subscriptions already promised.

37175. Seeing it in your list, and seeing that there is a unallotted fund for subscriptions the inference is obvious, of course, that that might be used in a selective way for favouring certain charities and rather discouraging others, according to the goodness of their scheme and the excellence of their methods?—We simply confine our attention to their financial position. The charities are supposed to be approved before they go upon our list at all. I may say that of course we do not go outside the list in allotting this fund.

37176. So that to get on your list some special qualification is necessary in a charity?—Yes. They must be carrying on a bona fide charitable work; they must have a responsible committee of management, they must publish a yearly report, and they must have a subscription list of not less than £50.

37177. Is there any condition as to an audit?—There is no condition as to audit; in point of fact the responsible committee covers that.

37178. Have you ever refused to put a charity upon your list?—Yes.

37179. On the ground that it does not fulfil your conditions?—Yes.

Mr. W. Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

Proposed power to guardians to pay travelling expenses of persons in search of work. Charity Organisation Society pensions in Liverpool and extent to which they cover the ground.

Principles upon which charitable subscriptions allocated by Liverpool Central Relief Society.

Mr. W. Grisewood. 37180. Does that often happen, may I ask?—Not very often, because the conditions are pretty well known, and we are not applied to by undesirable charities.

21 Jan. 1907.

37181. Would you be in favour of some perhaps more centralised scheme for the registration of charities?—I would, so long as it was any possible scheme. I think it would be desirable. For instance, we have ourselves made certain suggestions as to a council of charity; I have mentioned that in my statement.

Proposed supervision and inspection of voluntary charities.

37182. Would you be in favour of anything as stringent as, for instance, the conditions which are exercised by the Charity Commissioners being extended to charities that are not endowed, but are supported by voluntary subscriptions?—Yes; I do not see any objection to that. You mean, I take it, to the extent of having a statement of accounts and of there being possibilities of inspection?

37183. That there should be a definite scheme drawn up, and that it should be ascertained whether the society bona fide carries out that scheme by definite methods which could be made public, and that it should publish its accounts and have them properly audited?—I should see no objection to that.

37184. I suppose you would consider that your council of charity should assist any centralised body in carrying out its work?—Yes. We have not got such a council established yet, I am sorry to say; but were such a council established, I think it would probably tend in that direction.

Possibility of establishing a local representative charitable committee, and experience at Liverpool.

37185. I want to know whether you think it is at all possible to establish such a council, which would be really representative of all the bona fide charities and other agencies in the district, without the intervention of the State; or whether, to produce such uniformity, the State must needs step in?—I am sorry to say it would be extremely difficult for me to give anything like a well-founded opinion about that. Up to the present, as I say, we have not been able to establish this council of charity.

37186. I understood it was actually in existence?—No, it is not actually in existence; this is only a suggestion.

37187. Has not the Central Relief Society the power of summoning a council together?—That is a smaller association of charities that we have, which embraces about thirty charities. We have the duty of summoning them together when there is any matter of common interest.

37188. I see, it is a purely deliberative council, is it?—And consultative. We come to decisions. For instance, on this question of the rating of hospitals we summoned the hospitals to consider it.

37189. Do they come willingly?—Yes. Then there was a question of a legacy which was left, in difficult circumstances; we summoned a large number of charities together upon that. Those are matters of common interest to them.

37190. But as a council they have no regular and continuous influence upon charitable work?—No, they have not.

37191. Do you think it would assist such a council if its organising expenses were paid by the State?—I do not know how that would act.

37192. And if it had some statutory rank?—I should think so; though, so far, the question of expense hardly seems to have entered into the matter. We have never pushed this matter from the Central Relief Society; we have simply put it forward as a suggestion, but it does not appear to have been taken much notice of up to the present.

37193. Do you think such a council would appeal more strongly to the right kind of men if it were regarded as a civic duty to belong to it, even if it were merely one of the charities of the city, though perhaps the most important one?—Yes, I do.

37194. You think that would be its effect?—Yes.

37195. Do you consider that a council of charity ought to undertake remedial action in regard to the condition of the poor; for instance, that it should appoint executive committees to carry out improvements in the condition of the poor?—Our proposal is that the different classes of charities should be divided, and that there should be sub-committees representative of each special class.

37196. That is to say, groups of cognate charities or agencies?—Yes. The medical charities for instance, and childrens' charities, and so on, might have their sub-committees. These sub-committees should take action with the view to make the work of that particular class more effective. That, I take it, is what is in your mind.

37197. Yes; but at the same time, as you are aiming at this, you are aiming at giving almost precisely the same functions to the Poor Law, are you not? You are suggesting in your statement that the guardians should have very much more extended powers than merely relieving immediate distress, and that they should take up a great deal of remedial and possibly preventive work?—Yes. At the same time I do not contemplate, at all events for the time being, or perhaps for many years to come, that voluntary charities will cease to do their work. I assume rather, that when a man comes before the board of guardians or when a family comes before the board of guardians, and is in need of relief, the board of guardians will consider what are really the circumstances that have brought that man or that family to them for relief, and what would be the best remedy. It may prove that the best remedy will be supplied by some charitable organisation, and then I do not see any reason why the guardians should not ask that charitable organisation if they will take over this case, and if they will deal with it effectually. Then I should consider that our object would be served. You may have an emigration society, for instance. On the other hand, if there is no existing organisation to carry out the work, then there is no reason I should say, why the guardians should not do it themselves if it is a good work to do.

Need of a curative Poor Law.

37198. That is the position in the present day. Now I want to ask you which you would prefer. Would you prefer a really effective organisation which would go before the guardians and prevent persons falling into pauperism, taking up all cases and dealing with all cases that seemed to be hopeful, dealing with them in a remedial and preventive manner; or would you have the guardians undertake those functions?—I would decidedly try to prevent those people coming before the guardians at all, if it were possible; but I am assuming that in a great many cases it might not be possible.

Possible use of co-ordinated charity as a preventive of pauperism.

37199. It is not possible at the present time, of course?—Undoubtedly. If it could be brought about that they need not go to the guardians at all, it would be still better.

37200. You would rather believe, then, in a representative Statutory Council of the charities of a big city like yours, which would go before the guardians and prevent, by some sifting process, a poor person falling into the hands of the Poor Law?—If that were possible.

37201. And you would do that by dealing with him by remedial and preventive measures?—If it were possible.

37202. I am thinking of the future?—Yes, I understand. If it were not possible, I am proposing that the guardians should have those powers.

37203. (Mr. Lansbury.) Do you think that there are enough charitable funds to deal with the mass of pauperism that you have in Liverpool?—At present undoubtedly there is not; I mean to say, if you are referring to the out-door pauperism.

Feasibility of substituting charity for out-relief in Liverpool.

37204. I am referring to both the out-door and the in-door pauperism?—I have made a little calculation upon that point. So far as I can see (but I have not got the actual returns), the out-door relief of Liverpool will amount to a sum of between £40,000 and £50,000. That is considerably in excess of anything that is subscribed to charity for similar work, but it falls far short of what is subscribed for hospitals, asylums, and so on.

37205. Therefore if a Statutory Committee, such as you suggested, were set up, someone would have to find a pretty considerable sum of money to enable it to take the place of the Poor Law?—So far as concerns the granting of assistance in people's own homes, it would be so. I understand, however, that the idea that the previous Commissioner suggested extended to other charities besides that, and was not confined to merely giving out-door assistance in the people's own homes.

37206. As I understand it, the proposal is to have an organisation by which you will prevent people being obliged to have recourse to the Poor Law at all. Mr. Nunn qualifies that by saying, "in hopeful cases." I am only wanting to find out whether, in your judgment, the citizens of Liverpool would voluntarily subscribe the money to carry out such work if out-door relief were abolished?—It would be a large demand; but there are cases in which it has been done, of course.

37207. Yes, individual cases?—Individual cases. It would be a very large demand to make upon the charitable public. I should think that the out-door assistance granted through the organised charities does not exceed £8,000 or £10,000, if it is so much; and that would mean that something like £40,000 would have to be provided, 'hat is, unless the guardians are giving away far more money than they need to.

Question of adequacy of out-relief and class of persons receiving it at Liverpool.

37208. That is the next point I wanted to ask you about. Have you any experience of the methods by which out-door relief is granted in Liverpool?—For some years I attended the relief committees myself, under the arrangement that I have explained, and I heard each new case that was brought forward. I must say that at that time—I am referring back to some twenty-five years ago—my judgment went with the committee's in the large majority of cases. They would be quite exceptions that I did not entirely approve of the decision that was come to under all the circumstances that were detailed before the guardians. But then I cannot help but also know that there are a great many facts which do not come to the knowledge of the guardians.

37209. Have you any recent experience?—My recent experience is derived from just my own observation of the work of the guardians as it comes under my notice, and also from what my colleagues learn in their attendance at the boards of guardians.

37210. Can you tell us what the result of that is?—I cannot say that I could give you a very definite idea. I would not like to speak definitely upon that point.

37211. You could not tell us whether the out-door relief is being given to a large number of undeserving people, or not then?—I should not like to commit myself to a general statement of that kind. But may I just mention one fact that may bear upon it? In connection with endeavouring to get families to go to the factories we wrote to the various boards of guardians, and the parish of Liverpool supplied us with a list of twenty-six cases of widows with families. I glanced down that list. Whilst some of them had children that were too young to be self-supporting in the factories, about fifteen cases appeared to me to be such as we could find work for. We visited the whole of those fifteen cases, and we found there was only one that was suitable and willing to go to the factories. There were ten of the fifteen who were totally unwilling to go and totally unwilling to entertain the matter at all—and there were four who were unsuitable—as they had not a good record. One does not like to prejudge those cases, but it appears to me that when we have to deal with persons who, when the opportunity of employment is offered to them are not willing to accept it, we certainly ought to very seriously consider whether Poor Law relief should be given. Of course I am speaking very broadly in saying that, because there may be circumstances in connection with a number of those families which would explain their unwillingness to go.

37212. Could you give us the whole history and the whole details of those ten cases—I do not mean now because it might take too long this afternoon to do it; but could we have it sent up to us?—I could do so no doubt in a form that would give you a clear idea. (Particulars subsequently sent. See App. No. III. (H.)) Let me say this, however, that if a person says, "I am unwilling to go," or "My family are unwilling to go," then it is no use our entering further into their circumstances and, as a matter of fact, we do not. We take that as their answer to us.

37213. So that you could not give us very definite information as to the families?—Not as to the whole of what might be considered the justification for their not going.

37214. Might it not be that in some of those cases the guardians were not giving sufficient relief to keep the family entirely—I should think they very seldom did—but that friends, uncles or aunts or other people, might be assisting, and altogether it might be more desirable for the family to keep together?—That is so, but even then it would seem to be more desirable that they should go to a place where they could be self-supporting. Take the cases that I named before; I just happen to have one case upon my list where they were receiving 3s. in parish relief.

37215. What would be the age of the woman there?—The eldest child was sixteen, so the woman might be forty years of age.

37216. How many other children would there be?—There were three, sixteen, fourteen, and twelve being their ages.

37217. She was getting what?—They were earning about 10s. a week.

37218. What relief were they getting, do you say?—They were getting 3s. parish relief. They are now earning 22s. a week.

37219. They have gone away to the factories?—Yes.

37220. The child of sixteen has gone to work I understand?—The two eldest children of sixteen and fourteen will be working full time, and the third one, the young one, will be working half-time.

37221. That is what struck me. In paragraph 12 you say, "It would further be a distinct advantage if child labour were greatly reduced or wholly abolished." I do not think you can have it both ways?—Yes, I admit it seems a little inconsistent. But at the same time here are families who are dependent upon parish relief, and we have opportunities of sending them off to the factories. We send them off and they become self-supporting. I would, of course, rather see a system in which there were no half-timers.

37222. You do not think it is a good thing that a child twelve years of age should go to work in a mill, do you?—Upon the whole I would rather no child under fourteen went to work, but in the meantime under the existing arrangements we are able to put a family into a position where it is quite self-supporting and independent of parish relief.

37223. At the cost of these two children, as a matter of fact, of twelve and fourteen?—I would prefer that it were not so.

37224. That is really the manner in which it has been done. Do you say that they are earning 22s.?—They are earning 22s. per week.

37225. Could you tell us the earnings of them individually?—No, I am sorry I cannot.

37226. Because that is a very low wage in a cotton mill if the mother is working. How does that square with your proposal that the Poor Law should be a remedial agency?—In what way?

37227. Would you consider that it was remedial to put the burden of supporting the mother on children twelve, fourteen and sixteen years of age?—I have already said that I would be glad to see another system pursued; but in the meantime we are availing ourselves of arrangements that are sanctioned by law and which many of the people themselves desire. I do not justify it.

37228. (Mr. Nunn.) There are just two points I should like to put to you on that. Supposing the Poor Law disbursed £50,000 in outdoor relief, do you consider that a system of personal charity by a regular method of inquiry into cases which might indicate personal methods of treatment instead of financial methods of treatment, would require so much?—I think very likely the amount would be reduced; in all probability it would.

37229. In such a system I suppose there would be a registration of relief so that all those who were concerned in the administration of charitable relief would know what other sources of assistance the applicant had, which the Poor Law generally now does not know?—That is so.

37230. That would also tend further to reduce it, would it not?—Yes.

37231. (Mr. Lansbury.) Would you say that the Poor Law generally does not know what means the applicants have?—I would not say that generally the Poor Law does not know, but I do say that boards of guardians do not seem to follow out lines of inquiry which it is very desirable should be followed out.

Mr. W. Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

Transfer to factory districts of widows with children and question of juvenile labour.

Feasibility of substituting charity for out-relief in Liverpool.

Comparison of investigation of cases by Guardians and charities.

Mr. W.
Grisewood.
21 Jan. 1907.

37232. Do you think that the people who give away charity do that?—In the case of the organised charities, such as that I represent, for instance, we always do.

37233. Do you think their inquiries are very much more thorough than those of the relieving officers?—Yes; and they have a definite aim about them.

37234. What is the definite aim?—The definite aim is to ascertain in what way we can place them again in a position of self-support.

37235. Would you not want to know the means and character of the person?—Yes, that is so.

37236. And you think that as a rule boards of guardians do not attempt to find that out?—As a rule I do not think they do. They do make certain inquiries, of course, but I do not think they go so thoroughly into it as they might do. There is a lack also of supervision.

Need and prospect of organisation of casual labour at Liverpool.

37237. With regard to dock labour, do you think private charity could deal with the large number of men unemployed at the docks? You say when trade was fairly good, so far as the docks were concerned, there were 2,013 unemployed on the stands, and that the total throughout the docks must have largely exceeded that number. Do you think private charity can deal with that kind of business?—In the way of giving relief?

37238. In the way of doing anything effective?—No, I look to an entirely different arrangement in regard to dock labour to relieve the situation as regards that. I look to a better organisation of labour itself, quite apart from charity or Poor Law action at all.

37239. Do you think that the Dock Board at Liverpool and the shipowners will set up a better method for organising their labour?—We are hoping so, but not so much as regards the Dock Board because it does not fall so much into their hands.

37240. The shipowners then?—Yes, we are hoping that the stevedores and the shipowners will do it.

37241. You have a large number of men now on your hands—I mean that might come into the Poor Law to-morrow, and the effect of that, therefore, would be to leave you with a large number of men outside that organisation?—That is so.

Migration and emigration as remedies for unemployment.

37242. How would you propose to deal with those?—I should propose to deal with them largely by way of emigration. That, it appears to me, is the best outlet, unless we should find in the meantime that there were openings in this country. My idea is that we should first put ourselves into a position to find out where there were openings in this country.

37243. Do you think that there are openings in this country, and that there are people in England wanting labour by the thousand? This is only Liverpool you are speaking of, but the conditions are similar in most of the ports?—Yes, of course they are.

37244. Do you really think there is a shortage of labour in England?—No, I would not say that. My only idea is that so far as there are openings in England, we should utilise those openings, but I still think that in all probability it would be found that there is an excess of labour over anything like the ordinary demand, which would have to be emigrated.

37245. Do you think the only way of dealing with it is by emigration?—That is the only way that I can see.

37246. You are aware of course that the Colonial Governments will only take those who are physically, mentally, and morally sound; or, at any rate, who have been certified as such?—Yes.

37247. So that you will get rid of the best of these men, and leave on your hands the worst?—That does not appear to me to be a matter that need lead us to hesitate to send men away. We must send men away who are able to undertake the work in a new country. It appears to me that if we have an excess of labour, whether we send away the men, who are actually in excess or not, whether they are the men who form the apparent surplus or not—that if we send away an equal number of men, no matter who they are, we shall make openings for the remainder.

37248. They will make openings?—Assuming that 2,000 men are the surplus at the docks, and assuming that we should have any good reason for thinking that that fairly represented the surplus in Liverpool, then un- Migration questionably if we could send away 2,000 men from and emigra-Liverpool, no matter who they are, we should make room tion as for those other 2,000. remedies for unemployment.

37249. Unless better men came in from the country?—Then we would still do good.

37250. You would still go on emigrating?—We would still go on, because we should be improving the condition in the country generally.

37251. You would be lowering the status of workmen, surely, if you continued to send out the best?—Not necessarily. It is more than likely that a great many of these men, whatever their status is, have been made worse by their irregular work, and if we can give them regular work I have no doubt that will greatly improve their status.

37252. Have we any evidence to show that when you have ladled one lot of men out of the whirlpool there, with your supposed better method of organisation and emigration combined, you have cleared it all out and simply have got the number of men that you actually want to do the work? Is there any evidence to show that improved methods either in carrying or in loading or in connection with machinery of all kinds, will not come along and create the same condition of things again?—That is a point, of course.

37253. (Mrs. Webb.) Would you contemplate making a minimum period of employment obligatory on the dock companies, so as to prevent them employing casual labour?—We did not so much contemplate that. We rather contemplated that the different employing companies should put as many men as possible on to their permanent staff, that is, should engage them by the week. Question of compulsory minimum period of employment for dock labour.

37254. And in that way you would get a minimum period of employment?—We would get a minimum for the permanent men. Then we contemplated that there would be another number of men who could be sent from one employer to another, and in that way they could get a full week, although no one employer could give them a full week. In that way we think we would reduce the number of men who were dependent upon entirely casual employment.

37255. And then would you clear out the remainder?— Migration Then we would dispose of the remainder. But you must and not imagine that we would be waiting until, so to speak, emigration as we found 2,000 standing entirely idle. We would be remedies for dealing with this matter all along. May I say in unemploy-connection with this very matter, just to show how soon the ment.
benefit is felt of sending people away who are in the surplus, that when we had been some years sending away families to the factories, and had sent away a number of widows who were in the habit of doing charring and washing in Liverpool, the late Mr. William Rathbone made some inquiry and found that the condition of charwomen was distinctly improved on account of their numbers having been reduced—there was a greater demand for them, and their position was improved, as they were getting more work. Arguing in the same way, I would say that if we send 1,000 men away the remaining 1,000 would immediately begin to experience a benefit from it, and the effect of that benefit upon their moral condition we can hardly estimate.

37256. (Mr. Lansbury.) I agree, of course, that better organised methods of loading and unloading, with the minimum period that a man should be employed fixed is all to the good. I only want to suggest to you that during your life at Liverpool you must have seen enormous improvements both in the steamships and in the whole method by which ships are loaded and unloaded. Indeed, you have mentioned, either in your statement or in your oral evidence, something about the change that has taken place at Liverpool in connection with the sailing ships?—Yes.

37257. That is partly the reason why you have your Question of casual labour; ships empty quicker now—much quicker proportionate than in the old days; and we have no guarantee that all increase of that will not be enormously improved during the next few trade and years. Therefore continually your employment for men employment will be lessened, and you will find machinery doing it at Liverpool instead?—It does not follow that employment will be docks.
lessened. If we look to what has followed on the introduction of machinery, especially in the textile manufactures—

37258. Excuse me, I want to stick to the docks for a moment. Is it not the fact that the volume of business at Liverpool docks is very much larger?—Yes.

37259. And the number of men employed very much less?—No, not the number of men.

37260. It is, in proportion to the volume of trade, is it not?—I daresay that is so; but the volume of trade is increasing at such a rate that I very much question whether the absolute number of men employed is less. That is the point.

37261. No, I think the other is the point, if you will excuse me. However, I do not want to pursue it except to ask you whether you have got any guarantee that when you have fixed all this it will not be all upset by some clever person coming along with an arrangement by which automatically your ship gets loaded or emptied into the warehouses and trucks by a lesser number of men?—Even supposing I knew that that was taking place I would not hesitate to do the thing that appears to be right at the moment.

37262. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the supply of labour, is it not the fact that there is a constant and continual stream of incoming labour to Liverpool, and has that not been the case during your experience?—That is so.

37263. Fresh labour is continually coming in?—That is so.

37264. Attracted by what they imagine they will get, or perhaps really do receive when they come there?—That is so.

37265. Therefore anything which economises the work in Liverpool might be supposed simply to result in fewer new-comers coming in?—One would think so.

37266. At any rate, there would be that means of meeting the reduction?—Yes, it would appear as if that would work in the opposite direction. I think undoubtedly the reason why we get so many fresh comers into Liverpool is the fact that there is a practically open market for their labour. They can come and, we may say, almost without introduction can go and earn from 4s. 6d. to 5s. per day. That is a great temptation to men in the country who are earning very much less wages. One does not want of course to say that men must not go, or should not go to where they can get 4s. 6d. and 5s. a day, but unquestionably they do not always benefit themselves by doing so, only they do not find that out until some years afterwards.

37267. If fewer came in that would benefit those who were already working there?—That is so. We want in some natural way to reduce the number who are going down to the docks.

37268. (Chairman.) As I gather, although you are good enough to answer all these questions, you come here as representing the Charity Organisation Society in Liverpool and not as an expert on the docks?—That is so; but I have given a great deal of attention to the subject, and of course I do desire to improve the conditions there. Still, I am here rather as a representative of charity organisation.

37269. (Mrs. Webb.) I want to ask you about the widows with children. You said you had made an investigation into most of the cases given you by the Liverpool Board of Guardians. I think they have 219 widows with children on their books?—Yes, that is so.

37270. Have you any particulars about those 219?—I have not; I have only got particulars of those in which they judged the children were of such an age as that they could be sent to the factories.

37271. You have not got any particulars of the 219 then?—No, I have not.

37272. Could you let us have all the particulars about the twenty-six that you specially refer to, and which Mr. Lansbury asked for, I think?—I could about the fifteen that we took out, and I will (see Appendix No. III (H.).) In some cases, as I have mentioned, we have not gone further than simply asking if they would like to go away.

37273. I gather that one reason why you like migrating these children and their mothers is that you think the new surroundings more wholesome?—I think they are far better in every respect.

37274. And better for their character?—Altogether better. May I just read a letter in reference to one of these families? This is about the family where I said there was a crippled father. We wrote asking how the family was getting on, and the reply we got was:—"The total wages of the four girls this week is 43s. and they have been in the mill only five or six weeks. They are all progressing nicely and giving satisfaction. The older girl is doing the best, but all are earning what they are paid; none of it is on loan. The family appear nicely settled, happy and contented, and evidently have not regretted the change." Then, in addition to the £2 3s., the father, who is a cripple, is getting some 14s. a week.

37275. What is the object of your suggestion to enable that to be done on a large scale? I see that in thirty-five years you have practically only removed about 600 families; you say 2,268 people, which would be about 600 families I suppose?—Yes.

37276. Six hundred families in thirty-five years is not very many. Could that system be extended in any way, and how could you extend it?—The number is not very many. It is only families that have attained a certain age and size that can be self-supporting in the factory towns; and that limits the number of families that you can send.

37277. If you had further powers (and what powers do you suggest that boards of guardians should have?) how many of those 219 widows, who are at present on the books of the Liverpool Society, do you think could be dealt with in that way?—What strikes me, looking at the list, is this. Assuming that some years ago when first these families made application for parish relief they had been put under the oversight of a lady or a gentleman who would undertake to act as a friendly visitor to them, I take it that they probably would have been improved somewhat in character—I think we may fairly say that—and I think that before now they might have been given the idea of being entirely self-supporting as soon as it was possible, and amongst other means of being self-supporting would have been undoubtedly this one of sending them to the factories. That might have been only one means. I do not by any means say that there are not other ways in which the same object would be attained.

37278. Would you suggest that the board of guardians should, in certain cases, refuse outdoor relief, unless they did go to factory towns? How would you get over the natural objection in some to move?—That is an extremely difficult question. I would not like even to say that all these ten people who said that they were unwilling should, on that account, at once be refused outdoor relief; but I do think it is a proper case for inquiry on the part of the guardians why they will not go, and the guardians ought to be satisfied that there are good reasons before they continue outdoor relief.

37279. The guardians might take the line that the environment was not good enough for the children?—They might, in some way or other, endeavour to influence the family to what I believe would be a right decision.

37280. I gather that the Liverpool Board of Guardians only gives a shilling per child, and nothing for the parent; what is your opinion of that sort of relief in the case of widows with children?—My opinion is that it would be well to look at the whole facts of the case, to take them all into consideration, and to give a sufficient amount for healthy maintenance.

37281. What do you suggest is the way in which the central authority could see that boards of guardians did give adequate outdoor relief; what would you suggest?—In Elberfeld they work according to a scale, and relief is given up to that scale.

37282. We are told that that becomes very extravagant?—It does not appear to work out so.

37283. We were rather told that at Elberfeld it did become extravagant?—Of course it is very difficult to make any comparison with England, but it does not appear to me to work out so.

37284. Supposing you have a widow with five children, who, therefore, cannot work if she has got five children, what do you consider is adequate in Liverpool if she is to look after the five children properly?—That would depend altogether upon the circumstances in which they

Mr. W. Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

Transfer to factory districts of widows with children.

Influx of labourers into Liverpool caused by dock labour.

Conditions of widows with children in receipt of out-relief at Liverpool.

Question of adequate relief for widows with children.

Mr. W.
Grisewood.
21 Jan. 1907.

Question of adequate relief for widows with
children.

are placed. I cannot say that I could lay down just at the moment a scale; it depends, for instance, upon what the children could earn, and upon what she could earn.

37285. Supposing there were no earning child, as there might not be with five children under fourteen?—Then it appears to me that 1s. per child is insufficient.

37286. What would you call "sufficient"? Would it be a question of 15s. or £1—that is rather what I want to come to?—I cannot say that I have worked it out in that way, and I would rather not commit myself to any definite figures. The circumstances vary so much in each case.

37287. There is such a tremendous difference between 3s. and £1?—There is.

37288. I only want to know what is at the back of your mind, as a right standard about that?—I cannot say that I am provided with a standard that I would like to commit myself to. I look rather to dealing with the cases in another way.

37289. You would not at all contemplate giving the boarding-out price of 4s. per child, would you?—Do you mean for a mother at home?

37290. Yes?—It does not appear to me that that would be necessary.

37291. That is what you do give when you board a child out, is it not?—Yes, that is so.

37292. Supposing the mother could not earn, and that her whole time was taken up with looking after her children, would you be inclined to contemplate giving her the 4s. or 5s. per child?—I hardly think that that would be necessary; but, as I say, I would rather not commit myself to a definite scale.

Subscriptions to Liverpool
voluntary
hospitals.

37293. (Mr. Bentham.) Would you tell us whether the subscriptions to the voluntary hospitals in Liverpool are diminishing or increasing?—They vary from time to time. Sometimes when we have bad times you find that there is a tendency to diminish, but upon the whole, I think we may say they are steadily advancing.

37294. Could you put in a table shewing subscriptions for medical purposes of recent years, say over the last ten years, and shewing whether they have increased or decreased?—Yes. There would be no difficulty whatever in that.

37295. I do not mean in much detail, but just shewing the total figures so that we could see how these subscriptions fluctuate; and if you could include the endowments and the donations as well, that, I think, would be of assistance to us?—Yes, I will do that. (See Appendix No. III (I.)) 37296. In speaking of the remedial measures that might be taken by boards of guardians in dealing with cases, you instanced the case of children, and you also instanced the removal of persons to other districts: have you in mind any other kind of remedial measures that it might be possible for boards of guardians to adopt?—I do not know that I have new ideas in my mind. Of course I include such things as boarding out and providing for the children in different ways.

Difficulties as to proposed power to guardians to transfer widows with children to other districts

37297. You suggest that boards of guardians might have power to remove these families from one district to another?—Yes, I do.

37298. Have you considered the difficulties that would arise with the board of guardians in the district to which they might be sent?—I suppose that under the present Law of Settlement, there would be considerable difficulties: but the question is whether the law should not be modified in some way.

37299. In order to carry out your idea, it would be necessary to abolish the Law of Settlement altogether, would it not?—Or to provide for some modification. As regards the work that we at present carry on, no difficulties have arisen with any board of guardians, except in one case in which a difficulty did arise through illness overtaking a person and an application being made to the board of guardians. Otherwise, the whole of the work we have done in this direction has been done without any friction.

Proposed
power to guardians to pay travelling expenses of persons in search of
work.

37300. Would any difficulty arise with regard to the people who want to be removed to other districts applying to have their removal expenses paid, if the guardians had power to do it?—I would not give them power to do anything of the kind, unless there was some guarantee that when those people get there they would be provided for.

37301. A man might get a situation in another town, and then come back to the board of guardians in his old district and apply for his removal expenses to the new district where he has got work; should it be competent for his old board of guardians to so remove him?—I do not see why it should not be.

37302. In regard to co-operation between charity and Bradford boards of guardians, in answer to a question, I understood you to say that the City Guild of Help at Bradford Help. was not in close co-operation with the guardians?—That was not the point whether it was in close co-operation with the guardians. As I understood it, the point was whether it was in direct connection with them. Of course I know that it does co-operate with the board of guardians.

37303. Is it within your knowledge that the chairman of the board, for the time being, was practically one of the originators of the City Guild of Help?—Yes.

37304. And that its area is equivalent with Poor Law area?—Yes.

37305. And that in every case which is dealt with enquiries are made of the relieving officer before any pecuniary assistance is given?—I was not aware of that last point, but I can quite imagine that it would be so. The question put to me as I think you will remember, however, was, whether the Guild of Help was working in direct connection as a part of the Poor Law organisation. That is the question which I understood I was answering.

37306. The question, I am afraid, was not whether it was a part of the Poor Law, we all know that it is distinct from the Poor Law?—Decidedly so.

37307. It is simply working side by side with it, dealing with cases before they get to a state of destitution and in a manner which Poor Law could not deal with them, and the connection between the two is as close as possible?—So I assume.

37308. I was afraid the answer you gave to the question might be misleading?—I am sorry.

37309. In fact, one works in with the other as closely as it is possible for two organisations to work?—So I understood, but I was dealing in my former answer with the official spheres of action.

37310. (Mr. Chandler.) I would like to ask you if that very admirable scheme for the organisation of labour at the docks (see Appendix No. III (A.)) which you have appended to your statement, has yet been submitted to the conference?—It has been submitted to a committee organised by the conference, and I am sorry to say it has not been approved.

Scheme for organisation of dock labour at
Liverpool.

37311. Is that final?—I am afraid it is final for the time being.

37312. I suppose you could not tell us why it failed? It seems such an admirable scheme if it could only be accepted by the employers—the shipowners and the merchants?—We feel so, but I am sorry to say that neither employers nor workmen seemed to be prepared for it.

37313. The workmen as well?—Objections arose on the part of both parties. I may say, however, that that scheme of ours was only following out the scheme which is in actual operation in some of the docks in London, and which was introduced, I think, by Mr. Charles Booth. We simply followed closely upon those lines, and at the same time Mr. Charles Booth, junior, submitted another scheme upon very much the same lines, the two being under consideration together.

37314. And neither of them was accepted?—Neither.

37315. (Mr. Gardiner.) Is the conference adjourned or dissolved?—We still have to report to the conference. We did get certain points carried that were in themselves important. We got, for instance, a proposal carried that there should be what we call surplus stands, so that whenever men found that they were not wanted at their regular place of work, they might at once go to another stand provided in the neighbourhood. One difficulty with them is, that their stands are at such great distances from one another, that they cannot readily get from one to another, and in fact they do not know which one to go to. At these surplus stands it was intended that the men should congregate when they were not engaged in their own place, these stands being in telephonic communication with the different employers of labour, who would transmit the intimation when they were short. We carried that; and we also carried a proposal to limit the excessive overtime that some of the men work. So that we consider we did some good though we could not carry the larger scheme.

37316. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to Poor Law and charity, is it your idea that the Poor Law should become more and more an institution through which the cases should be treated in accordance with the various ways in which treatment may seem desirable, or that the Poor Law should remain an allowance system rather? At present you would say perhaps that it is an allowance system as far as out-door relief is concerned?—Yes; to a large extent it is.

37317. Do you propose to make a change in that direction?—So far as it is possible. It may be that we should have, say, a widow with a young family, and it may then be necessary to make an allowance; but my point is, that every case should be dealt with as a problem in itself precisely the same as we deal with our cases in charity organisation work. We say, What can be done for this family? In what way can they be restored to self-support? What natural means of help are there? And we resort to those means of help, and we use those means of setting them on their feet again.

37318. That is rather what I meant by treatment. Taking the cases as you see them at an out-relief committee do you find a great many cases quite low down, so to speak, in point of ability, and in point of energy?—Yes.

37319. And yet these cases are receiving a very small amount of out-door relief?—Yes.

37320. How would you propose to deal with those, because at least, on the face of the evidence, the room and the scope for treatment in their case would be small?—Yes, that would be so. I fear there would still be a number who could not be treated in what we might call an effective way; but, at all events, when they came into a position to be treated effectively, it ought to be done.

37321. Would you propose to act through their children or in some way like that, if it is possible?—In any that presented itself.

37322. Do you feel that the amount of relief is so small in those cases in the way of allowance that the withdrawal of it and the offer of the house, or the leaving of the people to themselves would suffice? Do the few shillings make all that difference when the rent is so high that it sometimes appears that the rent, if it is as stated, really consumes all the relief and more?—It does not appear to me when a very small amount is given—an amount which is inadequate, however we may interpret inadequacy—that it is fair to the people themselves. It is not fair to the children, and I think the thing ought to be faced in one way or the other.

37323. That is to say, there should be either an adequate allowance, or proper treatment, or the house?—Yes; which ever is the best way of treatment.

37324. You refer in Paragraph 32 to the question of new charities, and you say "At present it is open to anyone to set up an institution, without any responsible committee to answer for its genuineness." Would you be in favour of a borough authority having a voice in the control of such a matter, or would you link it to some general registration of charities for the whole country?—I think the borough could do very effective work. Supposing, for instance, we could get a Council of Charity on which there should be representatives of the borough, and, it may be, representatives of the guardians. I think they would be able to do very effective work in that respect.

37325. But you clearly would have, by Statute law, to obtain power to control the establishment of charities or to fix the conditions, would you not?—I have not looked forward to that yet. I think that by the force of public opinion directed by a recognised representative body, it might be done.

37326. In the case of refuges a very large number of people may suddenly come together and then form an important number in regard to the Poor Law demand, may they not?—Yes.

37327. Would you be prepared to let the question be settled as to whether a refuge should be started by the goodwill and understanding of the people at large, or would you try to have some authoritative power in your own hands?—I almost think it would be best in a case such as you speak of to have statutory power of that kind. Of course that is a very important question.

37328. When you refer to the Poor Law dealing with the question, you mention in Paragraph 33 district committees for consultation; do you mean district committees under the Poor Law?—I meant on the Elberfeld system, whether associated directly with the Poor Law or supplied by voluntary charity. I think it would be better if possible that they should be in actual connection with the Poor Law.

37329. Have you in mind some scheme by which the central Poor Law body which then would be created would devolve work upon the district committees, members of the central body being chairmen of the committees or something of that kind?—Yes, something of that kind. It is difficult to work out a scheme that would suit all our varied conditions, and my idea is that if it were worked out in half a dozen of the large towns we would get a workable scheme out of it in five to ten years from now.

37330. In regard to the Poor Law you would perhaps adhere to the general view that Poor Law relief is for the destitute, which is not unlike the view which might be said to obtain in Elberfeld?—At present it is difficult to exactly define what we mean by destitute, and I would rather approach the question on different lines. I would take over the case of any family who fell into distress and were unable to suitably provide for themselves, and would look at it quite apart; it might be that they were able to provide for a portion, at all events, of their maintenance, but not for the whole, and you could hardly call that a destitute case.

37331. (Chairman.) I suppose you would like to get the case before it became destitute?—Yes, that is so; or whenever a case might come up, and whether it was destitute or not, I think it ought to be looked at as a whole. It appears to me that there is a want somewhere in that respect, and that whenever a case of destitution or distress, which is partial destitution of course, comes before the proper authority, it ought to be taken in hand with a view of bringing it into a satisfactory position, whatever that position may be, of self-support if possible.

37332. I will take this as a sort of typical case: Assuming a woman's husband died, and she got compensation, say £50 or £100, and that she and the family had spent all of this money except £7 or £8, would you prefer that they should come in before the £7 or £8 was gone?—Decidedly. I would prefer to get hold of the £100 if I could. I may say we have several cases of that kind on hand now in which persons have received compensation, and the amount due to the widow, sometimes a large amount, has been paid directly to the widow and has in a few cases not been wisely spent; but the amount payable to the children has been spread over the years of their child-life and has been placed in our hands in one or two cases to administer under the direction of the court.

37333. (Mr. Loch.) To revert to the question I put just now, in Elberfeld they have rules that the relief should be only what is "absolutely necessary," or some such phrase as that?—Yes.

37334. Would you be prepared to adhere to that so far as public poor relief is concerned?—I would.

37335. And that anything over and above that, if one may take that line, would, as in Elberfeld, come from without; that is to say, voluntary relief would be added to the other?—Yes; I suppose it would be necessary that it should take that form, but it would be better if it could all come through one agency. In the case of Elberfeld you will remember that the voluntary charities are, several of them, administered by the Poor Law administrators.

37336. Yes, and that is a further step. I wanted to know rather whether you would take the line of dividing the cases as between your Elberfeld system of the future

Mr. W. Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

Mr. W.
Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

The respective functions of Poor Law
and charity.

and the charities, each dealing with the whole of a case; or whether you would divide the work by the charitable money supplementing the poor relief money?—It appears to me that how it would work would be in this way: Supposing a case came to charity in the first instance it would be dealt with by charity; supposing, however, the case came to the Poor Law, then it ought to be in the power of the Poor Law to go to the different charitable institutions and say, "This appears to be a case for your institution, will you accept the responsibility of it?" And then the Poor Law need do no more in that matter. That is what is done with regard to the cases that are referred by the various boards of guardians to ourselves. We have to pledge ourselves to give relief in the first instance, to prevent any mishap or any hardship on the part of the poor people. We then make our inquiry and we decide whether it is a case that we could suitably help or not. If we find that there are circumstances attending it that make it unsuitable we simply refer it back to the Poor Law guardians.

37337. Supposing you had fixed an allowance of a certain amount payable from the Poor Law, would you be prepared to accept that as, from the point of view of the Poor Law, absolutely sufficient and all that is absolutely necessary, and then supplement it from voluntary sources?—I think it would be better that it should be done through one agency, whether it came from the Poor Law or whether it came from voluntary sources.

Transfer to factory districts of widows with
children.

37338. In regard to the cases which you have sent to the factories and so on, the 600 families in thirty-five years, I suppose that the state of labour in certain years is much better in Liverpool than in other years?—That is so.

37339. So these 600 families should not be averaged over the thirty-five years, because they would be sent in blocks at different periods?—That is so—they have been sent in periods of considerable activity in the factory districts.

Proposal that the guardians should deal with the unemployed by providing temporary
work.

37340. I understood that you had felt the need in Liverpool of something like a stone-yard or some immediate reference for unemployed persons at the nick of time in winter, and that you would also have an able-bodied workhouse; but do you think a stone-yard is wanted as well as the able-bodied workhouses?—With the cases of able-bodied men recurring each winter, as they are now doing, until we find a better and more permanent way of disposing of this surplus labour it would appear as if some means of setting them to work were required.

37341. In fact, you want some interim treatment by way of finding artificial work if necessary, just to carry you forward?—Simply as a temporary expedient.

37342. Do you think the treatment of the unemployed generally should form part of the Poor Law system of the country?—Do you mean as against the system of distress committees?

37343. Yes; would you have one system or two?—I do not see why it should not have been taken up by the Poor Law. It appears to me that it could be quite properly carried out by the Poor Law, as it is in Elberfeld. I think that the distress committees are exposed to much the same dangers that the Poor Law has passed through, so far as I can see their working.

37344. How would you propose to deal with it through the Poor Law? Would you propose that the Poor Law should do something of such work as is now being done in Liverpool in the draining of that lake and so on?—Yes, in the way of providing work, or obtaining work to give to the men temporarily. I would not propose that any of these should be set up as a permanency, or that the men should be permanently employed upon it.

37345. That is to say, instead of the distress committee coming to terms with the borough council for the supply of some particular sort of work, you would have the Poor Law authority do it?—It might just as well be done by the Poor Law authority.

37346. And then you would have, in addition, the stone-yard for immediate purposes?—If we had some means of setting men to work either on the land or in any other way, of course a stone-yard, as such, might be unnecessary. I only think we should have some means of temporarily setting them to work.

37347. Do you think it is feasible in a large urban centre to provide the immediate help that you want except in the form of a stone-yard, or something of that kind? Can you imagine a labour system in the country which would be a sufficient equivalent?—I should think it possible. It has not been tried yet, of course, and even the distress committees have not yet taken up that question, but we have had it in consideration.

37348. Have you found that the close co-operation between boards of guardians and the distress committees has been a great service?—Yes, undoubtedly.

37349. And you are not in favour of the police making inquiry into these unemployed cases, as I think was done in Manchester?—I should not think it was desirable or even necessary to let the police take these cases up.

37350. But you do not think there is any harm in the relieving officers making the inquiries in regard to unemployed cases?—I think it is much better in the meantime, so long as we have the distress committees, which have their own officers, that they should refer to the relieving officers and also to a society like ours, as they do.

37351. But if the system were merged into the poor relief system of the country, would you propose to have a special staff?—I would propose to let the relieving officers deal with the matter, permitting them to be assisted in that work by the voluntary friendly visitors of the district committees.

37352. (Mr. Lansbury.) Would you be in favour of disqualifying men from voting who were relieved through the Poor Law because of unemployment—you know under the present Act they are not disqualified?—It appears to me that on general principles it is desirable, but I certainly must say that when we are assisting the men in the way of giving them work I am disposed to think it would be better to do away with the disability.

37353. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) You have a labour bureau in Liverpool, have you not?—Yes, we have.

37354. Would you propose to continue that? Has it been doing good work?—I would do so. I think labour bureaux are going to be one of the most important features of our future action in regard to the unemployed.

37355. I think you told us when there, that you had found the labour bureau very efficacious lately, and that there were certain cases where you had applications from South Wales for miners; were you able to supply those?—We have not yet taken action with regard to that particular matter, and I am sorry to say the labour bureau in Liverpool has not been so useful as one might desire.

37356. Is it kept open during the summer months as well as during the winter months?—When we commence the actual operations of the Distress Committee we practically closed the labour bureau.

37357. Is the register kept open?—The register or bureau is kept open all the year round, but I must say we seem to have failed to get into touch with employers.

37358. (Sir Henry Robinson.) Among the applicants for assistance to your association have you many Irishmen?—Yes, we have a large number of Irish people. Of course the labouring population of Liverpool includes a large number of Irish people.

37359. Have you a large proportion or a small proportion, would you say?—A large proportion, I should say.

37360. Is a period of residence in the city one of the conditions?—Not for assistance from our society.

37361. Do you deport any of them to Ireland? Do you send back any of those who are willing to go?—We do send an occasional case, where a man has recently come from Ireland and needs to be sent back.

37362. And is willing to go back?—Yes; but making it a condition, as we do before we send anybody away, that he should be able to get work, when he gets there, there are not many opportunities of sending a man back to Ireland, I am sorry to say.

37363. Do you refer to the boards of guardians many cases of Irish people requiring to go back to Ireland who you think ought to be sent back to Ireland?—No. There is not a very large number who come to us in that way.

37364. Do the Irish people who are in Liverpool for a short time generally apply for relief when they require it to your association, or to the board of guardians?—They

Question of co-operation between distress committees and guardians or police.

Disfranchisement as a condition of relief of the unemployed.

Value of labour bureaux, but small result at Liverpool.

Irish seeking assistance in Liverpool and questio of their retur to Ireland.

apply to one or the other, but it would be difficult to say in what proportion they approach the two bodies.

37365. If Irish persons out of work were in Liverpool would their best chance of obtaining work be to apply to the board of guardians who can send them back direct?—Yes. Of course the board of guardians can send them back irrespective of work, on account of their settlement. In the case of organised charity we do not act in that way; we only send a man anywhere on being assured that he will find work or be otherwise provided for.

37366. I see that your income is about £270,000 a year?—The income of the various charities is so.

37367. What is the cost of the organisation for administering all that?—You will find it in the table appended to my statement (See Appendix No. III. (A.).) For the Central Relief Society the subscriptions, donations, legacies, and so on, give a total income of £5,671. Under the head of "Maintenance" we have put £4,722, but that of course includes all our expenditure. In our report you will find that for 1905 the total amount spent on relief was £3,022, and the expenses you will find come to £1,241.

37368. (Mr. Loch.) By "Maintenance" do you mean the management expenses?—We mean the whole expenses; we have not distinguished it. I see the point that is raised there. This statement of income and expenditure was not prepared specially for this Commission.

37369. With regard to the whole of the charities you deal with, how much would be the total management expenses of the whole of those charities taking hospitals and all?—That figure would be extremely difficult to get. I have not got it.

37370. You could not treat the charities of the whole area as a single unit with a certain amount spent on working expenses out of a single annual income?—It would be extremely difficult to do that.

37371. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to the working of the Unemployed Workmen Act in Liverpool, you say the provisions with regard to emigration have been beneficial; have they been much used in Liverpool?—We have sent away either eleven or twelve families as an experiment. We have not yet got a report from our administrative officer as to how they have turned out, but we understand, generally speaking, that they have turned out quite satisfactorily.

37372. At present you have sent out only twelve families?—We have only sent twelve families simply by way of experiment.

37373. Where did they go to—Canada?—They went to Canada.

37374. When you say you think the Act could be worked by the Poor Law, would there not be on the part of the unemployed an objection to be brought into contact with the Poor Law?—There would have been undoubtedly; looking at it in that respect, I think the Act was wise, because undoubtedly it would have been very difficult indeed to get it into proper working, as a branch of Poor Law.

Mr. W. Grisewood.

21 Jan. 1907.

Emigration from Liverpool under the Unemployed Workmen Act.

Mr. WALLACE SMITH, called; and Examined.

37375. (Chairman.) You have prepared for us a short paper, I think, which we may take as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. For the past thirty years I have been a Poor Law officer, either as collector, superintendent collector, or assistant overseer having charge of the laying and collection of the Poor Rates: for about fifteen years I was assistant clerk or clerk to the urban district council, having a great deal to do with bodies of workmen: in the early stages of the growth of Walton from a population of 5,000 to about 60,000 (in about twenty years) I was engaged in other capacities bringing me into touch with artisans of various grades, and for the last twenty-five years I have been an active member of the local lodges belonging to the Oddfellows (Manchester Unity), frequently attending for them at the annual conference, where over one million members are represented.

2. Though I do not belong to any other thrift society. I have constantly attempted to study the question of thrift from a broad point of view, and some years ago I held an appointment, by permission of the Treasury, as a public auditor under the Friendly Societies Act. And last year I was appointed by the Liverpool City Council a member of the Distress committee, to represent the friendly societies of the town.

3. The three districts of my own society, representing the whole of the City of Liverpool and a portion of the suburbs, contain twenty-eight lodges for males over sixteen years of age, with a membership of about 4,000; a female lodge, recently started, with about forty members; and three juvenile associations with a membership of about 2,000. The membership of the adult lodges is maintained with difficulty and numerical increase is slow: many join, but they are almost balanced by secessions, a regrettable feature entirely absent here fifteen or twenty years ago, when my district was more of a country nature; and existing now, I think, in consequence of town attractions and artificialities. The lodges do not grow in anything-like equal proportion, even when equal opportunities exist, a result accounted for by the individual qualities of a few members of each. It is easy to point to cases where the energy and ability of two or three men have raised a lodge to an enviable position, financially and socially. In this neighbourhood a great drawback to the friendly society movement is the difficulty of obtaining suitable rooms in which to meet. My own lodge has met both on and away from licensed premises, now meeting in a new room attached to a hotel. Copy of notice exhibited each lodge night herewith.

4. The class of our membership is very varied; no special trade or occupation bulks largely; and practically all regard their membership from a strictly business point of view and take all the benefits covered by their subscription—Doctor when sick, sick pay, and death benefit.

5. Though I cannot give figures, I am convinced that very few of our members apply, even in extreme old age, for Poor Law relief, and I make the same statement with reference to seeking aid from any local charities, including the Central Relief Society, of which I am a member.

6. Several of the best lodges have been managed so well, by the members—for the members—that they are able to give greater benefits than promised. For instance, I know cases where £30 funeral benefit has been paid in place of £12 due, and in my own lodge (the "Botanist") a surplus of £842 has just been declared for the five years ended December, 1905. (Copies of Valuers' Report herewith.)

7. I enclose our district year books, showing contributions, benefits, etc.
Liverpool District } Covering the City of Liverpool
Bootle " } and part of the outskirts.
*W. Derby " }

8. In my opinion friendly societies are not properly valued by the citizens who should use them for direct benefit or by those who should lead public opinion; the accounts of the best are under official supervision, and what is wanted is support for the social side of the ordinary lodge evenings, so that the ordinary member would come for relaxation and friendly intercourse. In my opinion, the effect of well-managed friendly societies on the country's welfare has been of great value, but greater still on the moral and intellectual fibre of the individual members; while I think the effect of the Poor Law on character is exactly the opposite; the first makes all for good, the second all for bad.

9. Summing the position up in a sentence, I think self help is the best, but men must make it possible for every man to help himself.

* Does not issue a hand-book; details as to finance practically like the others.

Mr. W. Smith.

21 Jan. 1907.

Varied class of members of friendly societies.

Members of friendly societies rarely apply for relief.

Instances of financial success of friendly societies.

Contributions, benefits, etc., of Oddfellows in Liverpool.

Need for more encouragement of friendly societies.

Comparative effect of friendly society and Poor Law relief on character.

Mr. W. Smith. 10. I know that in this union the guardians work to some extent in conjunction with some charitable agencies, particularly the Central Relief Society and the Distress committee, and the plan acts very well.

21 Jan. 1907. Co-operation of Guardians in large towns with many charities, if some general re-organisation took place; now, I think, some people get too little help and others too much; and I suggest the official register of each Distress committee as a base to work from.

Need for organisation of local charities. 37376. (Chairman.) From your statement I see that you have been a Poor Law officer, then subsequently you were appointed Public Auditor under the Friendly Societies Act, and you have since taken a considerable part in looking after the friendly societies of the City of Liverpool?—That is so.

Small extent of friendly society movement in Liverpool. 37377. Your particular society has about 4,000 members in Liverpool; are there any other societies in Liverpool besides your own?—There are many in number, but they have not many members in proportion to the population.

37378. So that the friendly society movement has not made great strides in Liverpool?—No, it has not.

Class and wages of members of friendly societies. 37379. You state that the members of the friendly societies do not apply for Poor Law relief; what is the scale of wage below which people would not be members of a friendly society?—In Liverpool, where my chief experience has been, I think there is hardly any wage that keeps a man out of some kind of friendly society, because he probably will join what they call a slate club, that is, a dividing society by which he gets at Christmas-time the proportion of his money back that has not been used among the members for sick pay.

37380. Taking the societies which do not divide every year, taking, that is, the ordinary recognised or registered friendly societies, do many people earning a wage below 25s. a week belong to them?—Yes. Might I refer you to Paragraph 4 of my statement where I point out the class of members? They all take practically what they insure for, and we have very few ornamental members, that is, men who belong to it for the sake of encouragement only.

37381. You think a good many of your members are in receipt of permanent wages of less than 25s.?—Taking the year round, yes, I do. Their work is irregular. Putting it at an average of 25s., I think many of our members are in receipt of that wage or of a figure below that.

37382. Those men would be, I assume, men engaged in the docks?—Many of them would be, but not generally. We have a large number of men who are clerks with small wages and men who are store-keepers, warehousemen and men of that kind—not dock labourers.

Extent of friendly societies and clubs among casual labourers. 37383. I suppose the dock labourer does not as a rule belong to friendly societies?—If the dock labourer belongs to any society he belongs to a society of his own. For instance, the coal-heavers have one society of their own. The different classes of dock labourers have clubs amongst themselves and they do not belong to one of the large friendly societies.

37384. Are these clubs more in the nature of slate clubs?—Some of them are not. For instance, the coal-heavers' club is, I believe, rather an important one. It is a very old established one I think. But they have it solely among themselves. It is one I think with plenty of funds.

37385. Should you say that the casual labourer generally did not belong to a benefit society?—Yes.

37386. Should you say that accounts for the movement making so little progress in Liverpool because there is so very much casual labour there?—I think so. The earnings are less than the sum you mention, 25s.

Need for encouragement of friendly societies. 37387. Do you think if the social side of friendly societies was developed more, that would largely increase their numbers; is that your view?—Yes. I think people in authority encourage the wrong kind of society, but of course without any intention of doing wrong. I think clergymen and ministers who have their own clubs in connection with their churches and chapels think they are doing a very good thing; but they encourage clubs which terminate year by year, or which have no connection with a large society, and consequently the averages of losses cannot be divided up enough.

37388. You suggest in your Paragraph 11 that much good would be done if some general reorganisation took place; do you mean of charities generally?—Yes. Need for organisation of local charities.

37389. That paragraph refers to the charities, does it?—Yes, it does. I think we have got too many in Liverpool.

37390. You suggest "the official register of each distress committee as a base to work from." That would give you the names of the individuals relieved; was that your idea?—Yes, it is the largest list of a permanent character.

37391. So as to prevent the same person receiving help or charity from more than one committee or charity?—Yes, and not only to prevent their receiving help, but to prevent their being offended by a number of people going to their house time after time to inquire about them when they are in poor circumstances. I feel, and I know, that self-respecting people who are in temporary distress, find it offensive when several agents of one kind and another go to them.

37392. Do you know anything about the small charities, many of them of a religious character?—I know the list issued by Mr. Grisewood's committee which contains the names of about sixty, I believe. The distress committee of Liverpool, of which I am a member, a short time ago allowed any recognised agent from any of these societies to apply to the clerk, and he would have given to him for the private use of his society the information collected by us and put upon the official register. In return, the distress committee receive aid of this kind when they ask for it. That is why I suggest this official register of the distress committee of each town should be made the bed rock to work from. The questions put before that register can be utilised are of such a searching nature that in my opinion they are quite sufficient, if they are put to a family once and are available privately for the managers of any charity. Proposal to make registers of distress committees and labour bureaux accessible to agents of local charities.

37393. The case would be sufficient to justify further relief as regards good cases, and refusal as regards the others?—Yes.

37394. The amount of outdoor relief given in Liverpool compared with what is given in other districts seems very low; is that due, do you think, to their being helped by charity as well; have you any knowledge upon that point?—I have no personal knowledge of it. I have been a Poor Law officer, but I have never been a relieving officer actually.

37395. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to your proposal to make use of the official register of the distress committees, that register would only include, would it not, applications made for work at a particular time?—The Liverpool register was opened for about eight months, and after that the labour bureau was opened for about four months. In speaking of the register, I mean the two sets of books covering the whole year.

37396. You are thinking of the labour bureau books as well as of the books in which applications are made for work to the distress committee?—Yes, because those books are now handed over to, and kept by, the same set of officials.

37397. For the purpose of the labour bureau you do not have a record paper in the same kind of way, do you, as when application is made to the distress committee for work?—I do not think the same kind of paper is filled up but information, I believe, is got of the same character.

37398. Are the questions which are put of the same character as they are in the record paper? Do they go into the previous history of the man and so on?—I believe they do.

37399. You have not got with you a form which they use at the labour bureau, have you?—No, I have not, but it shall be sent you. (Subsequently sent. See App. No. IV (A).)

37400. (Mr. Chandler.) In summing up the relative merits of friendly societies and the Poor Law as a means for helping men, you say in Paragraph 9 that you think, "self-help is the best; but men must make it possible for every man to help himself;" would you expound a little more fully what you mean by that last remark?—Roughly I mean this: My experience shows that among deserving the unemployed who have come under my notice before the distress committee existed, and since the distress committee brought them before my notice by the hundred, employed. Proportion of cases among the unemployed.

there are about 75 per cent. deserving cases and 25 per cent. undeserving. The 25 per cent. undeserving I would refer to the guardians, and the 75 per cent. I consider ought to be attended to case by case, somewhat on the lines Mr. Grisewood mentioned a few minutes ago. No man who is willing to work should suffer absolutely to the detriment of his physical condition without his having a chance of work offered to him; in other words, I believe there ought to be work found of a kind for every man who is willing to work. That is my meaning.

37401. It should be made possible for every man willing to work to help himself in that way?—Yes; the wages of course being regulated by the conditions laid down in the new Act of Parliament, the Unemployed Workmen Act.

37402. Is it greater facilities that you are looking to for providing employment; is that your meaning?—Yes, but I want to accentuate, if you will allow me, the point that it is quite easy to get to know and to sort out the men who are willing to work and the men who are not willing to work. Previous to the Unemployed Workmen Act it was not possible, but now the law has allowed us to spend the municipal rates in obtaining all this information, and I believe it is wrong morally in every way that any man who is willing to work should not be allowed to work at wages which will prevent him and his family from starving. I believe the provision that the wage shall be under the standard rate of wages which is laid down in the new Act of Parliament is a safe one to go upon, that is to say, the man gets, broadly, enough to prevent him being starved or driven to the guardians. If he is driven to the guardians, my experience is that he and his family lose all independence of spirit.

37403. Are you hopeful that the operations of distress committees will meet this difficulty?—If the Act is administered fairly, I am.

37404. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) When you say every man has a right to work, do you mean that he has a right to work just where he is if he does not wish to go to another place to work?—No. I am an advocate of emigration under fair conditions.

37405. Do you consider that it is a fair offer to a man to offer to emigrate him?—Only on the conditions that have been laid down by the Liverpool committee, that he shall not be sent away without his own consent and without work is waiting for him. It was on those conditions that the twelve men were sent last year as an experiment from Liverpool by the committee.

37406. What would you do with a man who says he will not emigrate and demands work in Liverpool? Do you consider he has a right to have work made for him there?—His case in my opinion should be examined from every point of view. If he is strong physically, and if he has not a large family, I think then he ought to have emigration offered to him; but if he has a large family I do not think it is reasonable to ship him off to Canada with the whole of his family at the cost of the town. I would attempt to make provision for that man having work apart from emigration.

37407. I was not thinking very much of the cost to the town, which seems to me a minor point. I was supposing that he says he does not like emigrating and insists on having work given him there; should we then take his liking into consideration?—Only on the conditions I have mentioned as to his own health and the size of his family. If he did offer a suitable case for emigration I should refuse to find him other work.

37408. About the information got by the distress committee, is it got simply by inquiries put to the man, or have you an agent who verifies his statements?—There are paid agents of the distress committee who visit each home.

37409. Do they go to the employers and ask as to a man's character?—I do not think so. They apply, I believe, in writing in a number of cases, but I do not think they do in all. So many of the men are casually employed at the docks, and as such they are knocked off, many of them, at each half-day and they are engaged twice a day.

37410. But the information is not merely the man's own statement about himself, is it?—I think in many cases it is.

37411. Do you suggest that that is sufficient to go upon for all the other charities to give a man charitable assistance on his own statement merely?—No. The unemployed are dealt with under an Act of Parliament, and the charities which I conclude you are speaking of are voluntary gifts which of course have to be more safeguarded.

37412. I thought you suggested that the information which the distress committees have would be adequate for the charities if they applied there, and that the charities need not make inquiries on their own account?—I see the point. My suggestion has not yet been carried out, but I have no doubt that if it were carried out the question of the man's character would have to be inquired into always. I think each place should be dealt with on its merits. In Liverpool where the work is so much at the docks and men have to be engaged for the half-day, it would be impossible to get a character from an employer in the case of a man who had been working, say, three half-days a week. Such a man is simply taken on for half a day and gets his 3s. or 4s., or whatever it may be, and then he is done with.

37413. Then you would rather agree that the charitable organisations want a method of inquiry of their own in addition to what the distress committees have, would you not?—The distress committee system would have to be carefully considered if my proposal came to anything here.

37414. Have you formed any opinion as to the position of thrift societies generally in Liverpool; are they increasing or are they falling off?—I think they are increasing. I believe that in a short time there will be a considerable increase, because we have within the last three or four years obtained the membership of the Lord Mayor for two or three years in succession, the Town Clerk, the Lord Bishop of Liverpool and various other men whose example is looked up to. I believe that in a short time the friendly society movement will again make great progress in Liverpool.

37415. Do you suggest that the Bishop showing a saving disposition rather helps the people also?—The Bishop and the other gentlemen mentioned were asked to join, and did so, not as a patronising us, but to assist in calling attention to the value of the friendly society movement as a whole. And beyond that I would point out the Bishop's example to his clergy is a great thing.

37416. And through them to the people?—The clergy in a great number of cases are not business men, and they encourage societies which are not properly sound. Putting it quite plainly, I believe his clergy will follow his example.

37417. You have been thirty years working in Liverpool, I understand; do you think that the condition of the people, taken as a whole, as to poverty has become better or worse during that time?—I think it is better.

37418. You think that it is on the upward grade?—Yes.

37419. (Mr. Gardiner.) In reference to the slow increase in your friendly society membership, are the juvenile societies of any value?—Yes, they are of very great value. Might I add to the statement that I make in paragraph 3? I say there that there are "three juvenile associations with a membership of some hundreds." I have since discovered that the membership is about 2,000. I prepared this statement without being able to get at the data. Their membership, as I say, is about 2,000, and it is rapidly increasing. In my opinion that is the most valuable asset of the three. The attempt to help forward the female societies is the least hopeful, chiefly because the wages for females in Liverpool are very low—in that respect Liverpool is quite different to other parts of Lancashire, where the textile industries are prevalent.

37420. Have you any knowledge of the condition of the women's friendly societies in those textile districts? Does that come under your observation as a member of the society?—Strange to say they have not made much progress, but it is only six years ago that female branches were legalised in the society to which I belong, and to course six years ago there was no boom in cotton—it is only about the last two years that there has been a boom. In my opinion female friendly societies will grow very rapidly, if properly encouraged: the financial side is less difficult to overcome than the social side, which should be encouraged by all who attempt to lead public

Mr. W.
Smith.

21 Jan. 1907.

Proposal to make registers of distress committees and labour bureaux accessible to agents of local charities.

Prospects of friendly society movement in Liverpool.

Improved condition of the poor in Liverpool.

Flourishing juvenile friendly societies in Liverpool.

Little success of women's friendly societies and reasons therefor.

Need and value of Unemployed Workmen Act.

Emigration as a remedy for unemployment.

Investigation of cases by distress committee.

Mr. W.
Smith.

21 Jan. 1907.

The prospects of women's friendly societies.

Proportion of deserving among unemployed and need and feasibility of providing work for them.

The wages for "unemployed" work should be below the standard wage.

Applications for poor relief by former members of friendly
societies.

action. In fact the only thing that I can see to keep them back is where women are earning enough singly to save them from combining for such things as medical aid and sick pay. With us in Liverpool it is quite different; the women there earn very little, and there are no settled trades for women.

37421. (Miss Hill.) Supposing there were work artificially supplied to all the people who are willing to work and who are out of work, I mean supplied by public bodies or by the State, I suppose it would be very difficult to arrange that the work should stimulate their energies very much, would it not?—Not the energies of the 25 per cent. I mentioned. I believe that the unemployed are to be divided into two classes, and I have estimated—and I have had my estimate tested—that 75 per cent. are deserving either at the moment they come or are on the verge of turning out good or bad through either encouragement or non-encouragement; and the energies of that 75 per cent. are capable of being sustained and improved by their having work given to them.

37422. Would you say that was the case even when work was supplied, because the man wanted the work rather than because the work was wanted, and when there was not the ordinary stimulant of having to please an employer or to get through a certain amount of work? Has it not usually been the case that when work is supplied in that kind of way there are some men who do not work in the same way they would do if it were independent work?—Yes, but those men would come within the 25 per cent. If we put 100 men to this work I believe 25 per cent. would be made worse by it and would have no force of character encouraged; but 75 per cent. I believe would be improved.

37423. Would it not also form a difficulty in getting the men to go where there was real work—we will say to emigrate or to go to another part of England where there was real work wanted doing?—That difficulty I believe is met as far as it can be—I admit it cannot be met fully—by the rate of wages being kept below the standard rate. As an instance might I point to Liverpool, where the men work for a portion of every day in the week averaging thirty-six hours in the week, and can only earn 14s. 5d. in that time? They are free in the morning until nine o'clock and after half-past four in the afternoon to seek other employment; that gives them a chance of going down to the docks from seven o'clock in the morning.

37424. I gather you feel it a very important point to keep the wages lower than the full market rate, in the case of work which is supplied for the sake of giving it to people who are unemployed?—Yes. My contention is that a man should simply have enough work of this kind to prevent him being starved. The result in Liverpool last year was shown in the report of the City Engineer. When the men came to work they were not physically fit for it until they had had a week or two's money. That is what I think should not be allowed. No man if he is willing to work should be allowed to have his flesh and blood failing to that extent that he should not be able to carry on some kind of work.

37425. (Mr. Booth.) You say that very few of your members apply, even in extreme old-age, for Poor Law relief; but I suppose it does not follow that the people who apply may not have been members and ceased to be members of a friendly society?—That is so; we have many secessions.

37426. I was not thinking for the moment of what might perhaps be called secessions, but of those who have dropped out through becoming impoverished or through being unable to keep up their subscriptions?—You are asking me as to the one society, I take it?

37427. I would rather ask you about your own society, the Oddfellows, as you know most about that. In your case must you qualify the statement that very few of your members apply, by saying that it does not follow that the people who apply may not formerly have been members, and must you not say, yes, they may formerly have been members, because you have had many secessions?—Yes.

37428. Then I ask you the question, what are the causes of these secessions? Of course if a man joins a society and almost immediately leaves it again, it is plain that he is in no sense able to plead that he has been a member of your society. On the other hand, if a man has joined, and work, as he gets older, becomes irregular, and he finds it a great burden to pay his contribution any longer, and finally in fact he does not pay it, his case is rather different, because he at least has been for a substantial period a member. If the fact that few of your members apply merely means that they become so poor before they apply that they have ceased on that account to be members, that statement evidently is not quite justified, and I want to get to the bottom of it?—My answer is this—that so far as my own society is concerned as a whole there is provision in connection with the government by which a man may have applied to the payment of his subscriptions, to prevent him falling out of benefit, any accumulation of capital of previous years. Further, in connection with a temporary necessity for keeping him within benefit within the thirteen weeks which he is supposed to pay, we have benevolent funds in nearly all the lodges from which the secretary, on reporting to the lodge, will pay in order to keep the man in benefit. I can say positively that there are very few men leave the society through being unable to continue their subscriptions for that reason only.

37429. The other point I want to clear up is with regard to those branches of your society which dissolve because they get behindhand owing to a lack of new members. Occasionally I know of my own experience that a branch, or one of your lodges, will be, as it were, stranded; they do not get fresh blood, and finally they become insolvent; but they have some assistance, I think, in winding-up from the central funds, though at any rate the branch is wound up. The members—I have seen cases myself—are at the end thrown out of membership completely. At that time they are too old to join another lodge, but they are thrown out, and although they have been substantial members of one of your lodges or branches, if they should come upon the Poor Law they might truly say they had been a member, but after all they are no longer members. Does that happen?—No. Practically there is a provision by a levy over the whole unity for the expenses which may be caused by men of that kind. For instance, if a lodge goes down to, say, the number of twenty or thirty, and they become impoverished to such an extent that the total payments will not allow the lodge to be carried on locally, the members are transferred and are made district members, so their responsibility is passed over a larger area. In addition to that it is passed over to the unity fund. Those members are transferred and they are not thrown out of the society. That is where we claim an advantage over the societies that have to divide their funds every year.

37430. Does that apply to the sick benefit as well as to the death benefit?—Yes.

37431. That is as regards your own society; as far as you know do the facts differ at all materially for the other great societies?—No. All the large societies make some provision for taking over the men who have done their duty to the local lodge; if the local lodge fails they all make some provision.

Devices for preventing members of friendly societies losing membership through temporary inability to pay subscriptions.

The position of members of friendly society lodges which become insolvent.

SEVENTY-FIFTH DAY.

Tuesday, 22nd January, 1907.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. Sir HENRY A. ROBINSON, K.C.B.
 The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
 Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
 Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
 Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
 The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
 Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
 Mr. C. S. LOCH.

Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL, C.B.
 Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
 The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
 Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
 Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
 Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
 Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).
 Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

The Rev. SAMUEL FRANCIS COLLIER, called; and Examined.

37432. (Mr. Booth.) You are the superintendent of the Manchester and Salford Mission?—I am.

37433. You have prepared a statement which, if you will hand it in, we will treat as your evidence-in-chief, and questions will be asked you supplementing the statement and carrying out the subjects you have already indicated?—Certainly. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. Extent of Unemployment.—It is difficult to measure this by any method of canvass. The information is often unreliable. If it is known that there is some hope of relief a canvasser will find a ready response to his enquiries about the number of unemployed, and in any case there are always those who feel it to be to their interest to magnify the evil. There are also large numbers who are never in regular or constant work, and who may be, and often are, counted as unemployed because they only choose to work, or only secure work, three or four days a week. Generally speaking, statistics, except in the case of societies such as trades unions where there is registration, are incorrect.

2. Causes of Unemployment.—(a) Age limit—It is increasingly difficult for men of average ability in ordinary work, especially clerks, etc., to obtain employment if they happen to have lost their situations, and are thirty-five years of age and upwards. Even those with good testimonials find themselves handicapped because the employer seeks younger men, or has decided to employ young women.

(b) Sickness.—Health is the only capital many men have, and once sickness seizes the bread winner there is a possibility of loss of situation, and where sickness becomes chronic the impossibility of obtaining one.

(c) Incompetency.—There are large numbers even of those possessed of good character who, for lack of proper training, are never very competent in their work, and can easily be dispensed with on the slightest cause. The doing away of the apprenticeship system increases the incompetency of men and women in their particular line of work. An additional cause of unemployment among men is

(d) The Increasing Employment of Women.—The increase in the employment of women throws more men out of work. It is said that in Manchester and Salford there are over 4,000 lady clerks.

3. Remedies.—Amongst other remedies a complete and universal system of registration would be a great help. Every bona fide working man would thus be known as such, and all the lazy and ne'er-do-wells could be detected. The former ought to be able to seek work from town to town with the assurance of shelter and food, and some care for his family whilst he honestly sought it. The other class ought to be dealt with penally except those, and no doubt they are many, who are unemployable from want of any training at all in life, and who, with care and opportunity, might be helped to fill the ranks of the employable. This would give an intelligent basis for further remedies that might be applied to the various classes of the needy.

37434. (Mr. Booth.) Has there been any actual attempt in Manchester to canvass the amount of unemployment?—Yes, several attempts, largely in the Ancoats district of Manchester.

37435. That is to say in certain definite districts in which unemployment was prevalent the attempt has been made?—Yes, in several of the districts, but especially in Ancoats; just recently the Guardian published the figures of what they considered a strict canvass.

37436. It has been made in successive periods during some years past?—Specially during the last four years.

37437. Have there been comparative results; was the canvass made in so uniform a way as to give results that might fairly be compared, at any rate one with another?—Certainly.

37438. Do you think you secured in that way a measure of the degree of unemployment?—I think so. I have not much faith in a canvass myself, because from my own experience if you test special cases you find the replies are very doubtful unless the canvass is very drastic.

37439. I am not questioning your statement as to that, that it is extremely difficult and the figures are extremely doubtful; I only ask whether you thought they would be fairly comparable, that is, however exaggerated or however unreliable they might be, they would be some measure which could be fairly compared one with another?—Certainly.

37440. Has it shown an increase of lack of employment during these four years?—Not to take the present year; at present we are in a good state in Lancashire comparatively. The boom in the cotton trade has helped us considerably, especially in a district like Ancoats, of which I spoke just now.

37441. What was the lowest year in Ancoats?—I should think two years ago.

37442. It has considerably improved since?—Yes, I think so.

37443. Has the same thing been done in other parts of Manchester too?—Yes, but not so regularly; there has been a canvass in Hulme and one in Salford.

The Rev. S.F. Collier.
 22 Jan. 1907.

Attempts to measure unemployment in Manchester and results thereof.

Difficulty of measuring unemployment.

Age, sickness, incompetency, and increased employment of women as causes of unemployment.

Need for registration of working-men with a view to discriminative treatment of the unemployed.

The Rev. S.F.
Collier.

22 Jan. 1907.

Substitution of juvenile and female labour for male adult
labour.

37444. You say that amongst the causes of unemployment there is the tendency if men are dismissed to employ others younger, rather than the same men again ?—Yes.

37445. And also the increased employment of women. Is that a general tendency in Manchester, a larger number of younger men and of women ?—Yes, decidedly so. Just recently there appeared a notice in the papers connected with very large works that no one over thirty-five must apply, and I have found in the last twenty years that that has been an increasing hardship, especially in dealing with certain classes of employees ; that, even though they bear excellent testimonials (I am speaking now of those whose characters are all right) if they once get out of a firm by reason of its bankruptcy, or diminished trade, it is very difficult to get them in afterwards. I find the age limit often as low as thirty-two or thirty-four in clerks or similar employees, and it seems to me that the years have diminished considerably during the last twenty years at which it is possible to get a man into employment again when once he falls out.

37446. Is the same work done actually by boys and by women—by men under twenty-one ?—In our Manchester warehouses they have a system of promotion ; they take boys in and they gradually advance them, so that if a clerk falls out for any reason whatever there is a general “moving up” and a boy is taken in at the other end. There has been a great increase of lady clerks in Manchester and Salford.

37447. So that as regards the male sex it would be merely the promotion of the younger to take the place of an older man ?—I think so ; except in the case of desk or clerical work young women have been increasingly employed.

37448. I said with regard to the males ?—Yes, that would be so.

37449. With regard to the young women, it is young women taking work which the men have hitherto done ?—Yes.

37450. Is that the same work precisely ?—Yes ; there was a statement in one of the Manchester papers the other day that seemed to me reliable, to the effect that there were over 4,000 lady clerks at the present time.

37451. And the work they do is practically the same work that was done by men ?—Yes.

37452. Of course they do it cheaper and better ?—There are many who say they do it both more neatly and more smartly ; whether that is true I do not know.

37453. And for lower pay ?—Yes.

37454. Under the heading of “Remedies” in your statement, you speak of the remedy of a complete and universal system of registration ; registration of whom ?—I referred there chiefly to the working men. We have two labour yards, a labour bureau, and so forth. Those who apply are interviewed, we use our judgment, the experience of years helps us, but we are always, when we decide, conscious that to a certain extent we have to guess at the right man. If we have 120 or 150 apply this morning (I am speaking of the men now) we try to deal with them ; if by any means we could tell that this man registered in some town was a bona fide working man, it would be a very easy matter to deal with the case, much easier than otherwise. I would say that every such man ought at once to have his board and lodging ; if he is a bona fide working man looking for work he ought not to be left to be dealt with on the same lines as a tramp.

37455. Do you suggest a complete form of registration such as, I believe, they have in Germany, where everybody working for wages has his book ?—I think it would be a great advantage.

37456. Throughout the whole country, all employees ?—Yes, universally.

37457. All employees ?—Yes. I do not myself see how you are to deal with the classes that you describe as unemployable or loafers unless you have some system of registration. If six men come into Manchester to day and two are loafers, and two are unemployable, and two are decent working men ; those two decent working men have to come into the city exactly on the same level as the others, and take their chance, and go into the tramp ward to be dealt with in the same way.

37458. So that your object is, in a certain sense, to isolate those who are not really respectable working people ?—Yes ; then I think you could begin to deal with them

37459. Would it be beneficial to the classes who are regular workers to have such an organisation ?—I should think so. If a bona fide working man walked into the city he would present his card shewing he was a working man, and he would know at once he would be helped for the few days he was seeking for work, and there would be all the greater heartiness in helping him because he is a bona fide working man ; it ought to be to his advantage.

37460. What would be the character of the proof of his regularity ; would you have a sort of character from his employer ?—I presume in the last town where he was the civic authority would stamp his card, or give some indication when he leaves the town. We find an increasing number of bona fide working men when certain trades are bad. I suppose the only thing you can say is that they are on the tramp ; they are passing through the city seeking work, they have left their wife and children somewhere else ; it seems a great hardship to me that a man like that, who has tried to earn his living and get work, should walk into a city and his only chance be the same as that of any tramp on the street.

37461. I fully understand and sympathise with that, but the difficulty is that those are in an extreme minority compared to the working people who never are shoulder to shoulder with tramps at all. Would your system be such that everybody who was employed for wages would have to have a card, or that he might get a card ?—He might get a card. I would not compel him to do so.

37462. Is it not a complete system, then. I rather understood you to say you wished it to be universal ?—No, I think the English working man would rebel against that.

37463. I think so, too ; then it is merely the opportunity of obtaining a card ?—Yes ; if a man is leaving Liverpool for Manchester he ought not to come on chance to Manchester in the hope that he might get work.

37464. What authority would issue or stamp the card ?—We have a Labour Bureau in Manchester at present ; the police visit the Homes, and are able to give their opinion, at any rate, about those who are on the register. Any such visitation authorised by the authorities would help. During the great distress in Manchester about two years ago the men in the employ of the Education Committee, the school visitors, and so forth, did a great deal of the work of visiting the houses of those who applied for relief, and giving their report.

37465. In that case would the card be issued or stamped by some sort of distress committee ?—I would not say so. If the civic authority appointed a committee to act, they surely would be able to arrange some means by which a report would come to them, and the card would at any rate be fairly reliable if they received a report that this man was a householder in their city, and was understood to be a bona fide working man.

37466. Would you contemplate an organisation that would be working at all times, whether trade was bad or not ?—Yes, always, so that a man leaving a town or a city could always get his bona fides stated.

37467. Everywhere all over the country ?—Yes ; those who deal with such men would be able to ask for his card, and if he said he had not got it, of course we should be sorry we could not deal with him as a bona fide working man. It is, however, his look out, he has had a chance which he had not before ; it takes away some of the hardship which I think is prevalent.

37468. I see your point ; but I am trying to get the details a little. Would this authority that could issue or stamp a card be, in effect, an employment bureau ?—Yes ; a universal system of bureaux would answer the same purpose of course.

37469. Does the Manchester bureau work satisfactorily ?—It takes the names ; I am afraid that a very small percentage have really been helped to work ; I think they have found it difficult to secure situations.

37470. Have the working men's organisations fallen in with it, or do they hold aloof ?—I do not think I can answer that question very reliably. I find one difficulty

Need of registration of workingmen with a view to discriminative treatment of the unemployed.

Need of registration of workingmen with a view to discriminative treatment of the unemployed.

Extent of success of Manchester labour bureau.

Increasing number of workers incapable of continuous work.

not mentioned in my Statement in the matter of employment, a matter I have noticed during the past few years more especially, as the result of testing men in our labour yards, and in getting them situations. It is not the unwillingness to work so much as the lack of power to persist in work. So many men seem to be able to work spasmodically; I find increasing difficulty on that point in getting men work, and they do not seem to be able at all to continue long in work.

37471. Would the authority you mentioned be justified in giving a man of that sort a card shewing he was a trustworthy working man?—I should say not; but what was in my mind just then was the difficulty of dealing with such a class and how far any system could be arranged by which such a class could be helped to work. I believe the man is not unwilling to work, but he has lost all habit of regular work; I have found some men of this sort, who, when we have persevered with them time after time, have got gradually into the habit of work; it does not follow that a man of that kind is a lazy man.

37472. But you say he would not be qualified to be given a card?—I do not see how they could give him a card if he had not been in any situation.

37473. If that sort of consideration has to be taken into account, is it not throwing an extraordinary responsibility on the body who issue the cards to say whether in their opinion the applicant is what is generally called a bona fide working man? Would it not be very difficult?—Someone must bear that responsibility; and at present it is thrown upon people who do it in a very haphazard fashion, and have very little data to go on for judgment.

The possibility of turning spasmodic into regular workers.

37474. (Mrs. Webb.) Is that not a question of treatment? If you have a man who can work, but who has not got the initiative could you not, by putting him into a hospital, so to speak, for that particular disease of not being able to work, treat him in such a way as to cure him?—That is why I mentioned the case. I have a home, a hostel, and a labour yard; and sometimes I find if I get such a man to stay with us, in three months or six months or a year or eighteen months he has developed regular habits of work, and he turns out an excellent man.

37475. He wants curing?—Yes, he wants helping to regular habits.

37476. (Mr. Gardiner.) Could you put in any percentages as to the results of your treatment in those institutions you have just mentioned?—I have a dread of percentages.

37477. Could you give us any figures to show how far your methods have been successful?—If the men will give us a chance with them I find that the percentage of those who can be, I was going to say taught to work, and helped to work, is very large indeed. We have about 150 men apply to us every morning, I suppose, and in dealing with them what has surprised me during the last sixteen years in connection with our labour yards is the large percentage of those who are willing to work, and the large percentage of those, if they continue with us, who come to be reliable working men.

37478. You could not put any figures before the Commission in your evidence?—No, I prefer not to do so.

Co-operation between "charitable shelters" and casual wards.

37479. Have you any co-operation, say, with the casual ward?—Yes, the casual ward works with us very well. About six years ago they yielded one point to us. We do not profess to take any men in after noon, we do as a matter of fact in special cases, but for our general working purposes we take them in at noon and work them the latter half of the day; we give any man a chance of turning out at any hour of the morning he likes. He can have his breakfast very early, and go out to look for work. If he does not find it, he can come in again at twelve o'clock, and work again the latter part of the day. He always has an opportunity of turning out every morning and looking for work till eleven or twelve. We find that this method acts very well indeed. We approached the guardians on that point and the manager of the casual ward, and although they did not see their way to do the same, they told us if we sent them a man in the middle of the day they would try to get him work, and let him out early in the morning. In other cases where they found the sort of man that they thought ought not to go into the casual ward, but ought to have a chance in our home, they have sent him on to us, especially young men of eighteen or twenty; instead of taking them into the casual ward they have sent them to us, and asked us to deal with them.

The Rev. S.F. Collier.
22 Jan. 1907.

37480. You have shelters in Manchester: Church Army, Salvation Army, and so on?—Yes; Church Army, Salvation Army, and our own.

37481. Have you any co-operation with them?—Yes.

37482. Could a man go from your shelter to-night to the Salvation Army shelter to-morrow?—He does as a matter of fact, but in very few cases indeed; fewer in the case of the Church Army than the Salvation Army. The Church Army have a large labour yard there, and deal with them very much as we do. I do not know that I could state this positively, but I should say that in the case of the Salvation Army they take few destitute men in and give them bed and food simply for work; I think in almost all cases their beds are charged for. The Church Army takes the destitute man and gives him bed and board for his work, we therefore get fewer from the Church Army, scarcely any.

Question of migration of men between various charitable shelters.

37483. Do you find the bulk of your men are married men?—No.

Small proportion of married men among Manchester unemployed.

37484. They tell you they are not married, I suppose?—Yes, and when we follow up investigations we find they are not.

37485. A large proportion of the inhabitants of common lodging houses are married, are they not?—You begin to suspect so when you enquire, or that they ought to be.

37486. So far as you know, in your experience, the bulk of your men are single men?—Yes, the majority. Last month, as far as we could find out, we had sixteen married men.

37487. Out of what number?—Out of 350. I do not say there were not more, but that was as far as our investigation showed.

37488. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) When you speak about the increasing employment of women, do you mean women are now working who used not to work for their living?—You do not mean the same women; an increase of women for male labour.

Question of the substitution of female labour.

37489. Yes?—There is a great increase of labour amongst young girls now, amongst girls who used to stay at home, or enter domestic service. There is a great increase of desire on their part to labour in the city, in a restaurant, warehouse, or shop.

37490. You mean the girls whose people could afford to keep them at home?—No, I should not say that.

37491. So they would have to be working somewhere?—Yes.

37492. Is there an actual diminution in the number of male clerks in Manchester?—I am told so. I have only the figures given by the newspapers at stated intervals. I have no other means of judging, except by the records of our own labour bureaux.

37493. I suppose the census would tell us that. It would be very striking if there were an actually smaller number of male clerks employed, or do you merely suggest there are more lady clerks?—On the face of it I should say that with the increased trade and population of Manchester there must be need for a much larger number of clerks than there was, say, six or ten years ago, so that it does not follow the number of lady clerks coming in has ousted many men, although on the other hand, from the testimony of the clerks themselves, I should say they feel the competition very seriously indeed. There has been a correspondence recently on this very point in a Manchester newspaper which confirms the interviews I have had with clerks who assert that they are feeling very severely the competition.

37494. Has there been any attempt to organise the trade so that the women should not take a lower wage than the men for the same work?—To organise the clerks?

37495. Yes?—I do not think so.

37496. That would be a very practical way of meeting it, would it not?—Yes, but I think the clerks would find some difficulty in getting any organisation that would in any way answer their purpose on that point. The young woman is smart; they tell me she is very punctual, and

The Rev. S.F. Collier. she is very neat; she can come for a lower wage, and when they compete with the male clerk for a situation he is a loser really.

22 Jan. 1907.

Growing feeling against educating boys solely for clerical work.

37497. It is the question of the lower wage that cuts him out really?—Largely so, but I have asked several employers, and they tell me they much prefer lady clerks.

37498. It is possible the work may be more suited to women than men?—Perhaps so. A great many have told me so. They are quicker, neater and smarter in every way at the desk than the average clerk.

37499. Do you think there is any movement in the schools to turn out boys not so suited for clerks and more suited for other work?—Yes, I think there is a feeling in our own city, and as far as I can tell in other cities too, that something must be done to get the boys in other walks of life than driving a pen.

37500. Have you any experience which shows whether the boys all try for this at once or whether they do try for other branches of work?—I think during the last two years where there used to be a tendency to seek the employment of the desk, both parents and boys seek it less. They are beginning to see that a trade is better for the boys.

Question of the substitution of female for male labour.

37501. (Mr. Booth.) Are the girls and women who find employment as clerks drawn from a higher class than those of the male sex with whom they compete?—I do not think so.

37502. They would be the sisters and cousins and so on?—Yes, and a large number of girls, of course, who have had the advantage of the education of the last ten years are no doubt in many ways better equipped than the men they displace who are twelve years older now than they are. That makes a lot of difference.

37503. As compared with young men of the same age would the young woman be better educated; would they have taken more advantage of their chance of education?—I do not think so. I think there is possibly some truth in what some of the employers say, that the young woman of eighteen or nineteen often does her work more steadily and more smartly than the young man of eighteen or nineteen. She, perhaps, has not the attractions out of doors for whiling away her time.

37504. So that they may supersede older people because they have had better education, and the younger people because they are more steady?—I think so. I find increasing preference for the young women at the desk.

37505. (Mr. Chandler.) Following that question up do you find that this attraction of labour for girls is largely due to the liberty that they get in the evenings, etc.?—I suppose it would be.

37506. Do you not find that there is side by side with that a great outcry that domestic servants are very hard to get?—Yes, that is a great difficulty, of course.

37507. So they must have been drawn, as it were, from that occupation largely?—Yes, as you say they have their leisure, and some money in their pocket, dress as they like and do as they like pretty much.

37508. Generally they seem to prefer it to domestic service?—Yes.

Class of men applying to charitable labour-yard.

37509. You deal with very large numbers of destitute and unemployed men. From what class of men are they as a rule; what trade are they supposed to be drawn from?—That much depends of course on the state of trade. During the last six weeks say we have had an increasing number of brick setters, or brick layers, because the building trade has been very bad. It very much depends on the condition of various trades.

37510. Your experience I presume would be somewhat different to the casual wards as to the character of the men you get?—I think so. I think our labour tests weed out for us the applicants. If a man comes to us he knows he will at once be asked to do some work, and thus the men who are not prepared to do that pass our doorway largely.

37511. Again a bona-fide working man, hard up I will say, seeking work in Manchester, would look to your institution for a night's shelter in preference to the tramp's ward?—Certainly.

37512. Therefore you would get a better class coming to you?—Yes. Our tramps' ward I am told will accommodate about 1,000, but they have about 200 in it.

37513. Is it not more than that?—That is the report given me last week by the manager.

37514. Are there many natives of Manchester apply to you, unemployed men?—Yes, householders largely; of course they do not enter our home. If we cannot find them a situation immediately they may work in our labour yard, but they do not come into our shelter.

37515. You have a special labour in your yard, I Building understand, which was introduced by yourself apart from wood chopping?—Yes. wrecking and old-metal crushing as 37516. Could you tell us something of the nature of that labour?—We send men out for pulling down old buildings, and so forth. You refer I suppose to the extra labour yard we have put on? work for the unemployed.

37517. Yes?—We gather all sorts of scraps from the Corporation tips and so on: all the old tins, lobster tins, biscuit tins, and so on: we gather galvanized iron and enamel ware, and anything of that kind, and bring it into the yard and then instead of using machinery, for the sake of providing labour, we employ men to crush it into the smallest compass possible. It is then closely packed, trucked off to various places where they are willing to buy it. We use this labour yard, as much as possible, for householders who apply to us for work; if we are not quite sure of them, sufficiently sure to help them directly with food, we send them into this labour yard as a test. They work there and we give them a special wage for it. Meanwhile our agents are trying to secure situations for them.

37518. Does your tin trade, from a business point of view, cover expenses?—It meets current expenses. It has been working about two years, and during that time it has found—I do not mean different men of course—13,000 men labour one way and the other.

37519. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the labour test you referred to, in what does it consist, a certain period of work, say some hours in the day?—Yes, from half-past one to half-past five. Labour test regulations, etc., at charitable "shelters" in Manchester.

37520. If a man works a day, what do you do the next day; is he allowed to come back, or not?—Yes, he has three meals and his bed, a bona fide bed, a bed I could sleep on myself, and he can turn out any time he likes in the morning. He can be called at any hour he likes and get to the Corporation gates, the Ship Canal gates, or anywhere else where work is likely to be found. If he cannot get work he can apply again at half-past eleven or twelve.

37521. He is in the position of having a few hours in the morning to go out and seek for work, and then come back?—Yes: if we know of work going on we send him out with a note.

37522. Is there any limitation as to the time he stays with you?—No, the limitation is largely dependent upon himself. If he shows that he means business and is really anxious to get work and is a workman, we stand by him. Some of them find a job after being helped one or two nights.

37523. Do they get a job like that and come back?—Yes. We have been very well satisfied with the way the men have tried to earn a little themselves. Perhaps a man will stop to-night and be off to-morrow morning; he may only be capable of odd jobbing, but it is something; that helps him over six or seven days: he will then come and take his bed with us. For instance, when the snow was on the ground the Corporation needed a lot of men. The Manchester Corporation employed over 11,000, I understand, and we were really almost short of workers in the labour yard; they rushed to this business of removing the snow, but they came at night and put down their money for a bed. We have one section for lodgers. We receive destitute men, board and lodge them in return for work. When they obtain a situation, we help them for the first week until they receive their wages. Then the man becomes a lodger on the other side, and by staying a little with us he gets strengthened. We often have men say they do not want to go; they feel safer where they are. I do not know whether it would interest this Commission, but I wrote to several towns where they employed men for removing snow to ask the authority how many they had employed; whether they got as many as they wanted; whether the men were willing workers and whether they were pleased with the Habits and habitat of snow-cleaners employed by municipalities.

class of man they got. I was myself very much interested in the answers. It was at any rate one way of testing the matter. The authorities wrote saying that they got as many as they needed, some still remaining evidently unemployed, and on the whole they were very willing workers indeed. A similar answer was given by Mr. Williamson of the Manchester Department: he said he employed 11,000 men: there were some who were not capable of doing that very tiring work, but they were willing workers none the less.

37524. The tendency then would be to create in your institution a sort of home for casual working men?—Yes.

37525. A more or less permanent home?—Yes. I daresay we have fifteen to twenty men who may have been with us two or three years, but that is very rare.

37526. Is it your suggestion that similar homes should be started in other places for what you call registered working men?—I presume unless you could utilise the institutions that are at present existing, you would have to do so in order to meet the need.

37527. That is your scheme, is it not, to have such homes?—Yes, to have such homes either those existing or to be erected.

37528. With regard to individual cases, have you ever made notes about any particular men, watching them to see how far they improve, or anything of that kind?—Yes, we interview every man who comes to us, privately. Notes are taken and the after-history is recorded as far as possible.

37529. Would your book show how far you had got men who seemed only able to work occasionally to work permanently, take a step up?—Yes.

37530. Men would have been long enough in your employ, so to speak, to ascertain that?—Yes, I have had some men in our employment quite a year or eighteen months, and in some special cases more.

37531. Have you notes as to what becomes of the men that leave you?—Yes, as far as possible we keep in touch with them: I do not think we can keep in touch with a man as closely as we can keep in touch with a woman who passes through our refuge and home for women. We seem to be able to keep in close connection with them better than the men, and learn where they are placed in situations and follow them more easily.

37532. In the case of men would you have notes of, say, 100 cases?—Now?

37533. Yes, showing what they had done; where you have been able to trace them for six or eight months afterwards?—In 300 cases I should say.

37534. Complete cases?—Yes, quite. In Manchester a few score are married and settled down as householders.

37535. You have not set out in any form the return at present?—No, but I could get it arranged easily enough.

37536. It would be a fair history if we could see the books?—Yes. The books have been seen, I think. There was a Committee of this Commission, or some similar Committee last week looking through the books.

37537. If you could let us see the books themselves, if they are not actually in use, they might show very clearly exactly what there is to see. The volumes not now in use might tell the story, might they not?—No, it could not be done in that way; I should have to take the record out from two or three books.

37538. If you could collate 100 cases, or something of that kind, it would be interesting; so many men and so many women?—I shall be glad to do it.

37539. (Mr. Booth.) If the cases are taken as they run, a substantial number like 100 would give us a complete picture, would it not?—Yes.

37540. Would it trouble you very much to do that?—I do not think so; I will get it done when I return. (See Appendix No. V. (A).)

37541. (Mr. Loch.) With regard to the police enquiries in unemployed cases, I understand that at Manchester the system has been that the police should make the enquiries?—In the time of distress some two or three years ago the educational officers also helped in the matter.

37542. Do not the distress committee now have the enquiries with regard to applicants made by the police?—Yes, those on the municipal labour bureau list by police-men in plain clothes. The Rev. S.F. Collier. 22 Jan. 1907.

37543. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) You told us that sixteen out of 320 were married?—I said that a week ago I asked how many married men there were in, and they said sixteen that they knew of. Proportion of married men applying to charitable shelters."

37544. That was on a single day; out of 320?—Yes. When I say that it is sixteen that they knew of, I think in answering the question I said that there might be many that we did not know of, because there would be at least 120 taken in that morning, and investigation would be impossible for the moment; we had only their word for it.

37545. What I wanted to ask was what was the average age of the 320?—In the Report given at the last committee the average age was thirty-three to thirty-six. I think that was the average age in the month of December. Ages of men applying to charitable shelters."

37546. Therefore the large majority, I take it, would be under fifty?—Yes.

37547. (Sir Henry Robinson.) When you speak of an increase in the employment of women throwing men out of employment, do you mean it gives fewer openings to young men about to start life as clerks, or do you mean it means men who have been clerks during the greater part of their life being thrown out?—In the case of men who have been thrown out of employment, or compelled to leave; young women have taken their places; men have not been employed in the same position. Substitution of female labour.

37548. What are men who are thrown out of employment as clerks fit for; have you any other opening or work for which they are fit except clerical work?—Very little. It is a painful business. It is almost impossible to get them into anything. Difficulty of providing work for unemployed clerks.

37549. So that they would scarcely be men who would be employed by the ordinary relief organisation?—No.

37550. Are many of them quite destitute when they are thrown out of employment. Are men of that class absolutely without any means?—Yes, a large number, and it comes to this, that they take clerical work at a very low rate; they are compelled to take work at a wage which is not half that which they used to receive.

37551. So the effect of it is to lower wages all round?—Yes.

37552. Do many of them emigrate when they lose their position?—The only way I could answer that question is that during the last year I have had an increasing number applying to us to advise or assist them to emigrate. Emigration for unemployed.

37553. To what colony?—To Canada.

37554. Is there any association, or is there any organisation for assisting them when they are out of employment?—Not that I know of.

37555. Does your Manchester and Salford Mission assist them to emigrate at all?—We only guide as to emigration, and sometimes we assist a special case, but we have not taken organised parties ourselves.

37556. Do you know whether there are good openings for clerks in Canada; I mean of that class?—When I was over in Canada in September I found that they wanted very much the men we want here; smart and good.

37557. How does the rate of pay compare?—They get a better wage than we do here. Of course rent and clothes, and some other things are more costly. A labourer I should say would find plenty of opportunity a large part of the year in Canada.

37558. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to your suggestion that there should be a registration of the persons wanting work, do you contemplate that that is to be universal all over the country, or only in large towns?—I do not know that it would be necessary in every small place to have a bureau. A district could be arranged comprising a market town and some villages. A man would gain by having the opportunity in leaving his native place or district to carry with him his character. Proposed optional registration of working men.

37559. Do you think it would be practicable in places other than large towns to set up an organisation of that kind?—I do not see why not.

The Rev. S.F. Collier. 37560. Who do you propose should form the registration authority?—I do not know that I could advise in the matter. I have heard it discussed with such difference of opinion on committees that I do not know that I hold a definite opinion myself.

Unpopularity of existing labour bureaux. 37561. Do you contemplate some existing local authority, or something fresh?—I would create something other than there is at present. I think that at present these labour bureaux I know anything about have some touch of "charity" in them. I think a working man shrinks from that.

37562. They do not exist all over the country, or anything like it?—No.

Proposed optional registration of working men.

37563. You have not quite thought out how it would work in rural areas perhaps?—I have heard that discussed in a committee which I was on: we came to the conclusion it would be possible, whilst having such registration in the cities, also to have it in districts, that would practically answer the same purpose for a population say of 5,000 or 6,000.

37564. Did you consider at all how far it would be possible to make the test, before a man was registered, uniform?—I do not think that you could do anything more than say that that man had been a householder in the place, and he seemed to conduct himself in such a way that he was considered worthy.

37565. When you say conducted himself in such a way that he was considered worthy, it is only a matter of opinion; it is not an actual fact but a matter of opinion, and therefore opinions might differ in different places, might they not?—But I do not think there would be any difficulty in a proper authority finding out in a reasonable area whether a man is the kind of man that the country ought to support in this matter of board and shelter till he finds work, or find work for him.

37566. Do you not think the standard or test would be different in some places to others?—Certainly; some committees would be severer than others.

37567. That would be rather a difficulty, so that the card the man produced might have been a card given by an easy committee or by a strict committee?—I quite understand that. My difficulty is that at present you not only have no information, but the utmost difficulty in getting any information. You get ten men who apply to you, and say they are honest workmen and want work; you have got to get them into your labour yard, put them into a home and begin to try and find out something about them; it is a lot of waste time and energy, and anything which would save that and give the information would be welcome.

Question of remunerativeness of work provided for unemployed.

37568. (Mr. Lansbury.) Do I understand you to say that the 13,000 men who have gone through your tin works earn the wages that are paid them?—It depends; some of them go into the home and shelter and they would get their board and lodging and some odd pay, but it is in the case of the married men that we should pay them as workmen.

37569. What I meant was, does the value of the work when it is done produce the wages; is there a profit?—You mean is it subsidised at all?

37570. Yes?—It is not subsidised except in this way, that the working capital and plant was found, but so far the labour has met the current expenses.

37571. And the money that is paid the man and his wife?—Yes.

Substitution of female for male labour and its causes.

37572. With regard to women, did I understand you that the employers tell you they are better adapted for the work of clerks, and that sort of thing?—I said that a great many employers I had consulted frankly said that they preferred them.

37573. And they paid them better wages than the men, I suppose?—I should not say that.

37574. You would rather think if they were so much more valuable that they would be paid better wages?—I do not think that follows at all.

37575. Then it follows that a woman can give so much better value to the employer than a man and she gets less wages?—Yes, I suppose that is the conclusion, for certain kinds of work the only conclusion you can draw.

37576. Therefore the bottom fact of it is that the woman works cheaper?—Yes, decidedly.

37577. Therefore she gets the job, of course?—Yes.

37578. She is able to work cheaper because of her less responsibilities very often?—Yes, and does not look forward to the same promotion in wages that a man does.

37579. And she displaces men who have the responsibility of families and that sort of thing?—Yes.

37580. (Mr. Phelps.) With regard to the labourers who stay almost permanently at your home, in the case of the people who are there for a year or more, what is their motive for staying?—We, generally speaking, have been the means of their getting work, and afterwards they tell us that they feel safer, under our supervision. A large number of these men, when they get money, are liable to fall by drink. The man prefers to stay where the people are deeply interested in him, and feels for the time at any rate safer.

Reason for permanent cases at charitable "shelters."

37581. They feel support?—Yes; every man who is on the staff of our home has come through the same mill himself, he has come from the bottom and he is interested in those who are coming up.

37582. What part does religion play in the administration of your homes?—It supplies a very important part, but we go on the principle that attendance at anything like a religious service is entirely voluntary. There is what we call family prayers in the home every night, but no man need attend, and if he does not attend our treatment of him is the same. For a few years we were accustomed to see a far larger number standing outside than coming in; they would often go into the street while the service was on, but the majority join us now, practically all. We have a concert room open every night and a library and so forth. There is plenty to interest them in the evening.

Extent and value of religious element in administration of charitable "shelters."

37583. With regard to the helpers who are engaged in the work there, would they be people who are actuated mainly by what we may call religious motives?—Yes, humanitarian and religious. A large number of friends come every night from six to ten in these rooms set apart for recreation and educational purposes, and give their services.

37584. What I want to lead up to is this, do you think that an establishment such as yours would be possible unless it were worked on a religious basis?—I do not think it would, because I think that gives a heart to the thing. That is where we differ from the corporation lodging-houses or anything of that sort. When we compare notes with others, I certainly find that whilst the buildings and the arrangements are good, yet the whole thing becomes somewhat mechanical, there is a lack of the interest in the individual that there is in such a home as ours, staffed as ours is.

37585. That would be even more true with regard to the female side than the male?—I do not think so, it is much the same. Of course our men's home is a much larger one than the women's. We only take about sixty-five women. I instituted that largely as a receiving home because I found plenty of homes of a certain order, rescue and others, where women or girls stay for a lengthened period. They will not take them unless they promise to stay. In working on the streets if our workers came across a young woman and they asked her would she like to leave the street life she would turn on her heel the moment "home" was mentioned, because she thought it meant imprisonment or detention. So I instituted the receiving homes, and we said at once "We do not want to make terms, if you come there you will find shelter and friends; you can go out to-morrow morning if you like;" and I found out by having the open door in that way they came in the first night and were glad to do it, and would perhaps stay the second and third and so on, and after five or six days they would begin to confide in you, tell you what their name was and tell you where their mother was. Thus we were able to arrange for each case according to their individual need, to send them to their friends or to situations or to the rescue or preventive homes. I find this receiving ward a great gain in helping workers to bring them in first, especially the fallen women.

Value of charitable maternity home and hospital.

Charitable maternity home and hospital.

37586. What are the rules of your maternity home?—We take applicants in and keep them in the home part until they enter the hospital.

37587. Do you take married people?—No.

Prevalence of mediocrity or incompetence among working classes a cause of unemployment. 37588. Only single?—Yes. Might I mention one fact that has escaped me; I am impressed with one factor that seems not to be taken into account as it ought to be in the matter of this big question of the unemployed, and that is incompetency. I find (I do not know whether it will be so in the younger generation we are going to deal with) that so many men and women are not competent for their work, and can be so easily dispensed with. If anything could be done by those who have to consider this matter and who have to deal with the young to get this question of competency more thoroughly dealt with it would be a big contribution to the whole question; thousands of workers can be sent adrift to-morrow if any difficulty occurs; they can be dispensed with so easily and so easily be replaced.

37589 (Mr. Booth.) When you say they can be dispensed with you mean they could be replaced very easily?—Yes, they are kept on largely out of kindness.

37590. It does not follow that they are not useful, but that there are other who can be equally useful, who can be easily got?—Yes. In sending these men and women to a situation, so often you have to ask the employer practically to try them and keep them on, and there has to be some idea of charity, which does not often enter into a business man's ideas and cannot very well now in the competition of to-day.

Extension of "half-time" system as a remedy for unemployment. 37591. (Mrs. Webb.) Do you think one of the causes of that is the period between fourteen and twenty-one, which is allowed to go to waste very often?—Certainly.

37592. Supposing you could have a half-time system from fourteen to twenty-one, that all boys were under training for half their time and most of their leisure, do not you think you would do away with that to a great extent?—In some measure; of course it would have to be compulsory.

37593. Yes compulsory half time from fourteen to twenty-one?—And compulsory training.

37594. Physical training?—Yes, that ought to be part of the training. Of course, the doing away with the apprenticeship system is largely responsible for incompetency in later years.

Prevalence of mediocrity or incompetence among working classes a cause of unemployment. 37595. (Mr. Booth.) What I want to get at is whether the meaning you attach to incompetency is that they are not specially competent. You might have, I do not say it is so, a super-abundant number of persons who are competent up to a certain point, and in that case any of them could be replaced, and then your definition of competency would seem to be specially competent?—No, I do not mean specially competent. I mean in the case of a domestic servant, or a man who is a gardener or a joiner, you try and get him into a place, he is out of work. As far as we can see the man himself is right, he is as good as many men, and a great deal better than many. You get him a situation, but the man tells you at the end of the week quite frankly, "I do not want the man, I can do without him," and you have to plead and say "try him." It is a big difficulty. I say this to show that in the case of many of these men, it is not, as some people seem to think, lack of character; it may be lack of backbone in some cases, and in that way lack of character, but they are not drunkards or loafers. They look at it as a hardship, they cannot understand they are not as good workmen as other people; they are continually producing testimonials to show that they are striving to do right and work well, but they are poor tools at the best.

37596. (Mr. Loch.) Do you think that the education up to the age of fourteen is what is likely to fit them for taking a better place?—All education ought to help them, but when they leave at fourteen they snatch at the first thing that comes; the girls go to be waitresses in a restaurant, or the boys to anything else that means nothing to them in future years, and at nineteen, twenty, or twenty-two they have little chance.

37597. Then we have the paradox of a greater difficulty with regard to these incompetent men growing up in face of the larger public expenditure on education?—Perhaps so, because so many doors are open now to what you might call casual labour where entrance is easy, and an immediate wage is an attraction to parent and child. But there is the fact that the education might be of a more practical industrial character.

37598. It is altogether outside any question of public teaching after fourteen, it is a question of the home?—Yes, there is a question of the home, but, as Mrs. Webb suggested just now, some compulsory training would be an advantage and certainly industrial consideration ought to enter into school-life.

37599. (Mr. Lansbury.) Is not the great difficulty in getting boys apprenticed to trades, I mean apart from the question of the parents' willingness or the boys' willingness, that there is an increasing disposition not to have apprentices?—I do not think I could answer that question with any reliability.

37600. Is it not also that industries are becoming so organised now from machinery right up to the human being, that many boys and girls are merely little automatic machine minders?—That is true.

37601. And that the education we have spent so much money on is really sterilised between the ages Mrs. Webb mentions, because of the occupations being so organised?—Yes.

37602. There is nothing to develop the boy or girl at all?—No.

37603. It simply stunts them all the time?—Yes, therefore the need of early training for industrial life. A good deal of the education of an ordinary boy now is practically to fit him for what you might call desk work; he is taught to write a letter or read an address or take a message, but his education, unless he is going in for scholarship, ought to be on lines which would enable him to continue at evening schools or technical schools, some training that will help him and fit him for his work in life.

Dr. ALFRED GREENWOOD, called; and Examined.

37604. (Mr. Booth.) You are medical officer of health and hold other offices at Blackburn?—Yes.

37605. We will take as your evidence-in-chief the memorandum you have been good enough to prepare, if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I am at present holding the following appointments in the County Borough of Blackburn, Lancashire.

(a) Medical Officer of Health.

(b) Medical Superintendent to the Fever and Small-pox Hospitals.

(c) Medical Officer to the Education Committee.

(d) Lecturer in School Hygiene, Advanced Hygiene, and Advanced Physiology at the Borough Technical School. I am also President of the North-Western Branch of the Incorporated Society of Medical Officers of Health.

2. I have been the Medical Officer of Health in Blackburn for five years.

3. Between the years 1895 and 1902 I held the following appointments:—

(a) Clinical Assistant to the Cancer Hospital, Manchester.

(b) House Physician to the Royal Infirmary, Manchester.

(c) House Surgeon, and Visiting Medical Officer to the Hulme Dispensary, Manchester.

(d) Senior Resident Medical Officer to the Union Infirmary, Salford.

(e) Medical Officer to the out-patients of the Children's Hospital, Manchester.

(f) Assistant to the Medical Officer of Health for Stockport.

(g) Medical Officer of Health, and Medical Superintendent to the Fever and Small-pox Hospitals for the Borough of Crewe.

Dr. A. Greenwood.

22 Jan. 1907.

Dr. A. Greenwood.
22 Jan. 1907

4. In these varied appointments I have had considerable experience in medical treatment of all classes of patients in institutions and at their own homes.

5. I wish to state that I am expressing my own views, which are not necessarily those of my Committee.

Municipal medical assistance of the poor in Blackburn.

6. Measures for the medical assistance of the public in Blackburn as carried out by the health authority are associated with the following:—

- (a) Compulsorily notifiable infectious diseases.
- (b) Voluntarily notifiable infectious diseases.
- (c) Visits to homes where births have occurred.
- (d) Distribution of diarrhoea handbills.
- (e) Systematic house-to-house inspections apart from the above.
- (f) Other special investigations, e.g., Underfeeding.

7. For the most part the above measures are adopted irrespective of the test of destitution. Indeed in my work as medical officer of health I do not consider whether a person is a pauper or not.

8. In addition to the above, as Medical Officer to the Blackburn Education Committee I examine each year upwards of 400 children specially referred to me for medical examination by the school attendance officers.

COMPULSORILY NOTIFIABLE INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

Gratuitous municipal provision for notifiable and other infectious diseases at Blackburn.

9. Practically all cases of scarlet fever, enteric fever, and diphtheria, are removed to the fever hospital, where they are maintained free of charge. Their belongings and homes are also disinfected. No charge is made to any patient or any patient's relatives, whatever his circumstances may be.

10. The fever hospital is maintained from the general district rate.

11. These cases are removed to hospital with the objects of preventing the spread of infection and of nursing them satisfactorily. Many cases recover in the Blackburn Fever Hospital each year who could not receive proper attention at their own homes.

12. Also all cases of infectious disease admitted from the Wiltshire Orphanage, an institution outside Blackburn, to the Blackburn Fever Hospital, are removed and maintained free of charge on the ground that the majority of children at this orphanage are Blackburn children. The same also applies to cases from the cottage homes of the guardians. All cases of small-pox occurring at the Blackburn Workhouse are removed and treated at the corporation small-pox hospital.

13. If any case of scarlet fever, enteric fever, or diphtheria is not removed to hospital, one of my inspectors visits the house weekly, and oftener if necessary, in order to ascertain if isolation of the patient is satisfactory. Definite printed instructions are left at all these infected houses and advice is given verbally when necessary.

Diphtheria.

Free supply of diphtheria antitoxin at Blackburn.

14. On my recommendation the Health Committee have authorised me to supply free antitoxin for all cases of diphtheria occurring amongst the poorer rate-payers. This has proved a valuable measure, and is appreciated by medical practitioners and patients. A supply is kept at the fever hospital, each of the three police stations, the health office, and my residence. During the last twelve months 133 tubes of antitoxin, representing 532,000 units, have been supplied to cases of diphtheria. This is exclusive of what has been used at the fever hospital. As a matter of fact I supply antitoxin for every case of diphtheria when the medical attendant requests it.

Proposed free supply of serum against puerperal fever. Payment by municipality of cost of returning fever hospital patients to their homes.

15. Also I am in favour of a sanitary authority supplying free the serum for cases of puerperal fever.

16. When patients are discharged from the Blackburn Fever Hospital to their own homes it is customary for the parent or guardian to bear the cost of removal. In order to relieve the poorer cases of this expense the following resolution was passed by the Health Committee in May, 1906:—"That the medical officer of health be authorised at his discretion, to pay cab fares for necessitous cases when the patients have been discharged from the fever hospital to their own homes."

17. In this instance necessity is the test.

Small pox.

18. I am of opinion that the administration of vaccination should be transferred from Boards of Guardians to Local Sanitary Authorities. During outbreaks of small-pox sanitary authorities are responsible for removal of patients to hospital, administration of that hospital, disinfection, etc., and yet an important preventive measure, such as vaccination, is in the hands of another body who have not the same experience or interest in preventive measures generally. Indeed vaccination is the only preventive measure against small-pox which is not in the hands of the sanitary authorities.

Proposed transfer of vaccination administration to sanitary authority.

19. During an extensive outbreak of small-pox in Blackburn in the years 1902 and 1903 the Health Committee empowered me to appoint four additional inspectors whose duties consisted in making house-to-house visitations in infected districts.

Special inspectors appointed by sanitary authority in small-pox epidemic.

20. Under Section 14, Schedule 4, of the Vaccination Order, 1898, this appears to be a permissive duty of the Board of Guardians.

21. During the same epidemic also I supplied on behalf of the Health Committee all the provisions for a very large number of people including common lodging-houses, and private houses, during the time I kept them quarantined. In some cases wages were paid when it was considered advisable. The above measures had no pauperising effects.

Quarantine persons supplied with food and wages by sanitary authority in small-pox epidemic. Diagnosis of small-pox cases by medical officer of health.

22. Moreover, I see personally every reported case of small pox before it is removed to hospital, although diagnosis of infectious diseases for another medical man is not part of the duty of a medical officer of health. In this way certain cases reported as small-pox were not removed to hospital because the diagnosis proved to be chicken-pox. On the other hand, some cases reported as chicken-pox were found on visit to be small-pox, and were removed to hospital.

23. I have made several suggestions for preventing the spread of small-pox to the Blackburn Board of Guardians which they did not see their way to adopt. This was, probably, in some degree due to the fact that, as the Executive Health Officer, I stood in no relation to the board responsible for such measures. If I had been able to place these recommendations before the body with whom I am in constant touch, and to whom I am responsible, I have not the least doubt that such recommendations would have been accepted.

Blackburn Guardians refuse to adopt recommendations of medical officer of health as to small-pox.

24. I have no hesitation in declaring that in my opinion vaccination as a preventive measure against small-pox would be carried out more efficiently by local sanitary authorities than by boards of guardians.

Vaccination administration should be transferred to sanitary authority.

VOLUNTARILY NOTIFIABLE INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

25. Phthisis is a voluntarily notifiable disease in Blackburn. Notified cases except those intimated to me privately by the medical attendant are visited by my medical assistant, particulars obtained, and advice given as to disposal of sputum, hygienic precautions, etc. Cases of phthisis are often reported when it is too late to adopt any curative measures, and many of them have drifted to the workhouse. During the ten years 1895 to 1904, 13·3 per cent. of the deaths from phthisis in Blackburn occurred in the Blackburn workhouse.

Provision of sanitary authority against phthisis in Blackburn. Proportion of deaths from phthisis occurring in workhouse.

26. I receive regularly from the head teachers of the fifty-two public elementary schools notifications of measles, whooping-cough, chicken-pox, mumps, ring-worm, scabies.

Medical officer of health notified by teachers as non-notifiable infectious disease.

27. Cases of measles, etc., are visited by my inspectors, and where necessary medical attendance is advised.

28. Very great attention is given to this point.

FEEDING OF INFANTS.

29. Between 1897 and 1905 inclusive, 11,208 visits have been paid by my inspectors to homes where births have occurred. At these visits inquiries have been made as to the method in which the infant is fed, suitable advice given, and insanitary conditions remedied. This work is already showing good results by the increased number of children who are fed from a bottle of approved shape instead of from that "abomination," known as the long-tube bottle, i.e., when artificial means of feeding are employed.

Work of sanitary authority as to nurtured infants.

30. During the summer months of each year visits are paid by my inspectors to all the poorer houses of the town, and verbal and printed instructions are given as to the measures which will tend to prevent summer diarrhoea.

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN POOR LAW AND PUBLIC HEALTH OFFICIALS.

31. This does not appear to be so close as it might be. In my own experience only one Poor Law medical officer has called my attention regularly to various insanitary conditions which he has discovered in his work.

32. I have frequently sent cases to the relieving officer who were in need of relief. Also as a result of visits by my inspectors unvaccinated children are found who are notified immediately to the vaccination officer.

33. During the small-pox epidemic referred to before, I sent each day to the workhouse master a list of all new comers to each common lodging house in the borough.

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS AND DEATHS.

34. I believe that it would be of great advantage if Registrars of Births and Deaths were responsible to local sanitary authorities. It would thus be possible for special information to be obtained when necessary, and classification would be more complete. Also if these registrars were sanitary officials there would be additional facilities for educational purposes in reference to persons registering births.

35. It is probable that sanitary authorities would have administered the Registration Act if they had been in existence when that Act was passed.

UNDER-FEEDING AMONGST THE SCHOOL CHILDREN OF BLACKBURN.

36. During the summer of 1905 I conducted an investigation with the object of ascertaining the extent to which underfeeding occurred amongst Blackburn school children at that time, and a number of interesting facts came to light which have an important bearing upon the social habits of the working classes of the borough. Information as to addresses was given by school teachers, school attendance officers, police and others.

37. Special attention was paid to streets with the prefix "back." In all 540 houses were visited, so that the home conditions were investigated also. I submit my full report on this subject. There are five voluntary agencies in Blackburn for the provision of meals for children attending public elementary schools. At many schools also, individual efforts are made by the teachers to provide food and clothing for necessitous cases.

38. A liberal estimate of possible cases of underfeeding was taken, as children from the ages of three to fourteen years were included, and as cases were also included in which underfeeding was probable during certain conditions, such as bad weather, etc., and I calculated that not more than 1·3 per cent. were underfed.

39. During my inquiries I was impressed by the fact that considerable waste occurs in many homes through lack of knowledge as to cheap, nutritious, articles of diet, and economical cooking. In other words "the money might be made to go further" in some families. It was found that underfeeding was associated frequently with a dirty condition of the body, and with insufficient clothing, although this was not always the case.

40. In a number of cases the parents were unwilling to apply for Poor Law relief, and others had suffered considerably before asking for such relief. In several instances the parents had denied themselves food rather than the children should be without. The struggles of certain families, some successful, others unsuccessful, to "hold their heads above water" were most praiseworthy.

41. Regarding the Blackburn cases of underfeeding the causes might be divided into those causes which are beyond the power of the parents, and those causes which they can avoid.

42. Amongst the causes beyond the power of the parents which transpired during my inquiry may be mentioned the following:—

Ill-health of the father, who is in many cases the only bread-winner. In some cases the father was a cripple either through accident or disease, and in other cases the father was suffering from diseases such as phthisis, diabetes, heart disease, etc. This condition is rendered worse if there is a large family of young children, and in many cases the mother is compelled to earn money either by washing or in the mill. It would therefore appear desirable and just that the relief of certain genuine cases should not involve pauperisation of the parents.

FUTURE WORK.

43. I am of opinion that the primary functions of sanitary authorities should be the prevention rather than the cure of disease.

44. There are still so many problems which require investigation by medical officers of health in the prevention of disease, that I believe their present work should be extended in this direction rather than in the cure of disease individually.

45. There is no doubt that the Public Health medical service is extending enormously. A recent development to which I have given considerable attention is the Medico-Educational work in public elementary schools. The Blackburn Education Committee will appoint this month a medical assistant to myself whose whole time will be occupied in the medical inspection of school children. The administration of the Midwives Act is another instance of a recent extension of the above service.

46. It is possible that in the future there will be an extension of the Infectious Diseases Notification Act, so that such other diseases as cancer, pneumonia, and diarrhoea may be included. Indeed I am asked by the relatives frequently to disinfect a house after one of the members of a family has died from cancer.

47. Again, there is still much work to be carried out in ascertaining more closely the various conditions leading to a high infantile mortality rate, and in the appointment of health visitors with a careful supervision of their work and its results.

48. As medical officer to the Blackburn Education Authority I have often experienced a difficulty in advising as to the treatment of many children sent to me by the school attendance officers for medical examination. Such children have parents who are above the pauper class and yet unable to pay for the necessary private medical attendance. In some cases I have obtained recommendations both as in and out-patients for the Blackburn and East Lancashire Infirmary, through the courtesy of members of the Local Education Committee. But there are other cases who do not receive any medical attendance.

37606. (Mr. Booth.) In Paragraph 6 you speak of compulsorily notifiable infectious diseases and voluntarily notifiable infectious diseases. I do not think we have on our minutes a complete account of what are the diseases in each of those classes. Can you give us that?—The compulsorily notifiable infectious diseases are small-pox, typhoid fever, typhus, scarlet fever, diphtheria, cholera, erysipelas, relapsing, continued or puerperal fever.

37607. And plague?—Plague also. I was speaking of the English diseases, although, of course, those do occur. I think that is a complete list of the compulsorily notifiable infectious diseases. In addition to those, chicken-pox is made at times compulsorily notifiable temporarily.

37608. Made by what authority?—With the sanction of the Local Government Board.

37609. By the local authority with the sanction of the Local Government Board?—Yes.

37610. What are the ordinary voluntarily notifiable diseases?—In Sheffield phthisis is a compulsorily notifiable disease now. I believe that is the only town.

Dr. A. Greenwood

22 Jan. 1907.

Under-feeding of children caused by parents' ill-health.

Disfranchise-ment as a condition of relief.

Function of sanitary authority to prevent rather than to cure disease.

Extension of medical officer of health's functions: inspection of school children: Midwives Act, etc.

Need of enquiry into causes of infant mortality.

Defective medical provision for poor persons immediately above pauper class.

Infectious diseases compulsorily and voluntarily notifiable.

Dr. A.
Greenwood.
22 Jan. 1907.

Infectious diseases compulsorily
and voluntarily notifiable.

Health
inspector's visit to every house when birth occurs.

Distribution by sanitary authority of advice as to infant diarrhoea.
Inspection of houses by sanitary inspector.

Under-feeding of school
children :
investigation by medical officer of health at Blackburn.

37611. Could you give a list of the other diseases which are voluntarily notifiable?—Phthisis in all other towns is, sometimes whooping-cough and chicken-pox, with the exception that I have just named, and through the schools such diseases as scabies, ringworm and sore throats, that including a large group, and measles.

37612. Does that refer only to schools?—Practically only to schools. The voluntarily notifiable diseases are practically only notified through the schools.

37613. What is the meaning of the word "voluntarily"? I am very ignorant about it; voluntarily on whose part, the school authority or the medical man; what is the meaning of the word "voluntarily"?—The teachers are not bound to notify them, they are simply asked to notify all these diseases, and do so in co-operation between the health authorities and themselves.

37614. That is uniform all over the country?—More or less I think it is. In some towns there is a much more complete intercommunication between the teachers and the medical officer of health than in others.

37615. Is there any local adopting of a regulation of this sort, is it voluntary to adopt it? Is it voluntary on a local authority to adopt this or that regulation?—Practically so.

37616. With regard to No. 3 under Heading 6, visits to homes where births have occurred, what homes are visited? How do you fix whether a birth should involve visitation?—We visit practically every house in the town.

37617. Rich or poor?—Rich or poor without any distinction. The enquiries, of course, are not quite so detailed at the better houses; but a visit is actually paid to each house, and questions asked as to the method of feeding the child, and so on.

37618. By what authority are the births notified?—Through the local registrars. I get a weekly list from them, giving the name, address, and occupation of the father.

37619. Then the distribution of diarrhoea hand-bills is from house to house?—Yes.

37620. Everywhere?—Yes.

37621. Then you say: "Systematic house to house inspection apart from the above." That will not be for every house?—Yes, every house, however big or small it is. I have the town (Blackburn I am speaking of now) divided up into districts, and the districts into sub-districts; each inspector has a number of these sub-districts for which he is responsible; and when we have not a rush of infectious disease, or anything taking him out of his ordinary work, he visits every house in each district.

37622. Does he practically visit every year?—No, not every year. I make a list each year of each house that the inspector has visited; that appears in my annual report.

37623. With regard to the systematic house inspection, if you find insanitary conditions then you act?—Yes.

37624. In restraint or alteration of those conditions?—Yes.

37625. That is the object of those visitations?—Yes.

37626. With regard to the other special investigations, the under-feeding, that is entirely for the schools, I suppose?—That was carried out especially amongst school children.

37627. But not in the homes?—Yes, visits were made to the homes.

37628. After you had obtained the names and addresses from the school?—From the school, and other sources that I could hear of likely cases which might possibly be underfed; then a visit was paid to each home and enquiries made.

37629. With a view to suggesting that children should be specially fed in connection with the school?—No, purely to find out how many children were suffering from insufficient food. It was purely an enquiry.

37630. Purely for information?—Yes.

37631. (Chairman.) Assuming that the list of notifiable infectious diseases is voluntarily extended, are there the same powers in connection with diseases which are thus voluntarily notified as with those whose notification is compulsory?—No.

37632. What is the distinction?—In the compulsory notifiable diseases we can compel removal to hospital if the isolation is not satisfactory at home, and follow that up by disinfection of the house and the contents of the house. That is not so in the other diseases, such as measles or whooping cough.

37633. The powers are more limited?—Yes.

37634. And the municipality can only compulsorily deal with certain diseases?—That is so.

37635. Has the tendency of recent years been to increase the number of infectious diseases which can be compulsorily dealt with?—I do not think the list has been added to of recent years. In a few towns measles was added to the list, but I think it was dropped; it was added for a period of five years, I believe, and afterwards dropped.

37636. (Mrs. Webb.) Phthisis has been added, has it not?—Phthisis has been added only in one town—Sheffield. There is a tendency to add phthisis generally.

37637. (Chairman.) That comes under the voluntary heading?—At present it does, but there is a tendency to add some of the at present voluntarily notifiable diseases to the compulsory list.

37638. (Mrs. Webb.) Phthisis is compulsorily notifiable in Sheffield?—Yes.

37639. (Mr. Bentham.) By a local Act?—Yes.

37640. (Chairman.) Then any disease can become one compulsorily notifiable, with all the powers attendant, if a proposal is made by the local authority and is endorsed by the Local Government Board?—Yes.

37641. You have supplied a good deal of free antitoxin in Blackburn?—We have.

37642. Is that a very expensive drug?—Yes, very expensive.

37643. It would be beyond the means of most of the people to whom you supplied it?—As a rule, yes; certainly the bulk of the population of Blackburn could not afford to pay for it, in fact, if the doctor supplied it he would never get his money again, I am afraid.

37644. You would like to go further, and wish to supply the serum for cases of puerperal fever?—Yes.

37645. As far as you know, are there many cases of mortality from puerperal fever in Blackburn?—I think that Blackburn is like a good many other places, and many cases of puerperal fever occur which are never notified. In fact, I feel sure that is so; but since the Midwives Act came into force in Blackburn, our number of puerperal fever notifications has gone up distinctly, which is an advantage, of course, because it helps one to interview the midwives and suggest certain things—perhaps abstention from attending to another case, suggestions as to cleanliness, cleanliness of herself and her obstetric bag; but even now I feel that all the cases which occur are not notified.

37646. As regards smallpox, you are in favour of transferring the administration of the Vaccination Acts to the local authority rather than that it should be carried on by the board of guardians?—I am emphatically.

37647. You give various illustrations of certain difficulties that now occur which, when you made suggestions to the board of guardians for their removal they did not see their way to adopt?—No, they did not. There was no ill-feeling whatever in the matter; it was purely that they did not quite see eye to eye with myself in the matter.

37648. Do you see any administrative difficulties in the medical officer taking control of compulsory vaccination?—No, I think it could be managed quite well.

37649. Coming to the next paragraph of your statement. Failure of Phthisis is a voluntarily notifiable disease?—The voluntary notification of phthisis in Blackburn has been a failure. I have tried all sorts of ways to make it more successful. One great objection that the medical men expressed to me was that the patient would perhaps take offence if he knew that he had been notified, and so I got

Powers of sanitary authority as to infectious diseases compulso-rily and voluntarily notifiable.

Question of extension of list of infectious diseases
compulsorily
notifiable.

Compulsory
notification of phthisis at
Sheffield.

Procedure for making diseases
compulsorily
notifiable.

Free supply of diphtheria antitoxin at Blackburn.

Proposed free supply of serum against puerperal fever.

Proposed transfer of vaccination administration to sanitary authority.

Failure of voluntary notification of phthisis at Blackburn and causes
thereof.

Failure of voluntary notification
of phthisis at Blackburn
and causes
thereof.

up little cards, which were issued to all the doctors in the town having on it little sentences. One was an instruction from the medical attendants to myself: "Leave the case to me, and I will be responsible for all instructions regarding the destruction of sputum"; the second one was "Take such steps as you think necessary," the object being that in a case which the doctor notified privately to me, no official would visit from my department, so a patient would not know about it. The fee of 2s. 6d. was still being paid in each of those cases, so I thought I got over the difficulty of breach of confidence between the patient and the doctor. It really was not breach of confidence, because the same objection might apply to scarlet fever, and does not hold good. In spite of all, it has been a failure. I cannot say why. We shall never have it properly notified until it is made compulsory, and that I think the doctors will not object to. If they knew they had to notify I think perhaps they would do it.

37650. What is the exact process which converts a voluntarily notifiable infectious disease into a compulsory notifiable one?—I think we as a local authority make application to the Local Government Board.

37651. And that application has not been made?—No.

37652. What is the objection to making it?—Several of the medical men objected on the ground that phthisis is not on the same footing as the other infectious diseases; it is longer in duration, the patient is ill with the disease perhaps for two or three years; there was a feeling that someone before I went to Blackburn, through having been notified, had lost his work, which really was a prejudice which might easily be got over. I think it will be got over. The statement was made to the Health Committee, I think it was, that a patient suffering from phthisis had been notified by the doctor to the medical officer of health and that this got out, and the man lost his employment. That really was the stumbling-block at the time.

37653. That although it might deal with phthisis it would temporarily if not permanently interfere with the employment of certain people suffering from that ailment?—It certainly would in the case of people who were in an advanced state of the disease and were at their work.

37654. (Mrs. Webb.) Is it not rather dangerous that those people should be in a workshop?—Most dangerous.

37655. (Chairman.) Is that the only objection; was there a feeling that there was not a proper building in which to treat these cases?—Yes, that objection was raised afterwards. I mentioned this as being the primary objection, one objection having been raised, others were raised, and the other objection was that if the cases of phthisis were notified, supposing we did get early notifications—I mean notification that a patient was suffering from phthisis in an early stage—we had nowhere to put them, we could do not anything with them. Personally I think that not many cases in the early stages are notified, ever.

37656. Then the objection is a two-fold one, one that it might interfere with employment and the other that if the disease was notified and dealt with it would necessitate considerable expenditure?—Yes, either a curative institution for the early cases or homes of rest for the advanced cases, where they could be separated from everybody else to whom they were a danger.

37657. What is your own view on the subject, looking at it as a whole and having regard to the health and welfare of the community?—I am rather sceptical of sanatoria for curative means, my first reason being that so few early cases of phthisis come under the care of the doctor. A man goes on with his cough week after week, perhaps month after month; he is a workman and does not seek medical attention until he is really too far advanced to be cured. I think another objection is that many men if they went and were told to go to a sanatorium would say: What is going to become of my wife and family when I am away? I think the whole question is so big that it should be considered further than the mere removal of the patients for the purpose of cure, namely, provision for his wife and family while he is away (he may be away three or six months or perhaps longer), and the finding of suitable employment for him when he returns from the institution.

37658. Are the deaths from phthisis amongst adults, say from fifteen to thirty-five, very numerous at Blackburn?—I could not speak accurately now, I might have brought my last annual report with me, but I did not, I would not like to say so with accuracy, now.

37659. (Mrs. Webb.) Dr. Niven said one-third of the deaths are between those ages in Manchester. Would it be anything like that in Blackburn?

37660. (Chairman.) Those are the figures I was thinking of. You cannot recollect?—I will furnish those figures when I correct my proof. (The witness subsequently stated that "the proportion in Blackburn is between one-third and one-half.") 37661. Now we come to the feeding of infants, that is comparatively a new work undertaken by the health authority?—Yes, in the last seven or eight years. I ought to say that these visits at present are being made by the male inspectors. We have no lady inspectors yet. We are hoping to get two next month, when I think the visits will be much more satisfactory. I think these visits will be better made by ladies than by male inspectors.

37662. Do you actually give food to the mother or to the infant?—No, we have not done. A voluntary organisation is just being started in Blackburn this has nothing to do with the sanitary authority. They have already got subscriptions to carry on their first year's work. Women who are nursing their babies will be given one or two meals a day, according to their need, and arrangements will be made to see the effect of the feeding on the babies by weighing the babies. That only applies, of course, to women who are feeding their babies naturally.

37663. Who will decide as to whether the mother or the child needs this help?—I believe they are going to form a committee, and I understand that I am to be one of the members. Several medical men and two or three ladies who are taking an interest in the subject will form a committee.

37664. And the expense will come out of the rates?—No, purely through subscriptions. They have already had one subscription of £100 towards it.

37665. Devoted to this specific purpose?—Yes, it is going to start in a very small way at the beginning.

37666. You think that there might be more co-operation between the Poor Law and the public health authority?—Yes, I have always felt that.

37667. There is a certain amount of co-operation existing in Blackburn because apparently you have sent cases to the relieving officer?—Yes.

37668. I assume you have also given help to the vaccination authority on the reports of your inspectors?—Yes.

37669. In what direction can you suggest that this co-operation could be improved?—I have not thought of that. It has really seemed so far, without being invidious, rather hopeless to expect any more than one is getting at present under existing conditions.

37670. That you are working in separate spheres, so to say?—Yes, separate spheres without any animosity and in an easy frame of mind. Perhaps the idea is abroad that no co-operation was needed, that there was a distinct separation between the two offices.

37671. You go on to say later that the public health medical service is extending enormously?—Yes.

37672. If that is so there will be need of greater co-operation in the future?—Yes, need of something.

37673. Otherwise there undoubtedly will be overlapping in certain cases?—Yes.

37674. It seems to me the functions of the health officers assume in certain instances that of relief?—Yes, there is a tendency in that direction.

37675. Are there any other classes besides women and babies whom the health authorities assist in any way with food?—No, the health authorities do not assist any one with food at present. With regard to these women I spoke of just now it will be quite a voluntary organisation.

37676. Would it be under your supervision?—Not officially. This will be quite apart from my official work.

Dr. A. Greenwood.

22 Jan. 1907.

Ages of persons dying from phthisis at Blackburn.

Work of sanitary authority as to nurture of infants.

Charitable provision for feeding of mothers with infants.

Need for more co-operation between Poor Law and sanitary authorities.

Charitable provision for feeding of mothers with infants.

Dr. A. Greenwood. 37677. This will be an organisation outside the health department again?—Yes, really outside the health department, not organised officially by them.

22 Jan. 1907. 37678. Would you like also to see the registration of births and deaths put under the local sanitary authority?—I think it would be very useful, but I do not lay such great stress on that as the vaccination being transferred.

Registration of births and deaths should be transferred to sanitary authority. 37679. I suppose it would to a certain extent be an indication to the health authority what, so far as vital statistics are concerned, are the unhealthiest or the healthiest parts of the locality?—It would be most valuable information.

Under-feeding of school children : investigation by medical officer of health at Blackburn. 37680. In the year 1905 you undertook an investigation as regards the amount of under-feeding amongst the Blackburn school children? At whose instigation did you undertake this investigation, was it the school authority?—The education authority.

37681. They asked you, as one of the officers connected with the Council, I suppose, to undertake this investigation?—Yes.

37682. In these investigations did you co-operate at all with the relieving officers, or the Poor Law authorities?—At the beginning I was hoping to get the help of the relieving officers, and arranged with the clerk of the guardians that any names and addresses should be given to me. Through some little hitch a case was reported by one of the relieving officers as being possibly underfed; it was quite a mistake, and a visit was made to the house, and the woman opened the cupboard and showed a cupboard full of loaves and all sorts of food for the children. It had been a mistake which caused the friction. The visit should really not have been made to the house with the object of finding out whether the children were underfed or not, so I decided that the lists from all the various sources should be given to me, and then I and two of my inspectors would visit the houses, but apparently we made the under-feeding question second; we visited the various houses to look at the home first, not a word was said about under-feeding at all till one had been in the house two or three minutes, then this under-feeding question came out incidentally in each case. I found I got the information much more readily by assigning apparently a secondary place to the matter than in the way which had been attempted at first.

37683. You visited 540 cases?—Yes.

37684. And you investigated the home conditions?—Yes.

37685. Is that not rather a case of overlapping? Had not a good many of these houses been visited by the relieving officers?—Yes, they had been, I know they had.

37686. Were any of the dwellers in those houses in receipt of out-relief?—Yes, in my report I have given an account of each case which actually was receiving out-door relief.

37687. So this is really an illustration, is it not, of the want of co-operation to which you called attention in a preceding part of your statement?—Yes, except that this was a special enquiry made for a special purpose. The visits of the relieving officers would not have been directed specially to finding out cases probably, but still the fact is the officials certainly had visited many of the houses.

Percentage of underfed school children at Blackburn. 37688. Your calculation, you say, is that not more than 1·3 per cent. were underfed. What is that percentage based on; the number of cases reported to you or the number of houses visited?—The number of children underfed to the total number of children attending the public elementary schools of Blackburn in that month. There are 20,000 odd children.

37689. (Mr. Booth.) Twenty thousand odd was the total number, was it?—Yes, the total number of children attending all the public elementary schools of the town.

37690. And 1·3 per cent. of those might be considered underfed?—Yes.

Provision for feeding school children at Blackburn. 37691. (Chairman.) How were the cases dealt with which were then reported to be underfed; were the children fed by food or was money given to the parents?—The Education Committee, I believe, referred all these cases back again to the board of guardians.

37692. So that they did in that case co-operate with the board of guardians?—Yes.

37693. I suppose the assumption underlying the notification of infectious diseases is that they shall be treated at the public expense?—Yes, as a preventive measure. Extent of free provision for infectious diseases at Blackburn.

37694. And that is the practice with regard to a great many infectious diseases that are notified?—Yes.

37695. Is it the case with regard to all infectious diseases that are compulsorily notifiable?—In Blackburn we only remove to the hospital scarlet fever, typhoid fever and diphtheria. We have no hospital accommodation for puerperal fever; of course we should isolate in the hospital typhus if it cropped up, and we have a small-pox hospital.

37696. Will you enumerate what are the three diseases that are treated now?—Typhoid fever, scarlet fever, and diphtheria.

37697. And no other?—And small-pox, in a separate institution of course.

37698. Assuming, as you say, it is possible in the future that cancer, pneumonia, and diarrhoea may be included in the Infectious Diseases Notification Act, it would not follow then that those ailments or illnesses would be treated free in public institutions?—No.

37699. Has the tendency of modern times been to increase the number of infectious diseases that are treated at the public expense?—The tendency has been. I do not think the list has been added to anywhere materially yet. Question of increasing tendency to gratuitous municipal treatment of infectious diseases.

37700. Taking your experience, can you mention any particular illness which is now treated at the public expense which was not before?—Phthisis.

37701. That I understand is only notified, but not treated?—Not in Blackburn, but I thought you were speaking generally.

37702. I am speaking generally. It is treated in other towns?—Yes.

37703. Any other disease?—No. I do not think there is any other.

37704. (Mr. Webb.) Confinements?—Puerperal fever?

37705. Your Town Council is giving free medical assistance for confinements?—No. That does not come under the category of notifiable infectious diseases.

37706. But it is an illness?—Yes.

37707. (Chairman.) I was thinking of infectious diseases. There is a tendency, therefore, to treat disease or illness at the public expense?—The tendency has increased, but not very much of recent years; that is so. Phthisis is the only disease that I remember. It is the only infectious notifiable disease that is now treated anywhere that formerly was not.

37708. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Was diphtheria always treated in public hospitals?—Not always.

37709. I mean in recent times, within the last thirty years?—No, more recently than that.

37710. More recently than scarlet fever?—Yes.

37711. (Chairman.) Is there a general hospital in Blackburn?—Yes, the Blackburn and East Lancashire Infirmary.

37712. Is the medical relief given free there?—It is given by means of recommends which are given by subscribers to the institution. They have a system of indoor and outdoor recommends. Accidents are treated as urgency cases without any recommends.

37713. Is there any system of recovering expenses from patients who have not letters?—I do not think so. It is quite a voluntary hospital.

37714. So far as you know the treatment is free?—The treatment is free through the subscribers.

37715. Is there an out-patient department?—Yes.

37716. Is it a large one?—Yes; I could not say the number, but it has certainly a busy out-patient department every morning there.

37717. Then really the main hospital accommodation for Blackburn is in this infirmary?—Yes, for general diseases. They have roughly 100 to 120 beds.

37718. The Blackburn Poor Law Infirmary is a very old building?—Yes.

37719. You are not acquainted with it, are you?—Yes.

Blackburn voluntary hospital and free medical assistance therein.

Out-patient department of Blackburn voluntary hospital.

37720. The accommodation is limited?—I could not say much about the accommodation, although I know the building well, because I visit there.

37721. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you find it necessary to remove cases compulsory to your infectious hospitals?—I never have any difficulty.

37722. You never have any difficulty and have to get an order of the justices?—I have only had to threaten it once; that was in the case of a farm, but the man came round in that case. There has never been any need to invoke the law.

37723. The mere threat was sufficient in that case?—Yes, and it is not often necessary even to threaten.

37724. I understand from your statement that some cases are sent by the guardians?—Yes.

37725. Do they pay for those cases?—They pay a guinea a week.

37726. Is there any friction between the town council and the guardians as to what cases the guardians should pay for?—No.

37727. It works smoothly?—Very smoothly.

37728. I see that in some cases you find it necessary to pay for the removal from the hospital of the patients when they are cured; are those cases numerous?—No, very few. I think there have been five or six only since this resolution was passed. I want to correct something I said just now to you. The only infectious cases that the guardians pay the local authority for are the small-pox cases, a guinea a week. Scarlet fever cases we receive free if they occur in the workhouse; they are not charged for those.

37729. They are not charged for fever cases?—No.

37730. They only pay for small-pox cases?—Yes.

37731. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is it for them they pay the guinea a week?—For the small-pox cases a guinea a week; no charge for other cases.

37732. Small-pox cases from the workhouse?—Yes.

37733. (Mr. Bentham.) If a case of small-pox were removed from a house where the people were in receipt of Poor Law relief, would you make a charge against the guardians for that?—No, we have only charged them for cases of small-pox actually cropping up in the workhouse itself. That has been carried on for some years.

37734. (Sir Samuel Provis.) What is the ground for not charging for fever cases, do you know?—I could not say. It was in vogue when I went to Blackburn and I have carried it on. If there has been any doubt one has not made any charge at all.

37735. Have the Town Council of Blackburn any special powers with relation to infectious diseases under local Acts?—Yes.

37736. Do you remember generally what they are; perhaps they are too numerous to mention, but can you say the subjects to which they relate?—To tuberculosis.

37737. What is the effect generally?—Specially dealing with tuberculosis of the udder and infected milk.

37738. Nothing besides that?—No.

37739. They have no special Acts as to the removal of cases to hospital or the provision of shelters or refuges for contacts?—No.

37740. There are places, I think, where those are provided?—I think there are.

37741. You say that in relation to small-pox some suggestions were made to the Blackburn guardians which they did not see their way to adopt. What sort of suggestions were they? Were they in relation to vaccination?—Yes. Briefly they were these: that a case of small-pox had occurred at the workhouse; the medical officer there asked me to go and see the case; he has asked me on each occasion to go and see; I have; and we have co-operated extremely well together. I suggested, and strongly advised, that all the men in the whole of that ward should be immediately re-vaccinated. The men objected to it. A guardians' meeting was held next day at which I was present, and I put my recommendation to them in writing. They practically left it to the men themselves to say whether they should be vaccinated or not;

that is not suggesting compulsion. No definite resolution was passed carrying out this suggestion that the contacts should be re-vaccinated. It was really very important to get them re-vaccinated at once.

37742. If they were unwilling they could not have been compelled?—No; still that is no reason why the guardians should not have said, We are of opinion that all these men ought to be re-vaccinated at once.

37743. I thought the guardians were asked to direct that they should be re-vaccinated?—I think my suggestion ran in this form: I recommend that all contact cases be re-vaccinated at once.

37744. Are the Blackburn guardians in favour of vaccination generally, or are they an anti-vaccination board?—I think their attitude is neither one way nor the other. There is no very strong feeling in either direction.

37745. In Paragraph 31 you say that in only one case has the Poor Law medical officer called your attention regularly to various insanitary conditions which he has discovered in houses which he visited. Do you think that it would be desirable that Poor Law medical officers who attend the poor for the purpose of curing them should report to the medical officer of health sanitary defects which they observe?—I think it is very useful in a large town to have this information from the doctor.

37746. It is useful for the medical officer of health, but might not the poor object if, when they had a medical man to attend them, he acted as a kind of agent to the sanitary authority to report defects which he observed?—I do not think so; there might be some objection.

37747. Do you not think there is that view of the case that the poor might be unwilling to get medical attendance when they ought to get it, if they thought they would be looked at from a different point of view when the man came?—I have no definite experience, but it is not my feeling that that would occur.

37748. You do not know that that objection has been felt?—No, I do not.

37749. (Sir Henry Robinson.) With reference to that question of the want of sufficient co-operation between the Poor Law and public health officials, and as to the advantage of having the registration of births and deaths undertaken by the sanitary authority, do you think that the system which prevails in Ireland, by which the Poor Law medical officer is also medical officer of health, and also registrar of births and deaths, and also carries out the Vaccination Act, would be possible in a town like Blackburn, if the medical officer's district was of sufficient size to suit that?—Do you mean dividing the town into districts?

37750. What is the population of Blackburn?—133,000 roughly.

37751. Are you the only medical officer of health there?—Yes. I have two medical assistants.

37752. Assuming that you were also the Poor Law medical officer and registrar of births and deaths and vaccination officer, would you be able to do those duties for half the city or a quarter of the city?—Not without a very considerably increased staff, of course.

37753. How would the amalgamation of all those duties as it is done in Ireland strike you: do you think it would be a practical working arrangement?—I think it would be an ideal arrangement, but I am not prepared to say it would be practicable in a town the size of Blackburn.

37754. I do not mean an entire town, but if you had a sufficient number of men to take those duties, all competent, for the particular district of each man, do you think that would be a good working arrangement?—I am not prepared to definitely answer that question one way or the other at present.

37755. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to that question, the best way of arranging would be to have assistants who would do some of it?—Yes.

37756. (Chairman.) One medical officer of health and assistants under him?—Yes; I suggested some time ago that an ideal state of affairs in a town such as Blackburn, if it could be carried through, was to have one assistant for each of the fourteen wards of the borough and let him be responsible for that district to the medical officer of health.

Dr. A. Greenwood.

22 Jan. 1907.

Question of advisability of district medical officer giving information to medical officer of health as to insanitary condition of homes.

Irish system of combining offices of district medical officer and medical officer of health and its applicability to England.

Dr. A.
Greenwood.
22 Jan. 1907.

Question of advisability of sanitary authority undertaking cure of disease.

Failure of
voluntary notification
of phthisis at Blackburn
and causes
thereof.

37757. (Sir Henry Robinson.) You would approve of the system if it could be carried out?—I still stick to my original view that the main work of the sanitary authority should be prevention rather than the cure of individual cases except when the cure of the case comes in as a preventive measure.

37758. Do you not think if a man were engaged in the first instance in the cure of a case he would be the best able to pronounce an opinion as to the measures which were necessary to prevent the spread of the disease and would he not be in a better position to judge of the cause of the outbreak?—Yes, I am bound to admit that.

37759. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Voluntary notification of phthisis I think you said had been a failure in Blackburn?—Yes.

37760. Are you an advocate of compulsory notification?—I am not. I do not think it would be necessary if we could get this voluntary notification to work on the part of the medical men privately—without the law I mean.

37761. I suppose in order to make compulsory notification efficacious you require sanatoria for the isolation and treatment of the cases, do you not?—Yes.

37762. Before you could really support compulsory notification you would require a provision of that sort by the local authority for the treatment of those cases?—Yes, my present view is that if it were made compulsory, holding the view that I do about sanatoria, the main value of that information would be to enable us to state the distribution of the disease in a given town.

37763. To get at the cases at their start?—Yes.

37764. Your experience now is that there is an objection on the part of the family or the head of the family who may be suffering from it, to notify it, and they have been known not to consult a medical man because they feel that they may lose their work?—That objection has been reported. The reason why phthisis is a failure as a voluntary notifiable disease now is purely the fault of the medical man, not the patients. The medical man has the opportunity of notifying privately to me for the same fee that is paid for the other diseases.

37765. Then what is the objection?—I do not know. I am absolutely at a loss to say. I read a paper before the Blackburn Medical Society at their request in which this was all gone into very thoroughly; they passed a resolution promising to notify every case, but that was not done.

37766. Of course one does see this, if the cases were compulsorily notifiable and were treated and isolated in that way they would be dealt with by the public authority and taken out of the hands of the private practitioner; is that not so?—That is so. As bearing on that one point, a doctor in Blackburn said to me a few days ago, "I am forgetting what typhoid is like; I just diagnose a case and you remove it to the hospital at once; I never see it again."

37767. You also said that supposing there were cases of phthisis which were notified, isolated, and treated there was a difficulty if they recovered of their getting work and that the wives and families were not looked after in the meantime, or might not be looked after. Is that not so?—Yes.

37768. Is not that just one of the situations that might be dealt with by voluntary charity?—Yes.

37769. Have you ever considered whether the local charities could be applied to such cases?—I have not thought of that.

37770. (Mr. Lock.) Paragraph 43 of your statement explains in general terms the position you take up; the primary functions of sanitary authorities should be the prevention rather than the cure of disease?—Yes, the primary functions.

37771. Working from that you would say that all notifiable diseases should come within the sanitary authorities' work—the public health work?—Yes.

37772. And those that might in future be put on the list are more akin to it?—Yes.

37773. To take the other side you would exclude the normal sick work, outside inspection, which is done by the Poor Law authorities?—I would at present until many of these problems have been thoroughly threshed out, especially bearing on prevention.

37774. That is to say your idea would be where there is a line of prevention in the interests of the community, that should be the line of the public health authority primarily?—I believe so.

37775. On the other side am I right in saying that the general treatment of diseases should not fall on the public authority?—That is the view I hold at present.

37776. Are you satisfied with the general treatment of diseases as carried on by the boards of guardians?—I think I state something bearing on that in my last paragraph. There is a class of case that is too good to go to the boards of guardians, and that is not sufficiently well off to have private medical attention. There is a very class, great difficulty with regard to those cases.

37777. As you know the question of what we call medical service has been much considered in reference to a difficulty like that; that is to say the people should pay according to their ability, are you in favour of that system as made applicable to hospitals and other similar institutions?—Do you mean free medical relief?

37778. No, I mean not free medical relief, but payment according to ability which I understand is at the root of the suggestion of a medical service. I understand those who are in favour of the idea of a medical service wish that payments should be made by all persons down to the pauper classes, according to their ability, to the medical man who attends?—Yes.

37779. Are you in favour of applying that system to, say, a general hospital, that is to say, instead of the treatment being free, the treatment should be given subject to those terms, namely, that the medical men concerned should receive their quota?—I certainly think very often when a small sum is paid, speaking generally, that it is more appreciated than when it is given free.

37780. Suppose the question were pushed home, and the medical men took the line of saying they would only serve on the condition that those who could should pay according to their degree; do you think that is a good principle to work upon?—I have not thought very much about that in that light.

37781. Setting aside then the voluntary hospitals and the Poor Law and restricting what you have said under Paragraph 43, would your suggestion be that there should be to carry out what Sir Henry Robinson suggested, a sanitary overseer for each ward?—Yes.

37782. What would that cost; what would a man like that get for his services, £100 a year?—£100 to £150 a year.

37783. It would be a very large addition to the cost of the sanitary administration of the town?—It would.

37784. As against the present conditions?—Yes.

37785. Do you think that the additional cost is worth it as against a method by which you should have one or two more offices brought generally under your control, as, for instance, vaccination, but otherwise things should remain the same?—I think a smaller addition to the staff at first would be better than going in wholesale for complete supervision of each ward.

37786. If you had your preventive system in full working order would it stop many cases of phthisis coming into the Poor Law infirmary, do you think?—I certainly think it would.

37787. That is to say, you really believe the effect of a good public health staff would be to limit pauperism?—I do. I think many cases of phthisis would be found out which at present cannot be through insufficient visiting.

37788. With regard to the treatment of these phthisical cases, are you in favour of home treatment subject to close medical supervision as things stand?—I am. I think the whole thing is educational. In fact the sanatoria that were originally erected for the cure of the disease are developing into educational institutions now.

37789. If that is to be the final judgment about sanatoria you would have certain accommodation with regard to that system at the disposal of the public health authority?—I would. What I would say is, I would not build any more sanatoria, I would use the existing ones for only the early cases, for curative cases; but the same thing that I have mentioned before crops up with the early Defective medical provision for poor persons above pauperism.

The principle of payment for medical assistance in proportion to ability.

Irish system of combining offices of district medical officer and medical officer of health and its applicability to England.

Effect of an efficient sanitary authority on pauperism.

Question of adequacy of sanatoria as a remedy for phthisis.

The proper functions of the sanitary authority as to disease.

cases (at least that has been my experience), that they are so comparatively seldom met with compared with the number of cases which are sent when it is too late to do any good.

Question of relief of families of persons suffering from phthisis.

37790. Then as to keeping the family, supposing you are not able to raise from voluntary sources what is required, do you think under a reorganised Poor Law, what you may call the relief required for the case might be provided?—I do.

37791. That would be better than making the sanitary authority, the public health authority, a relief authority?—Far better.

Voluntary health visitors.

37792. With regard to visiting with a view to both instructing and ameliorating and reducing expenses, do you feel it possible to get voluntary visitors, or do you think it will be possible to get voluntary visitors in regard to the cases which you refer to in Paragraphs 29 and 30?—Yes, that is what will probably happen very shortly in Blackburn; the lady sanitary inspectors who will be certified sanitary inspectors will be helped by a band of voluntary workers.

37793. You look forward to a committee for public health staffed by a staff of voluntary visitors at the margins?—In a great measure, yes.

Objection to municipal control over voluntary hospitals.

37794. Have you thought whether the voluntary hospital, to take your own Blackburn hospital, should become a part of the municipal system of the town. I am not speaking for the moment of the public health question, but there should be a borough committee which should take charge of all the hospitals, that is one suggestion, Poor Law and all? Have you thought of that at all?—I have thought of it. My view is that as far as Blackburn is concerned in the hospital sense, things are better left as they are.

37795. That is to say, the relation to the borough council would not add to their strength?—I do not think so at all.

37796. The borough council, I presume, is almost a political body?—There are members of the borough council who are on the board of management of the infirmary.

37797. That is to say, the board of management of the voluntary hospital?—Yes.

37798. They are not there as members of the borough council?—No.

37799. But individually?—Yes, only they happen to be members of both bodies.

37800. To your knowledge the Blackburn municipality has never given any grant to the hospitals?—No.

Work of sanitary authority as to nurture of infants.

37801. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) As to Paragraph 29 of your draft statement, I am not sure of your meaning when you say: "This work is already showing good results by the increased number of children who are fed artificially in which a bottle of improved shape is used"?—I have altered that and I will read what I have put as the correction. I have re-written a portion of that: "This work is already showing good results by the increased number of children who are fed from a bottle of approved shape instead of from that 'abomination' known as the long-tube bottle, that is when artificial means of feeding are employed."

37802. You do not suggest you are encouraging artificial feeding?—No, that is why I altered it, because I thought a wrong impression might be given.

Provision for feeding school children at Blackburn.

37803. Can you tell us what is being done for the school children in Blackburn now in the way of feeding?—The voluntary organisations are still at work, five of them I think there are. Those more or less are suspended during the summer months, and are only at work during the winter months. The children of the special school for mentally defective children have a dinner given every day, I think they are charged a 1d. or 1½d. for that dinner. The children are not allowed to go home for a mid-day meal, because they only meet at ten in the morning, and go home at half-past three in the afternoon. Some of that is recovered from the parents and some is not.

37804. The guardians are not taking any steps to feed the children?—I do not think so.

37805. (Dr. Downes.) Did the guardians take any steps with regard to the 1·3 per cent. of children which you refer to in Paragraph 38?—They reported that they dealt with those cases. They were dealt with almost at once, I believe.

Dr. A. Greenwood.

22 Jan. 1907.

37806. Do you ever examine the medical relief registers?—No, I have never seen those.

37807. Have you considered the question of the registration of sickness in Blackburn?—Yes, I have thought of it recently. When I was medical officer of health for Crewe I started a register of sickness and we paid so much an entry to each secretary of all the friendly societies in the town. That was at Crewe, where there is a huge number of friendly societies, we paid them I think a 1d. an entry, but it fell off. It worked very well for about twelve months.

Feasibility of a registration of sickness.

37808. Do you know why it fell off?—I could not give any reason; I tried to get reasons, the payments were made regularly for them, and they reported them very well for six months.

37809. Who received the 1d.?—The secretaries of the various societies for writing out the lists.

37810. They were copied from the medical certificates I suppose?—Yes.

37811. Did you at Crewe use the Poor Law medical relief registers?—No.

37812. I think it was suggested to you by the Chairman that the object of compulsory notification was that the case should be treated at the public expense, but is a provision for so treating him necessarily a precedent to notification?—Not at all.

37813. The rich man with a house and a park would have to notify would he not?—Yes.

37814. Just as much as the man in the slums?—Just as much.

37815. You said that the puerperal notifications had increased since the operation of the Midwives Act?—Yes.

37816. Have the deaths in childbirth increased also?—No, they are about the same in number.

37817. In your experience would the extension of notification compulsorily to chronic diseases tend to render more people dependent on either charity or the Poor Law?—I think it might do, I have not thought of that carefully.

Effect on increase in number of people of list of notifiable diseases.

37818. I think you told us one of the difficulties with a phthisical case was to know what to do with the rest of the family if the man was sent away?—Yes.

37819. The same would apply, would it not, to any chronic disease that was dealt with?—Yes.

37820. Does the education authority undertake any medical treatment at Blackburn?—No, nothing has been done in medically treating.

37821. Not in the way of treating eyes and ringworm or anything of that kind?—No; that is an idea which is present in many minds. This assistant, who, as I said in my Statement, was going to be appointed, has been appointed, and he is starting work. He is beginning to pay attention to the eyesight of the children. I have no doubt he will find a number of children with defective vision, and then there is the question what to do with them, whether he should prescribe glasses for them, who will give them, and so on.

Question of sanitary authority's treatment of ophthalmia and ringworm in Blackburn.

37822. At present that has not been formally considered?—No.

37823. I think you said you visited the Poor Law Infirmary sometimes? Would that be in your official capacity?—I visit at the request of the medical officer there in connection with infectious diseases, specially smallpox.

37824. Does the sanitary authority at Blackburn deal in any way with the sanitary conditions of the Poor Law institutions?—Yes; we got them to build a new bakehouse when the 1901 Act was passed, having regard to the Section with reference to underground bakehouses.

Jurisdiction of medical officer of health over Poor Law institutions.

37825. Have you had to deal with the question of drainage, or anything of that kind?—No, I have visited the institution officially to see school children who have gone there.

37826. The workhouse is not exempt from the operation of the Public Health Act?—No, my veterinary inspector visits the cowsheds there frequently, and I see the bakehouse there frequently.

- Dr. A. Greenwood. 37827. (Miss Hill.) Would it be true to say that there was a great distinction between phthisis and, say, small-pox, because, so far as phthisis goes, it might be more easily nursed in a private home without infection, provided the people of that home were aware what steps they ought to take?—Would you mind asking me that question again?
- 22 Jan. 1907. Distinction between measures necessary to treatment of phthisis and other infectious diseases 37828. Is the infection from phthisis more easily preventable in a private home than that, we will say, from smallpox?—Certainly it is.
37829. So that there would not be the same reason for removing a phthisis case from a home that there would be for removing a smallpox case?—No, not if proper precautions were taken.
37830. And also, phthisis lasts a very much longer time?—Very much.
37831. So that to remove phthisis it would mean very much greater separation and breaking up of families than to remove smallpox cases and scarlet fever cases?—Yes.
- Difficulties as to compulsory removal of phthisis. 37832. That would rather tend to make it less reasonable to remove them compulsorily?—Yes; in fact, I think it would never do at all to remove phthisis compulsorily. I think it would have to be left to the patient whether he went away or not on account of that very reason; the duration of the disease.
37833. That is rather what I wanted to know. It seems to me a very serious thing to remove people who may live two or three years from their home and family unless they themselves desire to go?—I quite agree with that.
- The treatment of phthisis in the home. 37834. Is it your experience that phthisis can be treated very satisfactorily at home? We have had some evidence before us that that is so where there is care in all the arrangements?—Yes.
37835. And where there is sufficient food and house room?—Certainly. Holding the view I do about sanatoria that I have just expressed I think that that is the way in which it will have to be combated—at the homes.
- Provision for feeding school children at Blackburn. 37836. Have the Blackburn authorities adopted this new Feeding Act? Have they taken any steps under the Act which was passed last Session?—No.
37837. Are they likely to do so, seeing that your report was that so very small a percentage of the children were underfed?—No, I do not think any further action will be taken. That has been dropped, I believe.
- Relief of families of persons removed to fever hospitals. 37838. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to cases that are removed to fever hospitals, when the breadwinner of the family is taken away who relieves the dependent family?—The guardians, I believe.
37839. Do you refer such cases to the guardians?—Frequently. My inspectors all have a general instruction, that in any case of destitution where we have taken action in the house, such as removing a case to the hospital, the matter is to be reported to the relieving officer. Those instructions are repeated frequently.
37840. Do you experience any difficulty in getting the cases relieved?—I have never heard of any at all.
- Payment by sanitary authority of cost of provisions for persons in quarantine. 37841. In common lodging-house cases, where you put them in quarantine, do you provide the food and lodging for the inmates of the lodging house?—Yes.
37842. Out of what fund is that paid?—That comes out of my own incidental expenses.
37843. It is put down to your own disbursements?—Yes.
37844. Can you put it down under any other charge?—I do not try to. I do not know whether I could or could not. That was the most convenient way of arranging it.
37845. In the case of Sheffield, where they have phthisis notifiable, did I understand you to say that they treat cases also?—I do not think they have.
37846. There is no sanatorium?—I think it was under consideration. The whole question of erecting a sanatorium, I believe, was deferred; and I do not think anything else has been done since.
37847. Do you know if they refer cases for treatment to the Poor Law?—I cannot answer that question regarding Sheffield.
37848. In your own place when you have voluntary notification, had you ever any cases notified to you that were in the early stages?—I never remember one. I do not think I have had one early case notified.
37849. Is there any difficulty in diagnosing the case in its early stages by an ordinary medical practitioner?—The first difficulty is that the patient does not seek medical advice when he has a cough and is losing weight and in the early stages it is certainly very difficult, as it needs very close examination of the chest; and unless a medical man has been in the habit of listening frequently to chests, and seeing early cases of phthisis, it might easily be missed.
37850. Do you pay a fee which would make it worth while for medical officers to examine carefully cases where there might be any suspicion that the patient might be suffering from phthisis?—No. We pay half-a-crown for the notification; but that would certainly not be an adequate fee for a special, thorough examination of a patient.
37851. It is really only by a more thorough examination than in some other illnesses that you can detect phthisis?—That is so.
37852. Is there any pathological laboratory in Blackburn where sputum could be sent to be tested?—Yes, we have a bacteriological laboratory at the fever hospital. Each medical man has three or four sputum tins with directions on them for the patient so that the patient may use them; they are sent up to the laboratory and we examine them. We examine a large number each year. As the tins are used up by the doctors new tins are supplied to them.
37853. With regard to the enquiry you made about these 540 cases, could those particulars be put in?—I have put them in a report.
37854. If there are detailed particulars of the cases, and they were put in would they take up much space?—It is a fairly big report (copy produced).
37855. Do I understand that all the cases that were inquired into were cases recommended by school teachers as those of children who could not properly be educated because of their physical condition?—That does not quite state what happened. I saw each head teacher at each school and asked that I might have the names and addresses of any children who might possibly be underfed and I asked them specially that this list should be as large as possible; rather too big a list than too small a list so as to get everybody in, so this 540 is an extremely large number. I thought possibly in some of the 540 houses there would not be under-feeding, but I had them included if there was the slightest suspicion that there might possibly be: they were included so that every case might be investigated.
37856. Was the total number of houses reported to you where children were living who were supposed to be under-fed in the teacher's opinion?—I would not put it so strongly as that: were supposed to be under-fed; they might be, and I asked them to report to me cases which were neglected apart from specially being under-fed. This 540 seems a big number, possibly including some who may not be under-fed.
37857. How many children are there attending the elementary schools?—20,000 roughly.
37858. Did the guardians take any steps to feed those children that belonged to Poor Law families?—That transpired during the inquiry?
37859. Yes?—They did.
37860. Did they give more adequate relief, or pay for the feeding of the children?—The children were referred by the education authority to the guardians, and I know they were reported as having been dealt with. I did not go into the matter further after that.
37861. It was left to the guardians, I suppose?—Yes. I know they were dealt with.
37862. In your last paragraph you use this phrase: "Such children have parents who are above the pauper class, and yet unable to pay for the necessary private medical attendance." What do you consider to be the pauper class?—It is a difficult thing to define pauperism. class.
- Provision for testing phthisis sputum at Blackburn. Provision for of school children; investigation by medical officer of health at Blackburn.
- Defective medical provision for poor persons immediately above pauper class.

Defective medical provision for poor persons immediately above pauper class.

37863. I should have thought anyone coming under this definition would certainly have been eligible for treatment under the Poor Law.

37864. (Chairman.) I understood the last paragraph to mean children of parents who would not send them for medical relief to the Poor Law; is that what you mean?—That is exactly what I mean, that there was a certain class of people unwilling to apply for it. I think I stated that higher up.

37865. (Mr. Bentham.) But the phrase that is made use of is the "pauper class." I want you to say what the "pauper class" is if it does not include those who need treatment which they cannot pay for?—Suppose I answer it in this way, that in this sense the pauper class as stated here is the people who are unwilling to ask for the Poor Law relief. That is exactly what I meant. Perhaps I ought to have put it a little more clearly because the "pauper class" is perhaps an unfortunate expression in this sense, but that is my meaning.

Payment by guardians for paupers sent to sanitary authority's smallpox hospitals.

37866. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to that provision which you have at Blackburn for taking smallpox patients or scarlet fever patients from the workhouse, I understand that if you take a smallpox patient he remains chargeable to his relatives; if you take a scarlet fever patient he is not chargeable to his relatives, because you do not charge the board of guardians?—That is so.

37867. So that smallpox patients when they are taken by you into the fever hospital are paupers technically and scarlet fever patients are not?—Yes, they are all under the same group; we remove all—you mean as regards payment?

37868. Yes?—It is possible that that guinea per week may have been charged because the distance from Blackburn to the Smallpox Hospital is fairly great, about five miles, and I have no doubt the charge was made to help pay the expenses.

37869. If you deal with the patient it is a considerable difference; in one case he is chargeable and in the other he is not chargeable to his relatives?—There is a distinction.

37870. Is smallpox the only infectious disease which you make chargeable to relatives if he is removed from the workhouse?—Yes.

37871. If you remove him from his own home he is not chargeable?—No.

37872. So there is one particular set of people who are penalised; that is the smallpox patients removed from the workhouse?—Yes, those are the only ones who are charged.

The respective functions of Poor Law and sanitary authorities as to disease.

37873. With regard to the difference of the public health treatment and the Poor Law treatment, the Poor Law never treats a disease until there is a definite application made?—As a rule I believe they do not.

37874. So that the disease must be more or less advanced or the patient must think so?—Yes.

37875. There must be no power to get at incipient disease?—No.

37876. You, on the contrary, try to get at incipient disease as soon as it is possible by inspection?—We do.

37877. That you take it is very important in the case of phthisis?—Yes.

37878. It is the incipient cases that are important?—Yes.

Question of suitability of Poor Law to deal with phthisis.

37879. So that the Poor Law, the main principle of which is necessarily application, could never be used for phthisis?—I do not think so in the case of phthisis.

37880. With regard to general ill-health, it either comes from bad conditions, or bad environments, or bad habits, does it not?—Those are certainly great causes of ill-health.

Causes of ill-health.

37881. Would you say there is any cause besides bad conditions, bad habits and infection?—Hereditary tendency.

37882. Is that a very large cause compared with bad habits?—I could not say whether it was a large cause or not; it is certainly a factor not to be overlooked.

37883. With regard to bad habits, it is very important to teach people to get rid of those habits?—Most important.

37884. Do you think you could make use of health visitors with a view of health inspection to teach people to get rid of bad habits?—Yes, that is what I hope will be done.

Dr. A. Greenwood.
22 Jan. 1907

37885. They could also report nuisances?—Yes.

37886. So that they could deal with environment?—Yes.

Health visitors and their functions.

37887. And they could also discover incipient cases of illness?—I do not think that the lady health visitor could detect an incipient case of phthisis, for instance.

37888. She could report to the medical officer a man having a cough?—If she got to know.

37889. So that you could use your health visitor, assuming she was fairly qualified, to a large extent to report as to infectious complaints, or incipient complaints, like ringworm?—Yes, if she got the knowledge.

37890. Do you regard that reporting of illness, whether it is a specific infectious disease, or general ill-health caused by bad habits, or bad environments, as very important?—I do, most important.

37891. Would you allow your health visitors to give advice about bad habits?—Certainly, she would be practically told to do so.

37892. If it was a difficult case she would notify it to the medical officer of health; if it was a case like phthisis that required rather an extensive change in habits?—Yes, she would report the whole of her work, of course.

Distinction between hygienic advice and medical treatment.

37893. Is it not very difficult to distinguish between what is hygienic advice and treatment; does not one run into the other?—Not in the broad sense of treatment; I do not think it is difficult to distinguish between the two. I think one can distinguish between hygienic advice, such as a lady visitor going to a house and saying, "You must sleep with your bedroom window open, and so on, and be clean," and actually prescribing and dispensing medicine.

37894. If you discovered a case of incipient disease through this process of inspection, would it not be desirable from a public point of view that that should be immediately treated and cured?—Certainly, it is desirable.

37895. So there would be some desirability in putting the general ill-health under the medical officer of health if it could be done?—For purposes of information so that he should know.

Question of general gratuitous treatment of disease by medical officer of health.

37896. Information and also treatment following on hygienic advice?—I would not go the whole length of saying that he should publicly himself through his agents treat disease.

37897. You would in a great many cases, in phthisis for instance, which is one-third of the illness at some periods of life?—Yes, phthisis is certainly different.

37898. And all infectious complaints?—And all infectious diseases.

37899. You would give free treatment?—I do not gather that. I would not go that far, even, that in all infectious cases I would give treatment. For instance, ringworm; I believe they treat it at Croydon. I think, as I have stated, that in my opinion the primary object being the prevention of disease (this is just the view I hold) that it is going rather far even to treat ringworm actually.

37900. You would let ringworm spread rather than treat it?—That is putting it in a difficult light to me.

37901. I want to get it out?—I would not let it spread; I would not undertake the personal treatment myself, but I would see it was treated.

37902. You would have to treat it free. Supposing the person did not particularly want to have it treated, what would you do unless you offered treatment? Supposing the person said, "Really I cannot afford this," would you give treatment?—She would have to get medical attendance from somewhere.

37903. You would insist that she should have medical attention?—I would certainly.

37904. You would have to pay for it if she objected to it?—I do not know how that objection would be overcome, quite. I certainly would not let it spread, and I certainly would strongly advise, as strongly as I possibly could, that the child should be medically treated.

Dr. A.
Greenwood.
22 Jan. 1907.

Question of general gratuitous treatment of disease by medical officer of health.

37905. How would you provide that it should not be left without medical treatment, or how could you provide the medical treatment unless you provided it free if the person would not pay?—That is taking an extreme view. I think if it was plainly put before a mother that her child had ringworm and that she herself must make an effort, I think she would.

37906. And if she did not, would you still let it spread?—If she did not I should regard her as being very much to blame. If she did not do her best, and she could be prosecuted, I think she should be.

37907. You would be prepared to prosecute a person who refused to supply the medical advice that was necessary for her child?—No, I do not quite put it in that light myself, but if she wilfully neglected to do her best to get medical advice for her child, then I would.

37908. We are told that a great many cases of blindness (I have forgotten what proportion) arise from ophthalmia or some form of eye disease which is preventible when the child is an infant. Would you be prepared to save the child from becoming blind by treating it free?—I daresay if I were left to myself, personally if I knew a child was going to become blind I should treat it quite on my own.

37909. I mean as the public authority. Two-thirds of the blind people become paupers, and a large proportion of those blind people are blind because of preventible eye disease in early infancy. Would you be prepared that the public authority should treat all preventible disease?—No, I would not.

37910. You would let the child go blind?—No, I would rather go on the lines of taking preventive measures, and suggesting treatment as in the other cases.

37911. You would inspect the child?—I should inspect the child, and separate the other children. One would not have a child with ophthalmia mixing with children whose eyes are quite normal.

37912. You go to the expense of inspection and advising but not the expense of the last thing which was required to save the child going blind; the inspection is a large part of the expense?—The inspection is the important part, because through that means the disease is found out. Then I think that other means might be found to actually treat the disease, so that the work of inspection, and thus prevention of infection, could go on.

37913. Is not this work of inspection by far the largest part of the cost; is it not by that you find out all disease and then give hygienic advice—is that not practically almost the whole cost?—I really could not say, but I should not think so, not as compared with the cost of treatment, if the subject is considered as a whole.

37914. I notice you say that other diseases are likely to become notifiable diseases, cancer, pneumonia and diarrhoea. Are those considered likely to be considered infectious diseases?—My reason for putting in cancer is, as I hint at the end of that same paragraph, that it is very useful to disinfect, or it may be very useful, and most valuable to disinfect after a death from cancer. I think it would be well if every house could be disinfected after a death from cancer, and that power could be got by including it amongst the notifiable diseases.

37915. In order to do that you must have very complete inspection of all the cases of illness, must you not?—This would only refer to disinfection of a house after death from cancer, and the death returns, of course, show the cause of death.

37916. What about pneumonia; why do you mention pneumonia?—There certainly is a feeling, and I think not without ground that there is an infectious kind of pneumonia; that is the reason why I thought it very useful to have that information.

37917. Do you suggest that besides disinfecting for pneumonia and diarrhoea you should be empowered to isolate it and therefore treat it?—No I do not suggest isolation in any of these three cases.

37918. (Mr. Nunn.) Did I understand you to say you hope to get these made compulsory notifiable diseases by order of the Local Government Board?—I suppose we should need a local Act really.

37919. Do you see any objection to receiving notification of phthisis from others than medical practitioners?—No, not at all. Voluntary notification of phthisis.

37920. Perhaps you are not aware that in many parts of England, and in London, others than medical practitioners do send in notifications, and they are acted on by medical officers of health just the same?—I did not know that.

37921. (Chairman.) The children to whom you allude in paragraph 48 as sent to you for medical examination, I assume, were sent to you because it was presumed they were subject to disease?—No, they are really sent to me to see whether they are to go to school or not; they are sent by the school attendance officer to see whether there is any medical reason why they should not go to school. Medical examination of school children as to fitness for school.

37922. That is the regular practice is it, to send the children to the health officer?—I happen to be the medical officer of health and the medical officer to the education committee. It is in my capacity as medical officer to the education authority that I see these children.

37923. Is there a lock hospital ward in Blackburn?—They may have a separate small private ward, there is not a ward definitely fixed for that purpose, I think. Provision for lock cases at Blackburn.

37924. In the general infirmary?—No, there is not one in the general infirmary.

37925. Where would those cases be dealt with?—I presume at the union infirmary.

37926. That would be the only means of dealing with them?—Yes.

Mr. NATHAN RAW, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), called; and Examined.

Mr. N. Raw, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.)
22 Jan. 1907.
37927. (Chairman.) You have prepared for us a very interesting statement, which is so clear that I do not think I need supplement it by many questions. Perhaps you will therefore kindly hand it in as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I am Visiting Medical Superintendent of the Mill Road Infirmary, Liverpool (900 beds), member of Council of the National Association for the Prevention of Consumption, British member of the International Commission on Consumption. Late medical superintendent of the Dundee Royal Infirmary, and medical officer to several large lunatic asylums and hospitals.

2. I am at present engaged in practice as a consulting physician in Liverpool, and am, in addition, visiting medical superintendent of Mill Road Infirmary, an institution entirely devoted to the reception and treatment of acute disease and illness amongst the poor belonging to the West Derby Union.

3. During the last twenty years I have been engaged in the treatment of sickness amongst the poor, in both Voluntary and Poor Law hospitals and asylums and have thus had an exceptional opportunity of observing the practical working of the two systems, and during that time over 70,000 patients have passed through my hands, more than one half of whom were Poor Law cases.

4. I would like to confine my remarks more or less entirely to the question of the treatment of cases of medical sickness arising amongst the poorer classes of the community, and, more especially, the anomalies and hardships of the present system of Poor Law treatment as compared with that of the voluntary hospitals.

Present Authorities.

5. The three authorities for the treatment of medical sickness amongst the poor are:—
(a) Poor Law. (Guardians.)
(b) Voluntary system. (General hospitals.)
(c) Sanitary authority. (Fever, etc.) Three agencies for medical assistance of the poor.

6. The varying forms of sickness which have to be treated by these different authorities are roughly as follows:—

- (a) Medical cases.
- (b) Surgical cases (including operations).
- (c) Insanity (temporary and permanent).
- (d) Infectious fevers.
- (e) Venereal diseases.
- (f) Midwifery.

Sanitary authority responsible for infectious disease.

Authorities responsible for dealing with permanent and temporary insanity.

Insufficient provision for venereal disease.

Existing provision for dealing with midwifery cases. Deterrence of workhouses or midwifery cases and consequent evil results.

the deterrence of medical relief and its hardships.

7. Generally speaking there is necessarily a large amount of overlapping by the different authorities, but in the case of infectious diseases the sanitary authority assumes full responsibility and makes a charge for maintenance for any cases received from the Poor Law, whilst not making any charge for non-Poor Law cases.

8. In the case of insanity, the whole burden of responsibility of temporary mental disorder, including delirium tremens, falls on the Poor Law by Statute, whether the patients are or are not paupers.

9. In cases of permanent insanity, including imbecility and dementia, the responsibility is shared by the Poor Law by detaining such cases as are suitable in workhouses, and by the County Councils in lunatic asylums.

10. All cases of venereal disease are now practically debarred from the general hospitals, to the great detriment of the community and the sufferers. The result is that the Poor Law is compelled to provide special accommodation for such cases as will come within its jurisdiction, whilst the other cases are not isolated, with the result that venereal disease is spread through the city by women who are not properly cured.

11. The treatment of poor women in their confinement is one of the greatest difficulties in the health administration of a large community. By far the great majority of women are confined in their own homes, the small lying-in hospital being reserved for cases of difficult labour requiring skilled attention. The very poor women who cannot afford the services of a doctor or a midwife are left to the tender mercies of a nurse from a charity, or else are offered the workhouse. Single women seemingly do not mind the workhouse, but my experience is that married women will do anything rather than enter the workhouse for confinement. They readily seek admission into a separate union infirmary where there is no stigma attached, but they strongly object to register the birth of their child as having taken place in a workhouse. There can be no doubt that hundreds of mothers and children are sacrificed annually from the fact that confinement has to take place in insanitary rooms in which there are little or no facilities for recovery and in many cases in which the bare necessities of life are wanting. Nothing is so much desired as better facilities for the birth of children in large cities quite apart from the stigma of pauperism.

12. With regard to the general question of the treatment of acute sickness amongst the poor, it must be admitted that the present system, although conferring enormous benefits upon those who are admitted into the Poor Law institutions, is, in a great many instances, full of hardship. The great difficulty at present seems to be the reluctance, even in cases of dire necessity, on the part of the poor to enter a workhouse or workhouse infirmary for the purpose of treatment. The very fact that no case of urgent sickness can be treated without the penalties and stigma of pauperism, is, in itself, a sufficient reason to deter such people from seeking the aid of the Poor Law. To take an ordinary example:—A working man with a wife and family is attacked with an acute disease like rheumatic fever or acute pneumonia. His home is totally inadequate for the treatment of such a condition and, moreover, he cannot afford proper nursing and proper food. He is reluctantly compelled to ask for Poor Law relief, when he will be removed to the workhouse or the workhouse infirmary and there treated until his recovery. He has, however, to be classed as a pauper. He loses his parliamentary and municipal votes and he is liable to be charged the full amount that he can afford to pay for his maintenance. Supposing, for argument's sake, that this same man was fortunate enough to secure admission into a voluntary hospital, he would be treated with equal care, he would suffer no disabilities as to the franchise, and would not be asked or expected to contribute one penny towards his maintenance.

13. Or to take another example:—A man in a respectable social position is knocked down in the street and suffers a fracture of the leg. He is taken to a general hospital but they cannot admit him on account of want of accommodation. He is then removed to a Poor Law institution where he suffers the same disabilities of franchise and is classed as a pauper. This is a state of things which is occurring every day in any large populous centre.

14. Before one can discuss in detail the difficult problem of medical sickness amongst the poor and its treatment, it is necessary to consider the present state of evolution of the Poor Law in that respect. The original intention of the general or voluntary hospitals and other charitable institutions was to devote their entire energies to the treatment of the sick poor, that is, to people who were quite unable to provide such accommodation for themselves and who were, in the words used in the charters of those institutions, "objects of charity." It was never the intention of the Poor Law to treat generally such cases. Gradually, however, the hospital has been added to the workhouse, separate infirmaries have been erected for the treatment of acute sickness, and the Poor Law has been compelled to advance against it; will so as to bring its institutions into line with the best general hospitals. Public opinion has compelled the Poor Law to adopt the very best and latest facilities for the treatment of disease in all its stages. Operating theatres have had to be provided in Poor Law institutions, fully equipped for the purpose of carrying out any surgical operation which may present itself in a Poor Law institution, with the result that the best medical skill that can be procured has to be obtained for Poor Law institutions and an up-to-date staff of nurses, trained in all branches of their work, to assist in the furtherance of the treatment of the sick poor.

15. In the meantime, what has happened to the general or voluntary hospitals? Instead of confining their work, as originally intended, to the poor, they are now treating within their walls a class of the community very much higher in the social scale who can in a very great number of instances well afford to pay for medical advice.

16. This extraordinary change in the voluntary or general hospital has caused a very serious reaction on the Poor Law institutions. Now-a-days owing to the great improvement in the equipment and treatment received a class of people who a few years ago would shrink at the very idea of entering a hospital, now clamour for admission.

17. Until a few years ago all admissions to hospitals were by means of subscribers' letters or recommendations from governors.

18. This system had the great advantage of encouraging subscriptions and also of safeguarding admissions so that only persons in poor circumstances were allowed to use the hospitals. All this is changed. Subscribers' letters and governor's recommendations are practically abolished, with the result that the Hospital Committee has no voice whatever with regard to the admission or discharge of patients, the whole process being in the hands of the medical officers who admit all and sundry regardless of their pecuniary circumstances.

19. This system is full of advantage to the fortunate patients, who receive the best medical skill and treatment free of all cost, but it has practically crowded out the sick poor for whom they were intended, and who now have to fall back as a last resource on the union.

20. Moreover, it is very unfair to the medical profession that such treatment should be given gratuitously, of free and it has a most demoralising effect on the patients themselves by removing all stimulus to provide against sickness and accident.

21. If a workman has an accident or an illness and is removed to a general hospital, his sick pay from his club or society is not interfered with, but if he is removed to a union infirmary the sick pay is stopped, and any pension from the Army or Navy is seized by the guardians, and the cost of his maintenance deducted.

22. The question of enforcing payment in cases of sickness where it can be afforded is one of great importance. Whatever principle is adopted, whether free or chargeable, should be uniform and the same to all classes.

23. The present system is full of hardship to the poor and too lenient to those better off. The position can best be explained by quoting the state of affairs existing in Liverpool and district with a population of 1,000,000 people.

Mr. N. Raw.
M.D., F.R.S.
(Edin.)

22 Jan. 1907.

Alteration in standards of Poor Law and voluntary hospitals and in class of patients treated.

Invasion of voluntary hospitals by socially higher class of patients and consequent crowding out of the poor into poor law hospitals.

Evil result of free treatment at voluntary hospitals.

Comparison of the incidents of treatment in voluntary and Poor Law hospitals.

Anomalies of system of recovering cost of medical relief.

Mr. N. Raw, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.) 24. There are provided in the workhouse hospitals and union infirmaries 3,000 beds for cases of acute sickness amongst the poor. The general hospitals and charitable institutions provide about 1,000 beds.

22 Jan. 1907.

Comparison of cost of medical treatment recovered by Poor Law and voluntary hospitals in Liverpool.

Increasing attractiveness of separate Poor Law infirmaries.

Difficulty as to refusing order for medical relief.

Use of Poor Law infirmaries as general hospitals and consequent spread of pauperism.

Objections to deterrence of medical relief.

The principle of payment for medical assistance in proportion to ability.

Extension of medical relief causes fall in voluntary hospital subscriptions.

Phthisis as a cause of pauperism and great cost thereof.

25. The guardians of the three unions recover over £4,000 a year from the patients who use their hospitals, whilst the general hospitals do not recover £400 a year from those patients who use them. So that it comes to this. The pauper has to pay for his medical treatment and loses his franchise, whilst the general hospital patient receives all for nothing and his franchise is not interfered with. This state of things should certainly be amended.

26. The policy of providing separate union infirmaries for the treatment of acute sickness amongst the poor was a wise and humane one, and by removing them from the taint of the workhouse the poor were induced readily to use them, but the pendulum has swung too far. A very large number of people who are not destitute and are not by any means paupers do not hesitate to use them.

27. In cases of sickness or urgency, a relieving officer cannot wait to make full enquiry; he gives an order for admission rather than risk a scandal, and the medical officer of the infirmary for the same reason will not refuse admission to an urgent case, whatever his circumstances. Public opinion and the coroner's jury will not tolerate any red tape when a human life is at stake. Again, the general hospitals refuse admission to "undesirable cases" and refer to the workhouse any patient whom they are not disposed to keep.

28. The general result is that everything of an uninteresting or undesirable character relating to sick patients is thrust upon the Poor Law, which is apparently helpless to refuse. There can be no doubt that the present union infirmary is doing the work of a general hospital and doing it well, but in so doing it is acting as a manufactory of paupers, an unfortunate admission to have to make.

29. The strongest possible argument for the municipalisation of all hospitals is the present state of the Poor Law. No man or woman should be punished because he is attacked by sickness or accident. If he requires hospital treatment for his recovery and speedy return to work it should carry with it none of the disabilities of pauperism. The severity and rigour of the Poor Law should be reserved for those who are not sick. It is economic to give a poor man the best possible treatment so as to restore him to work quickly, rather than that he and his family should have to be supported by the rates for an indefinite period. I am, however, strongly of opinion that every person who uses a hospital, whether voluntary or Poor Law, should be compelled to pay as much as he can afford towards his maintenance, care being taken that no hardship is caused, and that he should not be deprived of treatment on account of the charge. The guardians are as a rule most lenient, and I have not met with many cases where the health of a person has suffered from too early discharge from hospital on account of inability to pay.

30. The real reason why the subscriptions to general hospitals have fallen off to such an extent as at present is that the subscribers say the poor are now treated by the Poor Law authorities and that they support them by rates.

Tuberculosis.

31. The terrible scourge consumption and other forms of tuberculosis causes more pauperism than any other disease. One-seventh of the total cost of the Poor Law is due to it.

32. In Liverpool alone the cost to the ratepayers of maintaining such cases alone is £25,000 a year.

33. The sad part of it is that highly respectable people in all ranks of society are dragged down to destitution by this fell disease, finally becoming chargeable with their families to the Poor Law. I have made a special study of this problem as it affects the poor, and have carefully examined 4,000 cases of consumption in the wards of a union infirmary.

34. I have come to the conclusion that nearly 60 per cent. of these people are paupers because they are consumptive, and not consumptives, because they are paupers. I have met with hundreds of cases where respectable working men have struggled with the disease as long as possible and finally have been compelled to seek Poor Law relief.

35. The disease is a chronic one as a rule, and the cost of maintaining cases of tuberculosis is excessive. Yet the Poor Law is compelled to take them because no other authority will have them. There is no more pressing and vital problem from a sociological point of view than this one; as there are at present in England and Wales over 200,000 men afflicted with tubercle, the majority of whom will ultimately have to resort to the workhouse unless released by death. The enormous strain on the resources of the unions, both by reason of the cost and the fact that in Liverpool alone over 700 beds are permanently occupied in the workhouse hospitals by persons suffering from tuberculosis, makes it expedient to make some attempt to offer a cure for this dread disease.

36. With this end in view the three unions of Liverpool have combined to form a tuberculosis committee and have erected and equipped a sanatorium for the treatment and possible cure of early cases of consumption.

37. The results so far have been satisfactory and encouraging; but here again the pauper test has to be imposed, with the result that it is difficult to get patients in the early stages of the disease to enter the sanatorium, because they are compelled to pass through the workhouse, which they strongly resent. The work is economic and humane and is doing a great deal of good amongst the poor.

38. The wider question of tuberculosis in its relation to the health of the general community ought to be seriously considered. It is essentially a matter to be dealt with by the sanitary authority, both with regard to the prevention and treatment of the disease, as until some general and concerted measures are adopted to prevent its spread by infection from person to person we cannot hope for much improvement.

39. This surely is not the duty of the Poor Law authorities who now are sadly handicapped by being compelled to maintain all those unfortunate sufferers whom no other institution will shelter and support.

40. The whole problem of medical sickness amongst the poor is full of difficulty and disappointment. The two most important questions are:—

(a) How can it be most efficiently done without unnecessary hardship.

(b) Which authority is most competent to undertake the work.

41. As we have seen, there has been a gradual transfer of responsibility from one authority to another within the last twenty years, with in each case a surprising benefit to the community.

42. Fever Cases have been within the last thirty years all removed from the general hospitals and workhouses and transferred to the sanitary authorities, who have provided special fever hospitals, with the result that the death rate has been immensely reduced.

43. Insane Cases have been also removed from hospitals and workhouses to a large extent and transferred to the care of county and borough councils with excellent results.

44. The whole tendency of the present age is to remove from the workhouse all those who are likely to benefit by training, such as defective children and epileptics, as well as education of children.

45. When the Poor Law was framed there was practically no other responsible authority to participate in the treatment of the sick poor, consequently it was left to care for everything and everybody; but since the creation of county councils, borough councils and district councils everything is changed. These authorities are now gradually taking their part in the work, with the result that there is considerable overlapping and confusion in the performance of their separate duties, and the experience of many years in the working of each authority compels one to consider the question whether or not the time has yet come for the Poor Law to cease to take any part in the prevention and treatment of disease.

Phthisis sanatorium provided in combination of Liverpool Unions. Evil results deterrence medical relief in Phthisis cases.

Proposal to transfer sanitary authority should deal with phthisis.

Tendency transfer to sanitary authority treatment various classes of diseases and good result thereof.

Question of transfer to sanitary authority the function of the Poor Law as to disease.

46. The gradual evolution of the Poor Law to its present efficient system of the treatment of the sick has gone too far.

47. It is doing the work which ought to be done by the sanitary authority, who would probably not do it more efficiently but would certainly reduce it to uniformity and prevent, as at present, injustice and hardship to the sick poor. The Poor Law has lost its terrors. The trend of public opinion would not be in favour of imposing harsh tests for admission.

48. A mighty difference should be made between the deserving sick poor and the hopeless loafer and wastrel.

49. For these, colonies should be provided by each district, with compulsory powers of detention, under the control of the Home Office.

50. The vagrants should be under the control of the police and the Home Office, whilst the children and infirm should be carefully tended and maintained in comfort by the municipality with the co-operation of private charity.

51. There is no doubt the public would gladly subscribe to institutions for the care of the aged and infirm if they were removed from the Poor Law, at present they cannot do so excepting by rates.

52. In my judgment, after making a careful practical study of the continental systems, I am of opinion that before any solution of the present state of things in England will be found it will be necessary to establish a system of

53. Compulsory Insurance amongst workmen, either a State insurance or with the present friendly societies.

54. In hundreds of cases which have come under my notice it was evident that had a little provision been made by the workmen when in good circumstances, he need never have come under the Poor Law. I would conclude by saying that if the whole treatment of the sick poor of any community was undertaken by the central authority it would have the co-operation of all philanthropic societies and private munificence, all of which are at present debarred by reason of association with Poor Law.

55. The guardians and officials have done their very best to alleviate the lot of the sick poor; it is not them, but the system that is at fault, a system which, however necessary it was half a century ago, at present requires amendment or reform to bring it into line with modern views on social and economic questions.

ADDENDUM.

56. In my opinion, before the Poor Law can be made effective it will be necessary and desirable to dissociate from it the whole question of medical sickness.

So long as there is the possibility of sick persons being treated with hardship it will be impossible for the guardians to tighten up the Poor Law so as to treat the vagrant, the wastrel, and the vicious and lazy with the rigour necessary for their proper treatment.

A sick person should be on quite a different footing to a vicious one, and every facility should be given without stigma for his rapid recovery to health so that he may return to work and support his family.

57. The formation of a National Health Department with a Minister of State at its head who would be responsible for the administration of health affairs through the country.

This would involve the establishment of:—

(a) A National Medical Service, to take the place of the present Poor Law medical service. The members of this service would include the present medical officers of health and the medical officers appointed to treat the sick poor. The medical officer of health in every town and district would thus undertake the supervision of all sickness arising in his area. At the present time he has no jurisdiction excepting in cases of notifiable infectious disease. This would give him a knowledge of sickness and disease in his district which he has not at present.

(b) The formation of a National Nursing Service to take the place of the present Poor Law nursing service. The nurses would not only work in hospitals and institutions, but would visit poor patients at their own homes, and, if necessary, attend poor women in their confinement.

These medical and nursing services would have all the status of a Government Department with a regulated scale of pay and pension in exactly the same way as the prison service. They would be inspected by Government inspectors and controlled by the local authority.

(c) The whole question and responsibility for sickness and its treatment amongst the poor of any community should be placed under the control of the local sanitary or health authority and would be supervised by the medical officer of health. It would simply mean an extension of the present principle of fever hospitals which are admittedly well managed and in which the sick receive the best treatment.

At the present time the question of treatment of sickness is in a state of chaos and confusion entailing a great deal of overlapping and unnecessary expense. Some sick persons are treated by the Poor Law, others by the general hospitals, and others by the health authority.

At the present time a municipality has the power to provide hospitals for infectious diseases and asylums for lunatics. This principle should be extended and should include the ordinary hospital and home treatment of those sick persons who are unable to provide it for themselves and whom it is a national advantage to restore quickly to health. At the present time it is all done at the expense of the rates and it simply means reducing the present state of confusion to one of uniformity and fairness.

37928. (Chairman.) Before we get to the pith of your statement I should like to ask you two questions. In paragraph 10 you state that lock hospital cases are now practically debarred from the general hospitals; is that so?—Yes; within recent years it has been so.

37929. Is the tendency to push that class of case out?—The tendency is to push it out from the voluntary hospital, and then of course it has to be taken up by the Poor Law as a last resort.

37930. This is a class of case, which, looking at the general health of the community, does require very careful treatment and investigation, does it not?—Certainly.

37931. My second question refers to what I think is rather an indication on your part in your next paragraph that you would like to increase the number of lying-in wards?—I should.

37932. What was your idea when you wrote that paragraph? Was it the idea that there should be paying wards for respectable women whose husbands could not afford to pay a very considerable sum, but who would not be disposed to go into the infirmary as Poor Law patients?—Undoubtedly that is the case. Respectable people have the greatest horror of going to the Poor Law for that purpose. I am speaking now, of course, of married people.

37933. The words you use are “Nothing is so much desired as better facilities for the birth of children in large cities quite apart from the stigma of pauperism.” What was the sort of idea that you had?—First of all, that they should be attended at their own homes by qualified midwives, or if the case demanded it, should be taken into a lying-in hospital which would be provided at the public expense but would not be associated with the Poor Law.

37934. Then was it your idea that this attendance should be free?—No, not necessarily free. If it was necessary, of course it would have to be free.

37935. You would keep these lying-in hospitals, as far as possible, for women of respectable character, I take it?—Yes, certainly.

37936. Now, to deal generally with your statement. You have stated I think very clearly what are the disadvantages of the present system. You think that there is an increasing tendency on the part of people who can quite afford to pay for medical treatment to avail themselves of the free treatment which they can obtain in hospitals?—Undoubtedly. I think that is the general impression of the medical profession.

37937. And that results in rather a diversion of these hospitals from the original purpose for which they were intended?—Yes, undoubtedly.

37938. Apparently, side by side with this, there are attempts on the part of the guardians to recover the charge

Mr. N. Raw,
M.D., F.R.S.
(Edin.)

22 Jan. 1907.

Proposed transfer of medical relief to the sanitary authority.

Deficient provision for venereal disease.

Deterrence of midwifery relief and need of more midwifery accommodation apart from the Poor Law.

Increasing social status of patients at voluntary
hospitals.

Mr. N. Raw, for medical treatment from the patients who frequent M.D., F.R.S. the infirmaries?—Yes; I think that is becoming more stringent. (Edin.)

22 Jan. 1907. 37939. You give us some rather remarkable figures. You stated that the guardians of the three unions in Liverpool recover over £4,000 a year from their patients whilst the general hospitals do not recover more than £400 a year?—That is so. Of course it ought to be stated that the general hospitals have no power to recover; they are charitable institutions, and their charters will not allow them to make a charge for any patient, so what they do recover are voluntary gifts.

37940. Have they not paying wards?—Some of them have paying wards, but I think that that part of a hospital should be dissociated from the inquiry altogether, as that is more or less a private hospital.

37941. You say that the proportion of beds in the union infirmaries and hospitals as compared with the proportion in general hospitals in Liverpool is about 3,000 to 1,000?—Yes.

37942. Have you any idea what the proportion is all over the country?—No, I have not, but I should think it is very near this. I should think that in the rural districts the proportion is very much higher in favour of the Poor Law, but that in the big cities, where you have a lot of philanthropy and large donations, the average would be a little smaller.

37943. Your contention is that the Poor Law as originally created was not intended to undertake this particular class of work?—Undoubtedly.

37944. But it has been grafted on it?—If I may say so, it has of necessity evolved into this condition. The charitable institutions, the voluntary hospitals, instead of confining their work to objects of charity, which their charters say they shall, are now taking a better class of people, with the result that the poor, who were intended to be treated in the voluntary hospitals, have now to be treated by the Poor Law.

37945. Your impression is that the fact of medical relief being connected with the Poor Law is a deterrent to a good many respectable people seeking medical relief through that channel?—Unquestionably.

37946. Are you quite satisfied of that?—I am quite satisfied; in many cases they are deterred from seeking it until it is too late. For instance, people will struggle on with a disease and spend all their money, and then apply to the Poor Law in cases almost where the people are dying.

37947. Therefore, you have come to the conclusion that it would be a great advantage from the medical point of view and from the health point of view, if the medical treatment of the respectable poor could be dissociated from the Poor Law?—I am absolutely of that opinion after a great experience of both systems—both the voluntary and the Poor Law.

37948. Your suggestion is, I think, that the municipal authority should take control of the infirmaries, and in some way try to get the general hospitals to work in with the infirmaries?—I do not think I should care to make any reference to the general hospitals' scheme yet; but I should be in favour of the health authority in every district taking charge of the sick poor within its area, whatever disease it was. At the present time, they treat all insanity and they treat all infectious diseases, and I should like that principle extended to ordinary illness.

37949. As regards infectious diseases, they treat those free at present, do they not?—They do treat those free; but it ought to be explained that the reason why they treat them free is, not that the public do not feel that they ought not to pay, but to encourage the public to send their cases into fever hospitals, and so prevent epidemics spreading. If they made a charge on ordinary fever cases, then there would be less desire to send cases in, especially with children. They have full power, however, to make a charge.

37950. But, for the reason you have stated, they decline to make use of that power?—Yes.

37951. Assuming a case is a really serious medical or surgical case entailing prolonged treatment in an in-ward, as a rule, I think the patient pays nothing either in the infirmary or in the hospital?—Sometimes he does in a Poor Law infirmary.

37952. Is it not the practice in those cases for the Poor Law to make no charge, as an adequate charge would be quite beyond the means of anyone of the wage-earning class?—I think the practice in the Poor Law is that the only condition on which a charge is not made is the inability of the patient to pay it.

37953. In a case entailing an operation, and taking the wage-earner of the family away for a month or two, is a charge made?—Certainly, if they find that he can pay it. For instance, if he is in a club, a tontine club, or a sick club, or if he has a pension, that is invariably taken.

37954. In the case both of the club and the pension there would be funds available?—Yes; and these things are seized by the Poor Law.

37955. Would you say it is the general practice in these cases to try and recover if practicable?—Certainly it is the general practice.

37956. I should like to try and work out a little the result of the proposals you make. First, you propose that the health authority should take control of the medical treatment and relief now given by the Poor Law authorities; would you make that relief free?—No.

37957. You would charge then?—Certainly. It would be the essence of my suggestion that a charge should be made whenever it could be made.

37958. As regards the persons who could not pay, what would you do?—I should do it at the expense of the rates.

37959. That is to say, through the guardians?—According to my proposal it would be through the health authority.

37960. Let us take a concrete case. Supposing there was a severe illness and the head of a family was in hospital for two or three months, and in the meantime his family had been obliged to apply for poor relief; how would you deal with a case of that kind?—The man who was ill would be treated by the health authority, and the condition of the family would be investigated by the guardians.

37961. Would the sanitary authority make their own enquiries as to the ability of the man to pay when he first came in, or would they do it through the Poor Law?—That is a matter of arrangement.

37962. I assume you prefer, holding the views that you do, not to do it through the Poor Law agency in the first instance?—Not as far as sickness is concerned.

37963. Now take the case of medical comforts; assuming the patient was discharged and required feeding up afterwards, through what agency would you provide for that?—That would be done by the co-operation of the central relief society either with the health authority or with the guardians.

37964. That would then be again a matter of arrangement?—Yes.

37965. It was suggested to us by one witness of some authority that it might be possible to work through the medical provident societies. I assume you would agree that in any scheme which is put forward consideration must be paid to these medical provident societies?—Yes.

37966. And also to the interests of the general medical practitioner?—Yes.

37967. You would say those were two essential points, I assume?—They are absolutely essential to my suggestion.

37968. The suggestion that was made was that the medical relief should be provided for through the provident societies and that where a person did not belong to a provident society, and was unable to qualify, then a charge or a payment should be made by the Poor Law authority; further that there should be a minimum out-medical medical fee, and that the charge of the medical provident societies should be so arranged as not to unduly compete with that minimum fee. That idea would fit in rather with what you are suggesting, would it not?—It would, quite well.

37969. The idea being if possible to stop the free out-medical relief of the hospitals?—Yes, that is it.

Proposal for payment to sanitary authority for medical relief in proportion to ability of patient.

Families of indigent patients of sanitary authority should be relieved by the guardians.

The relief of convalescent

Position of provident medical societies and of general practitioners in any scheme for re-organising medical relief.

Proposal to utilise provident medical societies as agencies for out-medical relief.

37970. And to put certain pressure upon individuals to join the Medical Provident Societies?—Yes. But a hardship would still remain if people did not join these provident societies, because there could be no compulsion about it.

37971. I think in the case of most provident societies they could become members by paying a rather higher rate; do you know anything about that?—I suppose they might.

The question of payment according to ability for treatment in voluntary hospitals.

37972. You said you would like to leave the general hospitals at first out of your scheme; would you not think it necessary to take them into consideration in any scheme of this kind?—I feel sure that the solution of the general hospital problem, which is so very unsatisfactory at present, would have to follow the lines of a suggestion such as this. If a charge was made by the health authority for treating the sick poor, then naturally a charge would have to be made in general hospitals for treating cases there; and if that were done the medical profession would be satisfied.

37973. Did you not state just now that the charters of some of these hospitals rather precluded that?—Of course their constitutions would have to be altered.

37974. Is all the medical treatment in hospitals free?—Yes, it must be. All the charters of the charitable hospitals in Liverpool state absolutely that no charge can be made for patients who live within a certain area.

Question of need for a workhouse infirmary.

37975. It is alleged by authorities on Poor Law administration who have knowledge of details and facts, that the guardians must have some infirmary, as very considerable numbers of the persons who are admitted to the workhouse almost immediately afterwards pass on into the infirmary. You have had some experience in that direction, I suppose?—Yes, considerable. But that would all be obviated by an ordinary medical inspection. At the present time the relieving officer has the absolute decision as to where a case shall go. The medical officer has no voice in the matter at all. For instance, if a relieving officer is asked to give relief to a person ill, say, with pneumonia, he refers the question to the medical officer who examines the man and recommends his admission to the infirmary, say; but the relieving officer need not act on his decision, and may send the man to the workhouse. If it rested with the medical officer to say to what part of the institution he should be immediately admitted, that would all be obviated. If he said the man was to go into a separate infirmary or into a separate hospital, if it was a case for hospital treatment, of course it would have then to be done.

37976. As regards the entrance into infirmary or hospital the difficulty might be got over, but then when he is cured he would have to go back to the workhouse?—Do you mean if he was under the health authority?

37977. I am assuming that a person who is sick and unwell comes up before the guardians for relief as at present and gets an order for the house, and then is passed on to the infirmary; when he comes out of the infirmary he goes back to the house, does he not?—He may do, but he may go straight home.

Question of power of infirmary and Poor Law authorities to discharge patients.

37978. Under your scheme there would be the possibility, would there not, of a certain number of persons in the hospitals, who were under the health authority, passing back to the workhouse when they became convalescent?—Under my scheme I should give the health authority the power of discharge. At the present time the Poor Law Authority has no power of discharge. A man goes into a Poor Law infirmary, and he recovers from an illness; then he is passed on to the workhouse, and he can stay there and the guardians cannot turn him out.

37979. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The guardians can discharge him at any time, surely?—I dare say they have the power, but they never use it.

37980. I think we have had evidence the other way?—At any rate I am only speaking from my experience at Liverpool. I think that this is a most important point, because, to a very great extent, it accounts for the workhouses being as full as they are.

37981. (Chairman.) Would you strongly advocate that there should be full power of discharge?—After investigation.

37982. (Mr. Booth.) Then how would you treat the re-admissions?—I should treat them on their merits.

37983. (Chairman.) You suggest in your addendum that if it were practicable to give effect to your ideas, you would like to form a national health department, a national nursing service, and a national medical service. I suppose, looking at it from a health point of view and from a national point of view, you think that this combination of duties would be very beneficial?—I think it would be very beneficial indeed.

37984. Some of our witnesses think that the treatment of individual cases rather interferes with the power of discharging the general sanitary duties; is that your view?—I think if a national health department were established it would co-ordinate all matters of health, which at the present time are distributed over several authorities.

37985. Do you think that you would, under such a scheme, be able to differentiate between the treatment of the individual and general sanitary inspection in such a way as not to make one service interfere with or tend to impair the efficiency of the other?—I do not think the scheme would have the effect suggested.

37986. There would be an increase in the cost, I assume?—Yes, I think there would be, at first.

37987. Do you think that much of the illness with which you come in contact is preventable?—Of course a certain proportion is preventable, but a very large proportion is incidental to the work of a big city.

37988. Under your scheme do you think there would be more tendency on the part of a person who was ill to ask for advice in the earlier stages?—Yes; at the very beginning of an illness, if the treatment was dissociated from the Poor Law, the people themselves would not be unwilling to seek it. Then, again, under my scheme, the health authority, by having a knowledge of all forms of illness in a big community, would be able to take means for the prevention of illness. At the present time the Poor Law authority has no power or jurisdiction to prevent illness; it simply has to take cases in when they are, as I say, in many instances at death's door.

37989. At present the municipalities have powers to provide hospitals for infectious diseases, but I think some legal authorities contend that they have also power to provide hospitals for non-infectious diseases?—I have it on the authority of the late President of the Local Government Board that any health authority has full power under the Public Health Act, 1875, to provide any hospital for the treatment of sick persons.

37990. I put that question to you because the last paragraph in the addendum rather implies that the power to provide hospitals is limited to infectious diseases?—I think that is the general interpretation. Health authorities do not know of this power.

37991. Would the formation of a national medical service of the kind that you suggest interfere much with the interests of general practitioners?—I think it would improve them.

37992. That is assuming that the medical relief was not made generally free?—Yes; of course it must not be made free.

37993. If it was made free that would be a vital objection, would it not?—Certainly. If a national medical service was established with a Government Department at its head, then medical men would be very glad to join it. They would be glad to get into the service, because they would have the status of a Government Department with a fixed rate of pay, fixity of tenure, pension, and all that sort of thing.

37994. It has been suggested to us by one or two medical men that there should be a medical distinction between Poor Law infirmaries and general hospitals, the Poor Law infirmaries dealing more with the chronic cases, and the general hospitals dealing with the acute cases. I assume that you are not in favour of so hard-and-fast a distinction?—I do not think it is possible to make it. The definition of what is an acute case and what is a chronic case is so difficult to formulate.

37995. Assuming that you have your national medical service, and assuming that you take acute cases in the infirmaries, I suppose the next step would be that you would be compelled to have medical schools in certain of them?—I think that is very desirable.

Mr. N. Rose,
M.D., F.R.S.
(Edin.)

22 Jan. 1907.

Proposed state medical service to be organised by Government department.

Proposed transfer of medical relief to sanitary authority, and effect on prevention of disease.

Power of sanitary authorities to provide general hospitals.

Relation of a state medical service to the position of the general practitioner.

Difficulty of distinguishing between acute and chronic cases.

Question of medical students in Poor Law infirmaries.

Mr. N. Raw, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.) 37996. You would be in favour of that?—Certainly. I cannot see any objection to it. I cannot see why the Poor Law institutions should not be educative institutions. It is so on the Continent.

22 Jan. 1907.

Advantage of transferring all medical relief to sanitary authority.

37997. If this idea of yours was at all to bear fruition, you would wish this health authority to be dissociated from the Poor Law, and therefore under some other local authority?—As at present. The medical officer of health in that case would be responsible for the whole of the sickness in his area, and of course he would be under the control of the Local Government Board. At the present time, the medical officer of health can only deal with cases which are notifiable under the Public Health Act; therefore the medical officer of health has a very poor idea of the real sickness in his locality. If he had to deal with such things as pneumonia, bronchitis, diarrhoea, and various things of that sort, he would have a better knowledge of the sickness in the community, and he would be able to supervise the prevention of it.

37998. And that would give him some insight into the causes, perhaps?—Yes, it would. At the present time the medical officer of health can take no action because these diseases are not notifiable. The cost in that case would not be any greater than it is at present under the Poor Law.

A state medical service implies increased Government control.

37999. Under your scheme a medical establishment of considerable dimensions would be put under local control; I assume that you would associate with it a very strong central supervising authority?—Yes. The health authority would be the central supervising authority, subject to medical inspection from the Local Government Board.

37800. You would give them, I suppose, strong general powers, if necessary, to override the local authority?—Would I give the Local Government Board strong powers?

38001. Yes; would you give strong powers to the central authority?—Certainly. I mean general powers of course, not local powers; for instance, every institution should be open to Government inspection, as Poor Law institutions are at present.

38002. I presume it might be necessary to give them power to compel a local authority to do a certain thing, whether they wished to do it or not?—Do you mean to supply accommodation for sick people?

38003. I was thinking more of dealing with infectious diseases; but perhaps they have that power now?—They have a limited power.

The possibility of transferring medical relief to sanitary authorities in rural districts and establishment of system of rural cottage hospitals.

38004. In framing your scheme I assume that you have looked at the problem mainly from an urban point of view; or have you considered what the effect would be in rural districts?—Yes, I have considered that point. I must confess that it would work better in a large community than in a scattered district; but there is no objection to it in a rural district.

38005. We have had one or two witnesses who have been health officers as well as Poor Law medical officers; in such cases there would be a difficulty, would there not, in the rural districts in dissociating the infirmary from the Poor Law, because it is very often part and parcel of the workhouse?—It almost invariably is. At the present time in rural districts the treatment of the sick is carried on in the workhouse.

38006. It would be difficult, would it not, to draw a distinction between medical relief and other relief under those circumstances?—I do not think so. I do not think there would be any difficulty. It would be quite obvious if a man had an acute illness that he did not require to go into the workhouse, and that he would want hospital treatment. At the present time if a poor person in a rural district is taken acutely ill he is admitted into the workhouse, as that is the only possible refuge for him. My scheme would mean simply erecting cottage hospitals in rural areas. They would be paid for out of the ordinary rate, and the cost would be no greater than the maintaining of hospital beds in a workhouse. Then the workhouse would be reserved in each rural district for the able-bodied and the infirm people.

38007. You would do it in that way, by cottage hospitals then?—I would do it in that way. It would be simply a transfer of powers from one authority to another. That is easily arranged now with regard to infectious diseases in every rural district and in every area, so that if a man is attacked, say, with scarlet fever, he can always be provided with accommodation.

38008. In a rural district would a person who is ill go to the health officer, or some subordinate officer, for medical relief and not to the relieving officer?—Yes, quite so, in the case of acute illness. I cannot see any reason why a man should be taken into a workhouse if he gets pneumonia, because he is only ill for, say, a fortnight and then he is back at work again.

38009. I assume you would contemplate having a staff for domiciliary visiting?—I think that is the most important part of it. Whoever takes control of the sick ought to provide visiting nurses who should go about and visit the sick. At the present time the Poor Law precludes that altogether. Importance of providing nurses to visit the sick poor.

38010. It was suggested that poor people might not like to have a visit from a medical officer who was an official of the health department, because they might think that whilst medically attending to the patient he was prying about to see in what condition the house was?—I think that sentiment has disappeared now.

38011. You do not think that is a serious objection then?—I do not think so at all.

38012. (Mr. Booth.) In your Addendum (Par. 56), you say it will be necessary and desirable to dissociate from the Poor Law the whole question of medical sickness; in what way do you differentiate between medical sickness and other sicknesses?—I am taking the Local Government Board's definition of sickness, which includes all acute sickness. The possibility of dissociating medical relief from the Poor Law.

38013. There would be cases which you would take out of the workhouse and into your hospital, but would that not still leave certain forms of sickness which would not be acute enough or important enough to move?—If they did not require hospital treatment?

38014. That is exactly what I am trying to get at?—If they did not require hospital treatment then they would, as at present, be treated by the Poor Law.

38015. You said, I think in answer to a question, that it was difficult to differentiate between acute illness and other forms of illness?—Yes.

38016. Is it not equally difficult to say what is sickness that requires hospital treatment?—I do not think that it is very difficult. It is a medical question. The principle of payment for medical assistance according to ability and difficulty of deciding as to ability.

38017. So that there really is a definition in your mind of medical sickness?—Generally speaking, there is quite a clear definition, but I admit there are many cases which do not appear at first sight to require medical treatment but which prove afterwards to do so. As a general rule it is quite obvious to a medical man whether a case requires hospital treatment or not.

38018. So that other cases of sickness would remain in the charge of the Poor Law?—As at present, yes.

38019. And it would depend upon the opinion of the medical officer, which you think could be readily given?—Yes. My point is, that if a case made application, say, for treatment, the medical officer, if he thought that the case was going to be of short duration, would send it to the health authority, that is, to the hospital, rather than to the Poor Law institution.

38020. And for a time they would, in a certain sense, cease to be paupers?—They would not be paupers at all.

38021. That is, they would not be paupers at all if they were moved out in that way?—Yes. If afterwards they recovered and then were destitute, then, of course, they would be paupers.

38022. But they would have to be discharged on your plan from the hospital direct, and reappear as paupers if at all?—If they wished to, yes.

38023. I do not suggest that the illness which occasions their removal is necessarily the cause of their pauperism. They are already paupers, they become sick, and you move them to another institution, and they cease for the time being to be paupers; then you discharge them from that institution, having done all you can for them from a medical point of view, and then they must apply again for Poor Law relief, I suppose?—

The principle of payment for medical assistance according to ability and difficulty of deciding as to ability. Hardly that. The great majority of people who apply for Poor Law relief in consequence of acute sickness are not paupers.

38024. I quite understand that, but I thought the two were mixed up together. So long as the sickness is the cause of their pauperism it is one thing, but it may be that the sickness is merely an accident of their pauperism, may it not?—Yes.

38025. Still, you would treat them all the same?—I should treat all acute sickness the same, certainly. The strongest argument for doing that is that you would would thus encourage people to apply early for treatment.

38026. That is, you would encourage those who are not paupers?—Yes.

38027. The paupers, while they were what you would call medically sick, would be passed on to the same institution, and when their sickness terminated they would be discharged into the world and have to re-apply as paupers?—Yes, exactly.

38028. I gather that you contemplate that all this national medical service should be paid for?—Absolutely, wherever practicable.

38029. Do you contemplate that it should be paid for at a remunerative price?—No.

38030. At a nominal price, then?—Purely nominal.

38031. The cost would probably be much greater than the patients would pay?—As at present in the Poor Law service, yes.

38032. But a payment, and a uniform payment, would be exacted, would it?—I think the central authority through its officials, would have to inquire into the circumstances of everybody who used their hospital.

38033. As to whether they should pay or not, or as to what amount they should pay?—Both.

38034. They should decide according to a man's position on what scale of pay he should be put?—Quite so. If a man had a wife and so many children and so much earning power, it would be calculated on that basis.

38035. Would you contemplate a strict system of investigation and inquiry to decide that?—Very strict.

38036. Quite apart from the Poor Law inquiries?—Inquiries would be made by the authorities who owned the hospitals. I cannot give a better example than the present pauper lunatics. Wherever possible, they are asked to pay the ordinary rate of maintenance; those who cannot pay the full rate of maintenance are asked to pay a proportion of it; and it is recovered by the guardians.

38037. Is the inquiry at all searching?—The inquiry is a very careful one.

38038. You have said, I think, that whenever the money could be paid, it should be collected?—Yes.

38039. But the phrase "could be paid" is a sort of matter of opinion as to their general financial position, and therefore there is not an absolute attempt to collect the money?—There would not be any hardship forced on them, of course.

38040. It is the decision of some inquiring authority as whether they may justifiably be asked to pay?—Yes.

38041. If it is decided that they may be asked to pay, is it to be enforced through the courts?—Certainly, otherwise you give no protection to the medical profession.

38042. I saw that, and I wanted to clear that up. Then you contemplate that the present voluntary hospitals would come into line on the same plan, I gather?—Yes, they would have to come into line.

38043. But I suppose the hospital charters are of the nature of a trust which it might be difficult to modify?—An Act of Parliament would do it.

38044. Where large sums of money have been left for a definite charitable purpose there is very great hesitation felt in going much outside of the founder's intentions, is there not?—That is so, but with the consent of the governors of the charity, if they saw the necessity of doing it it could easily be done, and there would be no objection to doing it.

38045. At any rate you regard that as essential, however it has to be done?—Yes, certainly. What I mean is that the health authority at the present time has full power to take over the existing general hospitals.

38046. (Miss Hill.) Compulsorily?—No, not compulsorily.

38047. By agreement then?—Yes, by agreement.

38048. (Mr. Booth.) Surely not irrespective of the trusts by which money has been subscribed to the hospital?—No; I say by agreement.

38049. I imagine not even by agreement; because the money that was in a trust might have to be diverted to another purpose in that case?—I could not answer that; but it could be done by agreement, plus an Act of Parliament, I think.

38050. You cannot agree with a gentleman who died 300 or 400 years ago?—No, you cannot. I just want to make myself quite clear. You spoke about recovering the fees for maintenance; I think it is the general impression that it would be the wish of most people who use these health authority hospitals to pay.

38051. That is, to pay something?—The wish of the respectable poor of this country is to pay something towards their maintenance. Of course, a certain section of them do not wish to pay anything.

38052. (Chairman.) On that point, assuming a person to be unable to pay, then I understand that the health authority would request the Poor Law guardians to pay?—Do you mean to get it on loan or to enforce payment?

38053. No, that the guardians themselves would pay; was not that the idea?—I think the idea would be to give the central authority power to recover.

38054. Assuming that they could not recover?—Then I do not know.

38055. (Mr. Booth.) But I take it that the Poor Law would pay for those that are transferred from the Poor Law?—Yes; those that were transferred from the existing Poor Law institutions would be paid for by the Poor Law.

38056. Supposing someone applied who could not pay, would they be told that they must become paupers first and go to the Poor Law?—No. I should treat them at the expense of the rates, as they are treated at present.

38057. And they would not be chargeable through the Poor Law?—Not if they had not been defined as paupers.

38058. (Chairman.) They would be paid for out of the health rate, would they?—Yes, in exactly the same way as fever cases are paid for now. All fevers are treated now at the expense of the rates. At the present time, if a Poor Law institution sends one of its patients to a fever hospital which is under the health authority, the health authority recovers from the Poor Law; but then that is because they are treating a legal pauper.

38059. (Mr. Phelps.) Does it not vary very much in different places?—It varies, but I think that is the general rule.

38060. (Mr. Gardiner.) This person from the workhouse may come from the sanitary district which supports the fever hospitals?—It might be so.

38061. (Mr. Booth.) But if the sickness has not caused them first to become paupers, they can apply for medical treatment direct, without coming to the guardians?—Quite so—outside the Poor Law altogether.

38062. (Mrs. Webb.) At present, I understand, that in the case of the infectious diseases hospital, you do not recover the charge from the relatives?—No, but that is for a very good reason. If an epidemic of fever arises in a community, it is to the advantage of the health authority to get it quickly over, and, therefore, they encourage people to go into well-equipped fever hospitals free of charge as a matter of policy.

38063. I rather gathered that you laid emphasis on the desirability of encouraging people to apply early for treatment?—In non-infectious cases, certainly.

38064. Would it not discourage them if you recovered the cost? I mean to say, the one way of encouraging the fever patient to come in is by giving the treatment free?—You would certainly discourage a certain section, but you would not discourage the respectable section who wish to pay.

Question of voluntary hospitals recovering cost of medical treatment

Mr. N. Raw, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.)

22 Jan. 1907.

Popular willingness to pay for medical treatment.

Question of the proper incidence of cost of medical assistance to the indigent.

The incidence of cost of paupers and others in sanitary authority's hospitals.

Popular willingness to pay for medical treatment.

Mr. N. Raw, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.) 38065. Do you think that in a case of fever the respectable artisan really objects to being treated free?—Yes, he would prefer to be charged.

22 Jan. 1907. 38066. You really think so?—In a great many instances, yes.

38067. Do you think he would prefer to pay it out of the rates? Why should he not pay it out of the rates?—Perhaps he does not pay rates.

38068. But he pays rent which always includes rates, does it not?—Yes, I suppose it does.

38069. Then he does pay rates?—Yes, he does, I suppose.

Medical relief should not involve disfranchisement. 38070. Under your system I gather you would propose that people who were unable to pay should not be charged anything?—They ought not to be.

38071. And yet there should be no stigma of pauperism?—No, not in a case of acute illness.

38072. And for any illness for which it is desirable to treat them they should have no stigma of pauperism?—Quite so.

The pros and cons of gratuitous medical relief. 38073. But they would be paying nothing?—That is so, they would be paying nothing.

38074. On the other hand there would be a balance of expense, as you say, which would be thrown on the rates anyhow?—As at present, yes.

38075. So that persons who are paying rent might be paying twice over—they would pay in their rates and they might pay again in their contributions for their maintenance?—I do not see any objection to that.

38076. Then the least provident people would get far more than the more provident people?—They always do.

38077. Do you not think that is a mistake?—Yes, I do.

38078. Do you not think you might put it all on the rates, in which case everybody would pay equally, because they all have to pay rent?—I think that would be a very good scheme, but it would be a costly one.

38079. At present there is a considerable cost, and they have got to pay for it somehow or other, have they not?—That is so, but if you are to levy a specific rate for the treatment of everybody free in institutions, it would have to be a very large rate.

38080. Free at home or in institutions?—It would have to be a very large rate.

38081. Let us consider the question. In the first place you might have a grant-in-aid from the Government, as they do in Ireland?—Yes.

38082. At the present moment a good many artisans' families contribute about 6d. or 1s. a week to a benefit society?—Yes.

38083. And that for outdoor treatment only, because those societies do not give institutional treatment?—Yes.

38084. One shilling a week on a rent of 5s. a week would be equal to a rate of 5s. in the £?—Yes.

38085. You could do a lot with a rate of 5s. in the £, could you not?—Yes.

38086. Is not the only fair way then to put the whole thing on the rates, so that everybody pays, because everybody pays rates?—I agree that that would be theoretically fair.

The position of the general practitioner under a system of gratuitous medical relief. 38087. Has it not also got a great many practical advantages, first because everybody wishes to be treated quickly if they have got to pay anyhow for it?—Yes. From the point of view of quickly recovering from illness it would be excellent and ideal; but you have to consider the status of the medical practitioner. That, I think, is a most powerful factor to be taken into consideration.

38088. Not looking at the status of the medical practitioner in the future, but putting it aside just for the present, is it not on the whole better for the less valuable work, the less profitable work, to be done by salaried officials who get certain incomes, instead of it being done by this profit-making?—Yes. I agree with you that if the scheme that you suggest was carried out the cheap medical practitioner would be abolished.

38089. That is to say, he would be transferred into a salaried man?—Yes.

38090. Would not his condition be really better then?—Everybody would think so but himself.

38091. But we have got to think of the community?—That is one of the most remunerative parts of our profession.

38092. The low-class practice?—Yes. Very often a man who does a low-class practice makes a good deal more money than the man who is doing consulting work.

38093. From the point of view of the community and the prevention of disease, do you think that that on the whole is the best way to get at the cure of these people?—Undoubtedly.

38094. Which way?—By the scheme that you suggest, undoubtedly.

38095. That would be better than this small low-class practice?—Yes, undoubtedly. We wish to abolish it.

38096. On the whole it would not only be better from the point of view of the prevention of disease, but it would also be on the whole more just, considering everybody would pay?—Undoubtedly. I am in absolute agreement with you in every detail, but I did not put it forward because I did not think it would be—

38097. You think the medical practitioner would be too strong for it?—Yes, I am sure he would.

38098. But if it were not for that, you think it would be both just and expedient?—If it were not for that it is perfect.

38099. Now to go into the causes of illness, because illness is the cause of a great deal of pauperism, is it not?—Yes.

38100. What do you consider to be the main causes of illness? There is infection, which is one big cause?—Yes.

38101. We have already decided that all infectious diseases ought to be put on the rates without charge to the individual?—Yes, in the interests of the community.

38102. There are bad conditions, over which a person has no control—like housing and employment?—Yes.

38103. It is desirable from the point of view of the community that those conditions also should be dealt with collectively, is it not?—Yes, certainly.

38104. Because the person has no control over them, and it would not be fair to charge him an extra rate for them?—In many instances he has no control, but, of course, in others he has.

38105. Then there is the question of bad habits; a good deal of illness arises from bad habits, does it not?—Yes, a great amount.

38106. Is it not very important to get some system of domiciliary visitation to check those bad habits?—Yes; and that is being done now in the larger municipalities.

38107. You would not suggest that the cost of that domiciliary investigation and inspection, and the fees consequent upon it, should be charged to the individual, would you?—No; they should be a general charge, a central charge.

38108. They should be put on the rates anyway?—Certainly.

38109. And the individual who gets this domiciliary advice would not be charged?—No.

38110. Do you think it very undesirable that he should be charged?—I think it would be most undesirable, and I do not think it could be possible.

38111. Do you think it would be a great advantage if the medical officers of health had a fairly large staff of health visitors and nurses whose business it was to seek out disease?—Yes.

38112. Should all that be charged on the rates?—Yes. That is being done at present.

38113. Then there is the actual nursing as well as the health visiting?—That has not been done.

38114. Do you think it would be desirable that that should be done?—Do you mean to take the place of the Queen Victoria Jubilee Nursing?

38115. Yes; that there should be systematic nursing of the poor with a view of getting rid of their bad habits?

The position of the general practitioner under a system of gratuitous medical relief.

The extent to which the cost of combating illness should be made a charge upon the rates.

The extent to which the cost of compensating illness should be made a charge upon the rates.

—That was the object of the Jubilee Nursing Association. If you could amalgamate that with a rate-aided health visitation it would be an advantage.

38116. Then we should have as much voluntary help as we could get, should we not?—Do you not think that would rather destroy the voluntary association?

38117. We should like to have as much voluntary help as we could enlist. To take the real question which I suppose is at issue, apart from what I venture to think is a small question (namely, the injury you might do to individual medical practitioners), take the question of deterring frivolous applications for medical treatment, which I suppose is the really important question, is it not?—Yes.

38118. Do you not think that if you had a system of systematic health visitation and health treatment, you might get a deterrent in the fact that the medical officer would be always referring to the bad habits of the person if he went on having bad habits and being ill on account of them?—That would be very valuable, but then the natural sequence of that would be to get a remedy.

38119. Therefore, you might have a medical officer reporting a person for persisting in bad habits?—Yes.

38120. And, therefore, withdrawing the advantage of his treatment?—Yes.

38121. Ought not the test for collective treatment to be the willingness of the patient to co-operate in his cure rather than not being able to pay for it, that is, looking at it from the point of view of the community's welfare?—Yes, I agree with you that that would be the ideal system, but the only thing that you can enforce is the payment.

The question of compulsory power of removal of patients ill from bad habits.

38122. Seriously, with regard to a case of persistently bad habits, so that there is a fear of actual death from those bad habits, would you not be inclined to give powers of compulsory removal? We have had that up over and over again, and I am referring to the possibility of a case of a man who was going on in such a way that his death was imminent from his bad habits?—Would you give a specific instance? Do you mean a man drinking himself to death?

38123. Yes; I think we have already the power in the Inebriates Act, have we not?—No.

38124. Would you be prepared to give the power of removal? I do not much care whether you would or not, because I do not think it is of much importance?—I think it would be a very dangerous thing to introduce compulsory powers in the case of sickness.

38125. Then you would allow the man to die—because you must do one or the other?—Of course if the man dies in spite of good advice—

38126. If the man goes on with his bad habits, and medical assistance is withdrawn, then my suggestion is that there is no particular objection to that man dying?—If you could convince the public that you had made every effort to save him, well and good; but I do not think the coroner would accept that.

38127. You know that is the crucial case in the Poor Law and that we are in that difficulty?—Yes.

38128. But there would be no more difficulty under the public health system that I am suggesting than there is under the Poor Law?—Quite so.

The position of voluntary hospitals in a system of free medical relief.

38129. It would be exactly the same difficulty, so that is really relevant to my suggestion. Supposing you had this system of municipal health inspection and treatment it would be quite possible to allow voluntary hospitals to go on as they are at present doing, treating free what cases they choose to treat free?—Certainly, if they have the money.

38130. Would you allow St. Bartholomew's and the London Hospital and Guy's to go on treating cases?—Yes.

38131. And they would have the selection of any cases they liked?—Yes, certainly.

38132. And so long as they did it competently, there would be no objection at all, would there?—There would be no objection.

38133. Would you propose that the public health authority should provide such hospital accommodation if it was not provided?—Yes.

38134. And if the hospitals wanted payment, the public health authority should be represented?—Yes. Mr. N. Raw M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.)

38135. So that you might combine a system of complete domiciliary investigation of disease with the voluntary hospitals going on as they are?—Do you mean that you might subsidise the general hospitals? 22 Jan. 1907.

38136. Yes, if they required it?—Some municipalities are doing that at present.

38137. It would be quite possible to let them treat patients free on their own terms, would it not?—Yes. In Liverpool at present the corporation have given £5,000 to the children's infirmary. That is a rate subscription. Town council's subscription to voluntary hospital at Liverpool.

38138. (Chairman.) May I ask whether that is an annual subscription or a special grant?—It is a grant.

38139. (Mrs. Webb.) As I understand your scheme you do think it desirable that the public health officer should be responsible for the detection of all disease?—Certainly. Proposed extension of functions of sanitary authority as to disease and question of recovery of cost of non-institutional medical relief.

38140. Therefore it would be necessary to have domiciliary visits and advice?—Yes.

38141. At the cost of the rates?—Yes, in the same way as at present.

38142. Only extended and made systematic?—If a case of typhoid fever is reported to the health authority, the first thing they do is to send an inspector, and he inspects and acts accordingly.

38143. But as I understand, you wish to extend the responsibility of the health officer from cases of infectious diseases to all sickness?—To all acute sickness.

38144. In order to get at acute sickness and to discover it you would have to have domiciliary inspection, would you not?—Yes, certainly.

38145. You would have to give at the cost of the rates, without charging a person, regular systematic domiciliary visits and advice?—Yes.

38146. But where do you stop in advice; I mean to say, what is the difference between advice and treatment? Does it consist only in the giving of medicine?—No. I suppose the health inspectors, as you would call them, would give general advice as to what ought to be done hygienically, and that sort of thing.

38147. Would they give, as the Manchester Corporation does, diarrhoea mixture? Would they give medicine free?—I do not see why they should not. The health authorities now give disinfectants.

38148. You do not object to their giving outdoor medical advice free and without cost?—It ought not to be at the patients' own homes.

38149. If it is a case which can be treated in the homes?—I mean the people ought to attend at some central institution, for instance, at some dispensary.

38150. But you would let the health-visitor go to the home?—The health authority could provide the dispensary.

38151. The health-visitor going to the home, I suppose?—Yes.

38152. And giving advice at the home?—Yes.

38153. But the patient going for the mixture to the dispensary?—Yes.

38154. And all that would be free?—As it is at present.

38155. I only want to get the thing clear. You do not propose to charge the individual at all for that—it is to be free?—Yes. For instance, the present arrangement under the Poor Law is for the people to go the Poor Law officers, see the doctor, get the medicine, and go home.

38156. But that is not free, because it may be recovered from the individual?—Yes.

38157. You do not propose that the cost of this outdoor health-visiting should be recovered from the individual, do you?—I would not like to commit myself to that.

38158. I only want to get that clear?—I think I should recover for the indoor maintenance, but I am not sure about the outdoor.

38159. I only want to get it clear. You would not be prepared to recover from the individual, however well off he was, the cost of health-visiting if it was required?—I think on general grounds it would be to the advantage of the community not to do so.

Mr. N. Raw, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.) 38160. And you would not be inclined to recover for the medicine that he was receiving at the dispensary, but it is for the institutional treatment that you are going to recover?—Yes.

22 Jan. 1907.

38161. Broadly speaking, you think that the cost of domiciliary visits with the necessary medicine which can be safely given at a dispensary, should be a charge on the rates and not a charge on the individual concerned?—Yes, I think so.

Extent of overlapping of various authorities dealing with the sick.

38162. (Mr. Bentham.) I do not quite understand what you mean in paragraph seven by the overlapping of the different authorities; is there any overlapping at the present time in a medical sense?—I am only dealing with medical questions.

38163. There cannot be any overlapping with regard to the treatment of a person in an institution, can there?—No.

38164. Then the overlapping in the sense in which you used the word must be because different authorities are dealing with different classes of cases; that is all you meant, I suppose?—Yes, that is what I meant.

38165. Is the line not fairly well drawn in that respect?—Do you mean as between the legal pauper and otherwise?

38166. No, I mean between what are known as infectious cases and what are not, that is, between those which are dangerous to the public and those which are not?—Yes, I should think that line is fairly well drawn.

The need of further non-Poor Law provision for lying-in cases.

38167. Would you advocate that all confinements should be provided for in a municipal hospital?—No, only in the case of the poor.

38168. Only in the case of those who care to avail themselves of it?—Only in the case of those who are very poor. At the present time there is no provision made for the very poor women in their confinements—absolutely none. The only place that a respectable married woman can be taken to is the workhouse; and as I say, rather than go there hundreds and thousands of them are delivered in absolutely unsuitable places.

38169. Do you mean that people would go provided it was taken away from the Poor Law atmosphere?—Yes.

38170. Is it not the complaint that in some Poor Law hospitals people avail themselves rather too readily of these lying-in wards?—Yes, the single women do, but not the married ones.

38171. Do you not get many applications from married women at Mill Road?—Not many.

38172. On the occasion of our visit a very respectable woman in appearance made application to be admitted for lying-in purposes; her husband was out of work, she was very respectably dressed, there was a very respectable home, and there was nothing known against her. She had no hesitation whatever in accepting it?—Perhaps it was a case of absolute necessity; then people have to accept what they can get.

38173. She had no reluctance whatever about it?—My point is that in a critical condition like confinement every facility should be given for a rapid recovery.

38174. What evidence is there that people do not make application who ought to make application?—Do you mean amongst the sick?

38175. Amongst lying-in cases I mean, particularly?—There is overwhelming evidence.

Non-Poor Law provision for lying-in cases in Dublin.

38176. In what form is it? Is it in the knowledge of medical men only, or is there any information on paper that one can get at?—These things are not printed, but they are common knowledge. In Dublin you have the magnificent Rotunda Hospital where the poor women are treated free of charge; but we have not anything of that sort in this country, because the workhouses treat lying-in cases.

Question of deterrence of medical relief especially in lying-in cases.

38177. There is naturally a reluctance on the part of some people under such circumstances to enter an institution of any kind, is there not?—Undoubtedly, but that is very rapidly dying away.

38178. We are told it is rapidly dying away with regard to Poor Law institutions, particularly Poor Law infirmaries, for all purposes?—Yes, because they are making them so good.

38179. The lying-in wards in connection with the Poor Law infirmaries could not be made better than they are in most of our large towns, could they?—No.

38180. That, I suppose you would admit, is an attraction to a certain extent?—Yes, but not to a lying-in woman.

38181. You think not?—There is no necessity in my opinion for a child to be labelled as having been born in a workhouse.

38182. That reluctance appears also in other cases of sickness to be gradually dying away, does it not?—Yes.

38183. I think you admit that in Paragraph 26, where you say, "A very large number of people who are not destitute and are not by any means paupers, do not hesitate to use them"?—Yes. That, I think, is a most unfortunate thing.

38184. Really there is not that reluctance that you seem to imply in this Paragraph 12?—I think, if you will look at Paragraph 26, you will see I am referring to separate Poor Law infirmaries, but my general evidence refers to workhouses.

Question of comparative deterrence of separate and workhouse infirmaries.

38185. I thought your general evidence was against Poor Law in any form. It is not at all necessary that a workhouse infirmary should be connected with the workhouse, but it may be separate, as it is at Mill Road, may it not?—Yes.

38186. Therefore, if a Poor Law institution by being separate would answer its purpose much better, there is no reason why it should not be separate, is there? I thought your general evidence was against a Poor Law institution of any kind for the treatment of the sick?—My general objection is where the sick are treated within the walls of a workhouse. The objection does not hold so strongly where you have a separate infirmary, but there is only one separate infirmary out of London.

38187. One separate Poor Law infirmary, do you mean?—Yes, excepting, perhaps, one or two recent ones; that is where the administration is different from the administration of the workhouse.

38188. Therefore, most of your objection would be swept away if all Poor Law infirmaries were separated from the administration of the workhouse?—Yes.

38189. Where the admissions were made direct from their own homes?—Yes.

38190. And where the system of payment would remain practically as at present?—Yes.

38191. So that part of your objection would be removed?—If they were not labelled paupers.

38192. That is a matter of public sentiment which might be left to correct itself. For instance, the people who go to Mill Road now enter there without any hesitation, and they are not considered by their neighbours as being disgraced by having entered, neither do they think so themselves?—Yes, but legally they are paupers.

38193. Is that not more a matter of name?—What is a pauper? I do not myself really know what a pauper is?—It is difficult to define a pauper.

38194. They do not necessarily lose their votes, do they?—I suppose the Medical Disqualification Act is in force, but it is very rarely exercised.

Disfranchise of voluntary hospitals by the non-poor and medical relief.

38195. With regard to the indoor cases, it is left entirely to the discretion of the revising barrister we are told?—But then the man has to appear before the revising barrister.

38196. That depends on the action the overseers take, I think, in putting their cases before the revising barrister. You rather deplore the fact that a person might get off in a general hospital by paying nothing, and so might get his treatment free; whereas a poorer person who has been treated in the workhouse infirmary may be called upon to contribute towards the cost of his treatment?—Yes.

The invasion of voluntary hospitals by the non-poor and medical relief.

38197. Is that really a hardship on the person who has to contribute; or is it a question of looseness, I will not say on the part of the management, but on the part of the constitution of medical charities?—Looseness is rather a strong word to use, because it is the law. All charitable institutions are instituted on that basis, and they have no power to make a charge.

The invasion of voluntary hospitals by the non-poor and remedies. 38198. But because charity chooses to treat a person free it is no hardship to another person who may be called upon to pay when he gets value for his money, is it?—It is a hardship to one of two people, when one gets it for nothing and the other has to pay for it.

38199. The treatment, of course, is the same?—Yes.

38200. Why should not a philanthropist be encouraged to provide free facilities for the treatment of the sick? It is intended for the sick poor, and to a certain extent it deals with the same people who would have to be dealt with by the Poor Law later; therefore why should they not be encouraged to spend money in this way if they choose?—That is just my point. I would encourage it if charitable institutions were devoted to the sick poor, but charitable institutions at present are devoted to people who can well afford to pay.

38201. That is merely a question as to the management of their own institutions, is it not?—It is. They ought not to admit them.

38202. Therefore it is really not a Poor Law question in that sense?—It is forced to become a Poor Law question, because the Poor Law has to take them unwillingly.

38203. You mean that the Poor Law has to deal with cases which these institutions might deal with but for the better class of cases?—That is so. If the general hospital were properly organised and if only objects of charity were treated within them, this difficulty would not have arisen in the Poor Law.

Objection to State taking over voluntary hospitals. 38204. But if they choose to manage their institutions in that way and to treat people who can afford to pay, that is no reason why the community should take them over at an increased cost to the community, is it?—I do not suggest that the community should take over the general hospitals.

38205. Not at all?—No.

Phthisis: evil results of deterrence of medical relief. 38206. In Paragraph 37 you refer to the cases being compelled to pass through the workhouse before they can be dealt with in the sanatorium; is that necessary?—I think it is most unnecessary.

38207. Do you think it has acted as a deterrent in cases of consumption?—In treating early cases of consumption undoubtedly.

38208. Why do they hold that opinion?—I suppose, strictly speaking, the Local Government Board would say that if a man went into a sanatorium erected by the poor rate he ought to be a man who was legally a pauper. That is the definition the Local Government Board would give you, and I suppose that is the one which the Liverpool guardians have acted on.

Proposal to transfer to sanitary authority duty of treating phthisis. 38209. Technically a sanatorium is a workhouse, and in that sense a patient might be admitted direct from his own home to the sanatorium, instead of going through the ordinary workhouse wards?—Yes, but in my judgment it is not the business of the Poor Law authority to treat consumption with a view to curing it; that is entirely a question for the health authority.

38210. Not even when the cases come under the Poor Law, and there is no other provision made?—If they arise amongst their own patients, then I say of course the Poor Law would give it the same treatment as they would any other disease; but in my judgment it is not the business of the Poor Law authority to prevent the spread of consumption.

38211. What you mean is that you would prefer this class of patient to be dealt with entirely by the health authority?—Yes, as it ought to be, certainly.

38212. And all Poor Law cases sent by the guardians to the health authority?—Certainly, and the guardians should make a charge.

Cost of pauperism from phthisis. 38213. In dealing with the question of consumption in Paragraph 31 you say, "One-seventh of the total cost of the Poor Law is due to it." On what calculation is that statement based?—That was based upon an official conjecture; I do not suppose it is accurate, but I think it is approximate. I am basing it on the cost of the indoor poor in Liverpool. For instance, it costs the ratepayers of Liverpool £25,000 to maintain consumptives indoors every year. I maintain that that is a question which ought to be dealt with entirely by the health authority. The reason the Poor Law has to maintain this enormous number of consumptives throughout the country is Mr. N. Raw, because nobody else will have them. That is one reason why the Poor Law is so extraordinarily expensive. M. D., F.R.S. (Edin.)

38214. But it would cost the same if it were dealt with by another authority, would it not?—Undoubtedly it would, only in my opinion it is not right that the Poor Law should have to maintain respectable people who have been made paupers from the fact that they are consumptive.

38215. Let me take another case: A widow may be very respectable, but she may become a pauper because her husband dies, not because her husband was a pauper; and it is the same with consumption, is it not?—No; in the case of consumption there is prevention possible, but in the case you cite you could not prevent the widow's husband dying.

38216. You might, because he might have been consumptive. You say in Paragraph 34, "I have come to the conclusion that nearly 60 per cent. of these people are paupers because they are consumptive"?—Yes.

38217. That is 60 per cent. of those who are suffering from consumption or who have come under your notice?—Yes, that is true. Extent of phthisis as a cause of pauperism.

38218. That would be most difficult information to get at, would it not?—No.

38219. To get it you would have to go into a great many of the particulars of their lives, would you not?—I carefully examined over 4,000 cases of consumption, and of those people approximately 60 per cent. would never have come within the range of the Poor Law had they not had that disease. Mind you, consumption is the only disease in which it holds, because it is such a long disease and lasts for so many years.

38220. In Paragraph 29 you say, "No man or woman should be punished because he is attacked by sickness or accident." Are there not many illnesses that are really self-inflicted, which deserves, at any rate, some deterrent and some stigma being attached to their condition?—Undoubtedly. If a man gets drunk and falls down in the streets and breaks his leg, you might argue that he should not be treated, but then if he died from the want of treatment the coroner's jury would blame you. Difficulty of differentiating between treatment of avoidable and unavoidable illness.

38221. You say, "The severity and rigor of the Poor Law should be reserved for those who are not sick"; but there are lots of respectable people who are not sick, are there not, but who are paupers?—Yes. I did not mean it in that respect. I meant that the severity of the Poor Law should be reserved for those who are healthy. It is the same thing really, but capable of a different interpretation. Medical relief should not be deterrent.

38222. A man who may be sick and dealt with by the health authority is removed to the municipal hospital, as it were, with no disgrace and no stigma, but his family is left dependent and they are dealt with by the Poor Law. The wife and children being removed practically in disgrace to a workhouse. Under this arrangement no stigma attaches to the person who has left his family in that condition of destitution, but his family have to go to the workhouse. I take it you would not set up any system of relieving the family through the municipality?—No, but I think, if I may say so, you are taking an extreme case. Generally speaking, if a man with a wife and family is attacked by sickness he ought to be treated in the best possible way, and I think some philanthropic arrangement might be made to look after his wife and family whilst he is ill. The relief of the families of the sick.

38223. But it is the fact, is it not, that an enormous number of families are dependent upon the Poor Law during the time that the husband is sick in the hospital?—Yes, that is so.

38224. You do not propose to relieve the families in any other way?—No.

38225. You would still leave them to the Poor Law?—Certainly.

38226. In Paragraph 30, you refer to the subscriptions to general hospitals having fallen off, because people are now being treated by the Poor Law authorities?—Yes, that is so. Extension of medical relief causes diminution in voluntary hospital subscriptions.

38227. Is that because of the feeling that as these cases are being met out of the rates, there is no need for them to subscribe to voluntary charities?—That is the reason.

Mr. N. Raw, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.) 38228. In Paragraph 54 you say: "I would conclude by saying that if the whole treatment of the sick poor of any community was undertaken by the central authority, it would have the co-operation of all philanthropic societies and private munificence, all of which are at present debarred by reason of association with Poor Law." Do you mean that the treatment of the sick would get that co-operation?—Yes.

22 Jan. 1907.

Advantage of national service of medical relief.

38229. If it is provided for out of the rates, why should these people contribute towards its payment any more than they do now?—There is no doubt that guardians do not lend themselves to co-operation with anybody.

38230. (Miss Hill.) Do borough councils or health societies?—I think to a somewhat slight extent they do.

38231. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to voluntary hospitals, at the present time subscriptions are falling off because the Poor Law is dealing with sick cases more effectively?—Yes.

38232. If the sick cases were dealt with by the municipality quite as effectively, you could not expect that you would get contributions from private people under those conditions?—I do not say I expect contributions to the institutions; I speak of co-operation. For instance, they would help to provide homes for the aged poor and infirm, and cases of that sort. They will not co-operate with the Poor Law, because they know that it is all supplied for in the workhouse, and as you cannot make a contribution to a workhouse they do not trouble.

38233. In the case I have instanced, do you think that the wife and family of that man might be provided for by private charity in order to prevent their going to the workhouse?—I think that would be the trend of it, and that if you take it away from the Poor Law, some philanthropic association would assist to look after them.

Cost of increasing functions of sanitary authority as to disease.

38234. (Miss Hill.) When we are all quite properly organised and visited by health-visitors and others, I suppose we shall all be contributing a higher amount to the rates?—Yes, it would cost more.

38235. And we shall be entitled to free medical attendance?—No, I do not advocate that.

38236. Medical attendance which shall only be paid for in proportion to our income?—I do not advocate that.

38237. I misunderstood. Surely you are speaking of hospitals being provided for people, and then its being inquired what their income is, in order that it should be decided what amount should be paid by them; is that not so?—Yes.

38238. Is it supposed that we shall always like the doctors and arrangements that are chosen for us?—I am only referring to the sick poor; I am not referring to people in our position.

38239. The sick poor have their feelings about what doctors they like, have they not?—They are quite satisfied with their doctors now.

38240. To a large extent they choose them, do they not?—In what way?

38241. They go to whatever small medical man they like, and they pay him?—Yes. I am speaking of institution cases.

Effect of free medical relief on individual provision against sickness.

38242. At the same time, if a rate is to be levied to pay for institutions, and to pay for a good deal of medical visiting by health-visitors and others, they will have less money to spend in the choice of their own doctors, will they not? What I am rather driving at is that it seems to me that if a very perfect system is established without any freedom being left to the people who are to benefit by it, they will not appreciate it. It is a matter of opinion or course, and I do not know whether you think they would, but my experience among the poor makes me feel that they will not at all like it?—Do you mean that they would rather pay 6d. for medical advice.

38243. Yes, I do; or belong to a provident institution or to a friendly society?—But I would not interfere with any of them.

38244. If you rate them higher you will to a certain extent interfere with them, will you not?—I do not think the sick poor would pay any rates.

38245. Surely they do? A very large proportion of their rent goes to rates now, and a larger proportion still would go under this scheme?—I do not propose to interfere with any friendly societies or provident dispensaries.

38246. But do you not interfere with them when you establish a costly system of general medical advice?—I think I have been rather driven into admitting more than I intended. I never intended in my scheme that everybody was to get medical visitation and health-visitation and medicine all for nothing.

38247. (Dr. Downes.) I understand your suggestion to be that the municipal authority should take charge of all sick poor?—Of all the acutely sick poor, yes.

38248. In the addendum to your statement you suggest the establishment of a national medical service, the members of the service including the present medical officers of health and the medical officers appointed to treat the sick poor?—Yes.

38249. Taking those two things together, would they not land you with local institutions managed by national officers?—It would be exactly the same as the present Poor Law medical service.

38250. The present Poor Law medical service is in a series of water-tight compartments, if I may say so, each local authority appointing its own local officers and having its own local institutions?—That is what I propose here.

38251. In the addendum you suggest a national medical service?—Yes, I know; but that is only to be national in the sense of its being supervised by a Government Department. They would still be appointed by the local authority, but they would be inspected by the Government Department.

38252. A little further on I think you say this—"These medical and nursing services would have all the status of a Government Department with a regulated scale of pay and pension in exactly the same way as the prison service"?—Yes, with regard to pay and pension.

38253. Do you limit it to that?—I limit it to that.

38254. Thank you; that clears up a difficulty I felt on the matter. If the voluntary hospitals still go on, as I think you suggest is not unlikely, would you not have two distinct systems of hospitals running—the municipal system and the voluntary system?—Yes; but I think one of them would ultimately have to go.

38255. Do you despair of linking them, or do you merely defer it?—I think it would probably begin by the municipality subsidising the general hospitals, and then probably in the course of twenty or thirty years absorbing them.

38256. I admit that if they begin subsidising the absorption would follow?—That has already begun.

38257. Do you think it desirable that the voluntary hospitals should disappear?—Yes, I do.

38258. On what grounds?—On many grounds. Two chief reasons are, first of all that it is a great injustice to the medical profession that people who can well afford to pay should be treated in a general hospital without payment being asked. The second objection is that it does not encourage people to make preparation in the way of thrift for attendance in sickness if they know that they only have to go to a general hospital and can have have it all for nothing. Then a third objection is that all and sundry are admitted into the general hospitals now without any inquiry at all. It used to be that nobody went into a general hospital without a subscriber's letter or a governor's recommendation; but for medical reasons those have all been swept away.

38259. Are not those objections objections of administration rather than objections inherent in the scheme of voluntary hospitals?—I grant you that if the general hospitals could be, if I may use the expression, returned to their original administration there would be no objection to their continuing.

38260. That is, if such objections as you have mentioned could be overcome?—Yes, but I do not think they ever will be overcome.

38261. I gather from what you have said that you would carry the municipal system of hospitals on to

The problem of combining a national medical service with a local administration of medical relief.

The question of the absorption of voluntary hospitals by the sanitary authority.

Objections to voluntary hospitals.

Proposal to extend functions of sanitary authority to treatment of all diseases.

specialisation, and have not only general hospitals but special municipal hospitals?—Special departments in the municipal hospitals, yes.

38262. That is to say you would treat everything?—As at present.

The responsibility for discipline in a Poor Law infirmary in absence of medical superintendent.

38263. Just one or two questions on the existing state of things. Have you a resident medical officer in your infirmary corresponding to the medical superintendent of a London infirmary?—No, but there is my senior assistant.

38264. Is he an assistant officer?—Yes.

38265. Who is responsible for the discipline of the place in your absence?—The senior assistant with regard to medical matters, the steward with regard to lay matters, and the matron with regard to nursing matters.

38266. So that it is more or less a divided responsibility?—When I am not there, yes.

38267. Who checks the expenditure of the place?—The guardians.

Cost per patient in Liverpool Poor Law infirmary.

38268. Do they have a systematic return of the expenses; could you tell what the cost per bed is?—Yes, quickly.

38269. Do you happen to know what the annual cost is?—I think the cost is about 16s. 6d. per patient per week.

38270. Is that on the average number?—That is taken on the average number.

38271. You are not the medical officer of the workhouse, I think?—No.

38272. Is your assistant the medical officer of the workhouse?—No. The workhouse is four miles away.

Question of combining medical staff of workhouse and separate infirmary.

38273. Should you consider it desirable that the medical staff of an infirmary should, as far as possible, be the medical staff of the workhouse?—No, I think they ought to have no connection.

38274. Do you ever have any difficulty arising from a difference of medical opinion as to what cases should be sent to the infirmary and what cases should be retained in the workhouse?—That is all settled for us. They are two separate institutions.

38275. Does not the medical officer of the workhouse transfer cases?—Very often.

38276. Does it ever happen that a troublesome case is transferred?—Certainly, everybody transfers everything troublesome.

38277. Have you known any instances where a troublesome case has gone back again, and there have been difficulties as to which should have him?—I think it is the man who transfers him last who has the advantage. In my own experience there have never been any differences.

38278. You have not had any serious difficulty about this then?—No.

Unsuitable cases sent to infirmary by district medical officers.

38279. Have you had any difficulty with regard to unsuitable cases being sent from the district medical officers?—Yes, but they are of course transferred to the workhouse at once. I have the power of transferring them.

38280. Can you transfer without waiting for the committee?—Yes.

Objections to indiscriminate free medical relief.

38281. (Mr. Loch.) You have been the means of bringing before us practically two plans; the one in your statement and the one which you discussed with Mrs. Webb. The scheme which you submit in your statement seems, I must say, extremely consistent and very easily understood, and raises most valuable issues; but there are just one or two points which are of importance that I should like to put to you. The question is generally raised that the whole thing might become a question of the rates, is it not?—Yes.

38282. If it were to become a question of the rates and the voluntary hospitals stood out, then the evil which you notice in voluntary hospitals would remain, would it not? That is to say, that a better class of people would get for nothing the advice there forthcoming?—Yes. But if I may make it clear, the principle of my suggestion is that everybody must pay according to his means.

38283. If it were on the rates there would be no payment so long as the voluntary hospitals remained voluntary because the voluntary hospital would remain an exception?—I do not quite follow.

38284. What I mean is this: If you put all medical relief on the rates and the voluntary hospitals remain voluntary, then being voluntary as you have described by their charters and so on, no payment would be made by the people going to them?—No.

Mr. N. Raw, M.D., F.R.S. (Edin.)
22 Jan. 1907.

38285. So far as that goes, the profession will suffer?—Yes.

Objections to indiscriminate free medical relief.

38286. On the one hand, there being a voluntary institution, on the other hand, there being a rate-paid system?—Yes, they would suffer in that case. It should be carefully laid down that anyone who used a rate-aided institution would be expected to pay.

38287. All the voluntary hospitals—and we have many in London—would stand outside that ring?—They would soon have to come in.

38288. Because?—Because they would not be able to exist.

38289. That is to say, people would not support them?—That is so.

38290. Would it turn entirely upon that?—Absolutely. It is simply a commercial undertaking.

38291. Then again, if you had all the medical relief on the rates as a great national system, the sick clubs would go down, would they not, because what the members can now get by paying for themselves, they would then get free?—But I would not give it to them free.

38292. If it were on the rates, but the rates on the whole did not make a sufficient payment, there would have to be a ratepaid system plus a pay-system as well?—I do not think that giving it free is a possible system, and I do not advocate that.

38293. You do not think it is at all a possible system to put the whole charge on the rates and to leave them free, do you?—I do not think so.

38294. That is the main issue I think that I want to bring before you?—I do not think it could be thought of.

38295. I wish to make that a little more clear. If you had this payment from the rates I put before you the two theories where the incidence falls. Some say the landlord pays, and some say that the rate is paid where it lies, which is on the occupier. If the theory is right that the landlord pays, then clearly so far from being just, that is to say, carrying out your principle that the man pays, it is the reverse, because it carries out the principle of other people paying through the rates for the person who wanted relief?—Yes.

The pros and cons of free medical relief.

38296. About this question which has been raised of the bad habits, and checking a bad habit as it arises and so forth, you would have to be guarded, would you not, by professional etiquette?—Certainly.

38297. Which is a very strong control, is it not?—Very.

38298. Therefore that whole system of spreading abroad what a man might or might not rightly be suffering from, would be very limited?—Professionally it could never be done.

Difficulty of differentiating between treatment of avoidable and unavoidable illness.

38299. Eventually on your own proposal of anybody paying and of there being a medical service scheme, the voluntary hospitals would fall into the position, sooner or later, on your plan, of becoming a part of a great whole?—Yes.

The position of voluntary hospitals in a system of free medical relief.

38300. Directly that was done may I conclude that the hospital officers would have themselves to be paid?—Yes, as they ought to be.

38301. Then, in conclusion, one may say that your notion is that medical relief through the public health channels and by this national organisation should be brought as soon as possible into close relation with those who are in trouble for want of medical aid?—As quickly as possible; that is the whole essence of it.

38302. What would be the position of the general practitioner to that scheme of yours?—If you confine it to the sick poor, he would be perfectly friendly.

Attitude of medical profession to the principle of payment for medical relief according to ability.

38303. That is to say, he is ready you think as a member of a profession, and as part of a great body, to back a system of payment through and through?—Certainly.

38304. Then his remuneration on the particular case would stand as it now does, outside the institutional systems that you have been referring to?—Certainly.

Mr. N. Raw, 38305. In the case of the out-door medical relief of a hospital, similarly, you would have a pay system so far as it goes?—Yes, but it would be difficult to enforce.

22 Jan. 1907. 38306. Those whom I know among general practitioners have found the out-patients department the one that affects them very closely?—That would be so.

38307. Therefore unless the out-patient department is more or less controlled on your lines it would be an evil still remaining in the system from the point of view of the profession?—You can get over the evil by making a charge for everything, but probably the cost of recovering it would be as much as the charge.

German system of medical relief—payment for treatment in voluntary hospitals in Berlin. 38308. If you had a system of payment right through would you not have to have the same system of recovery right through, so that a voluntary hospital once it had become part of your proposed system, would have in some way powers of recovery similar to those you have described?—Yes, exactly on the principle that is at present worked on in Berlin. There they have a large charity hospital with 2,000 beds and everybody pays, and they have as well four large municipal hospitals for the poor.

38309. That is for those who cannot pay at all?—For those who cannot pay.

38310. I do not know whether you know France as well?—Yes, I do.

38311. Generally speaking, are you satisfied with the system of payment, as you have described it yourself, through and through?—Yes.

38312. Do you think that the profession will rally to a scheme of this kind by which all medical officers may be said to enter for their own benefit—and for the good of the public also it may be said—into what is practically a trade union position?—I am perfectly certain that the medical profession throughout the whole country would welcome any scheme where a proper payment is enforced in medical sickness.

38313. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) You were at one time medical superintendent of the Dundee Royal Infirmary, I see?—Yes.

38314. May I ask whether you have any experience of Poor Law medical relief in Scotland?—I had not any actual experience, but I am acquainted with the system.

38315. Are there any features which occur to you as distinguishing it from what you have seen in England, I mean particularly as to the medical inquiry into the condition of every applicant before relief is given?—I think that in Scotland generally, the inquiry and the treatment are given, if I may say so, much more—Well, I was not going to say promptly, but without so much difficulty as in England. Comparison of medical relief in England and Scotland.

38316. The system by which every applicant for relief is medically examined is one that exists there, is it not?—Yes. Medical examination of all applicants for relief in Scotland.

38317. Do you think that is a good feature of the system?—Yes. Every case is medically examined.

38318. That is, before the relief is given?—Yes.

38319. In the case of outdoor relief, is it within your knowledge that there is constant visitation by the medical officer?—By the parish medical officer, yes.

38320. He constantly visits those in receipt of outdoor medical relief?—Yes. One of the features of the Scottish Poor Law, which is superior to our own, is the visitation of people who are on outdoor medical relief. Medical visitation of out-relief cases in Scotland.

38321. (Chairman.) Do you attach importance to the examination before the relief is given?—Yes, I do, certainly.

Mr. JAMES EDWARDS, M.R.C.S., called; and Examined.

Mr. J. Edwards, M.R.C.S. 38322. (Chairman.) You are surgeon to the Liverpool Police Force, and you are also medical examiner to the Prudential, United Kingdom, and other insurance companies, and you were also district surgeon to the Liverpool Lying-in Hospital?—Yes.

38323. Therefore, your experience has been rather wide, both in connection with lying-in cases and also as regards certain forms of insurance?—Yes.

38324. I think you have prepared a short statement for us, which we can take as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

I.—Tontine Clubs.

Tontine clubs; their objects, benefits, subscriptions, etc.

1. Their objects are to encourage thrift by allowing working men who are members a certain weekly allowance when out of work, and free medical attendance and medicine when ill.

2. Their contribution in nearly all clubs is 6d. (sixpence) per week. When unable to work they are allowed—

10s. (ten shillings) per week for the first three months.

6s. (six shillings) per week for the second three months.

4s. (four shillings) per week for the third three months.

2s. (two shillings) per week until certified by the doctor to be fit for work.

3. They also allow £8 (eight pounds) towards funeral expenses in case of death.

4. The doctors are paid by most clubs 4s. (four shillings) per head per annum. A few paying only 3s. (three shillings) per head. Wages of members vary from £1 (one pound) per week to £5 and £6 (five and six pounds) per week. Some men are members of more than one club and receive more when on the sick list than when at work. For example, a labourer working at one of the Liverpool shipping works gets 26s. and 28s. (twenty-six and twenty-eight shillings) per week wages. When sick he gets 10s. (ten shillings) per week from the company, and 10s. (ten shillings) from two clubs to which he contributes 6d. (sixpence) per week. He receives therefore 30s. (thirty shillings) per week, in addition to medical attendance and medicine free

II.—Sixpenny Dispensaries.

5. In Liverpool there are a number of dispensaries Sixpenny carried on by qualified medical men where they charge dispensaries for advice and medicine 6d. (sixpence). A large number of the lower class of working men, with their wives and children, are treated at these dispensaries. I am told that pay for medical assistance according to ability, even poor people will try and save 6d. (sixpence), if possible, and be attended at these dispensaries rather than ask for parish relief. The question of the guardians opening dispensaries and charging 6d. (sixpence) or less for advice and medicine so as to discourage pauperism may be worthy of attention.

III.—Clerks' Association.

6. About 3,989 clerks in Liverpool are members of the Clerks' Association. They pay 2s. (two shillings) per month. associations If out of work the Association finds situations, and if sick they receive professional attendance and medicine free. The Association insures members against loss through want of employment, sickness, old age and death.

IV.—Voluntary Hospitals.

7. There is a general complaint in the medical profession Invasion of that people who can well afford to pay a reasonable fee to voluntary a medical man receive gratuitous advice at the voluntary hospitals by the non-poor hospitals. A wage limit and more thorough inquiries into the circumstances of the people seeking advice at the voluntary hospitals may be worthy of attention. safeguards.

V.—Vaccination Medical Officers.

8. The new Vaccination Act giving the vaccination Objections medical officers power to call at every house is liable to public abuse, and there is a very strong feeling in the profession that vaccinators vaccination medical officers in populous districts in large towns ought not to be allowed private practice, but should devote themselves altogether to the work of the appointment the same as the medical officer of health. practices.

ADDENDUM.

9. Since the Midwifery Act has been passed, certificated midwives are compelled to call in a qualified medical man in certain cases of emergencies. Difficulty as to payment of doctors called in by midwives.

10. I have been called to such cases, and as the case was urgent I have always gone to the midwife's assistance.

11. The people being poor, I have not been able to obtain a fee for my services. This is the experience of other medical men.

12. The Parish Medical Officer of the district is allowed a fee by the guardians for attending these cases, but as certain formalities have to be gone through, e.g., sending first to the relieving officer for a note authorising the doctor to go, the urgency of the case makes it impossible for the poor mother to obtain the services of the Parish Medical Officer.

13. Could it not be made possible for the certificated midwife to send direct to the Parish Medical Officer, and it be considered obligatory for him to go?

38325. (Chairman.) Are many of the dock labourers members of the tontine clubs, or provident societies mentioned in your statement?—Nearly all of them are.

38326. I notice you suggest that a labourer might be associated with three clubs, so that he would get nearly 30s. a week when laid up?—He gets more money when sick than when working.

38327. Do you really mean that a very large proportion of the labourers, whose employment is more or less casual belong to these clubs?—Nearly all of the male population of Liverpool do, the working men being in tontine, and the clerks in the Clerks' Association, so that all are in a kind of tontine.

38328. Therefore, notwithstanding the casual and intermittent nature of their work, they are still able to pay whatever the fees may be?—Yes, as a rule, because they are only about 6d. a week.

38329. I daresay you heard the evidence given by the preceding witness; should you say that there was a general objection to obtaining medical relief through the Poor Law?—No, not if they confine it to the poor.

38330. But I am thinking of the class just above—the class you are speaking of in your statement, who try to save sixpences?—I do not think they ought to have Poor Law relief at all.

38331. Taking the class above the stratum from which paupers come, would you say that the class just above have a great dislike to obtaining medical relief through the Poor Law?—Yes, they have a great dislike.

38332. Do you find as the result of your varied and general experience that feeling to be widely prevalent?—Yes, it is very prevalent indeed.

38333. I think you suggest that they would save sixpences, and so on, in order to go to dispensaries which charged that amount rather than go for parish relief?—Yes.

38334. And you think that it would be a good plan for the guardians to open dispensaries, and to charge 6d. or something of that kind?—To charge something, so that they will not be paupers.

38335. And you think there would be no objection on the part of this particular class to pay that sum or something near it, in order to get this advice?—The class that belong to the friendly societies I think are already met by the friendly societies, but I think there is a lower class than that who might really pay something rather than have free relief.

38336. Do the class below, that is to say the casual men who do not belong to any provident society, join a provident society by paying rather a heavier fee if they become unwell?—No. They have to pass the doctor before they can join, because they only take them in good health.

38337. Then if they are sick they cannot get in?—They cannot join at all.

38338. The fact of being sick is a disqualification?—Yes.

38339. Now, turning to the Clerks' Association, what would you say would be the lowest salary that the clerks who are in that association would be getting?—Their salary would vary from about £1 a week upwards. There are men belonging to the friendly societies who make about £400 or £500 a year, and yet only pay 6d. a week and get medical advice and medicine for it, although they are earning that amount.

38340. There are very large medical provident associations in Liverpool, are there not?—Yes, very many.

38341. Is a large amount of the medical relief in Liverpool distributed through their agency?—Yes, almost all of it. 22 Jan. 1907.

38342. There are certain hospitals giving free medical relief in Liverpool, I understand?—All the voluntary hospitals do.

38343. Is there much complaint amongst the profession in consequence?—Yes, there is a great deal of complaint.

38344. Then you would agree on that point with what the previous witness said?—I would suggest a wage-limit. I do not think they ought to allow any man to go to the hospital who is earning over £1 a week. I think such a man ought to belong to a friendly society.

38345. That is the practice in France; they have a wage-limit and only treat those people who are earning under a certain amount?—I think the difficulty ought to be got over in that way. You ought not to have the voluntary hospitals crowded with men who ought really to pay for their doctors.

38346. Would you suggest that the best way of getting over it is that there should be an inquiry into the income?—Yes, I think there ought to be a wage-limit.

38347. Would you make them pay proportionately?—Yes.

38348. Would you give any medical advice and medicine free?—No. I think the Poor Law comes in there.

38349. Practically you would have nothing free except that which is provided by the Poor Law?—That is all.

38350. And that would be for those from whom they could not recover anything?—Yes, that is so.

38351. You have handed in a supplementary paper or addendum in reference to the Midwifery Act. At present there seems to be at times a little delay before a woman can get a doctor, is that so?—Really they cannot get the services of the Poor Law officer because of the formalities they have to go through.

38352. They have to go to the relieving officer, have they not?—Yes, they first go to him and then he has to send them to the medical officer for the district—the parish doctor—and yet the cases are all urgent cases sent by the midwives for assistance.

38353. I see your own experience has been that you have been called in in certain cases and you have not been able to get any fee?—Yes. A great many medical men are called, some refuse and others go, and those that go do not get any fee very often.

38354. Would your suggestion be that where the midwife sends to the medical officer in a case of this kind he should get his fee from the parish if he cannot get it from the patient?—They do allow that now. The difficulty is to get at the parish medical officer; that is the point I have to make, and it is a most important one. A woman is taken ill and is being attended by a midwife, but there is some complication, and she must have a qualified medical man. The guardians provide the parish doctor and would pay the fee if he went. But the people have to go in the first place to the relieving officer, who may be in one part of the district, and then they may have to go to the doctor who is in another part of the district, and so hours may be consumed before that doctor can go to the woman. But the case is urgent, and so they must go to the nearest doctor who has to attend without a fee very often.

38355. Does the parish medical officer calculate on these fees as being part of his income?—They might if they liked, as they are allowed to; but I think they would rather not have these cases. Very few of them know anything about midwifery, I think, and they do not do midwifery.

38356. Then would you wish to put the ordinary practitioner in the position of the parish doctor?—No, but I would like the guardians of the Poor Law to make it compulsory for the parish doctor to go at once on a note being sent to him direct by the midwife; let him go at once and so relieve the ordinary medical man in the district.

Mr. J. Edwards,
M.R.C.S.

Prevalence of provision against sickness amongst Liverpool working classes. Invasion of voluntary hospitals by the non-poor and need of safeguards.

Only the Poor Law should give free medical relief.

Difficulty in obtaining district medical officer for midwifery cases.

Difficulty as to payment of doctors called in by midwives.

Proposal to allow direct application to district medical officer for midwifery cases.

Mr. J.
Edwards,
M.R.C.S.

22 Jan. 1907.

Proposal to allow direct application to district
medical officer for midwifery
cases.

Question of payment of district
medical officer attending midwifery case without order of relieving officer.

38357. In other words, you would shorten the chain, and instead of having to go to the relieving officer you would say go to the parish doctor direct?—Yes. That would make all the difference, because of the urgency of the case. If the guardians allowed him to go by an order from the midwife then he would be obliged to go, because if he refused he would not be doing his duty. As it is, the urgency of the case is such that they never are called in because of the routine way of going round to find the relieving officer.

38358. The certificated midwife would not be attached to the parish, I take it?—No, but there are a certain number of midwives certified under the Act.

38359. Would you put on such a woman the responsibility of sending according to certain rules?—Yes; under certain rules she has to send for the doctor.

38360. You have heard of complaints of the present practice from medical men, I understand?—Yes, there is a good deal of complaint about it.

38361. Looking at it from the other point of view, the patient's point of view, have you had any cases coming to you where the women have had to wait unduly long for medical help?—They have come in cases where they have gone to different medical men, some have been out, some would not go, and others could not go, and hours would be lost and life might be endangered because of that.

38362. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to the cases you are speaking of, it is not absolutely necessary, is it, that an order of the relieving officer should be obtained in a case of emergency?—I believe it is so; I have never heard otherwise.

38363. There is a provision in the order, is there not—I do not know whether your attention has been directed to it—which enables the guardians to pay the medical officer for attending?—To pay any medical officer?

38364. To pay the district medical officer?—That may be, but the difficulty is to get hold of him.

38365. That provision applies although there is no relief order given by the relieving officer for his attendance in cases of this kind?—Supposing a midwife sends for the parish doctor, it is very questionable whether he would go without some further order from the guardians.

38366. Therefore the difficulty is in the unwillingness of the medical man to go?—Yes, and also because many of the men in Liverpool who do parish work really do not go in for midwifery, and therefore would rather not go in these cases, but would rather leave the responsibility to other men. These are always urgent cases and hard cases. For example, the parish medical officer of the district where I live has not attended a case of midwifery for many years, consequently in my opinion he is not competent to deal with a complicated midwifery case. This is not a solitary instance.

38367. But the district medical officer would get an extra fee for attending, would he not?—Yes, he would.

38368. Does that not tend to remove the difficulty of his going?—I do not think so, because the guinea they get is scarcely recompense enough for the trouble.

38369. With regard to Paragraph 8 of your statement, which refers to vaccination, has the effect of the Vaccination Act, 1898, been at all to encourage the ordinary medical practitioner to vaccinate the child rather than to wait for the attendance of the public vaccinator?—My experience is that they do not like to vaccinate the children too young. The result is that time is allowed for the ordinary certificate to go to parents that the parish doctor is going to vaccinate, and for the parish doctor to call. He gets 1s., I believe, as a fee for calling, and so he invariably calls on patients. But there is a complaint that the call alone is a disadvantage to the general practitioner, because that is letting another medical man enter into the family and get introduced.

38370. Before the Act passed that difficulty was foreseen, I think, and it was suggested that it would probably encourage the medical attendant of the family to say, "I will come and vaccinate the child when the proper time arrives"?—I do not think that is the case.

38371. Do you know whether that in practice has been so or not?—I do not think it has.

38372. (Sir Henry Robinson.) What is the status of these sixpenny dispensaries? Can any medical man put these sixpenny dispensaries on his door and charge a sixpenny fee, and does that make it a dispensary?—Yes, any medical man can do that so long as he is qualified.

38373. Are there no subscriptions required from a certain number of people to join that dispensary?—No. They simply go there and pay the 6d. It is a very lucrative practice, I suppose. I have not had experience of it because I had not had any dispensary, but I know one man who charges 6d. and makes £1,200 a year out of the 6d. and nothing else. He has a sixpenny dispensary and he has an assistant to whom he pays £150 a year. His assistant does most of the work and he gets the £1,200.

38374. Does he attend the people at their own homes?—Yes, for 1s.

38375. Does he supply the medicine?—Yes. I was examining for insurance one of these men, so I asked him, "How do you manage to give medicine for 6d.?" He said, "The way we do it is this: We only give them soda and quassia and that kind of stuff, and if they want drugs that cost money, such as iodide of potassium, and things of that kind, we give them a prescription and say, "This is extra and you must go to the chemist for it." But most of the people are satisfied with very ordinary drugs, and so these men make very large profits.

38376. Do you say that the people prefer to go to these kind of dispensaries?—Yes.

38377. Are there many of them in Liverpool?—There are a great many of those, unfortunately, and they interfere with the ordinary practitioner. They pauperise the better class of patients, because they think that if they can go to a dispensary and get medical treatment for 6d., while we charge 5s., we are charging too much.

38378. Do these doctors as a rule confine their practice to this sixpenny class of cases?—Yes.

38379. Have they no other?—Some have ordinary practice as well.

Objection to public vaccinators with private practices.

Sixpenny dispensaries, their lucrativeness and extent of their operations.

SEVENTY-SIXTH DAY.

Monday, 28th January, 1907.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.

The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
The Right Rev. The LORD BISHOP OF ROSS.

Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. JAMES NIVEN, called ; and Examined.

38380. (Chairman.) You have prepared a very comprehensive and interesting statement which we may treat as your evidence-in-chief ?—Certainly. (The Witness handed in the following statements).

INTRODUCTION.

This includes :—

1. Review of the relative mortalities occurring at home, in the union infirmaries, and in other public institutions of persons residing in the City of Manchester.

2. An account of the medical work done by public charities and by the corporation in the year 1905. (The information on this subject has been collected and tabulated by Mr. T. L. Ellwood, Chief Clerk in the Public Health Office.)

3. Some general considerations.

Mr. J. Niven.

4. Suggestions, general, and special bearing on the relation of the Poor Law and sanitary local administrations.

28 Jan. 1907.

The course of the relative mortalities occurring at home, in the union infirmaries, and in other public institutions of persons residing in the city of Manchester.

The essential facts are contained in the figures given below taken from the annual reports of the medical officer of health.

The fifth and seventh columns show that the percentage of persons dying in public institutions began to ascend in the year 1900, and went up abruptly in 1901, reaching its highest point in 1903.

Increase in number of deaths in public institutions.

PERCENTAGE OF PERSONS DYING IN THEIR OWN HOMES, IN POOR LAW INSTITUTIONS, AND IN OTHER INSTITUTIONS IN MANCHESTER.

Year.	Own Homes.		Poor Law Institutions.		Other Institutions.		Total Annual Death Rates.
	Deaths.	Per Cent.	Deaths.	Per Cent.	Deaths.	Per Cent.	Corrected.
1895	10,433	80·8	1,601	12·4	881	6·8	24·68
1896	9,530	80·2	1,468	12·4	876	7·4	22·53
1897	9,588	80·0	1,554	13·0	848	7·0	21·49
1898	9,257	80·5	1,456	12·7	780	6·8	24·22
1899	10,477	80·3	1,740	13·3	829	6·4	23·9
1900	10,071	78·1	1,953	15·1	879	6·8	23·8
1901	9,067	76·8	1,755	14·9	979	8·3	21·6
1902	8,396	76·1	1,616	14·7	1,014	9·2	20·0
1903	8,056	74·7	1,665	15·4	1,061	9·9	19·5
1904	8,798	75·4	1,860	15·9	1,008	8·7	20·9
1905	7,907	75·0	1,636	15·5	996	9·5	18·7

From the fifth column we perceive that the relative increase in the institution death rate so far as the union infirmaries are concerned begins abruptly in the year 1900 ; and reaches its highest point in 1904.

The relative increase in the proportion of deaths occurring in other institutions does not set in till 1901, but is then continuous, reaching its highest point in 1903.

It is not easy to give a satisfactory explanation of these figures.

There was a great increase in the amount of alcohol consumed per head of the population during the years 1896-99, becoming more marked in 1899. The Rev. Dawson Burns gives this estimate. "Alliance Temperance Almanack," 1907 :—

Mr. J. Niven.
28 Jan. 1907.

THE ANNUAL DRINK BILLS OF THE UNITED KINGDOM, 1884-1905.
Estimated by the Rev. Dawson Burns, D.D.

Year.	Estimated Expenditure (revised).	Per head.	Year.	Estimated Expenditure (revised).	Per Head.
	£	£ s. d.		£	£ s. d.
1884	144,734,214	4 1 0½	1895	163,133,935	4 3 4½
1885	141,039,141	3 18 3½	1896	170,426,467	4 6 4½
1886	140,550,126	3 17 4½	1897	174,365,372	4 7 6½
1887	142,784,438	3 18 0½	1898	176,967,349	4 8 0½
1888	142,426,153	3 17 2½	1899	185,927,227	4 11 8
1889	151,064,035	4 1 3½	1900	184,881,196	4 10 4½
1890	159,542,700	4 5 1½	1901	181,788,245	4 7 8½
1891	161,765,291	4 5 7½	1902	179,499,817	4 5 6½
1892	161,527,717	4 4 9½	1903	174,445,271	4 2 4
1893	159,020,709	4 2 8½	1904	168,987,165	3 18 11½
1894	158 932,134	4 1 11½	1905	164,167,941	3 15 11½

In 1900 and 1901 occurred the outburst of arsenical poisoning in Manchester.

It is possible that these circumstances are responsible for part of the increased proportion of the deaths occurring in institutions in 1899 and 1900.

The continuance of the high proportion of deaths in the union hospitals and in institutions may be due to the period of distress which commenced in 1903. But no tendency is shown in 1905 towards a diminution of this increased recourse to public institutions, although in that year the depression had passed away, and although the tide of increased drinking had receded.

It is possible that the increased use of public institutions may tend to continue, once established. The effect of this on the death rate it would be difficult to estimate. Probably the immediate effect would be towards a diminution.

In the table it is interesting to note that the increased use of the union hospitals began to be evident as far back as 1897.

It was not, however, till 1901 that other institutions began to be used to a greater extent.

The death rate in union hospitals relative to that in other institutions is shown by this table.

Thus the ratio in 1895 is 12·4 to 6·8. This ratio increases from 1896 to 1900, after which year it declines to 1902-03.

STATEMENT.

1. The amount of gratuitous medical aid given to the poor in Manchester is enormous.

Partly it is supplied by the Poor Law officers, partly by charities, partly by the sanitary authority, and partly by private practitioners.

There are no means of gauging, still less of influencing the last named source of gratuitous aid, but it is certainly great in total amount, though, of necessity, irregular in its distribution.

With regard to the medical aid given by district medical officers, information will, no doubt, be obtained directly. The expenses of Poor Law medical aid are not made out in a separate form.

2. In the Manchester township, I am informed, most of the patients seen at their own homes by the district medical officers are removed to the Crumpsall Hospital.

But the proportion so removed must vary with the accommodation in the union hospitals.

If the accommodation provided is small, as in the Prestwich Union, the number treated at home by the district medical officers will probably be correspondingly large.

3. Preventive Medical Work. Poor Law Administration.—The following figures show the number of vaccinations performed in 1905 in each of the three main divisions of Manchester, and the expense involved. For South and North Manchester the figures are estimates:—

—	Public Vaccinations.	Private.	Expenditure.
			£ s. d.
Manchester Township	2,827	541	861 8 0 in fees.
South Manchester	4,642	3,172	1,457 11 5 Estimated cost.
North Manchester	3,873	1,289	1,307 0 0

4. Charitable medical work is divided among a number of hospitals, two of them general, the rest special.

A number of particulars are, herewith, furnished in reference to the hospitals of the city, which give a general idea of the range and magnitude of the operations carried on, and of the expense involved.

To these, particulars of gratuitous nursing institutions are added. (See Appendix No. VI. (A).)

5. From the details relating to hospitals several points are selected for special notice as being, perhaps, most deserving of attention.

The average daily numbers in charitable institutions in 1905, as given by the authorities of these institutions, were as under.

But these numbers do not relate entirely to Manchester patients.

The Bowdon and Delamere Sanatoria receive patients from Manchester and district. The Royal Infirmary receives patients from neighbouring towns as well as from Manchester, though the great majority of the cases belong to Manchester.

The Manchester Children's Hospital serves chiefly Manchester and Salford (see Report). St. Mary's Hospital also serves Manchester and Salford. The Eye Hospitals do not confine their ministrations to Manchester. To a less extent this is true of most other institutions.

6. A considerable deduction must, therefore, be made from the total number of cases daily under treatment, if we are considering only the number of Manchester sick under treatment.

It is probable, however, that about 1,000 Manchester patients are daily under treatment in the hospitals.

7. The average total daily numbers under treatment in 1905 were as follows:—

Large amount of gratuitous medical assistance in Manchester.

Vaccination work and cost in Manchester.

Voluntary hospitals and their work in Manchester.

Patients from outside districts in Manchester voluntary hospitals.

Average of in-patients in Manchester voluntary hospitals.

average daily	Manchester Royal Infirmary	-	-	-	269
number of in-	Cheadle Convalescent Home	-	-	-	125 patients in	Manchester Children's Hospital	-	-	-	133·7
Manchester	Convalescent Home	-	-	-	24
voluntary	Ancoats Hospital	-	-	-	100 hospitals.	Convalescent Home, Warford	-	-	-	24
	Northern Hospital for Women and Children, about	-	-	-	67
	Bowdon Hospital for Consumption, etc.	-	-	-	48
	Delamere Sanatorium	-	-	-	86
	St. Mary's Hospital for Women and Children	-	-	-	80
	Clifford Street	-	-	-	36
	Manchester Royal Eye Hospital	-	-	-	88
	Eye Hospital, St. John Street	-	-	-	20
	Manchester and Salford Hospital for Skin Diseases	-	-	-	20
	The Lock Hospital, about	-	-	-	38
	The Ear Hospital	-	-	-	13
	The Cancer Hospital	-	-	-	15·3
	Hospitals for incurables	-	-	-	125
	Jewish Hospital (general)	-	-	-	15·2
	Total	-	-	-	1,327·2

8. The total number of patients treated in the out-patients departments of the hospitals is given below. The information is supposed to relate to cases, so that the same person is not counted twice over, if coming for medical advice on separate occasions. How far the numbers do actually represent separate and distinct persons, I am not in a position to say.

9. The total number of outpatients treated at the undermentioned hospitals in 1905 was:—

Manchester Royal Infirmary	-	-	-	41,155
Manchester Children's Hospital	-	-	-	23,899
Ancoats Hospital	-	-	-	21,280
Northern Hospital	-	-	-	9,927
Hospital for Consumption, Hardman St.	-	-	-	11,216
St. Mary's Hospital	-	-	-	9,377
Clifford Street	-	-	-	4,110
Manchester Royal Eye Hospital	-	-	-	30,273
Eye Hospital, St. John Street	-	-	-	3,000
Hospital for Skin Diseases	-	-	-	4,842
The Lock Hospital	-	-	-	4,299
The Ear Hospital	-	-	-	3,319
The Cancer Hospital	-	-	-	45
The Jewish Hospital	-	-	-	131
The Victoria Dental Hospital	-	-	-	17,443
Total	-	-	-	184,316

10. To these must be added the Chorlton and Hulme Dispensaries in part:—

	Out-patients.	Home patients.	Accidents.
Chorlton Dispensary	1,810	1,394	111
Hulme Dispensary	4,768	2,162	218

These institutions are really provident, the charges being 2s. per adult for three weeks, 1s. for a child under thirteen for the same period when treated at home. The charges for out-patients are half the above. Very poor persons are treated free on subscribers' recommends, but they form a small minority.

11. As with patients treated in the hospitals, a considerable deduction from the figures for out-patients must be made in respect of persons living outside Manchester City, though, probably, not nearly so large a deduction in proportion.

12. The general hospitals, in addition, pay visits, by their medical officers, to the homes of patients.

Manchester Royal Infirmary	-	-	-	1,669
Ancoats Hospital	-	-	-	1,572
Manchester Children's Hospital	-	-	-	3,527
St. Mary's Hospital	-	-	-	4,500
Clifford Street	-	-	-	1,301
Total	-	-	-	12,569

13. The modes in which patients are able to obtain gratuitously the benefits of the above hospitals require consideration.

Patients are admitted in some instances by subscribers' recommends, in most cases, however, on application, if the need appears urgent, and the patient is suitable for treatment.

In order, however, to prevent abuse of the benefits of the charity, the Royal Infirmary, the Ancoats Hospital and the Northern Hospital have the circumstances of their patients living in Manchester investigated by the Charity Organisation Society. Other hospitals conduct investigations on their own account.

This subject appears to require further study.

PAYMENT BY PERSONS RECEIVING MEDICAL AID FROM THE CHARITIES.

14. From the particulars given in the Appendix (See Payment by Appendix No. VI. (A),) will be seen that an effort is made to obtain payment for medical services given by public charities according to the ability of the patients or their friends to pay.

This is notably so in the case of the Royal Infirmary, the Consumption Hospitals, the Royal Eye Hospital and the Hospital for Diseases of the Ear.

An effort is also made in this direction at the Ancoats Hospital, the Cancer Hospital, the Northern Counties Hospital for Incurables, and others.

15. Contributions are also received in other cases.

The sums so obtained, where ascertainable, are shown in a separate sheet. (See Appendix No. VI. (B).)

16. The current expenses of the different hospitals were for the year 1905 as appended. (See Appendix No. VI. (C).) These items do not represent the total medical charitable expenditure in Manchester, but they show the greater part of it.

17. As already mentioned, the patients do not all belong to the city of Manchester, nor do the subscribers all belong to the city.

18. The aid already mentioned has been called medical, but the same name may perhaps be held to include other forms of assistance.

19. Such a charitable form of assistance is furnished by the Manchester and Salford Sick Poor and District Nursing Association which has five branch homes for nurses in different parts of the city. These nurses visit houses where their services are required. Applications are received by the matrons at the respective homes. They make the beds, make the patient comfortable, carry out the directions of the medical attendant, and give "advice" as to nursing and management.

20. The total number of these nurses at work in Manchester, Salford, and district is sixty-four. The number of patients attended by them in 1905 was 10,171, and the visits paid to these patients numbered 245,339. The institution received from poor patients £154 12s. 1d., and their expenses were £7,257 1s. 10d. This money accrues from investments, donations, and charitable subscriptions, and an amount from the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Fund collections, also from fees for sending out nurses from the Private Nursing Home.

PREVENTIVE CHARITABLE WORK.

21. The Manchester and Salford Ladies Public Health Society consists of twenty-three ladies who form a working Committee, meeting once a month.

The central part of Manchester and Salford are divided between these ladies, who each has a paid health visitor.

22. The society does work for the sanitary committee through their health visitors which consists chiefly:—

(a) In house visiting, and endeavouring to secure cleanliness.

(b) In visiting the houses of consumptive persons to see that they carry out the instructions which they have already received, as to the precautions to be taken.

(c) In visiting houses where there is an infant, and advising the mother as to its management.

23. There are twenty-five visitors, sixteen in Manchester and nine in Salford, and the Corporation of Manchester pays the wages of nine of the health visitors at the rate of 16s. per week. Salford pays half the salaries of nine. (Report and Statement.)

THE BOARD OF GUARDIANS FOR THE RELIEF OF THE JEWISH POOR OF MANCHESTER.

24. This society has carried on its benevolent work for nearly forty years, otherwise the Jewish poor would have become a burden on the rates of the city.

Mr. J. Niven.
28 Jan. 1907.

Expenditure of voluntary hospitals in Manchester.

Quasi-medical charitable assistance.

Nursing associations and their work in Manchester.

Ladies' Public Health Society and its work in Manchester.

Health visitors paid by the Town Council.

Jewish Board of Guardians and its work.

Mr. J. Niven. 25. The Manchester, Prestwich, and Salford Boards of Guardians contribute annually to its funds.

28 Jan. 1907.

Jewish Board of Guardians and its work. 26. The society gives relief in money, in kind, food for the Passover, and Medical Treatment. The money relief last year was £843 2s. 5d., and relief on food £552 11s. 1d.

The total cases relieved were 1,761.

27. The society has also a loan fund in operation.

The expenditure under this fund last year was £1,960 15s. and the income £1,728 13s. 2d. (See paper, Manchester Statistical Society, Mr. Hesse.)

28. There is also a large amount of other charitable work which is, in its influence on the health of poorer persons (particularly of children) akin to the medical charitable work already given.

Charitable associations for helping boys and girls in Manchester.

29. Of this character is the work carried on by that splendid society, the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes, and Children's Aid Society.

The total number of beds in their various institutions is 512, and the average number occupied in 438. (See Annual Report.)

30. Doing the same kind of work in some degree are the Wood Street Mission and the Charter Street Ragged School and Working Girls' Home. Both these give free meals on a large scale.

31. There is a Police Aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children. (See Annual Report.)

Quasi-medical charitable institutions in Manchester.

32. Other institutions of a quasi medical character are:—

The Henshaw Blind Asylum :

	£	s.	d.
Income, 1905	-	-	8,345 2 8
Expenditure	-	-	8,090 12 0

(See Annual Report.)

Also the Royal Deaf and Dumb Schools, and the Deaf and Dumb Institutes. (See Annual Report.)

Various charitable schools.

Lads' clubs.

Summer camps.

Children's Country Holiday Fund, for giving poor children three weeks' holiday in summer.

Various holiday homes.

Convalescent homes.

Cotton districts convalescent fund.

Manchester and Salford District Provident.

Seaside home, Boys' Refuge, Strangeways.

Medical Mission.—Red Bank.

MEDICAL AID AFFORDED BY THE MANCHESTER CORPORATION AS A SANITARY AUTHORITY.

Medical assistance by the sanitary authority; its objects, extent, and cost in Manchester.

33. This stands on an entirely different footing from the medical aid rendered by the Poor Law medical officers, inasmuch as it has, in the main, for its specific object the removal of sources of infection from the homes of the people and is therefore as much for the benefit of the community as of the individual.

34. It is true that the same object is served in several ways by the medical assistance rendered under the Poor Laws, and by the charities, more especially when such diseases as phthisis, enteric fever, bronchitis, erysipelas, and so forth are concerned.

35. The protection of the community from infection is not, however, the specific aim of treatment, as it is with the sanitary authority.

36. The prevalence of any particular infectious disease varies from year to year, and it is therefore necessary to give the facts for more than one year. The expenditure, however, is given only for the year 1905. (See Appendix No. VI. (D).)

STAFF.

Phthisis treated in sanitary authority's hospital.

37. The following are the numbers on the staff of the various institutions:—

Monsall Hospital	-	-	-	-	224
Clayton Hospital	-	-	-	-	24
Baguley Sanatorium	-	-	-	-	54

38. At Clayton Smallpox Hospital phthisical patients are treated, and during 1905 fifty-one patients were admitted.

39. The corporation have in addition twenty beds allotted in Delamere Sanatorium, for which £1 1s. a week each is paid, and during 1905 thirty patients were sent in.

Phthisis treated in sanitary authority's hospital.

40. Besides the expenditure already mentioned in connection with the hospitals, the sanitary authority directly incurs other expenditure in work which may be considered an integral part of medical aid.

Thus, the expenditure on disinfection of articles and houses in the year 1905 was £4,684 15s. 10d. for notifiable infectious diseases.

Four-fifths of the expenditure in the Public Health Office must be assigned to the same heading, viz., £9,489 9s. 2d.

One half of the salaries of the district sanitary inspectors may be assigned here, i.e., £1,572 16s. 8d.

Bacteriological work connected with enteric fever, diphtheria, and the diagnosis of tubercular phthisis, also with the examination of milk samples cost £1,331 2s.

Diphtheria antitoxin is placed at the disposal of practitioners, and the cost in 1905 was £16 19s.

In the diarrhoea season medicine is distributed from the police station—cost £15 15s. 4d. There were 1,334 distributions in 1906 between the hours of 9 p.m. and 9 a.m.

Free distribution of medicine by sanitary authority.

41. The Midwives Supervising Committee of Manchester, acting as the Local Supervising Authority under work of the Midwives Act, 1902, appointed at the beginning of 1905 a lady medical inspector to supervise the work of and give instructions to midwives practising in their area. Her salary is £250 per annum.

Midwifery work of sanitary authority.

42. Arrangements have also been made by the committee to pay the fees of medical practitioners for attendance in certain emergency cases to which they have been called on the advice of midwives under Rule E 17 of the Central Midwives Board.

Payment of sanitary authority doctors called in by midwives.

43. Payment is only made in the case of the poor inhabitants of the city and a scale of income was fixed, copy of which is annexed, together with the list of emergencies paid for. (See Appendix No. VI. (E).)

44. The fee is fixed in two amounts £1 1s. and 5s., the first payment was passed in July, 1906, and the total amount passed up to the end of November (five months) was £66 3s.

45 A. All applications from medical men for payment of fees are investigated by the Charity Organisation Society, whose officers ascertain whether the person attended complies with the scale, and is otherwise eligible. They are also considered by a medical sub-committee.

45 B. Education. The Education Authority have a medical officer, an assistant medical officer, and a lady who instructs the senior girls in elementary schools in the management of infants. They have also an instructor in physical drill who trains teachers to instruct and inspects classes. Total expense of the Medical Department for 1905, including the above items, less the medical assistant, £1,100.

Medical work of the Manchester Education Authority.

45 C. Instruction in swimming is also given to schools at the public baths.

CO-OPERATIVE MEDICAL ATTENDANCE.

46. Under the above title may be included the various associations, in which a certain sum is paid weekly or otherwise, and in return for which medical attendance is secured.

Provident dispensaries etc., in Manchester.

47. The associations in Manchester for this purpose are : (a) The Provident Dispensaries Branch of the Manchester and Salford District Provident Society.

Of this association there were, in 1905, five branches in Manchester (see Appendix No. VI. (A).) and 16,352 members. These paid to the dispensaries 134,296 visits, or 8'21 per member, in the course of the year.

The members pay 1d. per week for adults and for each child over fourteen years of age; for all the children under fourteen, if more than one, 2d. Sick members pay 1d. each time for medicine. The medical officer may charge 1s. for a visit to the patient's house, and 15s. for midwifery. Dispensaries are provided, and rooms for the patients, and doctors.

The total expenditure in 1905 was £8,895 14s. 3d. Receipts from patients, etc., at convalescent home £1,655 0s. 6d. and from dispensary patients £3,306 10s. 2d.

(b) The Hulme and Chorlton Dispensaries have been already mentioned.

In 1905, 3,556 patients were attended at home; 6,578 were seen as out-patients; 329 accidents were dealt with.

The expenditure was £1,096 6s. 3d. and the income from patients was £386 18s. 9d.

MANCHESTER WAREHOUSEMEN AND CLERKS' ASSOCIATION.

Warehousemen and Clerks' Association. 48. This association in 1905 contained 5,134 members. The amount of subscriptions in 1905 was £6,629, and the total income was £8,504 13s. 5d.

The expenditure was £6,115 10s. 8d.

The medical fees paid in 1905 amounted to £1,534.

There is also an old age pension scheme, a burial fund for members, and another for their wives. For further details see Appendix (App. No. VI. (A),) and Report.

Sick and Provident Societies attached to special works. 49. There is a Sick and Provident Society for the clerical staff of the Gas and Electricity Departments of the Corporation.

The number of members in 1905 was 539.

The income - - - - - £948 9 0

The expenditure - - - - - 426 18 6

Sick benefits but no medical attendance.

50. Sick and Burial Societies have also been formed amongst the workmen of the—Bradford Gas Works.

The Rochdale Road Gas Works.

The Cleansing Department.

Sick benefits but no medical attendance.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

Friendly Societies and their work in Manchester. 51. Consist of lodges, grouped in districts. From the rules of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, we gather that—

Every lodge shall establish a sick and funeral fund (72), and every lodge, which has a medical officer attached thereto, shall establish a medical aid fund, which is to be entirely separate from the former (72a).

Districts may adopt rules for admission of members to—

A. Sickness benefits.

B. Funeral benefits (31).

C. Superannuation benefits.

D. Medical attendance.

There is also an insurance and endowment fund (24a). The provision in other societies is similar.

52. Tables appended to the rules of the above Order give the contributions of members and the benefits accruing, except for medical attendance.

Medical attendance provided for by friendly societies. 53. We are, however, more particularly concerned with medical attendance in sickness, and by the kindness of the secretaries I learn the particulars embodied in the table appended (See Appendix No. VI. (F),) which does not include the Bolton Unity, the smallest of these local societies, said to be represented in Manchester.

54. It will be evident from the figures given that the extent to which members use the facilities given for medical attendance is not in close relationship with the extent to which they take advantage of the sick benefits.

Wages of members of friendly societies and Clerks' Association. 55. It is an important question what class of persons the respective provident associations mentioned reach.

I am informed that—in this district—it may be assumed the persons touched by the friendly societies do not earn, to any extent, less than 30s. per week.

The same holds for the Warehousemen and Clerks' Provident Association.

Absence of provision against sickness by poorest class in Manchester. 56. There is thus only the dispensary branch of the provident association which may reach people with smaller incomes. I am informed, however, by the honorary secretary to this association, Mr. Charles Behrens, that this is the case to a very limited extent indeed.

57. We may, therefore, assume that the population whose family incomes lie below 30s. per week makes practically no special provision for sickness.

GENERAL CONDITIONS.

The guiding principles for reform in the medical assistance of the poor. 58. Three main objects appear to present themselves in connection with any change in administration.

59. To ameliorate the lot of the deserving poor. Unfortunately the word deserving is an elastic one, and may be considered by different persons and bodies of persons to apply to different sets of qualities, and different rules of conduct. Nor even, if a common understanding were arrived at, are the facts easy to ascertain. Some discrimination may, however, be practicable.

60. To improve the physique and health of the poorer classes.

61. To improve the moral fibre of the people, and put them in the way of improving their own physique, securing their own health, and ameliorating their own lot.

62. Where the last object appears to conflict with the first two, it is necessary to safeguard any steps taken so as to remove or reduce to a minimum the conflict.

63. The mortality from tubercular phthisis excessive. Between the ages of fifteen and thirty-five more than one-third of all deaths are due to this cause, and the mortality is very heavy throughout adult life.

Unfavourable conditions of life, occupation and nutrition such as usually depend on poverty, strongly predispose to attack, and conversely phthisis in the parents, especially if the children be young and unable to work, is a fertile source of poverty. The low state of nutrition resulting, strongly predisposes the wife and children—supposing the husband attacked—to receive infection.

64. It thus becomes of the utmost importance to the family and to the community that such a family should be adequately nourished.

And it is probable that the assistance rendered in such a case is often inadequate for the objects to be attained, viz., to prevent the disease from being communicated to other members of the family, or to companions and workmates, and, as far as possible, to save the person attacked. Fully to secure these objects parents suffering from this disease should be encouraged to seek medical advice, and the means of cure, whether in a sanatorium or otherwise, at the earliest possible moment. I am satisfied that they frequently fail to do so, largely on account of their families, whose interests they desire to consult by remaining at work. This they continue to do until their chances of recovery are gone. Further, their chances of recovery, and their willingness to remain in a sanatorium, are checked by anxiety about their families, even when they have been induced to enter one.

65. Even if they do not enter a sanatorium the health of their families and their own often requires adequate succour. But any such exceptional aid should be accompanied by notification of the illness to the sanitary authority at the earliest possible moment, and should be accompanied with the condition that the measures considered necessary for the avoidance of infection are fully and carefully carried out.

66. Such measures involve certain specific precautions, a thorough and continuous practice of cleanliness, and the employment of the aid given, so as to secure good food and clothes for the whole family. These precautions are needed whether the parent enters a sanatorium (or hospital) or not, but special aid given should be conditional on the parent entering a sanatorium or hospital if so required. It should be possible to ascertain precisely how any aid given is expended. It should be possible in general, to ascertain that the total aid given from all sources does not exceed what is required.

67. If the aid given were derived from the guardians it should be possible and necessary for the district medical officer to ascertain that all requisite precautions of a personal and sanitary nature were carried out, so co-operating with the sanitary authority.

68. The wife of a patient, who is also the mother of a family of young children, should not be encouraged to seek outside work, leaving her children to the care of another. Such a course is, in the long run, usually uneconomical. Before this is done, the medical officer of the district should certify in writing that such a course is advisable, and such certificate should be forwarded to the medical officer of health.

69. There are, of course, difficulties in the way of giving exceptional treatment in the case of consumptives.

Such a course could only be advocated because of the peculiarly disastrous character of this disease, on account of the ages at which it is specially incident, its infectious character and its chronic course.

Mr. J. Niven
28 Jan. 1907.

Excessive mortality from phthisis

Importance of proper nourishment for phthisical families.

Unwillingness of poor phthisical parents to take medical advice under present system and consequent evils.

Conditions under which public aid should be given to phthisical patients and their families.

Question as to whether phthisis is best relieved out of public or charitable funds.

Mr. J. Niven. It might also be fairly argued that money judiciously spent would yield more than an equivalent return.

28 Jan. 1907. Nevertheless the difficulty is one which must be duly weighed, and it may appear insuperable.

It may, in fact, be considered that the exceptional assistance required should come, not out of the rates, but out of a charitable fund.

70. We have seen what an immense expenditure in charitable money and in charitable work there is already in medical matters. The object aimed at, however, is one which appeals strongly not only to compassion, but also on account of its productive character in improved physique and averted infection.

Notification should be a condition of all relief of phthisis.

71. If aid were available from a charitable source the requisite amount might be given by the co-operation of the guardians and of the administrators of such a charity. Such co-operation has, to my knowledge, taken place to a limited extent.

Whatever the source of the desired aid, notification of the case aided to the sanitary authority should be an indispensable condition.

Difficulty of the Poor Law dealing specially with phthisis.

72. The difficulties in giving exceptional aid in the case of phthisis under the Poor Law Administration are very patent.

73. The greatest difficulty is one which applies to any measure of rate-aided assistance, viz. : the addition to the rates which would be entailed.

Still ld. in the rates brings in £15,800 in Manchester, and this would enable 316 families to be provided for.

There is, however, the most determined opposition to an increase of the rates.

No doubt any increase in the rates presses severely on the class just above those who are in receipt of Poor Law relief, raising their rents and the price of all articles.

74. On the other hand the proposed aid is entirely on behalf of this class, and they would pay only part of the money to be raised. It would, however, benefit the whole community.

Question of sanitary authority dealing with phthisis.

75. It may be said why should not this money be levied as part of the sanitary rate. The sanitary authority could then use it so as to obtain the maximum amount of preventive work. It may be doubted, however, whether this mode of applying money would be regarded as coming under the Public Health Acts. Here again there might be strong public opposition. Nevertheless, this is the natural source of any such expenditure, the principal object of which would be the prevention of a particular disease.

Another difficulty would arise in determining on the judicious application of such exceptional aid.

It would, no doubt, often happen that the person afflicted had been drunken and dissolute.

Difficulty as to dealing with drunken or dissolute cases of phthisis.

76. How far should such a fact arrest the aid contemplated. It is evident that such families would often need assistance in a high degree, from a health point of view.

We may assume in such a case that the disease would have advanced considerably, before the drinking parent would submit to isolation, so that isolation in hospital would be highly beneficial to the family, and, perhaps to the parent attacked.

77. There would, of course, be a danger that the benefit to health secured for the family would disappear on the discharge of the drinking father.

Nevertheless, it might be necessary in the first instance to extend the exceptional aid to such cases, on condition of and during isolation.

78. A more hopeless case is that in which the remaining parent drinks. Yet the children require to be considered and protected, as far as practicable. In some instances it would suffice for the mother to know that the aid afforded would cease in case of proof produced that she had been drinking during its continuance.

The father would, also, often be influenced by the consideration that, after resumption of his drinking habits, the exceptional aid previously given to his family would not be resumed.

There are, however, no means devisable by which the unfit, and the children of the unfit, can be kept protected. The main plea for special action in the case of tuberculosis is the protection of the community from infection.

78a. The poor man and woman suffer privation as children, as parents of young children, and again in old age.

No suggestion is offered as to how the inequalities of condition at different ages are to be levelled for poor people. But the problem is one which deserves the study of scientific statesmen.

The following suggestions are submitted.

79.—General. A medical officer of health has to consider primarily the health and physical efficiency of the population. The poorest class just above pauperism, in spite of the immense amount of medical assistance which they receive suffer severely from any increase of expense in dealing with paupers or in improving the general social condition. Their case is deserving, therefore, of special consideration.

It is, however, extremely difficult to see how they are to be materially aided out of the rates.

80. It is not to be forgotten that every increase in the rates presses the class above pauperism downwards into pauperism, however much it may benefit individuals and however beneficial it may be to the community as a whole. There are no means by which persons in other classes can be kept from shifting part of their burden on the class just above pauperism, as by increase of rent, increased price of commodities, etc.

81. In suggesting, therefore, how this class may best be benefited, these principles must be borne in mind.

82. The benefits must be restricted to such as are most necessary and most beneficial.

83. The expense must not be excessive, and should yield some corresponding return in improved physique or reduction of disease, or in productive capacity.

84. The benefit should be accompanied by and entail increased effort towards improvement on the part of the people themselves.

85. Amongst the more urgent needs are :—

(a) Such education as will enable the people to live more healthily. This includes the provision of teachers trained in hygiene, and in what may be called domestic hygiene and economy, and of expert medical instruction to the teachers. It is not intended to imply that health is not benefited by other forms of instruction. It is even conceivable that education in choice of pleasures and in the choice of books might have a powerful effect on health indirectly, as would also the training of boys and girls in skilled manual work, as tending to give them occupation for their leisure time.

The training of teachers in hygiene should be restricted as far as possible to subjects which will enable them to look after the health of school children, and to impart sound practical instruction.

Senior girls should be instructed in elementary schools and in continuation classes, in such subjects as cleanliness, clothing, foods and their prices, the care of children, thrift.

It is evident that to impart this instruction in such a manner as to produce the improvement aimed at, skilled and trained instruction, with all necessary appliances are required. Additional expense will be entailed.

(b) Provision should be made to insure that children attending elementary schools are sufficiently nourished and properly cared for, care being taken that parents able to defray any necessary charges or otherwise to care for the children, do so.

The administration in this case will be expensive.

(c) Provision of Sanatoria for Consumptives.—Either by charity or otherwise sufficient provision should be made for the treatment of consumptives, a charge being made sufficient to cover expenses to persons able to pay.

86. The provision made at present in Manchester is recorded at pages 168, 169 of the Annual Report on the Health of Manchester for 1905.

87. There are, however, many persons of the artisan class who are suffering from phthisis in a more or less further advanced stage, who are not eligible for a sanatorium, and will not seek Poor Law aid, but whose removal to a hospital is very desirable. They would often be able to pay something towards their maintenance. For these the sanitary authority or private charity must provide.

The pressure of the rate burden upon the class immediately above the pauper class.

Tendency of increase of rates to increase pauperism.

Guiding principles for assisting the class immediately above the pauper class.

Education in hygiene, feeding of school-children, and provision of phthisis sanatoria the chief needs of the non-pauper poor.

Need for further provision against phthisis and measures advocated.

88. Whether treated in a Poor Law hospital, a corporation hospital, or a charitable sanatorium, cases of phthisis require a considerable amount of medical attention, and great pains is required in particular with individual diets.

In every hospital, whether Poor Law, corporation, or charitable, the patients require to be carefully and systematically instructed in the precautions to be taken to prevent the spread of infection.

89. In my opinion cases of consumption should not be transferred to the able-bodied side. Nor should they be treated in general wards. It is true that, if very great care is taken, the risk of infection is much reduced. It is better, however, not to run such a risk.

90. Where a hospital has been already erected attached to a workhouse, and separate adequate provision for cases of phthisis has been made, it appears to me undesirable to incur expense in the erection of a fresh hospital.

91. It is desirable, if it is at all possible, that the sanitary authority should have a direct interest in the administration of the phthisis wards of union hospitals.

92. The subject of hospital provision for consumptives is a difficult one. I am doubtful whether it would act favourably on the isolation of cases of consumption if those cases which are of the common lodging-house type were treated in the same hospital with the class which it is desired to reach.

They may, perhaps, best be treated in the union hospitals, along with others whom the Poor Law district medical officers may select, but in wards separate from cases of other disease.

93. The further public provision contemplated should be made, I think, by the sanitary authority, and may usefully take a proportion of those now entering the union hospitals.

The sphere or charity in dealing with phthisis.

94. Early cases entering hospital with a view to cure may usefully be dealt with by charities, if not provided for by sanitary authorities. But this is not intended to imply that cases are not, or should not be, cured in union hospitals.

SPECIFIC SUGGESTIONS.

95. In the following ways the Poor Law administration might be co-ordinated to that of the sanitary authority.

Proposals for co-ordinating the medical functions of Poor Law and sanitary authorities.

(a) District medical officers appointed after a certain date (say after January 1st, 1910) should be required to hold a Diploma in Public Health.

Many medical men now take such a diploma, who do not become medical officers of health. The course of training would provide a selected body of medical men for the Poor Law medical service, and one specially qualified to instruct in matters specially concerned with the prevention of disease and the conservation of health.

It may be considered advisable that such a requirement should apply, in the first instance, to urban populations of 30,000 or upwards.

(b) It would greatly benefit the public health service if district medical officers were at the same time district medical officers of health, precluded from private practice, and associated with the medical officer of health of an entire area.

(c) In any case whether (b) does or does not appear advisable the district medical officer might report to the sanitary authority through the medical officer of health for the entire area, insanitary houses, cases of gross overcrowding, neglect of children, and other conditions injurious to the public health.

In other ways also he might usefully co-operate with the medical officer of health.

(d) It appears desirable that lists of new cases of sickness, coming to the knowledge of the district medical officer in his official capacity, should be daily forwarded by him to the public health office, where a register of sickness would be kept. In this way early information would be obtained of outbreaks of influenza, epidemic pneumonia, or other unusual form of infectious or epidemic disease.

It would also be possible to study the incidence of different forms of disease, such as acute pneumonia. Light would be thrown on typical forms of fever, and obscurities in the propagation of infectious disease might, not very infrequently, be cleared up.

The diagnoses in these lists would be revised by the resident medical officers of the union hospitals.

(e) The law should be altered so as to make it possible for a medical officer of health to arrange for the immediate vaccination of the employees in a large concern, irrespective of the vaccination district in which they may reside.

It may appear advisable to transfer vaccination to the sanitary authority.

(f) It does not appear desirable that the sanitary authority should take up the work now carried on by charitable bodies. The pressure of maintenance would fall heavily on the class bordering on pauperism. The work now done might be crippled.

(g) Should the hospitals under Poor Law administration be transferred to the sanitary authority? For reasons already indicated I do not see my way clear to give an affirmative answer.

It is difficult to withdraw from the control of the guardians hospitals on their grounds.

If it is proposed to erect new hospitals, the expense entailed will be a grave barrier.

This is, of course, not an insuperable difficulty.

But other difficulties arise in connection with the classification of patients. Should a sick person admitted into hospital cease to be a pauper?

On this also I cannot give a clear affirmative.

When cases are removed, it very frequently happens that relief is given to the family. Such cases must, presumably, be paupers. Yet they cannot be put at a disadvantage as compared with a tramp who has no family. Beside these comes the householder, who is obliged to seek the aid of the union hospital, but whose family do not seek relief.

If a distinction can properly be made, it is desirable that it should be.

38381. (Chairman.) You are the Medical Officer of Health for Manchester?—I am.

38382. How many Poor Law unions come within your area as health officer?—Three.

38383. Which are the three?—The township of Manchester, the Chorlton, and the Prestwich Unions.

38384. Is your area co-terminous with the three?—No, it includes entirely the union of Manchester, but neither of the other two are entirely co-terminous with it; however, the greater part of the unions are in Manchester.

38385. Therefore you would have inside your area three sets of returns relating to vaccination?—Yes.

38386. You would have three sets of returns relating to the registration of births and deaths?—That is so.

38387. From an administrative point of view it would be much more convenient, I assume, if both those duties were transferred to one central authority?—So far as public administration is concerned, I do not see that it makes any difference. Of course we get our returns from the district registrars, and we are not sensible of any difficulty in that respect.

38388. How many registrars are there in each union? I suppose it depends upon the population?—I can tell you, I think, by referring. [The witness subsequently replied as follows:—There is in each union a superintendent and a deputy superintendent registrar. In addition the district registrars number:—In the Manchester Township, 3; in the Prestwich Union, 5; and in the Chorlton Union, 4.]

38389. Would you be in favour of transferring the vaccination work and the registration work to the health authority?—Yes. I think that would be an advantage, so far as vaccination is concerned, in one respect at all events, in that it very often happens that when small-pox is prevalent a case may occur in one of the employees of a large concern; under existing arrangements the re-vaccination of those who have been in contact with the case would, properly, be referred to the vaccination medical officer of a number of districts; a great many of the employees live outside Manchester, and, before the necessary communications are made and vaccination performed, an unnecessary delay occurs, and one cannot always be sure that the Inadvisability of the sanitary authority superseding medical charity.

Difficulty of transferring poor law hospitals to the sanitary authority.

Unions in medical officer of health's jurisdiction at Manchester.

Desirability of transferring vaccination work to sanitary authority.

Mr. J. Niven.
28 Jan. 1907.

Mr. J. Niven. vaccination is promptly performed. I think it is extremely desirable that it should be possible for the sanitary authority to secure at once the vaccination of the employees who have been in contact with a case of small-pox.

28 Jan. 1907. Wages of members of provident and friendly societies in Manchester. 38390. Turning to medical relief, the first part of your statement gives us figures and statistics with regard to the very large amount of gratuitous medical relief that is given in Manchester. I see later on, when dealing with friendly societies, you say that persons touched by them do not earn less than 30s. a week?—Yes, that is what I am informed.

38391. Would that apply to the medical provident institutions?—Yes, I was informed by the honorary secretary to that institution that that is also the case with regard to the provident dispensary.

Resort to private doctors by persons earning less than thirty shillings a week. 38392. Does it follow that medical relief for those below 30s. a week is as a rule gratuitous in Manchester?—No, not at all. I have made a special inquiry into a large number of individual cases with a view to see what actually does occur, and as a matter of fact I find that a large proportion of people earning far below that amount go to private practitioners. It is quite true that they have made no provision beforehand, but they pay either at the time or in instalments afterwards. It does not follow that they have recourse to gratuitous medical aid.

38393. You would say there is a very considerable number of such persons with wages of less than 30s. a week who do so pay for their medical relief?—Yes.

Extent to which patients contribute to cost of treatment by voluntary hospitals in Manchester. 38394. The hospitals in Manchester give their out-relief free, I understand?—No, I have given here the extent to which they do not give it free, where a special inquiry is made for a number of the hospitals into the circumstances of the people; and where, in the opinion of the inquiring officer, the people can pay, the hospital calls upon them to pay something, at all events, for the medical aid. The money which is so paid, actually paid by the patients, is given in Appendix (See Appendix No. VI. (A).)

38395. A very considerable portion of that payment is made by the out-patients?—I am not in a position to say

38396. According to this return the recoveries are from in-patients and out-patients?—Yes, in certain cases that is so. A considerable amount is paid by the out-patients

38397. May I assume that a very considerable proportion of persons receiving medical relief in the hospitals in Manchester do pay wholly or in part something of the cost of such relief?—Yes. The annual current expenditure on Manchester hospitals and institutions for the year 1905 is given at £102,910 (Appendix No. VI. (C).) so that more than 10 per cent. is defrayed by the patients themselves. Of course there are also contributions under the Hospital Saturday Fund that amount to a sum of £4,300, but that is not necessarily given by the patients themselves, although they do contribute also in part to that fund, but it is not a large amount.

District nurses in Manchester and extent of contributions by patients to their cost. 38398. There is a form of medical assistance which takes the shape of the maintenance of a number of nurses; those nurses, I understand, make domiciliary visits under the auspices of the Manchester and Salford Sick Poor and District Nursing Association?—That is so, there are sixty-four of those nurses.

38399. In Paragraph 20 you point out that the number of patients visited by the nurses was 10,000, and the visits paid to patients numbered 245,000. The institution received from poor patients £154 12s. 1d., and their expenses were £7,257. Is that £154 the only payments made by those visited by the nurses?—Yes, to the best of my information that is so.

38400. That medical assistance is practically gratuitous?—Practically.

38401. How many years have you been health officer?—Twelve years in Manchester.

Question of past increase in scope of medical officer of health's work. 38402. Have the functions of the department much increased during that time?—The amount of work which is done is very considerably greater, the scope of the department has considerably increased in certain directions; for example, there is a scheme for the voluntary notification of cases of phthisis which has entailed a good deal of work, and has led to the creation of a sub-office attached to the public health office. Then, more recently, the Midwives Act has placed additional duties upon the medical officer of health, and other work has come upon the medical officer of health by degrees; but I cannot say, with those exceptions, that the scope of the work of the medical officer of health has changed. It is a somewhat difficult question to answer; a good deal of work has been expended, for instance, upon the care of infants, upon the feeding of children, and upon visits from the Ladies' Public Health Society, under the direction of the medical officer of health; and other branches of the work have been similarly studied and expanded, but with those exceptions no fresh branches of work have been imposed upon the medical officer of health.

38403. Your organisation with regard to visitors is to a very large extent voluntary, is it not?—It is entirely voluntary. It is under the Manchester and Salford Ladies' Public Health Society, which is a voluntary organisation. It is true that the corporation pay part of the wages of the health visitors, it is true also that the work which they do is done for me, and under my direction so far as health work is concerned, but it remains a voluntary organisation. Health visitors at Manchester their payment an organisation under Ladies' Public Health Society.

38404. Have you any paid workers?—No.

38405. No paid visitors?—No paid health visitors.

38406. (Mrs. Webb.) The visitors are paid, are they not?—Yes, they are paid by the Ladies' Public Health Society in part, and also in part by the corporation.

38407. (Chairman.) The Ladies' Public Health Society employs lady workers?—They employ in Manchester sixteen health visitors who are partly paid by the Ladies' Public Health Society and partly by the Manchester Corporation.

38408. Are they under you?—They carry out my directions, but they are under the Ladies' Public Health Society.

38409. And the Ladies' Public Health Society I suppose supplies them with funds?—The money is paid through the Ladies' Public Health Society.

38410. (Sir Samuel Provis.) By the corporation?—The corporation pays the wages of nine out of the sixteen.

38411. Direct to them, not to the society?—To the Ladies' Public Health Society.

38412. They pay to the Society, they do not pay the particular visitors as officers?—No, they do not pay the visitors direct. [The witness subsequently replied as follows:—This was formerly the arrangement. The nine health visitors are now paid direct by the city treasurer.]

38413. (Chairman.) On what principle do they pay? What regulates the payment? Do they say: We will allow you so much for so many visitors?—Yes, that is what they do; they pay for nine of those visitors.

38414. Does the Ladies' Association incur a good deal of expenditure over and above what is provided by the corporation?—It is difficult for me to say precisely how much expenditure they do incur. The ladies of the society hold a number of meetings in their districts, mothers' meetings and that kind of thing, they also give assistance to poor people, but I really am unable to say what amount of expenditure is involved in that.

38415. I understand certain ladies map out Manchester, so to say, into districts, and in those districts one or more ladies hold mothers' and other meetings?—That is so.

38416. Then attached to each district I assume there is a paid visitor, is that so?—For each district there is a paid visitor, but they do not cover Manchester; they cover a population approximately of 160,000, it is only the central and poorer parts of Manchester which are covered by the operations of that society.

38417. There is a great deal of work which is done under the name of the health committee which is voluntary; and a good deal of the expense is supplied from voluntary funds?—Part of the expense is supplied from voluntary funds certainly.

38418. For instance, not only is advice given but food is given sometimes, is it not?—That is so.

38419. That food would not come out of the corporation funds?—No, that does not come out of the money granted by the corporation to the Ladies' Public Health Society; that goes purely and simply to pay nine of the health visitors. [The witness subsequently replied as follows: This answer is incorrect. Part of this money is raised by the society by the sale of soap supplied to them, at a much reduced rate, by the corporation.] Charitable donations of clothing for distribution are also given by the Lord Mayor to the Society.

38420. Is that out of public funds?—I am really not quite certain; it is the Lord Mayor's fund, but I am not quite certain upon that point; it does not amount to much. [The witness subsequently replied as follows:—This is not out of public funds.]

38421. You have under you, in addition to certain paid officials, a considerable voluntary organisation which is manned and officered by volunteers to a large extent, a considerable portion of whose expenditure comes out of voluntary funds?—A considerable portion, yes; seven out of sixteen.

38422. It is really, I suppose, a charity health promotion society?—Yes, they do a considerable amount of charitable work in a way. The amount of charitable assistance rendered would not, I think, be regarded as the main feature, although it is an important feature of their work.

38423. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think this health society was in existence for some time before the corporation had anything to do with it, was it not?—Yes.

38424. It is about thirty years old?—That is so.

38425. And the corporation really came in and subsidised its work?—Yes.

38426. (Chairman.) Has this society ramifications all over the area, or does it confine itself to certain portions of the area?—It is only in the central part of Manchester, the township of Manchester, and in the districts of Hulme, and Chorlton-on-Medlock. It is in the more central parts of Manchester only.

38427. We therefore have apparently four agencies at work in dealing with sickness or health: the charitable hospitals, the Poor Law, the corporation of Manchester, and the voluntary health association under them?—Yes.

38428. You think there might be a greater co-operation than at present exists between the Poor Law authority and the health authority in dealing with sickness?—Yes, I think so. I have stated changes which I should like to see.

38429. Those are in the concluding paragraphs of your statement?—Yes.

38430. Let us take perhaps the most difficult question which you have to deal with, phthisis. I see you state you think between the ages of fifteen and thirty-five more than one-third of all deaths are due to this cause?—Yes, it is a disease which attacks the heads of families to a very excessive degree; it is in my opinion a very great element in producing poverty.

38431. Does this calculation of one-third of the deaths between fifteen and thirty-five as being due to phthisis relate to the Manchester district, or to the whole of England?—It relates also to the whole of England.

38432. Of course in certain places where there are certain employments which are more detrimental to the health than others the mortality would vary?—No doubt that would be so.

38433. Is Lancashire now especially subject to phthisis?—Yes, the incidence of phthisis on Lancashire people is in excess of that on the people of the rest of the country.

38434. You attach importance to any one who is attacked by this disease seeking medical advice at the earliest possible opportunity?—I do. I think it is extremely important that they should do so.

38435. Do you think the fact that the medical relief is through the Poor Law and is associated with the Poor Law is at all a deterrent to the people?—Most decidedly.

38436. Do you apply that only to phthisis or generally to illness?—I am not in a position to speak of other illness; I have investigated a number of cases of phthisis ad hoc, and I am quite satisfied that there is great reluctance on the part of persons suffering from phthisis to enter the union hospitals.

38437. I suppose another deterrent is rather the fear of losing their employment?—I do not think so. I do not think that that is materially operative in Manchester; we have taken very great care to avoid any disability being inflicted upon phthisical patients; I think I may have met at the outside one or two cases in which that has come in. I do not think materially that enters into the consideration. Mr. J. Niven.

28 Jan. 1907.

38438. (Mr. Booth.) Do you mean the loss of employment without entering an institution?—What I mean is that the fear of infection being conveyed in the workshop does not produce loss of employment; I thought that was the question. Question of deterrence of poor law medical relief on sufferers from phthisis and effects thereof.

38439. (Chairman.) It was not quite that. What I meant was that the man who knew he was unfit would struggle on, retaining his employment, because he was afraid if he went to a doctor he might be forbidden to work?—No doubt that is so. I do not know that they would always pay much attention to the doctor forbidding it if they wished to work, but I think that the apprehension of being disabled does very materially operate, and the fact is that when phthisis assails the head of a family the family may fall into very poor circumstances; there is actual privation, and the man will not acknowledge to himself that he has been attacked by that disease until he is forced to do so. My point is that it really is, in my view, essential that more assistance should be given in such cases to the family, in a judicious manner, in order to remove this apprehension, and to induce people to come forward at an early period.

38440. (Mr. Booth.) It is not the question of pauperism, but they would have the same shrinking from any form of assistance which was not coupled with protection of their family?—Yes, that operates in any case.

38441. It is not a question of pauperism?—The question of pauperism operates in all diseases. I have in fact made a large number of inquiries irrespective of consumption, and have found that a large section of the people do look upon the idea of sickness relief with great aversion.

38442. (Chairman.) The purport of your evidence is that phthisis is so serious a national evil that you think a more determined effort ought to be made to fight it, even if it causes a certain increase of expenditure?—I do. It is to my mind very plain that this would be an economic expenditure. One of the great means of combating phthisis would be to raise the nutrition of the families in presence of the disease. The family falling into a state of poverty the rest of the family are exposed to infection just in that condition which lays them open to attack, and if we are to deal really effectually with the prevention of consumption I feel sure that it is necessary to improve the nutrition of the families in presence of the disease. Need of more extensive provision for the relief of consumptives and their families.

38443. That is a very difficult question, is it not?—Not to my mind; perhaps because I see the importance of it. It is the heads of families who are attacked, their lives are pecuniarily of great value, and the amount of loss which must be sustained by the subsequent attacks, which are the direct consequence, in my opinion, of the lowered state of nutrition, must also entail great pecuniary loss to the community. I hold that this would be an economic expenditure. I should like to say that owing to the inquiries which I have made since my statement was written, I think that the sum of £1, as I have put it for the sake of calculation, a week for assistance to a family in privation is considerably in excess of what would be absolutely necessary. I should put it more at a sum such as 5s.; at all events that would greatly relieve the situation. Cost of relieving families of consumptives

38444. You make the suggestion that charitable funds might be raised for this purpose?—Yes. Possibility of raising; further charitable funds for coping with phthisis.

38445. And that the guardians might in co-operation with the trustees make the necessary advances?—Yes, but at all events with us, I am afraid, that is not possible. I do not know what might be done by a direct appeal to the people themselves, but there has been so much given in Manchester in charitable objects and with special relation to this disease that I am afraid it will not be possible to raise a fund for that purpose.

38446. What you suggest would entail the maintenance of the patient who was suffering until he was more or less cured, and his family would probably also during that time have to be maintained out of the poor rate?—Of course a great many of them are working. Perhaps if I give you one or two actual cases you will understand my position better.

Mr. J. Niven. 38447. (Mrs. Webb.) Might we ask whether you desire this maintenance to the wife and children to be given with the stigma of pauperism, through the Poor Law or through the sanitary authority?—I do not, on reflection, see how it is possible to give it through the Poor Law; any money which was given through the Poor Law in that way would, I think, necessarily require to be given in the case of all other conditions, not merely in the case of phthisis, and I think that makes it practically impossible to do it through the Poor Law.

38448. You put it on the same plane as the money which was given for the plague or cholera?—I do. I think we must treat it as an infectious disease which it is desirable to prevent, and that this is a fundamental element in the prevention of the disease; and I would also put it on the ground of the economic character of the expenditure, because it would be to save the heads of families, to save adults and the heads of families; I think money would be more economically expended for that reason than if applied generally.

Cases showing extent of relief required for consumptive families and their families. 38449. (Chairman.) Perhaps you will give us one or two of those cases?—The first case here is that of a man, wife, and four children. Their income is 12s. a week, the woman goes washing occasionally and earns 2s. a day, one son gives 8s., and the daughter gives 4s. The rent is 6s. 4d. Here the aid required a week is rather large; it would be from 8s. to 10s. that would be necessary.

38450. (Mr. Booth.) Necessary for what?—Necessary in my opinion to enable the family to be properly nourished. In the next case the man, the head of the family, is attacked, he has a wife and three children, the wife chars and earns 7s. a week, one son gives 1s. per week, mother-in-law pays 2s., the total income is 10s. The rent is 3s. Here we calculate that 5s. would give the necessary help to the family to enable them to keep in a state of good nutrition.

38451. (Dr. Downes.) On what do you base that calculation?—In this case it is simply a rough calculation.

38452. Is it a calculation for food?—Yes, I think I may say that we do not take much else into account in making this estimate.

38453. I did not know whether you had a scale per head that you were working upon?—I have not worked it out to scale. This enquiry has been made quite recently. A calculation to scale takes some time. I have laid down a scale for that purpose in a paper which I shall be very glad to submit to the Commission. I have considered that, but I have not done that in this case, it is simply a rough estimate of what would enable us to bring the family up to a reasonable state of nutriment.

Minimum scale of relief for proper nutrition. 38454. Is your paper based upon a scale?—It is simply dealing with the question of what families can be maintained for, it is only a general consideration of the question of how families could be maintained, what would be necessary in food.

38455. I think your conclusions as to what would be necessary to maintain nutrition would be of value to the Commission?—You shall have that. (Subsequently sent. See Appendix No. VI. (G).)

38456. (Chairman.) You put phthisis as a special disease and one standing by itself?—Yes.

Voluntary notification of phthisis in Manchester. 38457. You suggest it should be treated as a notifiable infectious disease although the period of treatment might be much longer than would be necessary for most of the diseases which are notifiable?—We have in Manchester a system of voluntary notification and have had since 1899. I think it should be dealt with as a notifiable disease.

Distinction between relief of families of consumptives and families of persons suffering from other infectious disease. 38458. How would you draw the distinction; suppose a man gets a very severe attack of scarlet fever or typhoid fever, and he is a long time in hospital; his family are unable to support themselves and have to come to the Poor Law for assistance, what is the difference between the case of that family and the family of one who is suffering from phthisis? The phthisical family would get preferential treatment so to say, better treatment?—That operates for only a short time. People can always get assistance for a limited period. It may not be a very desirable thing to do, but they can get credit with grocers and with various tradespeople for articles which they pay off gradually, but that is scarcely applicable to a disease which goes on for a long period like phthisis.

38459. Coming to your general recommendations with regard to the medical relief of the poor, you say you are not in favour of transferring the hospitals and medical institutions under Poor Law administration to the sanitary authority?—I say I do not see my way clear to give an affirmative answer to the question. Should the hospitals be transferred to the sanitary authority? I do not necessarily give a negative answer, I really see difficulty in the way of such a transference in respect of the sick, that these hospitals are at present attached to the workhouse, and I do not see how they are to be severed from the general body of the workhouse.

38460. I will put it in another way, assuming you were starting de novo, and there was no administrative difficulty in the way, would you then be disposed to make the sanitary authority the medical authority, and put it in charge of the hospitals and institutions medically treating the poor?—Yes, I think I should. At all events I should separate the hospital administration entirely from the indoor relief of poor persons.

38461. On the ground, as I think you have already stated, that the fact of its being associated with the Poor Law is rather a deterrent to the people going for medical advice?—Yes.

38462. Is there much over-lapping in Manchester between the medical relief given by the charitable hospitals and the Poor Law infirmaries, do you think the same class go to both?—I think not. I do not think there is much over-lapping between those two, there may be a little, but I do not think there is much.

38463. Is there any complaint amongst the medical practitioners that their livelihood is undermined by the assistance given by the hospitals and the Poor Law infirmaries?—There may be, but I do not know, I am not in a position to give an answer. I really am not aware whether that is so or not.

38464. The various suggestions you make are not very great in themselves, but in the aggregate you think they would tend to secure better co-operation between the medical officers of the health authorities?—I attach great importance to them; perhaps they do not seem to be very great, but I think they would produce a very great change indeed.

38465. I assume that your relations personally with the medical officers are not unsatisfactory?—Not at all.

38466. And that there is a certain amount of co-operation now between you and them?—Yes, there is no lack of co-operation, in fact I do not know that I stand in any different relation with Poor Law medical officers from what I do with other medical men in the city; our relative positions are very much the same, except with regard to vaccination, and I must bear my testimony to the readiness with which assistance was given during the last outbreak of small-pox by the officers of the Poor Law. If I wish a change it is not on that account, but because I think that certain changes would be much to the benefit of the public health.

38467.—Let us take your suggestions: your first is that district medical officers after a certain date should be required to hold a Diploma in Public Health?—Yes. [*The witness subsequently replied as follows:—*But the word appointed should be inserted after district medical officers (see section 15 of my statement). I do not suggest that the present officers should be required to hold a diploma in Public Health, or that they should be otherwise interfered with. The suggestion is that, after a certain date, as vacancies occur, newly appointed officers should be required to hold a diploma in Public Health, and further that the newly appointed officers should be district medical officers of health.]

38468. Do you attach considerable importance to that?—I do, very great importance.

38469. Then your second suggestion is that the district medical officer should be precluded from private practice, that is to say he should give his whole time?—Yes, I think if that could be done, if we could have, as it were, a staff of district medical officers of health, a very great benefit would accrue to the public health from that.

38470. (Mrs. Webb.) They are to be the same people as the district medical officers?—They would be in a sense Poor Law district medical officers to attend poor people and say which people should go to public health.

Proposal to combine offices of district medical officer and district medical officer of health under supervision of the medical officer of health.

institutions, and they would also enquire into the sanitary condition of the districts, they would give advice to people about the management of children and about the choice of foods, perhaps they would look after the food of the district, and they would carry out inquiries referred to them by the medical officer of health, they would apprise him of any unusual ill-health in any part of their districts and would investigate the cause, and they would in fact carry out for limited districts the duties of medical officers of health.

38471. That is to say you would combine treatment with prevention?—Quite so. Then also I think there might be referees for the schools.

38472. (Chairman.) Could you do that if there were two separate services?—Not with so much advantage. Of course I think you can make almost any system work if you have the right material, I do not think it is absolutely incompatible that you should have such officers doing work for two different bodies, I do not think that is an impossibility, at the same time it would simplify the matter if they were placed in direct relation with the public health office.

38473. That is to say medical officers for the future would have distinct health functions to perform?—Certainly, that would in any case be so; that is my suggestion.

38474. To whom would they report on those matters?—To the central medical officer, the medical officer of health for the entire area. Of course the medical officer of health for the entire area is himself the officer of the sanitary authority.

38475. In fact you would rather try and alter the English system to make it more resemble the Irish system?—I am afraid I do not know the Irish system; I consider benefits of the first importance would accrue to the public health generally from such a step.

38476. You consider it of the utmost importance that there should be a greater co-operation and a greater interchange of duties and work between these two bodies than at present exists?—Yes.

38477.—You think that if the sanitary authority cannot be the head of the whole medical administration, the suggestions you make would to some degree tend towards securing efficient co-operation?—Yes.

Need of further co-operation between Poor Law and Sanitary Authorities.

38478. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to dealing with phthisis, do you consider that treatment of cases in the thorough way in which you suggest for both cure and prevention would lead to something approaching to stamping out this scourge?—It would very materially, I think, diminish the incidence of phthisis. I do not wish to exaggerate what it is possible to do; it is necessary to remember that there are always common lodging-houses, and places of that description, which will be sources of infection; but as regards private dwellings, as regards people living at home, I do think that the assistance which I think necessary, if given, would materially assist in diminishing the disease.

38479. So that the benefit would be culminative?—Quite so.

38480. (Bishop of Ross.) Do you propose that the badly nourished families should be looked after not only in cases where a member of the family is affected with phthisis, but also in other cases?—I do not. It is a very large proceeding, if sufficient benefit were to accrue. I think that in phthisis the benefit accruing from such a procedure would be very much greater than in other instances; I think, also, that it is very much more necessary in the case of phthisis than with regard to other diseases. I think it would be a very great pity to extend the scope of that proceeding beyond phthisis at present.

Increase of phthisis in Manchester and causes thereof.

38481. (Mr. Booth.) Would you say, on the other hand, that as things are existing, phthisis is increasing?—No; I should say, on the contrary, there has been a considerable diminution in Manchester.

38482. Has that been due to preventive treatment?—To the work under notification? Of course I hope so. I am inclined to think that to some extent, at all events, it is so. In the last two or three years, at a period when it might reasonably be ascribed, or, at any rate, when it might be due to the action taken under the notification of phthisis, there has been a marked drop in the death rate; but it is always difficult to judge of the causes in operation; there may be other causes which are producing that effect; but, at all events, the situation is a hopeful one, and I think that improvement might be accelerated.

Mr. J. Niven.
28 Jan. 1907.

38483. (Bishop of Ross.) You pointed out that the insufficient nutrition was, in your opinion, a cause that left the persons more liable to infection in the case of phthisis?—That is so.

38484. If there is phthisis in the family, and if neighbouring families are poorly nourished, is there not a danger of the disease spreading to those poorly nourished families?—I am afraid I do not quite take your question. You have a case of phthisis, do I understand, and neighbouring poorly nourished families?

The area of phthisis.

38485. Yes.?—But this disease does not spread in that wholesale manner. I am afraid it would be necessary to consider the mode of propagation of phthisis.

38486. I quite see that the members of the family are more liable to infection than the neighbours, but with regard to the neighbouring people with whom these people communicate, is there not a certain amount of danger to them?—I think the communication has to be pretty intimate before phthisis is given in that way. Of course, it is quite true that cases are communicated, that such an intimate intercommunication does take place between members of one family and members of another, but then I do not see how you are going to fix upon the almost, so to speak, fortuitous person who is going to be in intimate communication. It does not necessarily follow because you have four or five families immediately round a house with phthisis that there will be any propagation of the disease from the one house to the surrounding houses.

38487. In reference to the district officers, you suggested that they should be excluded from private practice, and should devote their whole time to the public service?—That is my suggestion.

Proposal for whole-time district medical officers with public health functions for urban districts and cost thereof.

38488. It would be necessary, therefore, that from public sources their entire salary should be paid?—That would be so.

38489. What would be the average salary of those district officers at present?—I am afraid I cannot tell you. Of course they have private practice.

38490. I know they have private practice; but I am thinking from public sources, what would it be?—I am afraid I cannot tell you, but I see there is a gentleman here who can give you that information.

38491. I presume the salaries under the new conditions would be multiplied by a pretty considerable figure?—You would have to give a reasonably good salary, of course.

38492. Probably three or four times what the present salary is?—Quite so. You could not give a man in that position less than £400 a year.

38493. And the present salary, probably, may not be more than £100?—Yes, but then it does not constitute the medical man's living.

38494. Would you propose that the district he serves should be increased, or that he should be paid the same salary for serving the district which he serves at present?—I think the districts should be conveniently arranged. I have not considered the matter very closely, but Manchester has 630,000 people; a population like that might have twenty-five such district officers.

38495. Would there be more difficulty, in your opinion, in dealing with the rural districts than with the large urban centres?—I do not put forward this suggestion as applicable to districts having a population below 30,000; it refers to an urban population.

38496. Only to a large population?—Only to urban populations.

38497. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the distinction between domiciliary medical treatment and institutional, there is no hard and fast line by which we could say that institutional is good and domiciliary relief is bad?—I do not think so.

Possibility of successful home treatment of phthisis.

38498. In the case of phthisis, for instance, it might be cheaper, more humane, and even more effective to Mr. J. Niven. sometimes treat it in the home ; would you go that far ?

 28 Jan. 1907. —It might be cheaper, more humane and quite as effective to treat the case at home. Of course, there is an advantage in removing cases of phthisis to a better atmosphere.

38499. Out of the fog ?—One has to consider that different towns differ in the quality, so to speak, of the atmosphere. I should like just to mention that it has been found, on making post mortem examinations of persons who have died of other diseases (and this observation has been made both abroad and in England) that a high percentage of those persons who have died of other complaints have been found to have, at a former period of their lives, suffered from consumption and to have recovered. Therefore, it is quite clear that it is possible to recover, even in the atmosphere of towns ; and although there is an advantage in a better atmosphere, still I do think that many cases might perfectly well be treated at home, and, as a matter of fact, there is a considerable number of the patients whom I think it would not be possible (or at least very difficult) to get removed from home. They will not leave home ; so that it does become an important consideration whether cure can be effected at home. In my opinion it can.

Possibility of a phthisis patient continuing his normal employment.

38500. Following that on, do you conceive that in any case it would be possible for a man to continue even in his employment, supposing you gave him medical advice and medical assistance. Would it be possible in any case for a man to either continue in his employment or go to a healthier employment and still be under your treatment ? Would it be possible, for instance, for a case of early phthisis to be a conductor of a tramcar, where he would be always in the open air, and yet be under your medical treatment in his home ?—And yet be under medical treatment ?

38501. Medical inspection ?—You mean under the new system ?

38502. Yes ?—Or, in fact, under the existing system ?

38503. Yes. Supposing you had medical assistance for phthisis without charge and without pauperism, do you think there would be any cases in which a man might be under treatment and yet remain in some sort of employment, and come to you for inspection and advice ?—As a matter of fact it is occurring every day very considerably ; of course they are not coming to us, that is the only part that would be omitted ; but they do go to their employment, and in at all events a certain proportion of the cases they improve under those conditions.

38504. If a man came early to you it is conceivable if you got hold of him very early he might not have to leave his employment if you could teach him to sleep with open windows, and that sort of thing ?—Yes ; but of course, if he came to us early we could determine what it was best for him to do. He could be watched and left at his employment or sent to a sanatorium as might appear best.

38505. It does not necessarily mean full maintenance, even for the man, if you get proper medical advice ?—Not at all. I think perhaps if I were just to erase names and put in a few of these cases to illustrate that it might be well.

Typical cases of phthisis needing relief.

38506. That would be very interesting ?—It is simply an addition to fulfil the family circumstances. (See Appendix No. VI. (G).)

Extent of probable gratuitous treatment of phthisis in Manchester.

38507. You do not mean to imply that all the cases you treated, if you had full powers and full encouragement, would come for maintenance on public funds ?—By no means. Might I just say that these cases, which are selected, number about 180 out of 1,400 notified. Those 1,400 notified cases came from the poorest portions of the City, so that you may say that the 180 cases selected represent almost the whole of the absolute privation in the families notified during the year.

The pros and cons of domiciliary and institutional treatment of infectious disease.

38508. One other question about domiciliary treatment. Does not the same indefiniteness as to which is advisable, domiciliary treatment or institutional treatment, begin to apply to some infectious diseases, too ? We may come to think that some infectious diseases can be treated in the home as well as in an institution ?—Of course a number of cases are treated at home, a varying number in different towns. Some towns treat a much higher proportion of their infectious cases in hospitals than others.

38509. That is to say, the sanitary authority ?—Yes ; for instance, in Brighton and Manchester the proportion treated in the public institutions has been very high, but it is a question, I think, whether it is not desirable to limit the cases admitted into hospital, at all events as far as scarlet fever is concerned, to cases which cannot be properly isolated at home.

38510. There are some medical reasons for that, are there not, there are return cases, and there is also the intensification of the infection ?—Yes, by the accumulation of cases in the hospital.

38511. So we are on very uncertain ground in all this Outdoor question between outdoor and indoor medical assistance. medical relief I mean we cannot say that outdoor is bad even for infectious diseases. I only want to get it clear, to find out whether it is so ?—I do not think you can dispense with outdoor relief.

38512. Quite apart from medical relief : medical advice and assistance, medical domiciliary treatment ?—May I just remind you of what I said a little while ago, that the circumstances of scarlet fever are so very different from those of phthisis that any expense entailed in getting private treatment does not extend over a very long period. I should be reluctant to place that more than was necessary on the public funds.

38513. I am not talking about that, but about the distinction between domiciliary and institutional treatment ?—I do not see how you can do without outdoor assistance at all.

38514. (Mr. Bentham.) In Paragraph 10 of your statement you refer to public dispensaries, and say : “These institutions are really provident, the charges being 2s. per adult for three weeks, 1s. for a child under thirteen for the same period when treated at home.” Is this really a charge, or is it a membership payment ?—I think it is membership to the best of my recollection. I do not wish to be positive about that answer.

38515. Persons who are not members cannot get treatment when sick, by paying on the terms that you mention, can they ?—These are the terms taken from the Provident Dispensary book. Do I understand you that you doubt the accuracy of the statement ?

38516. No ; I do not quite understand whether these people may fall on this provident institution and be treated at these charges during the time they are sick, and when they are well pay nothing. That is what I do not quite understand : whether they are simply members during sickness and not members paying a weekly contribution when they are well ?—As I understand it, these are the charges in sickness ; but I will take a note of your question, and correct my answer when I see the proof. (See answer to next question.)

38517. (Mr. Booth.) Sometimes there are two systems, a penny a week for those who subscribe regularly and a certain charge for those who come in when ill ?—I think these are the actual charges irrespective of any payment per week. I believe it is just as it stands, but I will look into that matter. These are not quite on the same basis as the general provident dispensaries. You see I have put them in a separate category. I did not excerpt these statements myself, and I am not prepared absolutely to say that there is no payment per week also, but I think not. I think it is just as it stands here, that there is no payment per week. [The witness subsequently replied that:—There is no payment per week additional to the above charges.]

38518. (Mr. Bentham.) In Paragraph 13 you say that the general hospitals refer their cases to the Charity Organisation Society for inquiry. Is there a wage limit below which the people may be eligible for medical treatment under the general hospitals ?—I do not think so. Do I understand you : Is there a wage limit beyond which they are not eligible ?

38519. Yes ?—I do not think so. I do not think there is any absolute wage limit.

38520. Is it possible people may be treated by the general hospitals whose income would warrant them in paying a general practitioner ?—That is possible, I believe ; but, of course, they would be expected to pay the hospital.

38521. If the result of the inquiry showed there was sufficient income, they would be expected to repay it to the hospital, would they ?—Yes, they would be expected to pay a certain sum to the hospital.

Distinction between outdoor and indoor medical assistance. medical relief I mean we cannot say that outdoor is bad even for infectious diseases. I only want to get it clear, to find out whether it is so ?—I do not think you can dispense with outdoor relief.

Extent of probable gratuitous treatment of phthisis in Manchester.

Class of persons treated by voluntary hospitals.

38522. Or would they be refused treatment?—I am really not in a position absolutely to answer that. If there is a wage limit it is not a very low wage limit. I do not think there is any absolute wage limit fixed. Might I enlarge upon that a little? A wage limit, of course, is a purely relative term, and has reference to the circumstances of the family. You may have a family which is earning £2 10s. a week which is poorer than another family earning £1 a week, and to fix an absolute wage limit, I think, would be a mistake. My impression is that there is no absolute wage limit fixed, and if there are any rules guiding the hospitals, or guiding their advisers, with regard to the circumstances of the people, which would enable them to discriminate between cases whom they would and cases whom they would not treat, those rules are not known to me; but I do not think it is possible to lay down hard and fast rules of that description.

Voluntary nursing association in Manchester. 38523. With regard to the nursing association, is it subsidised by the health authority?—Not that I am aware of.

38524. Or by the Poor Law authorities?—I think not.

Subscription by sanitary authority to phthisis sanatorium. 38525. You refer in Paragraph 39 to the payment by the corporation for beds in the Delamere Sanatorium. Is this payment per bed when in use, or is it a payment for twenty beds at £1 ls. per week whether used or not?—Whether used or not.

38526. That means rather a large amount, it means over £1,000 a year?—Yes, that is so.

38527. That is a contribution of over £1,000 a year made by the health authority, that is by the Manchester Corporation, to the sanatorium?—That is so.

38528. Are the beds kept fully occupied?—Pretty nearly.

Conditions under which sanitary authority send cases of phthisis sanatorium. 38529. Do you find cases come under your notice early enough to be sent, or have you to refuse many cases?—There are many cases that are not suitable for the sanatorium; but I ought to tell you that we lay down certain conditions for the admission of our patients which militate against cases being sent in by us very early. Of course the whole of the institution, you understand, is for early cases, and if I may read to you the conditions under which we send in cases you will understand, I think, how it is that our cases are not sent in at quite such an early stage as the rest of the cases from the city. These cases must have been notified to the medical officer of health under the scheme of the voluntary notification of phthisis. The patient must be in the early stage of the disease, but already infective, as shown by the presence of tubercular bacilli in the sputum. The physicians of the Consumption Hospital must be satisfied that the case is suitable for admission to the sanatorium in regard to the stage which the disease has reached; it must not be too advanced. The patient must come from a crowded house, or must in some way be decidedly dangerous to the householder. As a matter of fact, it is expected that the patient should come from an artisan dwelling fairly crowded, that is to say, we try to extract the utmost use we can in the way of prevention from the privilege.

Question of adequacy of existing sanatorium or phthisis. 38530. Even under those conditions, one would expect you would get quite a large number of applications?—No, I do not know that you would. These conditions are very limiting.

38531. Have you to refuse any case because you have not beds, or because they do not come up to these conditions?—I think it has happened that our beds have been full, but as a matter of fact I do not think any case of a suitable nature would be refused that we sent to them. [The witness subsequently replied as follows:—Many cases have not been recommended because they did not fulfil our conditions. It is our custom to examine all cases medically before recommending them to the sanatorium. But we do not ourselves—usually—reject on account of the stage of the disease. Many cases have been rejected, however, by the physicians of the Consumption Hospital, on that account.]

Question of moral effect of free public medical relief. 38532. In Paragraph 61, which is as to the conditions upon which people might be relieved, you say one of them is: "To improve the moral fibre of the people and put them in the way of improving their own physique, securing their own health, and ameliorating their own lot." If medical relief were granted as you say you would grant it, providing you were starting de novo, and all institutional relief of a medical kind would come under the health authority, do you think that would tend to strengthen the moral fibre?—I do not see why it should not. As a matter of fact, under existing conditions relief is practically given for nothing. The people make no return for the gratuitous relief which is given to them, and I consider that most people can pay something; if they cannot pay in money they can pay in care and trouble in carrying out instructions, in seeing to the cleanliness of the home, and in taking those measures of precaution which the public authority considers advisable, in looking to the welfare of the children, and in seeing that the children are properly clothed. I think a good deal might be got back from people which is not got at present under the existing system of relief.

38533. (Mrs. Webb.) You would say the active co-operation in his own cure, and giving up bad habits was some return?—Yes, but then I do not know how far it would be possible to induce people to give up their habits; you could insist upon certain things being carried out which would be, at any rate, a return to some extent for relief, and to some extent, I think, give self-respect to the people. They would feel that they were paying you back, in a certain way which was beneficial to the public, for the money you were giving them.

38534. (Mr. Bentham.) But repayment is made now for treatment in sickness under the Poor Law?—Yes, I propose repayment in a different manner where people cannot pay. I think it would be quite possible to obtain back, in manner beneficial to the people themselves and to their neighbours, a return for the public money expended upon them.

38535. By their improved condition of living?—Yes, that is my conviction.

38536. You think a more moral influence could be brought to bear upon the people by treating them in time of sickness in this way rather than under the Poor Law; is that your point?—I think I have not made any reflections upon the Poor Law system; I have not compared it. The only answer I think which I have made which seemed to reflect, I do not think it does really reflect, upon the Poor Law, was that the people themselves do not like going into the union hospitals, and that they do not like getting relief; indeed, there is even an excess of the idea of pauperisation altogether; there are people who do not like to get relief from general hospitals, who prefer to pay; they think they ought to pay their way; so that I do not see that in giving that answer I have in any way reflected upon the operation of the Poor Law. As a matter of fact, I believe that the people do consider that they are pauperised. I think there are two elements, if I might illustrate the case from the poor of Berlin in the account which the municipality give of their operations. They give a very large amount of relief to the very poorest through what they call Die Armen Pfleger, and these people inquire into all the circumstances, and then they give the relief; but in addition to that there is a very large number of what they call Die Verschämte Armen, who are relieved not publicly in that manner, but who receive relief from other sources, from foundations, and various other sources in that way. I only give that illustration to show that there is a feeling about so-called pauperisation. [The witness subsequently replied as follows:—The aversion which many poor people have to medical relief is chiefly owing to the fear of having to go into hospital. It does not arise from any dissatisfaction with the treatment received in the union Hospitals. Partly it is due to a feeling of independence, partly to the idea that they will be "pauperised" in the eyes of their neighbours, partly it is due to dislike of the associations entailed. Those who have been in hospital usually speak well of it.]

38537. If you remove that feeling of pauperisation, and take away all stigma or deterrent items from the Poor Law, it would rather encourage people to avail themselves of treatment, would it not? Is that your object?—No, I think there is a danger in that. I am quite free to admit that I should regard that as a great danger if that was likely to be the effect of any measures that were taken.

38538. If that were the effect, you would say it would weaken the moral fibre, would you?—Yes, I would, if that were the effect. But what was the condition? I

Mr. J. Niven.

28 Jan. 1907.

Mr. J. Niven. admit that I find it very difficult to arrive at a clear conclusion upon certain points, but under the existing circumstances, not only in this country, but probably in other countries, and under different administrations, in the case of respectable people who object to public relief, you have them starving at home, and you have, of course, others who are under greater privation who are driven to their last resources who would come to the Poor Law to receive relief, and many who are not driven to their last resource; what I feel is that the people who need assistance do not to a sufficient extent receive it, as is shown by these inquiries into phthisis. [The witness subsequently added the following explanation:—By starving was meant undergoing privation as is clear from the context.]

Inadequacy of existing facilities for medical relief.

Proposed League of Help in Manchester.

Need of increased facilities for relief of phthisis.

Proposed increase of powers to deal with families of consumptives

38539. You mean they do not apply for it as early as they might do?—They do not get the assistance; they remain in a state of partial, I do not know what is the word to use, perhaps "privation."

38540. You do not mean when they have already been relieved by the guardians, but people who refuse to make application to the guardians?—People who refuse.

38541. How would you meet those cases?—It is a very difficult thing. I may tell you at present in Manchester they are considering the establishment of a league of help, which is to consist of a very large number of people who are to make themselves responsible for a limited number of poor persons, to inquire into the circumstances, and to make that necessary distinction to find out who are people who ought properly to receive assistance and who do not seek it, and at the same time to make inquiries as to people who are receiving assistance and who do not deserve it. They do not propose the Elberfeld system; they do not propose that their members shall give assistance, but that they shall refer the persons in their opinion requiring assistance to the proper source. Of course there is always the remnant difficulty that if you do that work effectually you are to some extent breaking down the barrier of independence. It is a choice, of course, and undoubtedly the extension of relief to poor persons judiciously will require great discrimination and very careful working out. I quite see that that is so, but at the same time, looking, as I must do, because I do not know all the circumstances in other cases, to the circumstances of consumption, I am satisfied that with regard to that disease, at all events, more assistance may profitably be given.

38542. In Paragraph 78 you give a very interesting case which in my experience is very common, that is, where a parent may be removed to a sanatorium suffering from consumption or sent to a hospital for other treatment, where the remaining parent is probably a drinker and the children are not being brought up in the way which it is desired; the difficulty comes in intreating a family like that. Would you advocate power to remove the whole family; to take them out of the undesirable conditions under which they are living?—That is to say, after giving the case a trial, do you mean, because I suggest in the first place a trial may be given before you abandon all attempts to deal with the situation. That is all the suggestion I make in these paragraphs. I do not suggest continuing to give relief in such cases.

38543. You say: "There are, however, no means devisable by which the unfit and children of the unfit can be kept protected." There is both the family and the community to be considered, still there are no means at the present time of removing a seat of infection of this kind. Would you advocate additional power to remove in cases of this kind?—You mean to remove the whole family?

38544. Yes?—To put the mother under restraint and remove the family?

38545. To put the parent under proper care and remove the family in the interests of the family and in the interests of the community?—Yes, I think that should be done.

38546. (Miss Hill.) Are the working men of Manchester, through their friendly societies or in any other way, endeavouring to meet this question of phthisis?—They have taken no specific action, hitherto, to that effect. Of course it is right to say that the public provision for phthisis in Manchester is comparatively great.

38547. So that they have not been so much driven into making some arrangement as they have in other places?—Quite so.

38548. The pressure has not been so great?—That is so. But great as is the provision, it is not adequate. The provision in the Crumpsall Workhouse is 204 beds, in the Withington Union Hospital, 129; in Prestwich, twelve; in the Crossley Sanatorium about 100; in the Bowden Sanatorium, fifty; and there are thirty-two beds under my care. Then there is the Home of Peace for advanced cases maintained by Mr. Crossley, which has twenty-five beds more. Therefore, the provision is very considerable, in fact I should think undoubtedly there is more provision for consumptives with us than elsewhere, and yet it is not adequate.

38549. I think you would recognise that it is very important that whatever public provision is made, it should, as far as possible, not paralyse the efforts of independent people for taking this matter up. In other parts of England, the working people have had great meetings and made attempts in connection with this question, have they not?—The subject has been very much discussed as to whether friendly societies shall erect hospitals, but they do not seem as if they would readily do so.

The question of making further provision for phthisis by voluntary effort.

38550. They are very expensive things of course?—They are—very expensive. I should be only too delighted to see voluntary efforts of that kind made, but I do not think they would make the kind of provision which I think the public authority should make. The public authority needs to make provision for the more advanced cases which are infectious. The provision which those societies would make would be for the early curative cases. That is not the want which we feel; the want which we feel is of treatment, of help, and of some additional hospital accommodation, at all events for the more advanced cases. Other serious diseases are taken into the general hospitals, but this great amount of general hospital provision which is made for the Manchester poor people does not apply to phthisis. They do not take cases of phthisis into the general hospitals, so that these poor people have to go to the union hospitals. I have already said that a great many people do not wish to go to the union hospitals, but, at the same time, those hospitals are, I understand, full in the winter time.

Need of further provision by the sanitary authorities for phthisis cases and unlikelihood of adequate provision by charity.

38551. In reference to this additional help which you think might be rendered to the family at home in order to get greater nourishment, do you look to that being provided by charitable agencies?—No; I am afraid that the drain upon charity is so great already. May I mention that a very large sum of charitable money has been raised in Manchester in connection with consumption? I am afraid that it will require a direct appeal to the working classes themselves if any more is to be raised.

38552. Then you do not think it should come from the Poor Law?—I think not.

38553. You propose a third body for the administering of what is practically relief in the homes?—Yes. The sanitary authority does already, in a way, administer relief; they have hospitals.

38554. But it is not domiciliary relief?—In a way they have done that, because the sanitary authority pay doctors for attending those cases which were originally attended by midwives.

38555. Still there is a distinction between medical relief and the provision of food, is there not?—Yes, there is.

38556. They have no inquiry agents, have they, at present?—You see we want something back for this money. As I mentioned before, I do not wish it to be simply and absolutely gratuitous—I should like to put conditions upon it. For instance, if you have got a man at home whose presence is an impoverishing influence and who is not a suitable man to be treated at home, I should make it a condition of relief that he should go to the hospital during the time that the relief was afforded. Then, I should also make it a condition that the precautions considered necessary by the sanitary authority should be strictly carried out, and also that the other precautions which I mentioned, in the way of attending the children and keeping them in good order, should be carried out. If money comes through other channels than the sanitary authority it would not be so easy to get that carried out; nor would cases be reported so soon as they would be if they came through the channel of the sanitary authority.

The suggested public benefit from increased relief of consumptives and their families by the sanitary authority.

38557. At the same time all those things which you have enumerated are really for the benefit of the family themselves, so that you would not call it exactly a return, would you?—But it benefits other people also.

Large provision for phthisis cases in Manchester and yet inadequate.

38558. That is so with all things, is it not?—Yes, that is so; but if you cannot get the public benefited without that, it would be a good thing to get as much as you can for your money, I think. We wish to prevent consumption, and we consider that badly nourished persons in the presence of a consumptive are more liable to be attacked than properly nourished persons. We wish to bring those persons up to the standard level of nourishment so that they can resist disease, and we think we may as well do the other things at the same time and get all these benefits conferred upon the family.

38559. I see the motive, but at the same time it is bringing in a new relieving agency so far as food and money are concerned?—I think it would be best done through that channel, though I do not stand absolutely by that. It ought to be given in connection with the notification of phthisis, I think.

Treatment of phthisis and small-pox in the same hospital. 38560. (Dr. Downes.) In paragraph 38 you say you treat phthisical patients at the Clayton small-pox hospital; does that mean that you treat those two diseases simultaneously there?—As a matter of fact we do not do so—not in the same wards.

38561. Is it done within the same curtilage?—It is a pretty large area, and we have some cottages at the extreme limit of our hospital area.

38562. Do you vaccinate the phthisical patients?—We do.

38563. And that is how you are enabled to do it?—Quite so. I should not hesitate to treat the two within the same curtilage, and in fact, we have had odd cases of small-pox.

38564. With the protection of vaccination?—Certainly.

38565. You would not do it without, would you?—I should not do it without. As a matter of fact we started by requiring every visitor also to be re-vaccinated. Supposing an odd case of small-pox turns up, we require every visitor to the patients also to be re-vaccinated.

38566. In Appendix No. VI. (D), you give a statement of the expenditure of various institutions; are those institutions of the town council? For instance, there are the Monsall Hospital and the Clayton Hospital; those are infectious hospitals, I think?—Yes.

38567. Does the Delamere Sanatorium belong to the town council?—That means the twenty beds which we have allocated to us at a guinea a week.

38568. Then that is not your institution?—That is not our institution.

38569. Is the Withington Hospital?—That is a hospital which is not in actual use, but which was erected hurriedly in an outbreak of small-pox. You see the charge for that is trifling.

38570. Then the Baguley Sanatorium; what is that?—That is a fever hospital, which until lately was under the Withington District Council, but which has been transferred to the sanitary committee of Manchester.

38571. Is that an infectious hospital?—It is an infectious hospital.

38572. Then the Newall Green Hospital; is that an infectious hospital also?—That is a hospital which was erected also by the Withington District Council for the treatment of small-pox. That is a temporary wooden hospital.

38573. In paragraph 42 you speak of arrangements for paying the fees of medical practitioners under Rule E. 17 of the Central Midwives Board; out of what fund are the council able to pay those?—Out of the sanitary fund. It is by special permission of the Local Government Board. The Local Government Board were applied to, and gave a sanction to the payment of such fees in the case of poor persons.

38574. Has that sanction to be obtained every year?—No, not every year. There is a general sanction to pay these fees.

38575. Do you know on what authority it was sanctioned?—It was under the Public Health Act, 1875.

38576. (Sir Samuel Provis.) By Sec. 133, is it?—Yes, Mr. J. Niven. it is.

38577. (Dr. Downes.) That would be applicable to the whole country, would it not?—It could be made applicable to the whole country. Apparently it is necessary to apply to the Local Government Board for sanction; but that sanction is applicable, as you say.

38578. Has that arrangement worked satisfactorily?—Yes. All the applications for payment of the fee are sent in to the Central Midwives Supervising Committee, and each application is considered by itself, whether it comes under the rule and under the precise conditions under which they have determined to pay, and in fact, whether all the conditions are complied with.

38579. Do you consider that it meets a difficulty that has been found under that Act?—Of course it is very difficult to answer a question like that. The number of payments is not quite so great as one would have anticipated; but I should say, Yes, it is calculated to meet the difficulties. We have drawn up a scale which is probably a liberal one.

38580. I was going to ask you about that. How did you draw it up? Did you do so in consultation with the medical profession, or how?—We have a medical sub-committee of this supervising committee which sits upon questions of this kind, and this scale was drawn up in consultation by the medical sub-committee.

38581. Is your scale accepted by the medical profession generally in Manchester; they have not questioned it; have they?—They cannot.

38582. Have they expressed any dissatisfaction?—They have not expressed any dissatisfaction generally. There have been odd expressions of dissatisfaction, but there has been no general expression of dissatisfaction.

38583. I think you told us that you had made some Enquiry as to inquiry into the conditions of nutrition in Manchester, nutrition of and that you have a report on the subject?—I gave the poorer evidence on certain limited areas before the special Committee on Physical Deterioration and the facts are in the Report of that Committee so far as the inquiry is concerned. What I was alluding to was a lecture which I gave at the Victoria University, which deals with the abstract principles, that is, with the amounts on which a diet upon the Atwater scale can be given, with the general considerations on food and so on. That is what I was proposing to send you. The facts as regards the actual conditions of the population for limited areas are given in an appendix to the Report of the Committee on Physical Deterioration.

38584. Did you make any inquiries into the actual amount of food consumed by various classes in Manchester? Have you got any facts as to that which you can place before us?—No, I cannot say that I have. We took very limited areas; they were very poor areas, and the idea was to see how far portions of the population were under the limits of a living wage, or were not receiving money sufficient to support them in proper physical condition. You may remember that the Atwater scale gives a certain proportion according to age, '1 for a man, '8 for a woman, '8 for a boy of 14 to 16, and so on. I calculated out upon that scale, supposing the scale applied, how much money should be available for the head of the household.

38585. You took the Atwater scale as an assumption?—I took that ratio as an assumption, and then I calculated out how much would go to the head of the household. I also made out dietaries, showing the cheapest rate at which the amount of proteid, fat, and carbohydrates could be given with the different articles of food. That is in the lecture.

38586. You are aware that the Atwater scale has been criticised, are you not?—Yes, I am aware of that. I know that Chittenden has made a number of observations on the subject.

38587. Chittenden's view being that a reduction was possible?—That the amount of proteid was in excess of what is necessary. I am aware of that. I think, however, that such conclusions should be received with some caution until the experiments have been adequately repeated.

28 Jan. 1907.

Character of various hospitals in Manchester.

The payment by the sanitary authority of fees for doctors called in by midwives and scale of such fees

Mr. J. Niven.

28 Jan. 1907.

Comparison between nutrition of Lancashire
operatives and agricultural labourers.

38588. Do you think the Lancashire operatives as a class are badly nourished?—That the Lancashire operative is insufficiently fed, no; but a large proportion are badly nourished, because they do not know the best kinds of food to use, and their conditions of life render digestion not so good. It is very evident that, living under the conditions of life in Manchester, a man would not be able easily to digest the food which he would if he were living in the country, carrying on physical exercise and breathing freely in the open clear air, his senses stimulated agreeably by his surroundings, and his nervous system free from the strain of industrial occupations.

38589. May we take it that the Lancashire operatives as a class spend more on food than the agricultural labourers of this country as a rule do?—Yes, much more.

38590. Which do you consider the better nourished, the agricultural labourer or the Lancashire operative?—That is not a very easy question to answer. The Lancashire operative of course has a very different kind of work to do. Suppose you take a man who is attending to a mule. He has got to run about in a very active fashion, and he has got to use his fingers nimbly, and one has to consider the vital processes, the work of the brain, and how all that is to be sustained. It is not merely a question what a man looks like and how big he is. All that means active internal processes going on. A man may be well nourished for purposes of agriculture and yet he might be very insufficiently nourished and quite unfitted for the different work of the Lancashire operative. I think that is a thing which must also be taken into account. When one considers whether the Lancashire operative is well nourished, one I think has also to consider, not whether he is of the same physical stature, but whether the work itself is not selective of stature, whether, that is to say, a small man with a big head and quick processes is not the person who is required for working in those delicate manipulations, and whether he has not been in a few generations selected by a process of natural selection, as it were, for that particular work. A small man, that is to say, a man of small stature, is not necessarily the least valuable. I think there is a process of selection of smallness of stature, at all events in some occupations.

38591. What would you say about the families of your operatives? Would you consider that they get in Lancashire a fair amount of food as compared with the families of agricultural labourers?—Undoubtedly, on the average. I was only considering the case of the very poor, and a certain proportion of them are badly nourished.

More phthisis amongst Lancashire operatives than amongst agricultural labourers.

38592. The incidence of phthisis, that is of pulmonary tuberculosis, on Lancashire is on the average in excess of the incidence on agricultural communities, is it not?—Yes, that is so; but then of course the Lancashire operative is exposed to a great many conditions in Manchester which he is not exposed to in the country.

Need to improve nutrition of children in Manchester.

38593. That rather brings me to my point, how far the words "low state of nutrition" are to be taken as meaning an insufficiency of food or, to use your Lancashire word, clemming?—Might I point out that that remark about the various conditions does not apply to the children altogether?—There is a very large proportion of public-houses in Manchester, but the children one wishes to protect do not go to the public-houses. There is, in Manchester, a large number of rag-sorters, and of other people in inferior occupations, and the children of those people would not be exposed to all the unfavourable conditions which their parents undergo. So that the conditions might be otherwise produced, and yet it might be desirable to raise the nutrition of the children so as to avert infection from them and render them less liable to it.

Proportion of phthisis cases in Manchester suffering
privation.

38594. My point is how far you consider the Lancashire operatives or the Manchester operatives, if you like, suffer from want of food?—I think that question can only be answered by reference to particular cases that I have had investigated. That investigation has convinced me, that, if we assume there are 3,000 cases of phthisis in Manchester we may assume that in about 400 instances there is privation. That would be the amount which I would put it at.

38595. Did you arrive at the cause of the privation in those cases?—The chief cause is the presence of consumption in the head of the family, which has disabled him.

38596. Then it is a vicious circle, and the consumption has caused the want of food; is that so, or is it the want of food that has led to the consumption?—I quite admit that there are other forces which produce consumption in the head of the family. There is exposure to infection and the public-house. Then there is always the influence of the occupation. There are various causes of that description. Nevertheless, whatever be the way in which the head of the family contracted consumption, it is true all the same when he gets consumption that privation is introduced into the family in certain instances—not in all instances, but in some cases.

38597. Have you got any return of the deaths from starvation in Manchester?—No, and I have not heard of cases.

38598. Do you watch the inquests for such cases?—Deaths from I do not remember any deaths from starvation coming to my knowledge. starvation in Manchester 38599. May I take it that they are not numerous in Manchester then?—Yes, certainly.

38600. You do not remember any, you say?—I do not remember any.

38601. In Paragraph 95 (4) you speak of information as to new cases of sickness; do you ever make any use of the Poor Law medical relief registers as records of sickness?—No. I was not aware, I am sorry to say, that those were available.

38602. In London they are available to the medical officer of health?—I was aware that the Local Government Board had given instructions that any outbreak of disease coming under the notice of the Poor Law authorities should be brought to the notice of the sanitary authority, but I should have thought that that had rather fallen into disuse.

38603. The Dispensary Orders of the Local Government Board often contain a clause that the register shall be open to the inspection of the medical officer of health during the hours of 10 to 4. That has been in a number of Dispensary Orders, and I did not know whether it was so in Manchester?—I was not aware that such a source of inquiry was open, but I do not think that would quite meet what I want. I think it would be necessary that sickness should be definitely reported to the sanitary office. Of course you could send messengers, but it is really a question of having the records in the office and of being able to compare them.

38604. Would you have all new cases of sickness, or would you select certain diseases?—I think all sickness should be reported.

38605. Have you considered what payment should be made, if any?—No. If, as I propose, the district medical officer is to be a salaried officer, no payment would be requisite.

38606. Is it contingent on that arrangement?—No, not at all; but I have not considered what payment should be made if that arrangement were not arrived at.

38607. (Mr. Gardiner.) Have you any statement you would wish to make about the compulsory detention in, or removal of certain cases of sickness to workhouse infirmaries?—Do you mean infectious cases?

38608. No, contagious cases perhaps, but not infectious cases necessarily?—Assuming that the union hospitals are conducted as at present?

38609. In either case, but assume that they are conducted as at present if you like?—I think it is most desirable, in fact it is necessary almost, that those cases should not be in the general wards of the hospital.

38610. What about the compulsory removal in the case of sickness of any man, say of an aged person who is unable to take care of himself? Would you have him compulsorily removed to the union hospital?—We have quite left the other question.

38611. (Chairman.) There is a certain class of cases that you would like to keep until they are cured, of course?—Yes; quite away from the other patients.

Proposal that district
medical officers should notify cases of sickness to medical officer of health and
question of accessibility of Poor Law
medical relief registers.

Undesirability of treating contagious cases in general wards of hospitals.

38612. Then I think Mr. Gardiner had in mind the case of old people whom he would like to have removed if their surroundings were unhealthy?—Do you mean old sick people, or sick people of any sort?

38613. (Mr. Gardiner.) Old sick people say?—That seems to me entirely contingent upon the circumstances of the family. If they are well cared for at home I do not see why you should wish to remove them from their own homes, that is to say, if you are satisfied that they will be well attended to and cared for. But unless you are satisfied as to that, then surely I think it would be much better to remove them to a public institution.

38614. And the same considerations, of course, would apply to detention in a public institution?—Quite so.

38615. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Is there any public mortuary in Manchester?—Yes.

38616. Is there one in every district, do you know?—I do not know the exact number of the public mortuaries.

38617. Do the public use them?—Yes, they are used for inquests.

38618. I did not mean quite that, I meant did they use them during the period between death and funeral? So often deaths take place in crowded homes; is there any means for the removal of the bodies in such cases into the public mortuaries?—I do not think the public mortuaries are used very much for that purpose, except that supposing one learned of a body being kept too long in a house, one would order that into a public mortuary. The people themselves do not use the mortuaries voluntarily for that purpose.

38619. Do you think it would be desirable to do so in the very poor quarters?—Yes, I think it would be, if they could be induced to do so.

38620. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to the registration of births and deaths, do you think it makes much difference whether the town council were the registration authority or the guardians?—Really I have not considered the question, and I do not see that it matters very much. Mr. J. Niven

28 Jan. 1907

38621. I thought you suggested that the powers of the guardians with regard to registration should be transferred to the sanitary authority?—I think not. I believe I was asked a question on that subject, but I have not made any suggestion on the subject. What I answered, I think, was that we had found no practical inconvenience under the present system.

38622. Practically it makes no difference as to which is the registration authority, providing you get returns relating to the borough?—Precisely. I give that answer subject, of course, to a reservation as to the period in which the registration should occur.

38623. That is a different point, is it not?—With that reservation, I see no difference that would be introduced by transferring it to the sanitary authority.

38624. Then, taking your point about the district medical officers being assistant medical officers of health, do you attach importance to there being a medical officer of health for the district and to not making the district medical officers themselves medical officers of health for their own district?—Assuredly public business could not be transacted without that. There are many questions of plans of public utility, of statistics, of public schemes of various descriptions which a medical officer has to consider; in fact it will increase the work of the medical officer of health of the area to have these district medical offices established. Proposal for making district medical officers assistant officers of health under supervision of medical officer of health.

38625. Applying that in rural districts?—I do not wish to make that suggestion in reference to rural districts.

38626. Therefore the suggestion you make here is limited to large places?—Is limited to urban districts with a population of 30,000 and upwards.

Mr. WILLIAM NAYLOR BARLOW, M.R.C.S., called; and Examined.

38627. (Chairman.) You are medical officer of health for the County Borough of Bootle, I understand?—Yes 38628. What is the population of Bootle?—68,000.

38629. Is it a poor population, do you think?—Very largely; mainly a working class population.

38630. Are there many men employed in the docks?—There are a great many.

38631. I think you have made out a statement for us which we may take as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

The Extent of Medical Relief already given by Municipalities.

1. I do not propose to limit the term "medical relief" absolutely to the giving of advice and medicine by a medical man, but to include in it all the measures which have been taken by different municipalities with the idea of limiting infant mortality. In this wide sense medical relief is given by municipalities as follows:—

(a) The treatment of infectious fevers in corporation hospitals.

(b) The provision of shelters where poor families are taken while their homes are being disinfected after the occurrence of infectious disease therein. While in the shelter the individuals are fed, clothed, and if necessary, receive medical attention.

(c) The supply of sterilized milk.

(d) The giving, free of charge, of boat-shaped feeding bottles and teats in order to discourage the use of long tube bottles.

(e) The appointment of lady health visitors, who give what is really medical advice in some instances, e.g., when visiting such cases as itch, ringworm, whooping cough, measles, mumps, etc. I am not clear that this system of tendering medical relief by semi-qualified persons is the best possible, but, as things are at present, it is all that can be done.

(f) The provision of sanatoria for consumptives.

The amount of Overlapping in the giving of Medical Relief by different Institutions, Societies, and Authorities. Mr. W. N. Barlow, M.R.C.S.

2. No doubt there is a good deal of overlapping in the giving of medical relief. 28 Jan. 1907.

3. In the poorest districts of some towns visiting dispensaries have been established, that is, dispensaries in which doctors resident at the dispensary give advice there and also visit at the homes of the patients. At the same time there is a parish doctor in the neighbourhood, most of whose work is done by the dispensary doctors. Overlapping between various agencies for medical assistance of the poor.

4. Again, in districts in which are situated large general hospitals, with out-patient departments, the work in them overlaps with that of the parish doctor and renders the parish doctor in that district less necessary.

5. There is one class of disease for which, in my opinion, no adequate provision is made. I refer to the so-called ('minor infectious diseases,') such as measles and whooping cough, which cause so many infant deaths every year. It is mainly among the very poor that these diseases are so deadly, and that because of the inadequate attention they receive. These cases, of course, cannot be admitted to the general hospital because of their infectious nature, for the same reason they are not visited by the district nurses, they are not taken into the workhouse hospitals, and very few of them are seen by the parish doctor. In fact the majority of these cases are dependent upon such advice as the lady health visitors can give, and great advantages would accrue to the public health if these individuals could send medical assistance when needed to supplement their efforts. Inadequate provision for minor infectious infantile diseases and resultant evils.

6. I am strongly of opinion that this lack of medical attention not only causes many deaths of young children but tends to the degeneration of the race, e.g., neglected measles may result in blindness or deafness, and is a frequent forerunner of consumption.

Defects and Anomalies in the Existing System of giving Poor Law and Medical Relief.

7. The first glaring anomaly is that boards of guardians have control of the whole machinery of vaccination. The

Mr. W. N. Barlow,
M.R.C.S.

28 Jan. 1907.

Desirability of transferring vaccination work and registration of births and deaths to sanitary authority.

Inaccessibility of Poor Law medical relief indicated by large number of uncertified deaths.

Inaccessibility of Poor Law medical relief in midwifery cases.

Insufficient publicity of names and addresses of relieving officers and district medical officers.

Objections to district medical officers being "whole-timers."

object of vaccination of course is to prevent smallpox, an infectious disease. The prevention of infectious disease is the first duty of a medical officer of health. He already seeks out cases of small pox, traces and keeps under supervision the contacts, disinfects the houses and clothing, in short, he does everything in connection with the prevention of this infectious disease except the most important thing of all, namely, vaccinate.

8. The vaccination officer and the public vaccinator are both servants of the guardians. The health committee of a municipality has no control over either. The medical officer of health can send a list of smallpox contacts to be vaccinated by the public vaccinator, and the latter can please himself when he does the work. He may be a busy practitioner, and he may get the list at a very busy time. He may thus be unable to perform the whole of the necessary vaccinations for three or four days, with the result that smallpox spreads.

9. All the vaccination returns go to the Poor Law Authority, and the person to whom they are of most use, in fact, the only person to whom they are of any use, namely, the medical officer of health, never sees them.

10 The health committee of this corporation have on two occasions passed resolutions advocating the transfer of the vaccination machinery from the Poor Law Authority to the Municipal Authority, and the resolutions have been forwarded to the Local Government Board.

11. I am of opinion, too, that the registration of births and deaths ought to be similarly transferred, but as this question hardly comes within the scope of the enquiry I will offer no comments on it except to say that if vaccination is to be transferred the transfer of the births and deaths must almost of necessity follow.

12. With regard to the actual outdoor Poor Law medical relief work performed, I may say that, generally speaking, the parish doctor is never available for an emergency case. The parish doctor visits the case only on an order from the relieving officer. This last official has office hours, usually from 9 to 11 a.m., the rest of the day is spent in making various enquiries. A pauper, therefore, being taken suddenly ill at twelve o'clock may not be able to see the relieving officer before next morning, the necessary enquiries into his case will then not be made until perhaps the afternoon of that day, and the doctor may not see the patient until the day after that, that is, two, days after the beginning of the illness, when, perchance, the necessity for the doctor's visit has departed.

13. The large number of uncertified deaths, i.e., deaths of persons who have not been visited by a doctor, to my mind certainly tends to corroborate my view that Poor Law medical assistance for emergencies is too difficult to obtain, since in my experience the majority of these uncertified deaths occurs in the class of society which would be most likely to call for Poor Law medical relief.

14. Again, under the Midwives Act, 1901, midwives must send for medical aid under certain circumstances. Many of the cases attended by midwives are practically paupers, although technically they are not in that they are not in receipt of parish relief, and the medical man who ought to attend these is the parish doctor, but he is just the man who never does attend, although presumably he is paid for his medical attention on such poor people, and for the same reason as just given, viz., that for emergency cases (and all these are emergency cases), it is out of the question to obtain an order from the relieving officer in time. If the parish doctor did attend he would do so as a private practitioner, and if he succeeded in extracting any money out of the patient—an unlikely event—he would in reality have been paid twice for his work, viz., by the guardians in addition to the fee from the patient.

15. Another defect is, that the names and addresses of the relieving officers and the name of the doctors for particular districts of large towns are not sufficiently widely known, and very often the division of a district cuts through a street, for instance, No. 14 may be in one parish doctor's district, and No. 16 in another parish doctor's district. One can imagine much confusion arising from this, and perhaps a good deal of delay.

16. Again, in many instances the parish doctor appointed is a man in large practice sometimes holding other public appointments, and it is not in the nature of things that he would give his best efforts to parish patients under these conditions.

17. Another serious objection to the present system is that a great many people object to a visit from the parish doctor as a parish doctor, and often they will pay 6d. or 1s. (which they cannot afford), to another doctor, rather than go to him, or they will travel a long distance to the out-patient department of a hospital rather than go to the parish doctor. I do not know why this should be so, since they are both forms of free medical relief, but nevertheless it is so in my experience.

Suggested Reforms.

18. In my opinion the remedies lie in the abolition of the parish doctor and in the establishment of dispensaries on the same lines as those in Liverpool, with the exception that the money should be provided out of the rates.

19. The doctors appointed should be whole time officers.

20. Whether these dispensaries should be managed by the board of guardians or by a committee of the town council does not matter much from one point of view, since the money in each case comes out of the pockets of the ratepayers, as of course the cost of Poor Law medical relief does at present, but bearing in mind the objection above-mentioned as to seeking Poor Law, medical relief, the management might preferably be undertaken by the municipality, perhaps under the supervision of the medical officer of health.

21. The establishment of these municipal dispensaries will supply a need already felt, but which will be more acutely felt when there is a regular medical inspection of school children as proposed by the Education Bill now under discussion in Parliament. One of the results of this medical inspection will be the discovery of very many more of those cases of sickness which require medical relief and which at present obtain none. Those parents who cannot afford to pay for medical advice could be referred by the school attendance officer and lady health visitors to the municipal dispensary doctors.

22. One thing, however, is very necessary, namely, the channels by which medical relief is granted should be further more numerous than at present. In addition to the relief officer, I would suggest lady health visitors would be suitable persons to authorise visits from the doctor, and it is also of importance, since the need of medical advice is not confined to a few hours per day, that someone empowered to grant free medical relief should be always available, so that emergency cases could be dealt with.

23. These remedies apply to large towns only. I have no personal experience with the conditions prevailing in the country districts.

24. I may perhaps add that my remarks do not exclusively refer to the district in which I am at present located.

38632. (Chairman.) I see that your borough has passed resolutions in favour of the Vaccination Returns and the machinery of vaccination being placed under the municipal authorities; and also the registration of births and deaths?—Yes.

38633. In the first part of your statement you enumerate various methods of assistance of a certain medical character which is given by municipalities. Has the municipality of Bootle ever paid fees to doctors for any operations, such as attending women in childbirth or anything of that kind?—No, they have not.

38634. Has the work of the health department much increased in the last few years; have you taken on fresh duties?—The Midwives Act has thrown some fresh duties on us, and the work in connection with the public elementary schools—that is, the visitation of children suffering from diseases—has largely developed in the last few years.

38635. Is the medical inspection of the children done by you or one of your officers?—The medical inspection of the children is not systematically carried on at present in Bootle; but the school teachers are very much more ready now to send in to me notifications of sickness occurring amongst children attending their schools.

38636. You do not regularly inspect the children, then?—No, not at present. A medical officer has not yet been appointed for that purpose.

38637. You have a strong opinion as regards the minor infectious diseases, I see. As I understand at present there is a difficulty in dealing with those diseases because they will not be admitted into a general hospital and they are not taken, you say, to the workhouses, and still they are difficult to deal with in their own homes on account of their infectious nature?—That is so.

Deterrance of Poor Law medical relief.

Proposed abolition of district medical officer and substitution of municipal dispensaries

Utilisation of inspection of children under Education Acts as a means of detecting illness.

Need for further provision of medical relief, e.g. health visitors.

Desirability of transferring vaccination work and registration of births and deaths to sanitary authority.

Increased scope of medical officer of health's work.

Medical inspection of school children at notification by teachers sickness among children.

Inadequate provision for minor infectious infantile diseases and resultant evils.

38638. What would your suggestion be?—Would it be to bring them under the Infectious Diseases Notification Act?—No, I should still continue to treat them at their own homes. My point is not that they are difficult to deal with in their own homes, but that at present the majority of them are not medically treated at all. They depend largely upon the advice which is given to them by lady health visitors, which is of course not medical advice.

38639. What sort of machinery would you propose in order to deal more effectively with these cases?—I should like to see whole-time medical officers appointed who would attend to these cases, and act as district medical officers of health.

38640. As district medical officers of health, do you say?—As district medical officers who would give advice in hygiene.

38641. At present those officers if appointed would be under the Poor Law, I suppose?—Yes. I would propose to take the work from the parish doctor, and transfer it to the municipal doctor.

38642. At present, you are strongly of opinion that this class of illness does not receive adequate attention, and infantile mortality in consequence is increasing?—Quite so.

38643. Now as regards the Poor Law medical relief work, you have also a strong opinion that the machinery is not adapted to urgent cases?—I do not think it is, judging from my experience.

38644. Is that an opinion, do you know, which is rather generally held by health officers?—As far as I know, it is.

38645. It is not the fault either of the medical officer, or of the relieving officer, but it is due to the system which necessitates first an application to the relieving officer, and then the difficulty of finding out the medical officer?—That is so.

38646. Your suggestion, is, I think, that a health visitor might make the application for a doctor?—That is one suggestion. The only person now who is able to advise the parish doctor to attend these cases is the relieving officer. I think the number of people who could authorise the attendance of the parish doctor might be increased, that is, the channels by which free medical assistance can be given could be made more numerous.

38647. In the cases of confinements of women is there a difficulty in getting proper attendance in time?—Since the Midwives Act came into force, I have never received notification from a midwife that she has called in either of the two parish doctors in my district.

38648. Would she report to you?—Yes. Whenever she requires medical assistance, she is bound to report to me.

38649. What do you infer from that—that the medical officers have not been called in?—Medical men have been called in, but not the parish doctors.

38650. And you say that that is due to the machinery being rather cumbrous?—I should imagine so because a large number of these cases are cases which you would think would require the services of the parish doctor, for they were very poor people.

38651. What are your lady health visitors—are they volunteers?—No, they are in the employment of the corporation.

38652. How many have you?—Two.

38653. All your agency, therefore, is more or less salaried at present?—Quite so—all.

38654. Has any attempt been made to graft on to them a system of volunteers?—It has been suggested, but the volunteers have not come forward.

38655. I have no doubt that could be made to work efficiently, provided you got the proper class of volunteer?—I should very much like to have the assistance of volunteers.

38656. You speak of the advisability of establishing dispensaries on some such lines as those in Liverpool. What is the exact character of the dispensaries in Liverpool to which you refer; are they what you call the sixpenny dispensaries?—No. They are charitable institutions. There is a house in which the doctors live, and attached to the house is an out-patient department, and the doctors attend cases at their own homes.

38657. So out-patients are treated, and the doctors make domiciliary visits?—That is so.

38658. Is it gratuitous?—Absolutely.

38659. I see you would propose that these dispensaries should be under the health authority; would that not cause a duplication, and an overlapping of medical relief, because you would have the out-medical relief from the Poor Law?—The dispensary system would be in substitution for the present system of granting out-medical relief.

38660. Your proposal therefore is to take away medical relief?—To take away the parish doctor and substitute this system.

38661. What would you do as regards the infirmaries? Would you leave them under their present control?—Yes, I think so; I do not see that it would make any difference to them.

38662. Assuming that you had these dispensaries, how would you get an order for the infirmary—because a number of cases would come up, no doubt, to the dispensaries which would necessitate hospital treatment?—They could be recommended in exactly the same way that they are now; I mean that the doctor who is attending, although he is a municipal doctor, might recommend a patient to the general hospital.

38663. I was thinking of the Poor Law infirmary, and therefore that would be one authority recommending patients for an institution under another authority. If you take the out-medical relief from the Poor Law you would still have to deal with cases which necessitate hospital treatment?—I can hardly see that any real difficulty would arise even if it were so. Each individual case would be treated on its merits.

38664. You would want the Poor Law authority to recognise the medical officers of the dispensary as their own medical officers?—It would not follow. Could not also the Poor Law infirmaries be under the municipality and taken away from the Poor Law altogether?

38665. That is what I was coming to, but I thought you were not in favour of that?—I really have not thought of that aspect of the question.

38666. It has been suggested that the whole of the medical treatment should be separated from the Poor Law; but you, in your proposals, do not go so far, I understand, and it is only out-treatment to which you allude?—That is the part with which I have particular experience.

38667. Health officers differ as to whether a combination of work (that is to say, associating the medical treatment of individuals with their sanitary work, both being under the same branch or department) would be beneficial to them in the discharge of their duties, or whether it would be detrimental. What is your view?—You mean the association of prevention with cure? As a matter of fact, I think the municipalities now have taken up, to some extent, the work of cure, too. They do it in regard to infectious disease, because fever hospitals, which are curative hospitals, are supported out of municipal rates; and they also do it in regard to infant mortality and diarrhoea.

38668. Looking at it as an abstract question it would seem that if the same authority knew of all the sickness or illness and the nature of it that prevailed in an area, it might be some clue to what were the insanitary or malarious conditions in that area?—Distinctly so. If the officer was the servant of the municipality he would get that information, and it would be reported to his chief officer.

38669. In your experience do you find that your duties as medical officer of health overlap the duties of medical officer under the Poor Law? Is there any friction between you, or do you secure harmonious co-operation?—I have very little to do with them. There is neither friction nor co-operation.

38670. Therefore, to use your own words, there must be a good deal of overlapping?—Strictly in connection with my work, there is not much overlapping. But there is a good deal of overlapping between the giving of medical relief by the general hospitals and by the Poor Law, I think.

Mr. W. N.
Barlow,
M.R.C.S.

28 Jan. 1907.

Mr. W. N.
Barlow,
M.R.C.S.

28 Jan. 1907.

Attitude of medical profession towards free medical relief.

Power of guardians to pay for medical relief given without order of the relieving officer, especially in midwifery
cases.

Failure of midwives to call in the district
medical officer and causes
thereof.

The payment of doctors called in by midwives.

Insufficient publicity of names and addresses of relieving officers and medical officers.

38671. Are complaints prevalent among the profession as to the amount of gratuitous relief which is given by general hospitals and the Poor Law?—I have heard complaints many times.

38672. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to the outdoor relief in medical cases of emergency, you are aware perhaps that the guardians can pay for a doctor who is called in, although there is no order of a relieving officer?—I do not know that they can.

38673. There is a provision in the statute to that effect?—They may be able to do it, but as a matter of practice I do not think they ever do.

38674. Yes, there are cases where they do?—I do not know of them.

38675. At any rate, it does not obtain in Bootle?—I do not think so.

38676. Take the midwifery cases, are you aware that there is a provision in the Act relating to those, that supposing it is a case of emergency, and the district medical officer is sent for without any order of the relieving officer, he may be paid a fee for attending by the guardians?—I did not know that. Under the Act the midwives are compelled to send to the medical officer of health a notice every time they send for medical assistance, and I have not received one notification from a midwife that she has sent for the parish medical officer.

38677. Has she dealt with the cases herself, without sending for the doctor at all?—No; she has sent for medical assistance, but she has never sent for the parish medical officer.

38678. (Mrs. Webb.) Who has paid for that medical assistance?—The friends of the patients; or the doctor has not been paid at all.

38679. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Then the case has not been one of destitution; is that so?—I do not think that necessarily follows.

38680. Do you mean that the people themselves paid the fee, or was it paid by some of their friends who were not liable to pay?—I do not know who has paid. The probability is that in a large number of cases the doctor has never been paid at all.

38681. Why did not the midwife send for the district medical officer?—I do not quite know why she did not. I presume she did not because it would take too long a time to get him.

38682. In all these cases has he lived at a distance from the house?—No.

38683. (Mrs. Webb.) Or did the people object to have Poor Law relief and so become paupers?—I cannot say that.

38684. It is a simple fact that you are putting before us?—It is simply the fact that every time a doctor is sent for to assist in these midwifery cases, notification comes to me. I have had perhaps some 200 notifications, and in not one single instance has the doctor who has been sent for been the Poor Law medical officer—for some reason or other for which I am not able to account.

38685. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You have had about 200 notifications, did you say?—Quite that number, and that is in about eighteen months.

38686. (Mr. Bentham.) There is no inference whatever to be drawn from that, then?—Except that a large number of the people are very poor people. This has occurred often in the poorest parts of the town.

38687. (Mrs. Webb.) Would it be possible to get any information as to whether those doctors have been paid or not?—I suppose it would by asking them, but there is no other way that I can see. I have been told by several doctors that they have not been paid in individual cases, and I know that they very often are not paid. Of course I have no official means of knowing whether they are paid or not.

38688. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Has it come within your knowledge that the district relieving officers are not known to the people?—Yes.

38689. How does that come out?—I had experience of that before I came to Bootle, when I was house-surgeon in a hospital. It is not generally known, and I found that the policemen did not know who the relieving officer for the district was.

38690. Was that a hospital in a large town that you are speaking of?—Yes, in Liverpool.

38691. Were the districts there badly divided? Did it happen that there was not a good dividing line between them?—Very often. I know of one authentic instance in which, as I have mentioned, No. 14 happened to be in one man's district and No. 16 in another man's district. Some delay arose in the treatment of a case. The wrong doctor happened to be sent for in that instance, and then they had all the trouble of going and getting the doctor for the right district.

38692. But the relieving officer would say, would he not, who was the doctor? If application were made to the relieving officer he could give an order, would he not, on the doctor stating his name?—Yes; but this was not done through the medium of the relieving officer. It was an emergency case in which the doctor was sent for.

38693. And they thought they were sending for their district medical officer, when in fact they were not doing so?—Yes, that is it.

38694. With regard to your suggestion that the vaccination business should be transferred from the guardians to the health authority, would you think that desirable unless the district was a large one?—Unless it was a large town, do you mean? Transfer of vaccination work to sanitary authority.

38695. Yes?—I can hardly give an answer to that question. I do not know the conditions that prevail apart from those of large towns.

38696. You are aware perhaps that the Commission on vaccination reported against it?—I am not aware of that.

38697. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Are there any provident dispensaries in Bootle?—None; but there is a general hospital with an out-patient department. The possibility of establishing provident dispensary in Bootle.

38698. Would it be possible, do you think, to start provident dispensaries there?—It is not a very large town, and it has not a very large number of rich people resident in it. A provident dispensary by voluntary contributions, I think, would not be a great success in Bootle.

38699. I did not mean one supported by rich people, I meant a really provident dispensary on a self-supporting basis?—I could hardly give you an opinion on that. The use of public mortuaries in Bootle.

38700. Is there a public mortuary in Bootle?—Yes.

38701. Do the people use it at all except for coroner's cases?—Yes. Sometimes a person dies and the friends are too poor to bury within a reasonable time, and I have had on more than one occasion to get a magistrate's order to remove the body from the house into the mortuary to await burial.

38702. But it would not be done just as a matter of convenience in a small house?—It is not done often as a matter of routine. In exceptional instances it happens.

38703. Do you think it would be a good thing to encourage in crowded districts?—I think the people themselves would object.

38704. (Dr. Downes.) Why do you consider that a pauper cannot see the relieving officer except in his office hours, which you say are usually from 9 to 11 a.m.?—I do not know that he cannot see him at other times, but as a matter of practical experience he does not see him at any other time. Inaccessibility of relieving officer and medical relief.

38705. Are you speaking of any other place but Bootle when you say that?—I think it is very general all over the country. The relieving officer has his office hours between which he is supposed to be in and between which I suppose he is always in; but the remainder of the day he has other work to do, and he may not be in.

38706. You say in Paragraph 12 of your statement. "A pauper, therefore, being taken suddenly ill at 12 o'clock cannot see the relieving officer before next morning, the necessary inquiries into his case will not be made until perhaps the afternoon of that day, and the doctor may not see the patient until the day after that." Do you mean to suggest that that is a regular and common occurrence?—It is fairly common.

38707. Is it your own experience?—I ought perhaps to have said, "May not see the relieving officer," not "cannot see."

- inaccessibility of the relieving officer and of medical relief.
38708. Could you give us any instances where that has occurred within your own knowledge?—Yes, I have heard of that occurring.
38709. Could you give us the case?—No, I cannot.
38710. Or in what union it has occurred?—I cannot give you a case of my own knowledge, but I have been told of cases of that kind.
38711. I think if you say such things do happen we ought to know where they happen?—It is quite possible that they may happen without anyone being at fault, and they do frequently happen. The relieving officer is only bound to be in his office between the hours of 9 and 11, and I suppose the remainder of the day he is away making enquiries, and then when his hours are finished, he may not go near his home.
38712. May I suggest that there is no limitation in the orders of his duty to give relief such as you infer? Have you studied the orders which regulate the duties of the relieving officer?—No.
38713. (Mr. Bentham.) Do I understand that you suggest that your health-visitors might be empowered to call upon a Poor Law doctor without the relieving officer's orders?—Yes.
38714. And that that would meet a want which you have felt to exist?—Yes.
38715. It is probably within your knowledge that they may call in a Poor Law medical officer without a relieving officer's order in case of emergency, and that an order could be obtained from the relieving officer afterwards?—Yes, I believe that is a fact.
38716. But do you think it is not generally known?—I do not think it is.
38717. If it were more widely known would not that meet the case?—Yes, to some extent I think it would, together with increasing the number of people who can authorise free medical relief, which I think is rather an important thing. In my town there is only one relieving officer, and the people would have to go from one end of the town perhaps to the other, or as a matter of fact to the middle of it, to see the relieving officer.
38718. Is that so in Bootle, that you have only one relieving officer for the whole of the town?—Yes.
38719. In that case the medical officer could be called in and the relieving officer seen afterwards, could he not?—Yes, he could be.
38720. It is within your knowledge, probably, that any person can make application to a relieving officer for a medical order for any poor person?—Yes.
38721. It is not necessary that a relative or the persons themselves should make a personal application, is it?—No; but I presume some person interested in the patient would make the application.
38722. When it is known that people are ill, and usually someone does know it, they could make application to the Poor Law on behalf of these people?—Quite so.
38723. That would be quite as easy a process as making application to the medical officer of health for medical assistance, would it not—the one would be as difficult to obtain as the other, or the one would be as easy to obtain as the other?—Yes, that is so; but the sanitary officials, you see, go to all parts of the town every day, and they find out cases which need medical assistance, or requests can be made to them with less trouble.
38724. I was coming to that. You think they find out cases themselves. There are two health-visitors for the whole of your township; do they go from house to house, or how do they find out when people want them?—They go from house to house, and they also get into a large number of houses through cases of illness being notified from the schools.
38725. When cases of illness are notified from the schools, are they notified to you, the medical officer of health?—Yes.
38726. Are all cases of illness occurring in schools notified to you?—Not all cases, but all cases of infectious illness are.
38727. Then your statement that your health-visitors get to know the people that require medical assistance applies only to infectious cases, is that not so?—No,
- because when they get into the house they find out other cases. Their inquiry only refers, in the first place, to the children, but when they go to a house to attend to the child, they also find, in some cases, adults who are ill. They get information in that way.
38728. (Mrs. Webb.) I gather that you think the dispensaries are more valuable which provide domiciliary visits?—I do.
38729. Would you say that was their main value—the visiting at the homes rather than the bottle of medicine?—I do not think the bottle of medicine is of very much account.
38730. Would you regard the domiciliary visits of the attached doctors as most important?—Yes, I would most decidedly.
38731. With regard to this health-visiting, you would not suggest that two health-visitors are sufficient for Bootle, would you? You could do with more, could you not?—I could find a good deal of work for many more.
38732. What is your population?—68,000.
38733. Supposing you wanted to have a complete medical inspection, in the same way that you have a school attendance inspection, taking the practical limit of all houses under £40 a year, which, I believe, is the school attendance limit in London at any rate—I do not know what it is with you—supposing you wanted to have an equally efficient inspection from a medical point of view that you have from an educational point of view, how many health-visitors do you think, roughly speaking, would you require for your 68,000 people? Do you know how many school attendance officers you have got—you do not, I suppose?—I am not quite sure, but I think there are only four.
38734. Do you think you could get a house-to-house inspection in order to discover preventable disease by having four, or six or a dozen health-visitors—what would you put it at?—I should think you would want at least a dozen.
38735. Then do you think that with a dozen health-visitors you could get a really systematic inspection from the point of view of the existence of disease?—Yes, I think you could.
38736. Do you consider that that would be largely conducive to the prevention of disease?—I certainly do.
38737. In what way—in finding out the insanitary conditions?—Not so much in the way of prevention as in the way of limiting the spread of certain diseases, decidedly and in finding out insanitary conditions.
38738. Would you put down the curing of bad habits, and the teaching of mothers to feed children properly, and that sort of thing?—Yes, but I do not know that they would do very much in correcting the bad habits of the male portion.
38739. You think that would beat them?—Yes. They might do something with regard to the women and children of course.
38740. That is with regard to the rearing of children?—Yes, decidedly.
38741. If you had that system with twelve health-visitors, and if you gave them permission to call in a medical officer, do you think that in that way you could reduce the sickness-rate and the death-rate very considerably?—I am certain you could. That just touches the difficulty. The advice which the lady sanitary inspector gives is not medical advice, and the one thing necessary is that they should be able to call in the services of a doctor.
38742. If you had that, do you think you could find incipient disease and so be able to prevent both its spreading and its destruction of the individual?—Quite so.
38743. (Mr. Bentham.) Do you advocate that house-to-house visitation by health-visitors in order to ascertain if people are in need of assistance?—The primary object is not to ascertain whether they are in need of assistance.
38744. Whether they are any danger to the public health, or any other reason?—Yes.
38745. (Mrs Webb.) Would you object to a house-to-house visitation, or do you advocate a house-to-house visitation—supposing money was of no account?—

Mr. W. N.
Barlow.
M.R.C.S.

28 Jan. 1907.

Importance of visits to homes by medical officers of voluntary dispensaries.

The proper proportion of health visitors to population.

Need of further facilities for medical relief and question of power to call in district medical officer without order of relieving officer.

Advantages of making sanitary authority the medium for medical relief.

Functions of health visitors as to detection of illness.

Mr. W. N. Barlow, M.R.C.S. In certain districts there should be house-to-house visitation, and in other districts there should be special visitation from information which you receive.

28 Jan. 1907. 38746. Would you allow your health-visitor to act very much as your school attendance visitor acts now? The school attendance visitor does not go to every house, but he goes to the houses where he has reason to suppose there are children of educational age?—In some parts of a town it would be necessary to go to every house; in other parts of the town they should go according to information received, or by request.

38747. Would you advocate giving your health-visitor power to call in the district medical officer?—Yes.

38748. (Miss Hill.) She has the power, has she not, of calling in the Poor Law medical officer if she thinks it necessary?—No.

38749. (Mrs. Webb.) Except that that makes the man a pauper, and you do not wish to attach the taint of pauperism to him, do you?—I do not know that outdoor medical relief does entail pauperism.

Deterrence of medical relief. 38750. It entails chargeability, and you can recover it?—As a matter of fact I do not know why, but there is some objection amongst the people to having the parish doctor.

38751. If you had your system, would you wish that there should be no pauperism attached to it?—I should like them to have free medical relief.

38752. Without pauperism?—Without pauperism. I Proposed fr do not advocate that every person whatever should medical relief. have free medical relief, but those who desire it and cannot afford to pay for it, I think should have free medical relief.

38753. In your experience as a medical officer of health Sicknes, do you consider that a great amount of pauperism is phthisis, an caused by sickness of one sort and another?—Some is. accidents a causes of pauperism.

38754. Which illness do you attach most importance to from that point of view?—I think phthisis is the illness which causes most—and accidents.

38755. Accidents are already attended free, are they not?—Yes. Any sickness is the cause of poverty but more especially phthisis, because that is a sickness of long duration.

Mr. MEREDITH YOUNG, M.D., called in; and Examined.

Mr. M. Young, M.D. 38756. (Chairman.) You are medical officer of health for the County Borough of Stockport, and medical superintendent of the Corporation Hospitals, I believe?—Yes.

28 Jan. 1907. 38757. I think also that you have been medical officer of health for the Corporation of Crewe, the Corporation of Brighouse, the Rural District Council of Halifax, and other bodies?—Yes.

38758. I think you have prepared a statement for us which we can take as your evidence-in-chief?—Yes. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. Aids given by Borough to the Poor.

Medical assistance of the poor by the sanitary authority at Stockport. 1. My Corporation subscribe £25 annually to the infirmary funds, and as subscribers they receive a number of recommendations, most of which are distributed by me to cases discovered by myself or reported by my two female inspectors, as deserving. These recommendations ensure either home treatment or treatment in the infirmary, as the case may require.

2. All cases of dangerous infectious disease are treated in the fever hospital, of which I am medical superintendent, free of charge, at an annual cost to the rates of £2,500 on an average.

Cases in receipt of outdoor relief and those removed from the workhouse are charged for to the guardians, however, under a special agreement.

3. Disinfection is carried out free of charge in all necessary cases, whether the case be one of a scheduled or dangerous infectious disease or not. This is done, first because the people for whom it is done could not in most cases afford to do it properly, and also because the people for whom it is done would not be able to do it effectually, for want of technical knowledge and skill.

4. My inspectors, and especially the two females, report deserving cases to the Police Aided Clothing Association—a voluntary association which distributes clothing to suitable cases. The two female inspectors also serve on the committee of this association.

5. My health committee give prize money to schools, to encourage the teaching of proper feeding of infants to the elder girls: they also supply little books on this subject free of charge to all the scholars; many hundreds of children are thus taught every year. This system is, I believe, not in force in any other town in the kingdom.

6. As in all other large towns, we distribute disinfectants, etc., gratuitously to anyone who can give a satisfactory reason for requiring them.

7. In times of smallpox, if any person loses his work temporarily owing to disinfection, vaccination, etc., we grant compensation; this was done in scores of cases during two recent outbreaks of smallpox.

8. I have examined nearly 150 cases for the education committee and have picked out cases which they have sent to special institutions for the treatment of blind, deaf, and epileptic children, the education committee paying the whole or part of the cost of this. We are now testing the sight of all the school children in the town (about 17,000 in all) and when that is done the education committee will arrange a scheme by which the defects can be remedied by spectacles, etc., paying the cost of this in suitable cases. The same committee are now trying to find suitable premises for a special school for defective-minded children.

9. We supply free of charge diphtheria antitoxin for use by medical practitioners in treating cases of ascertained or suspected diphtheria, and also for preventive inoculation of those exposed to infection. The material and the instruments for injection are kept at the health office, the police station, and the hospital, so as to be obtainable readily either by day or by night.

Co-operation between Poor Law and Sanitary Authorities.

10. I think some co-operation between Poor Law and Need of co sanitary authorities would work to the advantage of operation between P both. What one wants to see effected is a cure of the social habit which has brought the man to the lowest stratum of society. That will never be done, in my opinion, by either body working on present lines. The relieving officer or medical officer goes and gives money, meat, milk, or medicine—he may throw in a little healthy advice as to habits or manner of life, but as likely as not he doesn't. If conditions are specially filthy or insanitary, he may send us word of it. It's not his special concern.

11. On the other hand, we, the sanitary authority, go; we give lots of advice and perhaps get landlords to do some repairs, but, after administering a moral tonic, we finish.

12. It is well known that advice, plus charity, is more likely to be taken and acted upon than bare advice, and I think, therefore, that in order to cure the social habit we must blend the two. And it could be done by increasing Proposal t the number of relieving officers, making it compulsory on make out- them to visit the homes and make careful inquiries relief before granting any relief and giving them power to with- conditions hold outdoor relief where the recipients were making no on a attempt to improve their bad social habits. certificate by the

13. If this be impossible, could not a system be initiated under which the distribution of outdoor relief should be authority made conditional on the sanitary authority certifying that the case was a proper one, i.e., that a fair and reasonable attempt was being made by the recipients to improve themselves?

Present Poor Relief System occasionally detrimental to the Public Health.

14. The present system of Poor Law relief at times Evils of reacts detrimentally on the public health. I have known insufficien infectious diseases to spread to others in the same family facilities and others in the same court or street, owing to the delay medical in obtaining medical attendance and suitable relief. This relief. has occurred in cases of measles, scarlet fever, diphtheria, smallpox, etc. What happens is that there is some delay vils of sufficient ilities r medical lif.

vils of aving two parate cal thorities ealing with e sick.

smallpox idemic and pecial asures ken by the itary thority to ccination.

voluntary spitals fer to eat cases rare seases.

stances of erlapping etween Poor aw and itary
thorities.

ttle erlapping etween Poor aw and luntary stitutions.
vantages sanitary thorities croaching work of or Law.

in getting medical attendance or relief in the shape of food, and the neighbours come in recklessly or ignorantly to give what help or advice they can.

15. Then comes the more important point—the prejudice to health, caused particularly during epidemic times, by Poor Law medical relief and sanitary protection being in different hands.

16. During two severe outbreaks of smallpox in recent years we have been unfortunate enough to have the disease worst in the frequenters of common lodging-houses and their companions. At first I worked on strict lines of administration—if it were a case in a lodging-house and the people couldn't afford a doctor they must go to a relieving officer and get an order for Poor Law doctor to come. This caused great delay and the sufferer would be lying during this delay in the lodging-house in a dangerously infectious condition amongst perhaps 100 others.

17. Then, again, to prevent the disease spreading it was necessary for all who had been in contact to be vaccinated at once. In most towns this is done, I believe, by notifying the public vaccinator that he might visit such a house.

18. But this again caused delay, and sometimes that delay would cost a life. So I soon threw strict administration to the winds, and I went into these common lodging houses night after night for several months, and examined every man, woman, and child; picked out the small-pox cases, and sent them to hospital in the middle of the night; I also vaccinated the inmates right and left, and paid a week's lodgings to those who would consent to be vaccinated. In this way the outbreaks were soon stamped out.

19. Had I left the Poor Law functions to themselves strictly and kept strictly to my own those outbreaks might have extended to the whole town, whereas I kept them to the lodging-houses and a few of the poorer classes of dwelling. Had the Poor Law medical officer been a man of small views he might justly have said I was depriving him of income by vaccinating gratuitously in these lodging-houses in the small hours of the morning instead of sending the people to him. But he knew as well as I did that if I had suggested that none of them would ever have come.

21. There is not, in my opinion, the same equal chance for everybody, even in the case of voluntarily supported infirmaries, for it is common knowledge that a case of rare disease or a specially interesting surgical case has more chance of being admitted to such an institution than one of a more common or less interesting character.

OVERLAPPING OF FUNCTIONS OF POOR LAW AND SANITARY AUTHORITIES.

22. There is at present the most hopeless overlapping in the work of Poor Law and sanitary authorities, or rather, to put it more fairly, sanitary authorities are encroaching on what should be the work of Poor Law authorities in many directions.

23. Instances of this are:—

Sterilised milk depôts.

Municipal crèches.

Municipal wash-houses and lodging-houses.

Supply of spectacles to school children.

Supply of diarrhoea mixture in summer and autumn.

Supply of diphtheria antitoxin.

Free isolation of cases of infectious disease, even (in Manchester) of puerperal fever.

Erection and maintenance of phthisis sanatoria.

Free vaccination and compensation in small-pox epidemics.

Payment of medical men under Midwives Act.

Contribution to infirmary funds.

24. To some extent also voluntarily supported infirmaries and dispensaries encroach on work of Poor Law authorities, but in my experience this is not to such an extent as to call for interference.

25. By doing work of this character sanitary authorities effect two most important objects:—

(a) They tide a person over a critical or expensive time and keep him out of the atmosphere of the Poor Law.

(b) They have a chance, which I think they never fail to work on, of educating and stimulating to better social habits.

26. The question, however, arises, would these systems be better amalgamated, seeing that they are working on the same lines? Mr. M. Young, M.D.

28 Jan. 1907.

27. I submit the following considerations in support of an amalgamation of the two services:—

28. There is at present considerable waste of energy and money. Two sets of officials visit the same houses, of one for one object the other for another; neither completely attains his object—the cure of the social bad habit—and neither has much hope of doing so under existing circumstances. Much of this waste of money and energy would be saved by amalgamation of Poor Law and sanitary authorities.

29. I have tried to show in the case of my smallpox experiences that an amalgamation would result in the disappearance of some, at all events, of the detriment to the health of the community, and probably also of the individual which at present exists.

30. In the case of phthisis a more complete co-ordination or amalgamation of the Poor Law and sanitary services would also result both in benefit to the community and to the individual. The sanitary authority hears of these cases usually at an early stage; the Poor Law only when the disease has begun to interfere with the earnings of the family. It may be safely said that cases of phthisis admitted to workhouse infirmaries or coming under the care of the Poor Law medical officer are almost all advanced cases where curative treatment is out of the question.

31. If the sanitary authority had power to deal with these cases when it heard of them (and it hears of them at a much earlier time than the Poor Law authority) many useful lives might be saved.

32. In the case of phthisis the Poor Law authorities at present deal with the grown plant, the sanitary authorities have the chance of dealing with the seed and the soil to a certain extent (at present limited owing to the want of compulsory notification). I submit it would be better if one authority had the opportunity of dealing with the whole thing.

33. Similar remarks apply to the mortality amongst infants. In Stockport, which is one of the towns having a very high infant mortality, every birth occurring in poor localities is visited by my female inspectors and advice is given as to feeding. This has been done for the past seven years. But I would be able to lessen this infant mortality very much more if I were able to obtain adequate food for mother or for child. The relief given by the Poor Law authority is in many cases utterly unsuitable and useless, because it is not in most cases medically directed, i.e., an order is given for a pint of milk daily or for so much oatmeal daily, and so on, quite irrespectively of the particular needs of the infant. Inadequate relief a cause of infant mortality at Stockport.

34. In the matter of births there is at present a great difficulty in obtaining early information of their registration—in fact, the Registrar-General has, I believe, instructed registrars that they are not to give information as to names and addresses in cases of births to the local authority. This considerably hampers our work of preventing infantile mortality. Were there a combined Poor Law and sanitary service I imagine that this difficulty would disappear. Difficulty in obtaining early information of their registration—sanitary authority obtaining particulars as to births and deaths.

35. In the matter of vaccination I am strongly of opinion that as a public health measure of the first importance its administration should be in the hands of sanitary authorities. Owing to my personal relations with the public vaccinators in Stockport, there always has been an entire absence of friction and only rarely any loss of time such as would endanger the public health. But there can be no doubt that the medical officer of health who watches the geographical distribution of smallpox throughout the country, who knows the probabilities of communication between his town and others, and therefore the chances of this disease invading the district under his charge, who knows after it has invaded the town where all the cases and all the contacts are, is the official who should have the say in the guarding of his district against attack. Need to transfer vaccination work to sanitary authority.

36. The medical officer of health at present has included in his duties all kinds of work, much of which might with advantage be transferred to what one might term an executive sanitary officer. He has, for example, very often to act as police surgeon, public analyst, adviser to Possibility and need of increasing scope of medical officer of health's functions and giving him a larger administrative area.

Mr. M. Young, M.D. has the supervision of the work of his sanitary inspectors' staff in matters of drainage, house to house inspection, offensive trades, bakehouses, lodging houses, slaughter houses, etc., etc. The purely medical work, for which he is specially trained, forms really a very small portion of his daily routine. If an executive sanitary officer were appointed to supervise and direct such work as that named the medical officer of health could without much difficulty administer a much larger area—an area, for example, such as a Poor Law union—in matters in which he has special training and in matters where there is at present overlapping in the two services.

28 Jan. 1907.
Possibility and need of increasing scope of medical officer of health's functions and giving him a larger administrative area.

37. The medical officer of health has gradually brought into the sphere of preventive medicine diseases such as phthisis, influenza, pneumonia, enteric fever, cerebro-spinal meningitis, rheumatic fever, and others which at one time were regarded as non-preventible, and he has done this by a kind of invasion of the domain of the general private practitioner. If he were given the right to invade the domain of the Poor Law medical officer, and the two officials and their institutions and administrative methods for the control and treatment of disease were co-ordinated, I venture to prophesy that other diseases would before long be found to be preventible, and means would be devised to prevent them.

Increase of medical officer of health's work.

38759. (Chairman.) In the first part of that statement you enumerate the aids given to the poor by the borough through the health department, and you also enumerate a number of duties. Has the work grown much of recent years at Stockport in connection with the Health Department?—It has; particularly the work connected with the Education Committee. They have done quite a lot of what one might call semi-charitable work amongst the scholars who have been found to be epileptic, or defective minded, or blind, or deaf, or dumb, or something of the kind.

Medical examination of school children by medical officer of health.

38760. I see you speak in paragraph 8 of having examined 150 cases; were those cases sent to you by the Education Committee, or did you examine the children en bloc?—It was a little bit of both. First I got a list from our Education Department of the cases which had been reported to them by the school teachers. Then I found when I went into the question that they had only had Returns from a few of the schools of the town, so after examining the children who had been specially sent to me I went through the whole of the other children in all the other schools.

38761. Right through all the schools of Stockport?—Yes, through the whole of the schools in the town.

38762. You must have examined a good many thousands and children then?—I did not examine the whole of the children in each school.

38763. But you selected some?—The teachers of course know them much better and can form a much better opinion at first sight, at any rate than a medical man can. They picked out and placed in a separate class room perhaps twenty or thirty children and told me a little bit about each child; then I examined the child particularly myself.

38764. Did you prescribe or did you suggest to the parents of the children where they should go for treatment, or were the only cases in which you gave advice those of the blind, deaf, and epileptic?—In the case of the defective-minded I recommended certain things to the Education Committee; for instance that they should form three special classes in different parts of the borough, with specially trained teachers to be put in charge of the defective-minded children. Then as regards the children who were found to be short-sighted, or to have defects of vision I could only come across a very small percentage of those, although I knew there were a great many more than I had found, so I recommended the Committee to carry out a thorough investigation into the eyesight of the whole of the children in the borough. That is almost complete now. It has been a very big piece of work involving the examination of about 17,000 to 18,000 children.

38765. So that really you have undertaken the duty, or it has been put upon you, of medically inspecting all the school children of Stockport?—Yes.

38766. Did the Education Committee pay for the cost of treating these children?—They pay in some cases the whole amount; in other cases if the parent is in a position to pay a small proportion of the sum the child has cost, they recover perhaps 1s. or 2s. per week—but that is only a very small proportion of the actual cost in fact.

38767. This work was not done, I suppose, before the control of education was transferred to the corporation?—No. Nothing at all was done in that direction I think till then.

38768. In Paragraph 7 you say, "In times of small-pox, if any person loses his work temporarily owing to disinfection, vaccination, etc., we grant compensation." You do not grant compensation to a man who gets small-pox, do you, for the time he is in hospital?—No.

Compensation paid by sanitary authority in connection with small-pox prevention.

38769. Do you give compensation while his house is being disinfected?—Yes, and also in the case of any inmates who have been in contact with him and who are re-vaccinated, we grant compensation if they should lose work owing to their arms being in such a state that they cannot work. Then if they have to stay away from their work for a day in order that they should be bathed and disinfected, and their homes disinfected, we grant them, roughly, a day's wages. If they lose their work for a week because their arm is bad after vaccination, we pay them a week's wages—there or thereabouts.

38770. Are there many applicants?—Yes, quite a number.

38771. (Mr. Gardiner.) What fund is that charged to?—I do not know whether it is charged to the general district fund, or to the borough fund.

38772. (Chairman.) But it comes out of public money?—Undoubtedly.

38773. (Mr. Gardiner.) You cannot tell me the particular fund?—I cannot tell you that.

38774. (Mrs. Webb.) The borough fund is not audited in quite the same way as the Poor Law accounts, is it?—As a matter of fact, I do not think any of the expenditure of the health committee has ever been audited by any body except the auditor to the corporation.

38775. (Mr. Gardiner.) Is he an amateur auditor or a professional auditor?—He is a professional auditor.

38776. (Sir Samuel Provis.) But he has no powers of disallowance or surcharge, has he?—I have never heard of his doing anything of the kind; but I may say on this point that the Local Government Board in a memorandum which they have issued to medical officers of health suggest that compensation should be granted to people on those lines who lose work by having to be vaccinated, or having their premises disinfected, during an outbreak of small-pox.

38777. (Chairman.) Is the sum that you have paid a considerable sum?—I am afraid I could not give you the exact figures without reference.

38778. I suppose the motive is to overcome the opposition of those who might object to all these precautions?—Precisely.

38779. Going to the second part of your paper, you seem to think that some effective co-operation might be established between the Poor Law and the sanitary authorities in dealing with the class of persons who may come on the Poor Law, but who have not yet arrived at that condition; and you seem to think that the sanitary authority is a more welcome authority than the relieving officers of the Poor Law?—That is my experience.

Sanitary authorities and their officials more popular than Poor Law officers.

38780. You say you give lots of advice?—Yes, as a rule.

38781. Is it well taken?—At first it may be received with a little caution and a little suspicion; but after one or two visits we find that people not only take it, but act well up to it. To give an extreme instance of it, I have known a case where one of my health visitors went to a house; they heard that she was coming, and when she eventually half forced the door open she found the whole of the family hidden under the bed, absolutely scared at the sight of her. But she talked tactfully to them and went again in a week or two's time and went again in a week or two after that, and now they are not only glad to see her but are almost friends with her, if one might so call it.

38782. I suppose the distinction between the visits of the two classes of officials would be this, that the relieving officer would not go until the family had applied for relief, and he would make investigations in consequence, but the other might go before they got into that condition and while they were rather drifting towards it?—I think my health visitors go to a great many cases in which they are in a state of absolute poverty—not only in the little substratum above actual poverty, but in actual poverty itself, I mean to say where they have not enough for food and drink.

38783. And are in receipt of Poor Law relief?—No, in many cases, not; but still struggling against it.

38784. (Mr. Bentham.) What can they do to relieve the distress when they come across cases of that kind?—They try to draw the relieving officer's attention to it or the Poor Law medical officer's attention to it.

38785. Do they do that as a matter of course?—Yes, it is one of their instructions that they should do it.

38786. (Chairman.) Are all your visitors paid officials?—Yes.

38787. And you have no volunteers?—I have only two visitors, and they are both paid by the corporation.

38788. You make a suggestion in your statement that the relieving officer should visit a house, and make careful inquiries before giving relief, and that he should also have power to withhold outdoor relief when the recipients were found to be making no effort to improve their bad habits; but I imagine that is the practice in most unions?—I am afraid it is not so in Stockport. I do not think the relieving officer cares twopence whether the people are living up to good habits or not.

38789. Would you suggest that the sanitary authority should at times be consulted as to whether the conditions of the house were such as to justify outdoor relief to the people living in it?—I think you have one way at least of overcoming the difficulty that I have stated—that one should do what one could to encourage people to raise themselves out of the stratum of poverty and bad habits into which they have fallen, and that if they make no attempt at all to help themselves then I should withdraw help from them, or at least outside help.

38790. Your idea is apparently that the machinery of the health officer might be considered as a sort of advance guard against pauperism?—Precisely.

38791. As regards the medical relief which is given under the Poor Law, do you think that the machinery is such that there is at times delay which tends to the spread of disease?—I do, and I am quite sure of that from my experience in two outbreaks of small-pox, which I mention in my statement.

38792. You give the details there, as you say. As a matter of fact, I suppose you have exceeded your duties really by doing a good deal of work which was outside the scope of your authority?—I did, I am sure, but if I had not done that I should have had a great many more cases of disease, and not only that, but it would have got out of the zone in which I managed to keep it, that is, out of the common lodging-house zone, and would have got into the better parts of the town.

38793. Are your relations friendly with the Poor Law officers?—Yes, most.

38794. Then the difficulties that occur are not the result of any bad feeling, but are the result of the difficulty of working the machinery which is in force in connection with the granting of relief?—Yes.

38795. How would you get over that difficulty? Would you suggest that the public health officer should have the power of sending for the Poor Law medical officer?—There certainly ought to be some easier way for people to get Poor Law medical relief when it is required by them. At present relieving officers, I am afraid, are apt to regard their instructions as having a cast-iron character. They attend at their office a certain time each day, and if people want them they must go there either personally, or they must send some near relative or some person who knows the circumstances of the case anyhow, and if that person is not there before a certain hour in the morning it means that the relieving officer has to be found in some part or another of the town, and nobody knows where to look for him. That, of course, means a good deal of delay. I have not actually come across this, but I should imagine that in cases of midwifery it would be a very serious matter.

38796. As regards overlapping, you show that two sets of officials may visit the same house, and according to your judgment there is an overlapping of two separate authorities. How do you get over that? Your evidence is critical, is it not, rather than constructive?—Yes, I am afraid it is. One way in which I think it might be overcome would be to make more whole-time Poor Law medical officers and to increase the staff of health visitors.

38797. How would you bring the two departments together? The problem presents considerable administrative difficulties, and various suggestions have been made, one being to transfer the medical relief from the Poor Law authorities to the health department?—That might be done, I think, up to a certain point, but when one gets beyond that point one comes across very serious difficulties. So far as the actual Poor Law medical relief is concerned, I do not see any great difficulty in bringing that under the cognisance of the health department and under the direction of the health department.

38798. That would be the outdoor relief?—Yes, and especially the outdoor medical relief.

38799. A previous witness, I think, suggested that there should be dispensaries?—I do not know that I should actually advocate dispensaries. The thing might be done pretty much in the same way as now, only the Poor Law medical officer might be under the health department, instead of under the guardians. He might also be made a more easily accessible officer.

38800. Coming to the question of Poor Law infirmaries, would you propose to take those under the health department, or would you leave them as they are under the Poor Law?—I am afraid I should feel inclined to stop, at any rate at first, at the outdoor relief.

38801. Have you ever discussed these questions at all with Poor Law relieving officers or officials?—I have discussed them with one Poor Law medical officer.

38802. Did he feel the inconvenience of the present system?—Yes. He quite agreed that there was considerable delay at times, and dangerous delay at times, medical in getting medical relief quickly. He also agreed on one most important point, namely, that the cases of phthisis which came under his observation, came under his observation at far too late a stage for him to do any good with them.

38803. You would wish, would you not, that the Health observation and visits of the health visitors should, so to say, form part and parcel of the system of Poor Law investigation?—I think so. They could act as scouts for the Poor Law medical officer, who, in turn, would be guided by the medical officer of health.

38804. In regard to phthisis cases, did you hear the evidence given by our previous witness?—Yes, I did.

38805. I suppose you would agree generally with him about such cases?—I think I agree with every word that he said on that point.

38806. If there were a sanatorium or any special institution established for them, would you separate them from the Poor Law, and keep them under the health department?—I am afraid I do not quite understand the point of the question.

38807. Assuming a special institution was set up to deal with phthisical cases, under what authority would you put it?—I think under the public health authority.

38808. Infant mortality, you say, is high in Stockport?—It is very high.

38809. You appear to think that if there were a greater exchange of opinions and of the results of investigations that might tend to lessen this mortality?—Yes. My health visitors report to me time after time cases in which a baby cannot be properly nourished, because the people have not sufficient means to buy proper nourishment for it, and so they apply for an order for food relief as I understand it. That food relief may take the shape of a pint of milk a day or a pound of oatmeal a week, or something like that, but it is not specially directed to the needs of the infant, although it may be useful to the family as a whole.

38810. Then you would contend that owing to the special work which the health authority undertake in

Mr. M. Young, M.D.
28 Jan. 1907.

Overlapping between Poor Law and sanitary authorities as to medical relief and possible remedies. Proposal to transfer outdoor medical relief to the sanitary authority.

Evils of tardiness of medical relief. Visitors and their proper functions in relation to the Poor Law.

The proper authority for establishing separate institutions for phthisis.

Inadequate relief to babies and its relation to infant mortality.

Mr. M. connection with infants and mothers, they know more Young, M. D. about the condition of individual children than the Poor 28 Jan. 1907. Law officials do?—I am quite sure they do—at any rate, in my town of Stockport.

Proposed transfer of vaccination and registration work to sanitary authority.
 38811. Vaccination and registration you would transfer to the health authority, would you not?—I think so, undoubtedly.

Transfer of Poor Law functions to sanitary authority would involve increase in medical officer of health's staff.
 38812. Perhaps it is going a little outside our immediate inquiry, but I see you suggest that there should be an executive sanitary officer associated with the medical officer of health. Would you just explain that a little? Is there certain executive work which has to be done by the medical officer of health, but which you think might be effectively performed by a less highly trained and less paid official?—Yes. The reason I mention that is that if some such scheme were adopted as the transfer of a number of the present Poor Law functions to the medical officer of health, one would have to eliminate something from his present duties in order to make room for those new duties. I suggest that some of these duties which he now does are duties which could be carried out by someone who had no medical training at all, but who is just a man with a good head on him and a little special knowledge about drainage, and special premises like bake-houses, slaughter-houses, common lodging-houses, and so forth.

Scope of medical officer of health's action and question of increase thereof.

38813. A sort of clerk of the works—a practical man of that kind?—Yes. A man of practical experience in general structural work of that kind. Medical officers of health frequently act as public analysts or as police surgeons, or as advisors to water-works and sewage committees, or something of that kind—things which they have no special training for except in the case of a police surgeon, and things which could be quite well done by someone less highly qualified and less specially trained.

38814. Summing up your evidence, in your last paragraph you state that you think the medical officer of health has reduced the spreading of a number of certain diseases by, to use your words, "a kind of invasion of the domain of the general private practitioner?"—Yes, I think so.

38815. Does the general private practitioner complain?—General private practitioners are always complaining more or less, but I think the complaint is made with a perfect recognition that if it is anything which is for the good of the public, it does not matter if it hurts the individual a little bit. I think they take it in a very generous spirit.

38816. I suppose you would say that you do interfere, to a certain extent, with the private practitioner, and that you have done a lot of work which it is beyond the power of the private practitioner to accomplish?—I think so; although I would not like to omit to say that a great many diseases have been, in the first instance, brought into the region of the medical officer of health by private practitioners. One has only to go to the case of vaccination in order to illustrate that.

38817. I did not mean that the medical skill was higher; I meant that with the authority behind you, you think you are able to deal with questions of sanitation and of health in a way which a private practitioner could not do?—Exactly.

38818. Then you go on to say that if the medical officer of health were given the right to invade the domain of the Poor Law medical officer, you think that too would be beneficial?—Yes.

38819. The invasion would take the form of what you have suggested, I suppose?—Yes.

38820. Because you think that that particular class of work had better be associated with the duties that you now perform?—Exactly.

38821. And that the combination would be effective both in the treatment of individual cases and as regards the health of the particular community?—More particularly in ascertaining the conditions which combine together to cause these different diseases.

38822. If you got an accurate record of the actual diseases you would be able to put your finger better upon the causes?—One would find the cause, and then would follow after that the prevention.

38823. (Bishop of Ross.) In Paragraph 5 of your Lectures to Statement you say that efforts have been made in Stock- school girls port to teach the school-girls domestic work, and par- on feeding of ticularly the feeding of children; how long has that been children and going on?—It has been going on for about six years. results thereof.

38824. Are you satisfied with the results?—I am perfectly satisfied.

38825. Do the children take kindly to this class of teaching?—They are most eager for it. They look forward to the lectures, or lessons they get, rather, with the greatest eagerness. I have personally been in the schools when the health-visitors have been giving these lessons, and I have watched the children to see what amount of attention they were paying, and have been quite struck with it.

38826. By whom are the lessons or lectures given?—A few model lessons are given by the health visitors first; then we have a booklet which is given to the teacher, and the teacher is told to get that up well and then to give as many lessons as possible out of that book. The children are given the book too, and they are allowed to keep it.

38827. Has this teaching, do you think, commenced to materialise yet, or perhaps it has hardly been given long enough?—Of course it is bound to take a long time to have its full effect, but I believe it has already had some effect. In a town like Stockport many mothers go to work at the mills and the oldest girl in the family is left to take care of the rest of the brood. If she does not know something about the sterilisation of milk and the preparation of the proper infant's food, and things like that, she does it of course in the way her next-door neighbour (who may be a very ignorant woman) will tell her. I believe it has already begun to bear fruit to some little extent in that direction. I may say that we teach about 700 to 800 children each year in that way.

38828. (Mrs. Webb.) What would be the cost of a Staff of really efficient system of health visitors for a house-to- health house visitation, where such was required? You have visitors got two visitors now?—One would only send such health necessary for visitors to a certain class of property, and that would Stockport materially limit the number to begin with. Working it and cost out on the basis of the present inspectors which I have, thereof.
 I should say that in a town of the size of Stockport, which has roughly a population of 100,000, about ten would be sufficient.

38829. What would you give them?—I think the general rate of pay is about 30s., rising to 35s. per week; that is, £78, to £100 per year.

38830. That is about £800 a year, then?—Yes.

38831. What would that represent—1d. in the £?—No; if it came to £800 a year, or even put it at £1,000 a year, that would come to less than 1d. in the £ on the rates of Stockport.

38832. So that for less than 1d. you could have a complete system of medical inspection?—Yes; a house-to-house visitation in the poorer localities.

38833. And the notification of all diseases?—Yes.

38834. Do you consider that that would materially diminish the death-rate?—I am quite sure it would in time.

38835. Would it be chiefly by the discovery of insani- Death-rate tary conditions or by the discovery of bad habits which, more affected through ignorance, led to illness?—It would probably by bad habit be through the discovery of bad habits, because I think than by those are quite as important, if not more important, in housing raising the sickness-rate and the death-rate than mere conditions.
 housing conditions or things of that kind.

38836. Do you think that you have got over the mere housing conditions now, more or less?—I do not know that they have such a big effect as a whole on the death-rate as bad social habits have.

38837. Do you feel hopeful that if you had these health-visitors in time you could radically alter those Probable habits?—I am perfectly certain of it if I got the right effect of sort of women. health visitors on bad habits of people.

38838. You only require tactful pressure and knowledge to alter those habits?—Yes.

38839. Then it would be equivalent to a sort of Education Act?—Yes, it would be special education.

38840. Do you consider that giving that sort of advice gratis would have any pauperising effect on the people?—I do not think it would any more than free education has.

38841. Do you think it would bring home to them the obligation to remain well?—That could be done, of course; that would be one of the main things.

38842. And they would pay for it, as Dr. Niven suggested, by co-operating in their cure?—Yes, that would be the valuable consideration which they would give.

Attitude of medical profession towards sick clubs, etc.

38843. With regard to the way in which it might interfere with the private practitioner, is that sort of practice as it at present exists a valuable asset to the medical profession as a whole?—I do not really think it is.

38844. What form does it take now? What happens now?—People of that kind generally get insured, as it were, in sick clubs of various sorts, and I may state this with the greatest positiveness that medical men would much rather be without any such form of contract practice than have it. They simply take clubs and contract appointments of that sort in order to keep somebody else out and from the fear that if somebody else once got to attend, say, the head of the family who is in the club, he might pick up one or two other cases in the same family or in the same neighbourhood.

38845. The doctors are very badly paid for that, are they not?—They are very poorly paid.

38846. And the result is that they cannot give very efficient attendance?—I am afraid not, although I do not know that a medical man even receiving only 4s. a year for attending a case would parcel out his medicine exactly to that sum.

Physical fitness caused by inadequacy of medical relief.

38847. Do you consider, taking it as a whole, that in Stockport the poor are now in danger of increased sickness and death through the lack of medical attendance?—That is a very big question to give a reply to. But it has to be borne in mind that there is a very large number of people going about now with what one might call crippled systems—women who have not received proper attention at child-birth and who are invalided and rendered less capable of work perhaps for the rest of their lives, to say nothing of being rendered less capable of bearing children; then there are heaps of men and children who are similarly crippled in some kind of way by want of proper medical attendance and proper remedies during convalescence; and they tend to grow into chronic invalids who have not anything specifically the matter with them, if you can understand me, but who are not normal individuals.

38848. And may become unemployable?—Probably they would drift into that.

Advantages of inspection of the people by health visitors, etc.

38849. Would you say that an additional advantage of dealing with sickness from the point of view of prevention would be that you would deal with those habits which you do not do at present? The ordinary medical man at present does not attempt to deal with the habits of the people, does he?—He does a little bit, but of course his main object is to make out what is the matter, and then get that cured as quickly as possible without inquiring too closely into what has caused the thing which is the matter.

38850. Supposing you had that systematic medical inspection, with free medical assistance when it was required, do you think it would help benefit societies to prevent malingering on the part of their members?—Yes, I think it would.

38851. It might even increase the benefits of these societies as regards sick maintenance—that is, it might make it more possible for them to give these benefits?—Yes. I know that when I was medical officer of health at Crewe, which is a place with a very large number of working men—I think the London and North Western Railway Company alone employ about 8,000 or 9,000 men and boys—the place was simply riddled through with sick clubs. There they found it paid them to put on one of their own members as a sort of detective to see that these people who were under medical treatment carried out the treatment, and did not go on with the bad habits which had resulted in the illness. They found it paid them to do that.

38852. Therefore it would pay them still more to have an independent testimony?—Exactly. Mr. M. Young, M.D.

38853. (Chairman.) You have stated that you are the medical superintendent of the corporation hospitals; are those infectious hospitals?—Yes. 23 Jan. 1907.

38854. Not general hospitals?—No. One is the fever hospital, and the other is the smallpox hospital.

38855. (Mr. Bentham.) Has anything been done at all with regard to the treatment of phthisis in your town?—Not as regards its actual treatment. Every case which is voluntarily notified to us is visited at once by the district inspector, and, as I say, advice is given and disinfectants are supplied gratuitously. Phthisis notified to, but not treated by, the sanitary authority at Stockport.

38856. Who is the district inspector?—The sanitary inspector for the district. We give disinfectants free of cost, and all that kind of thing, but nothing more.

38857. You have voluntary notification then?—Yes we have.

38858. Do you get cases of phthisis notified in their early stages?—Yes, I think we do now, although at first we did not. At first the cases which were notified were almost moribund, but now we are getting them at an early stage.

38859. But no steps are taken for treating them?—No, not as yet.

38860. If out-door medical relief were transferred to the health authority entirely, do you advocate its being free, or would you have a system of payment?—I personally have an objection to people being, as it were, made into paupers against their will. Putting it conversely, I would very much rather have it that people were encouraged to pay some little, however little it was towards their doctor's bill or their sick maintenance. Question of contributions by patients to cost of medical relief administered by the sanitary authority.

38861. Would you enforce payment?—I think I should leave it optional with the authority to make a full inquiry into the circumstances, and if they found that enforcing any payment at all would inflict a hardship, I would not enforce payment.

38862. I suppose that the health of the people and the effect that it might have on their neighbours would be your first consideration?—Yes, precisely.

38863. And it might occur in a house where they might have sufficient income to pay for a private practitioner?—Yes.

38864. Would you not refuse assistance there?—I do not see why the public rates should be used to take away part of a medical man's legitimate income.

38865. But if it is for the health of the community, that is the first consideration, is it not? A case of sickness in a house of that kind might be as dangerous there as it would be in a poorer house, and treatment, therefore, would naturally be involved as a duty, would it not?—Yes; but I am assuming that in the case in question the family would be perfectly able to take all precautions—that they would have enough money to do that, and enough money to pay the doctor, so that there would be no call for the local authority to interfere.

38866. That is, if they did it, but suppose they did not?—In the absence of any powers of persuasion, or in the absence of any definite legislation, I am afraid we should have to let it stop as it was; but I do not think that even a family of that kind would object to have the advice given, or to have the disinfectants given, or to have the disinfection carried out free of charge.

38867. People living in those conditions do not usually welcome advice?—I would not like to say that. That is rather against my experience.

38868. But you would not have a system of compulsory repayment for services which might be given?—No, I do not think so. I should leave that optional.

38869. (Mrs Bosanquet.) Have your health visitors the power of compulsory entrance into any house they like?—They are appointed sanitary inspectors under a special Act of ours. We have power to appoint as many sanitary inspectors as we like, and I always get any lady health visitor appointed inspector of nuisances under the Public Health Act, 1875. That gives her a limited power of entrance, but she cannot force her way in unless she has reasonable grounds for suspecting the existence of a nuisance. Powers of health visitors at Stockport.

Mr. M. Young, M.D. 38870. In that case she can?—In that case she can obtain a magistrate's order.

28 Jan. 1907. 38871. Does it occur to you that possibly there might be a good deal of petty tyranny involved in this inspection of people's habits; I mean one health visitor might think smoking a bad habit?—I do not think that should enter very largely into the question.

Question of abuse of health visitors' powers of inspection, etc. 38872. It is even possible that a man might understand his own health better than a doctor sometimes?—I am afraid I cannot argue the point on that basis.

38873. It has been suggested that these visitors should have the right to enter a house under, say, £40 rental; that would give an enormous field for petty tyranny, would it not?—Of course the £40 rental limit would not have to be applied to the provinces. It may apply to London, but a limit of £40 in the provinces would be altogether unworkable, because it would admit them into houses where advice and inquiry would certainly be resented.

Scope of health visitor's functions as to bad habits. 38874. Could you define at all the sort of habits you have in mind? Do you mean such things as their food and their drink or their cleanliness?—I mean such things as food, intemperance, uncleanness, the want of ventilation and things of that kind. It is difficult to think of many examples at once.

38875. Do you limit at all the subjects for which your health visitors are supposed to give advice, or to have a free hand?—They have a fairly free hand. They are both well-trained and tactful, and I have never heard yet, although they have been with me now for close upon seven years and have made several thousand inspections every year, that there has been any complaint that they were over-stepping the bounds of propriety.

38876. Would you appoint anyone who was a vegetarian?—I should not trouble one little bit about that.

38877. Would you allow her to give advice as to the habit of eating meat?—Yes. I would not hamper her in that way; if people chose to take her advice I do not think it would hurt them.

Medical out-relief to be conditional on pursuance of curative treatment by recipient. 38878. You have no powers of compulsion, I take it, upon people to whom this advice is given?—No, and I do not suppose one would ever get any powers of compulsion in things of that kind. The only thing that does cross my mind is that if the authority concerned were giving medical or other relief to a person, and found that this person was still going on in his bad habits and making no effort whatever to improve himself, but merely receiving his dole of charity each week, then I should say, stop the charity by all means; if he will not help himself, do not help him.

38879. (Mr. Bentham.) Would it not take a large staff to follow all the cases up like that?—I do not think so. I should imagine, to take the figure I have already given—I think in reply to a question put by Mrs. Sidney Webb—that if I had ten inspectors they could cover the ground and do it well.

Powers of sanitary authority as to infectious disease, compensation, etc., and attitude of Local Government Board in the matter. 38880. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Have you got special Local Acts in force in Stockport?—Yes, one or two.

38881. Do they give you any considerable powers with regard to sanitary matters?—Yes.

38882. Do they deal with any of the matters you were speaking of with regard to providing shelters and giving compensation to persons who lose their work on account of infectious disease?—The provision for making shelters in the case of infectious disease I think is contained in the Infectious Diseases Act.

38883. That is in force in Stockport, is it?—Yes. As regards the compensation given in the smallpox cases we are simply acting on the recommendation of the Local Government Board.

38884. I think that recommendation was only given, was it not, in connection with Section 15 of the Infectious Diseases Prevention Act?—I am afraid I do not recollect what Section 15 is.

38885. Section 15 provides that if persons have to leave their houses on account of their having to be disinfecting in connection with an infectious disease that has occurred there, compensation may be given to them?—I think the memorandum I refer to went further than that.

38886. Have you got a copy of it?—No, I have not. I am sorry to say, but I have a pretty distinct recollection of it. I do not know whether it bound the Local Government Board in any way further than this—that if such compensation were granted the Local Government Board would not raise any objection to the payment of it.

38887. But in the case of a borough they would have nothing to do with it?—No; but I think this was circulated not only to boroughs but to urban district councils and rural district councils as well.

38888. There is a Memorandum which is issued in times of smallpox, and that contains the passage which I was referring to just now; I thought that perhaps you had got that in your mind?—The one dealing with compensation?

38889. Yes?—That is the one I am speaking about.

38890. There is a paragraph in that which deals with the point arising in Section 15 of the Act of 1890, and I thought that was what you had in mind?—I am thinking specifically of the Local Government Board's Memorandum of a few years ago.

38891. There was a Smallpox Memorandum which was issued in 1899?—I think the one I have in mind is of more recent date than that—I think it is about 1903 or 1904.

38892. At the time of the last smallpox epidemic?—Yes.

38893. Are you quite clear that the Registrar-General objects now to registrars giving information with regard to births?—That point was raised at a meeting of the medical officers of health of which I happened to be the secretary, and I wrote to the Registrar-General on the subject. That was only three years ago at the outside. I was told then that his instructions had to be that this information must not be given.

38894. There have been recent regulations made by the Registrar-General, and one of those regulations provides that every registrar may, at the request of the council of any borough or other urban district or any rural district, furnish to such authority a detailed return of the births in a special form supplied for the purpose by the Registrar-General. Does that not meet your point?—I should like to know what the form issued by the Registrar-General covered.

38895. The form is not given in the particular book I am quoting from, but these are regulations which were made in 1905; was that since you wrote?—That is since the matter was brought up at these meetings I was talking about.

38896. I think you will find there has been something done since those meetings?—I am rather glad to hear that. I hope the form includes the address where the birth has occurred; otherwise it is of no use to us. It is very probable that that would get over the difficulty.

Mr. JOHN MILSON RHODES, M.D., called; and Examined.

Mr. J. M. Rhodes, M.D. 38897. (Chairman.) You are Chairman of the Central Poor Law Conference Committee, I understand?—Yes.

28 Jan. 1907. 38898. You have been good enough to prepare a short paper which we can accept as your evidence-in-chief, if you will hand it in?—Yes. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. MEDICAL RELIEF FROM THE POINT OF VIEW OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

Need of medical relief. 1. Of the necessity for medical relief at the expense of the public I do not think there can be any doubt in the minds of those who understand the question. Voluntary medical relief never did meet the case, and does not at the present time.

2. If any doubt existed as to that, the doubt should in my opinion be removed by the fact that the number of beds in the Poor Law Hospitals of London alone exceeds the number of beds in all the voluntary hospitals of England and Wales put together.

3. The census returns for 1891 and 1901 show that the population of England is, unfortunately in my opinion, becoming more and more concentrated in our great cities, and this fact is a strong reason for a still London Poor Law hospitals more numerous than voluntary hospitals in England and Wales.

Need of more efficient medical relief.

Need of more—if possible—efficient medical assistance for the poorest class not only on the ground of humanity, but from mere selfishness. Most people are aware that it is in the poorest neighbourhoods that epidemic diseases spread so rapidly and cause such an enormous financial loss to the class least able to bear it.

4. Twenty years ago Sir Edward Chadwick estimated the loss from sickness at £20,000,000 per annum; no doubt since that time the mortality has fallen, 3 per 1,000 living, but there is still urgent necessity for better preventive measures; take, for instance, tuberculosis, how can the poor make proper provision for the treatment of the disease at home. In Lancashire we have a total of 452,366 tenements; of these 344,517 had four rooms or less, and of these 128,000 had two or less. With such miserable accommodation as that, if you are to prevent the spread of the disease you must have proper provision for its treatment, and that provision is best made in the hospitals.

5. That the hospitals have been of enormous benefit to the poor, and now have the confidence of the poor as they never had before, is known to every one who has a knowledge of the facts.

The mortality returns prove that; the figures for the last decennial period are :—

Year.	Deaths.
	In Workhouses.	In Lunatic Asylums.
1894 - -	37,322	6,332
1904 - -	48,884	9,751

and it must be borne in mind that the mortality was 4 less in 1904 than it was in 1894. In 1904 the deaths in the voluntary hospitals, though they get nearly all the accidents, only numbered 32,000 as compared with the 48,000 in Poor Law institutions.

6. I think the area of the unions might be extended. The railway and the ambulance have effected a revolution both as regards the removal of the patient and the visiting by the friends of the patient; by so doing you could obtain better classification and relieve your sick wards from the presence of noisy and troublesome imbeciles who are such a source of discomfort to those suffering from acute disease in the wards.

2. THE RESPECTIVE FUNCTIONS OF OUTDOOR AND INDOOR MEDICAL RELIEF AND THE QUESTION OF THE DESIRABILITY OF MAKING ONE MEDICAL OFFICER RESPONSIBLE FOR BOTH BRANCHES OF SUCH RELIEF IN A UNION.

7. Circumstances alter cases, and outdoor and indoor medical relief occupy very different positions in rural and urban districts. The terrible overcrowding in our large cities, though overcrowding exists also in rural districts, is to me a very strong reason against outdoor medical relief in towns, but in the rural districts for cases of chronic bronchitis and chronic rheumatism provision can no doubt be made outside, but in the crowded cities it is better both for the patient and his friends that the former should go to the hospital and the latter be free to follow their usual occupations.

8. As to the desirability of making one medical officer responsible, if it proposes to appoint a superintendent medical officer like a superintendent relieving officer I am afraid it would lead to considerable friction, and am also afraid it would cause a large amount of opposition from the medical profession. If it proposes to make one medical officer responsible for in and out medical relief, that is quite impracticable in the unions with 150,000 and 190,000 acres; one man could not possibly cover the ground, and in a union with a population of 250,000 he could not possibly give adequate attention to the cases.

9. Sooner than attempt such an impossibility I should prefer to let the patients having obtained a medical order select the medical man they like, as they do in the case of vaccination in Scotland. If the medical man is, of course, willing to attend such cases, the guardians to pay him a fair remuneration for his work on the number of his cases.

3. PUBLIC MEDICAL ASSISTANCE AND ITS RESULTS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. J. M. Rhodes, M.D.
28 Jan. 1907.

10. Medical relief has, I believe, very much improved in the States during the last few years, due, no doubt, to a considerable extent to their conferences on charity and correction, which correspond to our Poor Law Conferences.

Poor relief in the United States, Massachusetts, etc.

11. In the "towns," that is "parish," the annual town's meeting elects the supervisor and usually two overseers of the poor. To a considerable extent "town" care is giving way to "county" care—that is "union" care—and things are better there, but still, so far as concerns the sick poor, England is facile princeps compared with the United States.

12. Take the case of the State of Massachusetts, a very progressive state with a population of 3,003,635. In that state there are 203 almshouse buildings; of these 179 are of wood, some of them mere shanties, 19 brick, and 9 mixed. In 120 there are bath rooms and water-closets. In 146 there are one or more sitting rooms, the other 57 have no sitting-rooms. Many of the so-called almshouses have a dozen or less inmates.

13. The numbers as compared with Lancashire are—

—	In-door.	Out-door.	Vagrants.	Rate per 1,000	Population.
Massachusetts	18,858	24,627	599	* 26·89	3,003,635
Lancashire -	34,111	52,236	2,286	20·6	4,437,618

Comparison of number and cost of paupers in Lancashire and Massachusetts.

14. As regards cost of Poor Law relief, it was——	Full Support.	Partial.	Aggregate.	Cost per Inhabitant.

Massachusetts	$1,348,965	$974,938	$2,502,935	$1·44
Lancashire -	£405,176	£238,147	£643,323	s. 2·10½

15. The average weekly cost per case in Massachusetts was at almshouses, $2·88; insane hospital, 3·25; partial support $0·91·8.

16. It must not be forgotten that charity organisation societies are in the States practical and not theoretical societies.

17. In New York they have realised the evil effect of indiscriminate medical relief, and in consequence are in front of England in this matter.

18. The Dispensary Law, in 25 Sec. 368, law of 1899, directs that—Provisions regulating dispensaries in the United States.

"All dispensaries where medical advice is given, if supported wholly or in part from trust funds or other sources, must be licensed and must give the applicant a pass card on the reverse of which is printed—

"Any person who obtains medical or surgical treatment on false representations from any dispensary licensed under the provision of this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to punishment by a fine of not less than $10 and not more than $250." (Imprisonment until fine be paid may be imposed.)

19. All dispensaries are inspected as they ought to be here, and also have to show how the money received has been expended.

4. COLONIES FOR THE INSANE AND EPILEPTIC.

20. The present state of the law as regards the above classes is very defective, county councils and county asylums boards can provide for the insane epileptics but not for the sane. The only State provision for this unfortunate class at the present time is the gaol and the work-house; the number of deaths in gaols for which the assigned cause is epilepsy is, I am afraid, higher than it should be, and it is quite possible that cases of epilepsy that should be in an asylum are in gaol.

Defects in existing provisions for dealing with sane epileptics.

* In the Massachusetts Report the ratio is given on the whole number for the year, the numbers of in and out-paupers is that on June 1st, 1905.

Mr. J. M. Rhodes, M.D.
28 Jan. 1907.
Agriculture the best treatment for epileptics and idiots.

21. Dr. Peterson, the Commissioner of New York, who has taken an enormous amount of interest in this class, puts the ratio at 2 per 1,000, and Dr. Spratling is of opinion that it is certainly not too high; personally, I should put it rather lower for England, but not lower than 1.5 per 1,000. The best treatment for epileptics and idiots is employment on the land; at the present time all occupations almost are closed against them, and therefore, reduced to enforced idleness, they must degenerate more rapidly than they would if properly employed.

Chorlton and Manchester joint colony for epileptics and smooth administration thereof.

22. It was with the object of improving the lot of this unfortunate class that I got the Chorlton and Manchester Guardians to appoint a joint committee of twelve members, 50 per cent. from each, to establish a colony. I have been chairman of the committee since the first meeting, and have had no trouble in conducting the business; the committee has worked as smoothly as a county council committee, and the members living closer to the place of meeting can meet oftener and devote more time to the work than if they had to travel thirty or forty miles to the meeting.

Foreign epileptic colonies, their results and cost.

23. I know the epileptic colonies of the United States, Germany, and Switzerland, and the patients in them are certainly happier and brighter than in workhouses.

24. The cost appears to be higher, but a considerable part of the apparent increases is due to the fact that in the workhouse the cost includes all able bodied and aged, who require few attendants; in the colony you have the cost of the keep plus the cost of attendance.*

Proposal that guardians, or in default county councils, should establish epileptic colonies.

25. I think boards of guardians should be allowed until January 1, 1910, to combine and establish colonies; failing, the county council or two or even more county councils should be compelled to make provision for this class.

Advantages of enlarging Poor Law area for classification purposes.

38899. (Chairman.) In the earlier part of your statement you lay stress on the paramount importance of trying to improve the health of the people, and to minimise the terrible loss, looking at it from the economic and financial point of view which occurs annually to the nation from sickness. You also point out what an enormous proportion of the hospital accommodation for the poor of this country is provided by the Poor Law. The suggestion which you make for the improvement of indoor medical relief is, I think, that the area of the unions should be enlarged?—Yes, I think it might be with advantage. It is very difficult to classify paupers, especially the sick poor, in a very small union. I will give you an example that occurred some years ago. In a certain union there was a case of acute pneumonia in a woman, and the next bed to her was occupied by a case of acute mania, and that woman was shouting out every minute. What chance had the first woman of getting better? Those cases are common, and the mixture of the insane and the sick is a very great injustice to both cases.

38900. Did you contemplate having an area so large that there might be separate institutions, say, for the different classes of disease?—In this case I was thinking more of having one good union hospital than having a large number of small ones.

Difficulty of having one medical officer for both in and out medical relief.

38901. Leaving the question of indoor medical relief, do you consider, having regard to the relation of outdoor to indoor medical relief, that in your judgment it would be difficult to make one medical officer responsible for both?—It would be impossible in the large unions, I should say.

Proposal that each out-pauper should choose his own district medical officer.

38902. To get over that difficulty, I think you would suggest that the out-patients should be allowed to select the medical man that they like?—Yes. That, I believe, is the case in some parts of Germany. I think it is an injustice to some of the patients that they should have to send for a man whether they like him or not. I think it would be better to give them an opportunity of sending for the man they like; calculating over, say, a thousand cases what ought to be paid to the man, and then pay him by fees.

38903. That of course assumes that the medical man they send for or prefer would be under a contract with the Poor Law guardians to give at a fixed price the attendance required?—Yes. I should let him be put on a list if he liked.

38904. You would give the patient the option of selecting any one who was on the list?—Yes, I would.

38905. You have given a great deal of attention, have you not, to the medical assistance which is in operation in the United States?—Chiefly for the feeble-minded and epileptic.

38906. And you have given us in your statement some instructive figures?—I have given you the figures of Massachusetts.

38907. You give the cost of the Poor Law relief in Massachusetts and Lancashire, and it comes out in the last column 1 dollar 44 cents, which would be practically 6s. per head in Massachusetts as against 2s. 10d. in Lancashire?—Yes.

38908. So that it is much higher out there in Massachusetts?—Yes, but there is no comparison between poor relief in the United States of America and poor relief in England. Poor relief in a great many of the States of America is very much like our old parochial relief.

38909. Do you mean that it is lavish?—No, but it is a bad system. There are small places with about fourteen or twenty paupers only in them, and they will have a master and a matron in each of those little places.

38910. So that though the cost is greater you would say that the accommodation or the treatment given is inferior?—Decidedly.

38911. In the last part of your statement you give us something important, which I think is at the same time new. It appears that in New York there has been an effort made to stop indiscriminate medical relief?—Yes, there has.

38912. And there is a law, I understand, of a rather stringent character?—Yes.

38913. Perhaps you would expand what you have said upon that?—I have here the report of a Special Committee of the State Board of Charities on the Rules and Regulations of Dispensaries, from which I may read these notes—"Rule I. requires that each dispensary shall post a notice conspicuously in the waiting or reception room, announcing the fact that the dispensary has been licensed by the State Board of Charities to furnish medical and surgical relief to the sick poor who are unable to pay for the same. Added to this notice is the penalty for false representations by applicants in their efforts to obtain medical or surgical relief. It is believed by the committee that this notice will prove deterrent to those applicants who are able to pay for the services of a physician or surgeon. Rule II. creates 'the registrar,' a new office in the dispensary, or rather gives a new and uniform title to an officer now known as the 'house physician,' etc. The advantage of such a provision will appear in the appointment of a competent person in each dispensary to have charge of the daily management of its routine duties; the keeping of its records; and the enforcement of the rules and regulations. Rule III. is the most important of the series because it aims directly to correct the alleged abuse of the indiscriminate treatment of applicants. It has three sub-divisions as follows:—(1) This part prescribes the rules governing the registrar in determining the question of admission of individual applicants. Two classes are to be at once admitted to treatment, viz., emergency cases and those evidently poor and needy. A third class consists of those cases as to whose ability to pay for medical relief there is doubt; these are allowed a first treatment and then they are to be investigated. In order to render this investigation, which must be attended with some expense, as little embarrassing as possible to the dispensaries, they are allowed to employ their own officers or any reliable agency, but the results of the investigation must be made in writing and filed in the dispensary. In large cities, such as New York, Brooklyn and Buffalo, these investigations may be made by their respective Charity Organisation Societies. A fourth class consists of those who refuse to sign the card of admission; this class is rejected. (2) This part contains the form of an admission card. On the same card is printed the representations to which the applicant subscribes and the registrar attests, and regulations which is to be filed among the permanent records of the dispensary. The representations which the applicants make cover those subjects most liable to conceal the frauds hitherto practised upon the dispensaries. (3) This part requires that the usual pass card, issued to the applicant and retained by him for presentation on each visit to the dispensary, shall give specific information as to his legal obligations, with a quotation of the penal section of the law. Rule IV. provides that a woman nurse shall be present at gynaecological examinations and operations. Then seats must be provided in the dispensaries, and the sexes must be kept separate; and there is a very useful rule which provides that if they make false statements they are liable to a penalty of from 10 to 250 dollars."

* The cost at Alt Schorbits was £20 per annum. At Uchtsprings 1/2½ per day. At Bielefeld the cost is about £25 per annum.

38914. That is with respect to out-relief so to speak; is there a similar set of laws as regards hospitals?—The hospitals are inquired into by the friendly societies and the Charity Organisation Society, which is a very large thing in America. I should think the offices of the Charity Organisation Society in New York are as large as the Westminster Palace Hotel.

38915. Nobody is allowed to obtain medical or surgical treatment if he can afford to pay for it?—That is so.

38916. And a rigid inquiry is made?—Yes. I believe myself that the lavish way in which relief is given at the hospitals and dispensaries here, does tend to produce pauperism. It is like blood to a tiger.

38917. Going back to America, patients have to state what their resources are?—Yes.

38918. And a false statement subjects them to a penalty?—Yes.

38919. Is that enforced?—I believe it is.

38920. So that practically you may say the law is designed to prevent anybody getting medical relief in the State of New York, who is able to pay for it?—I know that a great many have refused to sign, and have gone away.

38921. Not having got the medical relief?—They have not got it, because they would not sign.

38922. Your view is that in this country there is some risk in giving free medical relief?—Yes. For instance, in the case of accidents, large numbers of skilled artisans go to the hospital, say, because they have got a finger crushed; there they get relief, and they keep on going to that hospital till it is cured. But those men are perfectly well able to afford to pay their own doctor.

38923. Are there any free hospitals in America?—Do you mean where you can go without any inquiry?

38924. Where a person is taken in and gets free treatment?—There are plenty of them where they get free treatment if they are proper cases.

38925. But there would be an inquiry?—Yes.

38926. And practically, they would pay according to their ability?—In some of them they would. Take the case of a man with cancer; they would take that man in at once and operate on him. But supposing it was a case of chronic bronchitis, and he could afford to pay, if they did take him in he would have to pay.

38927. But as regards operations or very costly treatment, a person would get all that gratuitously?—Yes. There are two reports here which perhaps I could put in, on tuberculosis in the States and the prevention of tuberculosis. (Handing in same.)*

38928. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You would advocate rather larger unions than at present exist, would you not?—Yes. I think the expansion of the railway system and the trolley car and all of those things, enable friends to go and see a case much easier than they used to be able to do.

38929. Are you thinking more especially of a case like Manchester, where you have three unions in one town?—That is a case where you might perhaps amalgamate; but I was thinking also of the rural unions.

38930. How far would you carry that in regard to the rural unions?—I cannot answer that.

38931. I do not press you to say exactly what area you would suggest, but do you think you could take a very large area indeed, like a county?—You might take a much larger area than you have at the present time in some cases, I think.

38932. Supposing you did that, how would you meet the objection which you referred to just now about the paupers saying that they were a long way off their friends?—I do not think if unions were made double the area they were when the old Act was passed, that, having regard to the facilities people have now of getting to see their friends, it would take them as long to get to see their friends as it did.

38933. So that, you would have a larger area than is common now?—Yes.

38934. But not so extensive an area as, say, a county?—No.

38935. With regard to the plan you suggest of outdoor paupers being allowed to choose their own doctors, you mean, I think, that they should choose them within the limits of the union?—I should expect they would do. I should say that only men in the union would be on the medical officers' list of the union.

38936. Would you propose to pay them per case?—Yes.

38937. And to take into account at all the distance that they would have to go?—Yes, I think you ought to take that into account.

38938. That might be important if you had very large unions, might it not?—I think you would find that as a rule they would take the doctor who was pretty near them.

38939. I was thinking that you might possibly have a case of some favourite doctor in the locality?—I think you will find that the average man will take the doctor pretty near him. You must take the man in the street—the average man.

38940. You, I think, were chairman of one of the first of the Joint Committees under the Act of 1879?—I was.

38941. And are still?—And I am.

38942. Are you quite satisfied with the working of the arrangement?—Quite.

38943. You do not suggest any alteration in it, but rather its extension, if I rightly understand?—Yes. I think you would get more by an extension of the system. For instance, supposing you said that on or before 1910 every union must provide accommodation for epileptics and imbeciles, then till 1910 I would give them power to provide voluntarily, but if they did not do it by then I should be inclined to say they must.

38944. Does that at all effect your opinion as to the need for making larger unions, on the ground that you might, by means of combinations, attain the end which you have in view?—With regard to epileptics, the feeble-minded, and that class, yes; but I think for the others you would still require to have larger unions in order to get proper classification in your workhouses.

38945. (Mr. Chandler.) You speak in paragraph 3 of efficient medical assistance for the poorest class being absolutely needed, and you mention in the next paragraph that that provision is best made in the hospitals. Do I understand that running right through your statement there is the assumption that the Poor Law union hospitals are the best ones for free medical treatment?—I can say this, that I believe unions like Nottingham, Birmingham, Manchester and Liverpool, provide as good treatment in their hospitals as you are getting in any hospital. The Commissioners have seen these hospitals, and I think some of them will agree with me that first-class provision is made in them.

38946. In your statement at least you seem rather opposed to separate medical relief from the Poor Law?—I believe it is as good a system as you can have at present. There is something against every system, of course.

38947. With that recommendation of yours is an alternative of selecting a list of medical men to be called upon if required or if needed by patients?—Yes.

38948. That is the only suggestion you have of an alternative to the present system?—I think that that would meet the case.

38949. Just one word about the treatment of epileptics which you have taken such a deep interest in. Is the form of epileptic colonies expected to be curative?—The Craig Colony cures about 6 per cent, and the Ohio Colony Colony cures about 10 per cent. I have some books here upon that, which I will hand in. (Handing in the same.)* You will see that they take two years without a fit as giving proper grounds for thinking they have cured a case.

Mr. J. M. Rhodes, M.D.
28 Jan. 1907.

Question of need to enlarge Poor Law area in view of guardians' existing powers of combination for special purposes.

Comparison of treatment in Poor Law and voluntary hospitals.

Proposal that each pauper should choose his own district medical officer.

Curative effect of epileptic farm colonies.

* Not printed in Appendix.

* Not printed in Appendix.

Mr. J. M. Rhodes, M.D. 38950. And that is attributed to the treatment they have received?—Yes.

28 Jan. 1907. 38951. That would be similar treatment to that which you expect to get in the Joint Colony of which you are Chairman?—Yes, very much the same.

38952. Has that started yet?—Yes, it has.

38953. It has actually commenced operations?—Yes, it has got about forty patients in now, I think.

38954. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Are those patients made in any degree self-supporting?—Yes. We have over 100 acres of land, and employment on land is the best thing for them. They find that these epileptic cases have more fits on a Monday and on Boxing-day and the day after Thanksgiving Day, because they have no work on those days, and have perhaps extra good feeding. It is also usual, as I say, to find there are more fits on the Mondays.

38955. Do you know at all how far they become self-supporting?—No, I cannot tell you that. But they raise a very large amount of the food they use in Ohio and Craig Colony.

Proposed farm colonies for the feeble-minded. 38956. Do you think you might treat some of the harmless insane in the same way?—If I had my way with imbeciles, I would take them all out of the work-houses, and put them in plain buildings.

38957. Also on the land?—On the land.

38958. Would you allow for any good results from their being partially self-supporting?—Yes, you could get them partially self-supporting, but what I want to prevent is the multiplication of the unfit. I believe in the isolation of this class of cases, especially of the feeble-minded girls.

38959. Would you cure the feeble-minded there, too?—Yes, I would put the feeble-minded girls on the land too.

Need for power to detain feeble-minded. 38960. You would want compulsory powers of detention, would you not?—Yes. It is not easy to draw a line, but I think you would require to have it.

38961. Would you apply that to feeble-minded men also?—Yes, decidedly.

Question of one medical officer for both in and out medical relief. 38962. (Dr. Downes.) On the question of medical out-relief, do you think it would be possible for a superintendent medical officer, if he had a sufficient number of assistant medical officers, to deal with a large urban district?—It would be very difficult to do it. Do you mean to do anything else but Poor Law work?

38963. In one of the London unions there is at the present time an experiment being made of the medical superintendent supervising a certain portion of the outdoor medical relief, with the help of assistant medical officers who give their whole time; I do not know whether you have considered the possibility of an experiment of that kind?—I have not considered it, but I am afraid it would not work.

Selection by paupers of their own district medical officers and difficulties thereunto. 38964. In regard to the selection of the medical men by the patient, how would you deal with the possibility of one man giving recommendations for extras much more freely than others?—If his account came to a very much larger average than the others, I would have an inquiry into it, at once.

38965. And if it continued to be so?—Then I should suspend him and appeal to the Local Government Board.

38966. It might be difficult to deal with, might it not?—Yes, but I think it can be dealt with.

38967. You would check him by comparison with the other men?—Yes, I would.

Comparison of medical relief in England and America. 38968. You tell us as regards the sick poor, England is facile princeps compared with the United States?—Decidedly.

38969. Can you tell us in what particulars?—The hospitals are better fitted, and better nursed; the masters are superior, and the whole get-up of the place is better.

38970. Would you extend that to the country work-houses, or are you speaking now of the large urban infirmaries?—I am speaking of the large urban infirmaries, but I think if you take those particulars that I give, you will find that a great many of the poor-houses in the State of Massachusetts in which the sick poor are kept are nothing better than shanties.

38971. So a well-administered country workhouse might be in advance of them?—Yes.

38972. You have had a long experience of medical relief under the Poor Law, I think?—Yes.

38973. Comparing it generally as it is now with what it was in former days, what have you to say?—It is very superior to what it used to be.

38974. Do you consider that the sick poor are well cared for in England, taking them as a whole?—Taking them as a whole, yes; but there are exceptions, and I think my system would tend to competition among the medical officers for the better treatment of the sick poor.

38975. You are speaking of the outdoor sick now?—Yes.

38976. With regard to the indoor sick, what do you say of them and their general care now?—I would say it is very good. It is better than the care a man gets at home—a very great deal. The trained nursing has made an enormous improvement.

38977. When you were in America did you visit any of the paying wards of their hospitals?—No, I do not think I did.

38978. I think they have a system whereby the principal hospitals will take paying patients?—Yes, the same as they have in the asylums in Germany. They have Class 1, Class 2, and Class 3.

38979. What would your view be of the introduction of paying wards in municipal hospitals?—I think you might allow them.

38980. Would they meet the wants of a class which has now a difficulty in finding hospital accommodation?—Decidedly.

38981. As to the areas of administration, for classification purposes would you prefer one large area to a combination of smaller areas, from the administrative point of view?—As long as I got the thing I should not care.

38982. Have you met with any difficulties in administration under combinations?—No, I have not. You could not tell who were members of the Chorlton Board and who were members of the Manchester Board that sat there. It has never arisen in that case.

38983. (Mr. Gardiner.) You have had a wide experience of the Poor Law. Have you not heard of cases where at the expiration of a certain time one of the parties has wished to withdraw?—Yes, I have.

38984. Is that not rather serious?—I have also heard of boards refusing to combine, and I am sorry for them.

38985. (Mr. Phelps.) You heard some of the evidence which was given in the earlier part of the day, I think?—I did.

38986. You heard something about the difficulties of giving medical relief under the Poor Law. Is that consistent with your experience?—I should not say it is. There is one thing I should like to point out about urgent relief. The overseer can give an emergency order for medical relief, and he can give an order for admission to the workhouse itself—

38987. A pauper can go to an overseer, or he can go to a guardian, can he not?—A guardian has not the power. I do not know in my union a single case where the medical officer would not go without any order at all if he was sent for in an urgent case.

38988. Do you propose then there should be power to ask for an order subsequently?—A great deal has been said about the midwifery orders, and I can say that I have known midwifery orders given three days after the operation. The medical officer has come and operated and then sent the case down and told them to get an order.

38989. Do you think that in practice difficulty does not occur?—No, it does not.

38990. And you have some years' experience as a guardian, have you not?—Twenty-three or twenty-five years.

38991. You say in Paragraph 16: "It must not be forgotten that charity organisation societies are in the States practical, and not theoretical societies"; what does that mean exactly?—They are a great deal more practical in the States than they are here, in fact even in New York they go so far as to run a pawn-shop.

Improvement in medical relief.

Advantages of selection by paupers of their own district medical officers.

Treatment of sick in Poor Law hospitals

Foreign system of paying-wards in municipal hospitals and question of its application to England.

Combinations of unions for special purposes and their difficulties.

Question of inaccessibility of medical relief; overseers' power to give relief; attendance district medical officer without a relieving officer's order, etc.

Character American charity organisation societies; their pawnshops, etc.

38992. I thought that in New York the Charity Organisation Society does not relieve at all?—On the other hand they run this pawn-shop.

Chorlton and Manchester joint epileptic colony.

38993. With regard to your establishment which some of us visited at Langho, and which we are very much interested in seeing; what number of patients do you anticipate putting there?—It will be full as it stands now with about 200, but the boiler houses and the administrative block, and electric light stations are all made for 500 at least.

Comparative advantages of large and small institutions for epileptics.

38994. Do you think that there is any danger in massing such large numbers together?—Not if you separate them into cottages as we do. They see other people as bad as themselves, and it gives them a sense of self-respect. They do not feel so inferior to other people as they do outside when they are the only epileptic ones among a lot. You must remember that an epileptic has a sense of inferiority.

38995. I quite understand separating them from the people in the workhouse, but do you think that generally a large establishment on that scale has advantages over a series of small homes?—Ours is a series of small homes.

38996. But you see the difference I was pointing at?—Yes.

38997. How would you state the advantages of a large institution?—A large institution should be run at a lower cost than the small ones, and the patients are as independent in their cottages as the people are in a lot of the houses.

Agricultural work for epileptics and its curative effect.

38998. When the ground thereabouts has been got into order and laid out, what is your idea of occupation for the epileptics?—Working on it and growing their own vegetables, potatoes and that kind of thing.

38999. Would you take all the land into cultivation?—All that we can.

39000. Do you find any distinction between the effect upon the men and the effect upon the women?—We have not had it long enough yet, but there is no doubt that if you can employ both the men and the women on the land, they are the better for it and have fewer fits and degenerate less rapidly.

39001. As far as you have gone, has the effect upon the men been better than the effect upon the women?—I cannot answer that.

Advantages of larger areas for Poor Law purposes.

39002. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to the size of area, do you think that if a large urban area like Manchester, Salford, and part of Prestwich Union were all one union, the classification of inmates could be carried out by institutions for each separate class with advantage to Poor Law administration generally?—Yes, it might be to a certain extent; but I was thinking of large areas of rural districts chiefly.

39003. Providing an exception were made with regard to large urban areas, do you see any advantage in having one common administration over an area? Several points might be gained, might they not; for instance, there would be uniformity of relief over the whole area?—Yes, and you might have uniformity of dietary and that kind of thing.

Mr. J. M. Rhodes, M.D.
28 Jan. 1907.

39004. Do you think that might be done with advantage to Poor Law administration generally?—Yes, I think so.

39005. Has there been any attempt at closer co-operation between the health authorities in your own district and the Poor Law authorities?—I believe we have always supplied every information that we were asked for by the medical authorities.

Co-operation between Poor Law and sanitary authorities.

39006. With regard to assisting the health authority in detecting a case of infection, have they ever made overtures to the Poor Law authorities to give assistance on any given line?—If there is any infection the medical officer is bound to make it known, no matter whether he is the union medical officer or another medical officer.

39007. Therefore it works automatically?—Yes.

39008. In other directions can you say that any closer co-operation between the two would be any advantage to the public health?—I have not seen that yet, but I am open to conviction.

39009. Do you see any danger in a transference of the out-door medical relief to the health authority, with all its incidental relief in kind for the improvement of the physique of the people treated?—I am afraid you will make a very great danger of increasing pauperism if you make it a municipal affair.

Danger of transferring medical relief to the sanitary authority.

39010. Would it not increase very largely the medical comforts? We have heard to-day from several witnesses that there is a great want in the homes, apart from medical assistance, of the ordinary necessities of life, and it has been advocated that the health authority should be empowered to grant those. Where would that lead in your union?—There is a great want of the proper necessities in the homes of workmen who work for their living and keep themselves.

39011. Do you think that the health authority's assistance might be extended to those houses?—I think it would tend to jeopardise their position. If you give lavish relief that will tend to increase pauperism.

39012. Then the extension of relief on those lines you would look upon with some degree of alarm?—Yes. I look upon it very much as I should look upon the system of relief in a certain union which I will not name, which has been an example before the country.

SEVENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Tuesday, 29th January, 1907.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
 Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
 Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
 The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
 Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
 Mr. C. S. LOCH.
 Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.

The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
 The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.
 Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
 Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
 Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
 Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
 The Right Rev. The LORD BISHOP OF ROSS.

Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Dr. FORD ANDERSON, M.D.; Dr. JAMES ALEXANDER MACDONALD, M.D.; Dr. H. LANGLEY BROWNE, M.D.; and Mr. JAMES SMITH WHITAKER, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., called; and Examined.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.
 39013. (Chairman.) You, gentlemen, appear representing the British Medical Association, and you have prepared a statement comprising recommendations which you propose to lay before this Commission?—(Mr. Whitaker) Yes. (The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

STATEMENT OF THE EVIDENCE PROPOSED TO BE GIVEN ON BEHALF OF THE ASSOCIATION BEFORE THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE POOR LAWS AND RELIEF OF DISTRESS WITH REFERENCE TO POOR LAW QUESTIONS.

British Medical Association's circular to Poor Law medical officers.

1. The British Medical Association, which includes 20,000 medical practitioners, has endeavoured in submitting its evidence to the Royal Commission to give expression to those opinions which the Association believes to be generally accepted in the medical profession.

2. The Association has circulated inquiries to all the Poor Law medical officers in England and Wales, over 3,500 in number, and a careful analysis has been made of the replies received. The evidence now submitted has been prepared after careful consideration of the information thus obtained and is to be taken as representing the conclusions of the Association based thereon, except those statements which are specified as those of the medical officers themselves.

A.—CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT OF POOR LAW MEDICAL OFFICERS.

Salaries.

Question of adequacy of Poor Law medical officers' salaries.

3. The information obtained by the Association from Poor Law medical officers does not indicate the existence of any general grievance as regards inadequacy of ordinary remuneration, but in some districts the salaries paid to Poor Law medical officers are entirely inadequate and attention must be drawn to the absence of any uniform principle in fixing such salaries.

4. In fixing salaries more regard should be had than some local authorities give at present, to considerations affecting the amount of work to be done, such as the total population, the population per acre, or the size and shape of the district.

Special Fees for Operations and Midwifery.

Special medical fees for operations and midwifery.

5. It is desirable that local authorities and medical officers should not be allowed in any case to contract out of the Poor Law Order 177 as regards operations, or Orders 182 and 183 as regards midwifery.

6. With regard to Orders 182 and 183, the Association has evidence of a tendency to throw upon the parish doctor, either without extra payment or at the expense of the rates, duties of attendance upon patients previously under the care of midwives, for which such patients could, and should, be required themselves to pay.

Supply of Drugs and other Materials.

7. The salary of Poor Law medical officers should be suggested made entirely independent of the supply of drugs, serums, reforms as to surgical appliances, and other materials, and should be fixed in consideration of medical attendance and medical services only.

8. Drugs and other materials should be provided under separate contracts, which may be made, as circumstances may render advisable in different districts, either with the doctor himself, with chemists, or otherwise.

9. In the interests of public health it is particularly desirable that provision be made at the public expense for the supply of substances, such as antidiphtheritic serum, which are necessary for checking infectious disease.

Consultations and Special Assistance.

10. The Association considers that attention should be drawn to the fact that, in a large number of cases, medical practitioners are called in in consultation, and are not paid for such services.

11. This tends to prevent those who receive medical relief under the Poor Law from having the benefit of such special attention in exceptional cases as their condition may require.

12. It is, therefore, recommended that, in the public interest, the Poor Law authorities should in all cases pay fees for consultations and special assistance, including the administration of anæsthetics.

Recovery of Fees by Medical Officers.

13. As a matter of justice to medical officers, it is submitted that in cases in which the guardians are able to recover, from the estate of persons who have received relief under the Poor Law, repayment of the cost of such relief, recovery should also be made of fees to be paid to the medical officer for the attendance given by him to such persons while they were supposed to be entitled to his services under the Poor Law.

Clerical Work for Medical Officers.

14. Workhouse medical officers should not be required to do book-keeping and other clerical work of kinds that could equally well be done by other persons, but such work should be carried out as far as possible by the master or his clerical staff, and the medical officer merely required to consider, and initial when approved, those records which are deemed to need his supervision.

Holidays for Medical Officers.

Recognised holidays for medical officers.

15. The Association considers that the principle already acted upon in a few unions should be applied generally, namely, that each Poor Law medical officer should be allowed a definite holiday every year, during which the expense of employing a substitute should be defrayed by the Poor Law authority, provision of a substitute during any leave of absence granted beyond such annual holiday being at the expense of the medical officer himself.

Association of the Office of Public Vaccinator with that of Poor Law Medical Officer.

The question of uniting offices of public vaccinator and Poor Law medical officer.

16. The Association considers that the appointments of Poor Law Medical Officer and Public Vaccinator should not be necessarily combined, though in many cases they may conveniently be held by the same persons; in all cases the remuneration for the two offices should be fixed independently.

Superannuation.

Proposal to make all England one area for superannuation purposes.

17. The area of the Poor Law Union is too small to afford a satisfactory unit for superannuation; the contributions to the superannuation fund throughout the country should be pooled, and the payments made from the common fund, in order that proper regard may be had to continuous service in successive districts.

18. Attention is particularly called to the hardship affecting non-resident medical officers, namely, that their appointments being made for limited periods only, although they have paid towards the superannuation fund for many years, the guardians in many cases deliberately refrain from reappointing them when near the age for superannuation in order to escape payment.

System of Appointment of Poor Law Medical Officers.

Attitude of British Medical Association to State Medical Service; unlimited number of district medical officers; present system, etc.

19. The Association has had under its consideration three systems of appointment of Poor Law medical officers, namely:—

(a) The creation of a State Medical Service consisting of whole-time officers to whom perhaps other duties in addition to that of Poor Law medical officer would be assigned.

(b) The appointment of special officers devoting as a rule only part of their time to Poor Law work (the present system).

(c) Appointment of no special officers, provision being made whereby any patient receiving medical relief under the Poor Law may be attended by any local medical practitioner who has previously intimated to the guardians his willingness to undertake such work in accordance with the regulations of the service for the time being.

20. In the opinion of the Association there is no general dissatisfaction in the medical profession with the present system of appointment, but there are some members of the profession who have paid special attention to the subject who would prefer the system (a), and others who would prefer the system (c).

Non-Resident District Medical Officers.

Question of non-resident district medical officers.

21. The present system of control by the Local Government Board of cases in which it is proposed to appoint non-resident medical officers is satisfactory in principle, but in the opinion of the Association the powers of the Local Government should be more frequently and more strictly exercised than at present.

B.—QUESTIONS OF MEDICAL RELIEF NOT SPECIALLY AFFECTING CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT OF MEDICAL OFFICERS.

Relation of Poor Law Administration to Hospitals.

Question of overlapping between voluntary hospitals and Poor Law medical relief.

22. Inquiries which have been made as to the extent to which patients are being treated at out-patient departments of hospitals, who ought to receive medical relief under the Poor Law, and as to the extent to which patients are being relieved under the Poor Law, who ought to be treated as out-patients of hospitals, do not indicate any general prevalence of such arrangements.

23. The attendance at out-patient departments of general hospitals of persons who are in receipt of relief from the Poor Law, ought to be discouraged.

Assimilation of Poor Law Infirmaries to General Hospitals.

24. The provision for the care of the sick in Poor Law infirmaries should be assimilated to that of hospitals supported by voluntary contributions, in the following respects:—

(a) As to the standard of nursing, food, and drugs.

(b) As to the provision for the performance of important operations in the institutions where possible.

(c) As to the use of the institutions for purposes of clinical medical instruction.

(d) As to the keeping of clinical records of cases.

(e) As to the institutions being open to reasonable public inspection.

25. Provision should be made for obtaining special medical or surgical assistance in Poor Law infirmaries where necessary.

Amalgamation of Groups of Infirmaries.

26. It is desirable that Poor Law infirmaries in country districts should in many cases be co-ordinated or amalgamated in order to render possible, without undue expense, the reforms suggested in recommendation 24.

27. In particular, combined infirmaries might be established for incurable cases, relieving the congestion of the workhouses.

Provision for Cases of Infectious Disease.

28. The responsibility for dealing with cases of infectious disease should in all cases be placed upon the sanitary authority.

Venereal Disease.

29. Better provision than at present should be made for the care of cases of venereal disease, and all persons suffering from such diseases who obtain relief under the Poor Law should be detained until no longer infectious.

Placing Poor Law Infirmaries and General Hospitals under Common Management.

30. The Association has considered the question of bringing Poor Law infirmaries and general hospitals under common management. Only one method has, so far as the Association is aware, been proposed up to the present for this purpose, namely, by the municipal maintenance and control of the hospitals which are now supported by charitable contributions. Opinion in the medical profession is at present adverse to this proposal.

Attendance in Emergencies.

31. Power should be given to the medical officer to attend, in cases of emergency, without waiting for an order from the relieving officer.

32. It is also recommended that it should be made possible for the medical officer to obtain special assistance in cases of emergency at the expense of the Poor Law authorities, without waiting for an order from the relieving officer.

District Nurses.

33. Poor Law authorities should subscribe to or maintain district nurses for the poor, but all district nurses should be placed under stricter supervision than at present, and should act under medical control.

C.—QUESTIONS OF POOR LAW ADMINISTRATION NOT RELATING SPECIALLY TO MEDICAL RELIEF, BUT CONSIDERED FROM THE PUBLIC HEALTH STANDPOINT.

Constitution of the Local Poor Law Authority.

34. The replies received from Poor Law medical officers show a preponderatingly adverse opinion to the present system of administration by boards of guardians, as showing a lack of sufficient uniformity in administration and a want of appreciation of those conditions which are necessary for the efficient medical service of the poor.

35. In the opinion of the Association the units of local Poor Law administration should be larger than the present unions, although the county council areas would not necessarily be suitable.

Relation of Local Poor Law and Sanitary Administrative Areas.

36. The preponderating opinion of Poor Law medical officers and the general opinion of the medical profession is in favour of making local Poor Law areas and areas of local sanitary administration identical.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Standard of Poor Law hospitals should be raised to that of voluntary hospitals.

Proposed combination of country unions for medical relief purposes.

The sanitary authority should be exclusively responsible for infectious disease. Need of better provision for venereal disease.

Objection to amalgamation of Poor Law and voluntary hospitals.

Need of power to district medical officer to give emergency relief without relieving officer's order. Need of extension and better supervision of district nursing.

Objections of Poor Law medical officers to existing authority for medical relief and need of larger area.

Proposal to make Poor Law and sanitary areas co-terminous.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.,

Classification.

29 Jan. 1907.

Need of classification in work-houses. Maintenance of aged in workhouses advocated.

Medical officers in favour of boarding out of children.

Proposed extension of Prevention of Cruelty to Children Acts.

Proposal to allow out-relief to deserted wives.

Proposed detention of feeble-minded unmarried mothers.

Inadequate out-relief.

Proposed increased deterrence of relief to the able-bodied.

Labour colonies.

Special provision for genuine searchers for work.

37. Classification of workhouse inmates in respect of personal character should be carried out whenever practicable; classes should also be made for the aged and infirm, for able-bodied males, able-bodied females, and children; and the British Medical Association has already, in giving evidence before the Royal Commission on the Feeble-minded, recommended that all cases of mental infirmity should be placed under the supervision of the Lunacy Commissioners.

Provision for Indigent Aged.

38. The opinion of Poor Law medical officers is generally in favour of provision in workhouses as best for maintaining, the indigent aged under healthy conditions, and that, to facilitate such provision, married couples should not be compulsorily separated.

Provision for Children.

39. The replies both of workhouse and district Poor Law medical officers show a large preponderance of opinion in favour of the system of boarding out as the best method of making provision for children under the care of Poor Law authorities.

40. Some medical officers submit evidence of suffering and injury caused to children of vicious parents by the alleged want of power under the law at present to remove children from such care, and the Association considers that the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Acts should, if necessary, be so extended as to afford power to a magistrate, by summary process, to remove from the care of vicious parents children who are proved to be receiving injury therefrom.

Provision for Deserted Wives.

41. The Poor Law authority should be empowered to make provision for deserted wives by outdoor relief where this appears to them most suitable.

Provision for Feeble-minded Unmarried Mothers.

42. Feeble-minded unmarried mothers should be detained in public institutions, and statutory provision should be made for such detention.

Outdoor Relief.

43. Grants of outdoor relief are, in some cases, inadequate for the maintenance in health of the persons so relieved. The scale of outdoor relief given to persons deemed suitable for such relief should be adequate, while on the other hand a more strict supervision should be exercised by the Poor Law authority in the selection of recipients of such relief.

Methods of Dealing with the Able-bodied.

44. Upon consideration of the information which it has collected, the Association recommends that the grant of relief under the Poor Law to able-bodied persons should be discouraged by increasing the amount of work to be done and reducing the diet.

Methods of Dealing with Incurables.

45. Labour colonies should be provided for incurables, statutory power being conferred on magistrates of commitment thereto.

Provision for Industrious Persons travelling in Search of Work.

46. Suitable provision should be made whereby genuine workers travelling in search of work may be relieved without being required to consort with habitual vagrants.

39014. (Chairman.) Dr. Anderson, I understand, is a member of the Council of the British Medical Association, and is a member of the Hospitals Committee of the Association?—(Dr. Anderson.) That is so.

39015. Dr. Macdonald is the chairman of the representative meetings of the Association, Poor Law District Officer of Taunton, and chairman of the committee which drew up the statement you have presented to us?—(Dr. Macdonald.) Yes.

39016. Dr. Langley Browne is Chairman of the Council and District Medical Officer of West Bromwich, and Chairman of the Sanitary Committee of the West Bromwich Town Council?—(Dr. Langley Browne.) Yes.

39017. And you, Mr. Whitaker, are the Medical Secretary of the British Medical Association, and you propose to give the evidence, assisted on necessary points by the other gentlemen?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes.

39018. The statement of the evidence which you have laid before us represents, as far as you know, the official views of the British Medical Association?—Yes, it has been prepared by the Council on behalf of the Association.

39019. You have taken a good deal of trouble to ascertain the views of the Poor Law medical officers. Do all the Poor Law medical officers belong to the British Medical Association?—No.

39020. The actual number of Poor Law medical officers employed is 3,500?—Yes.

39021. And to the inquiries which your association circulated you received answers from how many?—Approximately 1,900.

39022. We will begin with "A." the conditions of employment of Poor Law medical officers. There is a general feeling that in certain cases the salaries are inadequate, and it is contended that there is a want of uniformity or principle in fixing the salaries?—Yes.

39023. That depending, I assume you would contend, more on the character of the boards of guardians than on the work to be done by the medical officer?—Very largely it depends on the character of the boards of guardians.

39024. You would like to have some more uniform rule laid down as regards remuneration?—Yes.

39025. That rule would have to be laid down and enforced by a central authority?—Yes.

39026. As regards special fees for operations and midwifery, has the payment for those operations been a source of general complaint?—In certain districts. For example, generally in the Black Country the old contracts with the medical officers are still in existence, by which they are not paid specially for operations and midwifery: that is to say, the Poor Law orders referred to in the printed statement of our evidence are set aside, and it appears to the association that according to the Poor Law orders that is really illegal, and that the Local Government Board in sanctioning such contracts at all has allowed the Poor Law orders to be over-ridden.

39027. (Sir Samuel Provis.) What do the contracts do exactly?—They allow medical officers and guardians to contract out of the provisions of the Poor Law orders with regard to payment for midwifery and as regards payment for operations, and we consider that that is really contrary to the Poor Law orders.

39028. In those cases, is not a special order issued suspending those articles of the Consolidated Order?—I believe that has been done, and we regard that as very undesirable. We think it is unfortunate that the Local Government Board should have done so.

39029. As regards the legal question, where that course has been taken has there not been an order of that kind?—I presume so.

39030. (Chairman.) What is the purport of the Poor Law authority contracting out of the Act?—That the salary is made an inclusive salary for these special attendances which, according to the Poor Law orders, should be the subject of special payments.

39031. You would contend that the intention of the Act was that there should be the special payments?—That there should be special payments. For example, in the matter of midwifery, that there should be a fee not exceeding one guinea for each ordinary midwifery case, and a fee of two guineas for special cases; and with regard to operations that there should be the fees provided by the Poor Law orders.

39032. Do the operations other than those connected with confinement come under this Act?—They come under Poor Law Order 177.

39033. As regards No. 7, I think there is an almost universal concurrence of evidence that the Poor Law officers should be made quite independent of the supply of drugs?—Yes.

Number of Poor Law medical officers belonging to British Medical Association.

Number of replies to circular of British Medical Association. Inadequate salaries of Poor Law medical officers, and need for greater uniformity.

Grievances of medical officers as to special fees in operation and midwifery.

Proposed reform as to drug supply by medical officers.

39034. I do not know if you wish to elaborate that?—The association feels very strongly on the subject; we consider it very undesirable that the payment for materials should be mixed up with the salary for medical service.

39035. You go further, do you not, and say that you wish that the supply of certain substances, for instance anti-diphtheritic serum, should be gratuitously distributed?—That really is only emphasising one particular part of No. 7, because in No. 7 we suggest that serums should be independently provided for, which would mean that the Poor Law authority would have to pay for the supply; it would be the subject of independent contract. We want to point out with regard to serums that it is especially important because it tends to prevent the spread of disease.

39036. And the serums are expensive?—They are.

Difficulty as payment guardians consultants called by medical officers. 39037. As to the complaints as regards consultations and special assistance, will you just explain how it is that medical practitioners are called in in consultation and not paid?—We only know the fact that a great many boards of guardians refuse to pay for consultations. Referring to our replies, we find that amongst workhouse medical officers, of 150 who replied on this subject, eighty-five state that no payment is made to medical practitioners called in in consultation, whereas twenty-four state that the fee of one guinea is paid twenty-three state that usual reasonable consultation fees are paid, and there are other answers. Among district medical officers, out of 318 replies, 259 state that no payment is made to medical practitioners called in in consultation, twenty-nine state that a fee of one guinea is paid, and about twenty that reasonable or usual fees are paid. So there is a want of uniformity of practice, and in the opinion of the association it is desirable that fees should be paid to medical practitioners called in in consultation.

39038. Who would decide whether for purposes of consultation a medical practitioner was necessary?—In many cases the medical attendant himself must advise in the first instance. I take it that if guardians made a practice of paying, there would be some machinery for deciding whether the consultation was necessary.

39039. The medical practitioner is outside the Poor Law service?—Yes, the medical practitioner called in is.

39040. Must he come?—You could not compel him to attend.

39041. Have there been cases of refusal, do you know, by medical practitioners who knew they were not to be paid?—I have no direct evidence on the point, so I could not say. I dare say there would be cases. It makes the Poor Law medical officer reluctant to call other practitioners in when he knows they have to come simply as a favour to himself.

39042. (Mr. Bentham.) Do the district medical officers themselves pay in those cases sometimes?—Sometimes the district medical officer pays out of his own pocket rather than have to go without a consultation.

39043. (Mr. Nunn.) Do you distinguish between cases where a medical practitioner is called in quite fresh to a consultation, and those cases where it is a consultation with the medical man who has in the past been in attendance upon the patient?—We should not distinguish in principle between those two cases. In the case of such a patient as you mention it might be particularly desirable that the previous medical attendant whom he had employed privately and who could speak as to the history of the illness should be called in in consultation with the Poor Law medical officer.

39044. You have not classified them on that basis?—No; we took the general principle of consultation. The other case might be equally important, namely, of very difficult cases requiring special skill; the Poor Law medical officer might not feel equal to dealing with the case himself, and yet he would hesitate to call in the man who had that skill if he thought that he was not going to be paid, or that he himself must pay him out of his own pocket.

39045. (Chairman.) I should like to understand the process. A Poor Law medical officer thinks he ought to have outside assistance for the purpose of a consultation. He is not forbidden by the Poor Law guardians to call in an outside opinion?—They cannot forbid him, and would hardly be likely to forbid him to obtain extra assistance.

39046. If he does so in certain unions, the medical man whom he calls in comes in at the risk of not being paid?—Yes, either at the risk of not being paid or of the medical officer having to pay him. There are cases in which medical officers, rather than see their patient go without the assistance that they thought they should have, have paid out of their own pocket for the special assistance they considered necessary.

39047. That is to say, the medical officer is not forbidden by the guardians to call in an outside practitioner in consultation, but he does so possibly to his own pecuniary detriment?—Or else knowing that his colleague must go unpaid.

39048. Does this apply in certain cases to the administration of anaesthetics?—Yes, it applies to the administration of anaesthetics.

39049. That would be a hardship on the Poor Law officer?—Yes.

39050. Because, if an anaesthetic were necessary, he would have to call in someone?—He must have someone in some cases to administer an anaesthetic. There are some cases in which he might take the risk of giving the anaesthetic and performing the operation himself, but it is not desirable.

39051. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Do you mean in a case where an anaesthetist is absolutely necessary to be called in, he is then not paid?—Not in all cases.

39052. (Chairman.) With regard to the recovery of fees, your point is that the medical officer should be able to recover fees from the estate of anybody who has received medical relief under the Poor Law in cases where the guardians are able to recover?—In cases in which it is found afterwards by the guardians that the person who had relief had private means and could afford to pay for his own maintenance and treatment, the guardians recover for their own expenses, but they recover nothing for the medical officer who has given attendance to the patient who really was not a subject of Poor Law relief at all.

39053. I suppose you are fighting for a general principle; in practice, I assume, there are not many of these cases?—No; it is a matter of principle.

39054. Then, as to clerical work, I assume the medical officers to the larger unions are very seldom required to do any clerical work?—Our only knowledge of this matter arises from the replies of workhouse medical officers themselves, several of whom refer particularly to the fact that they are required to do a good deal of clerical work, that they consider is really unsuitable for medical men to be called upon to do; that the guardians are either paying or not paying; if they are assumed to be paying, it is at a higher rate than such work is worth, for they are paying a medical man to do the work a clerk could do; and if they are not paying, the medical officer is doing clerical work for which he is unpaid.

39055. Could you give some indication of the sort of work?—I am afraid I could not say specifically. It was in the general remarks that several medical officers called attention to the fact that they were required to do it.

39056. Was the complaint a common complaint in the smaller unions?—The way it comes before us is that at the end of our specific questions we asked workhouse medical officers to name any other matters to which they desired to draw attention; this was one of those to which they drew attention more frequently than any other spontaneously. I think we had ten or a dozen who drew particular attention to this matter. (Dr. Langley-Browne.) A workhouse medical officer every week has to fill up the register sometimes of a very large number of patients, and he has to put down every visit paid and also the diet for each patient, and it takes a matter of some couple of hours to write that weekly report. I think that is what is referred to by the clerical assistance. It is really a great tie upon the doctor at the end of the week to sit down and write through this medical report.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Difficulty as to fees of anaesthetists.

Proposed payment to medical officer out of cost of medical relief recovered by guardians from paupers.

Proposal to relieve workhouse medical officer of clerical work, and nature of such work.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P. 39057. It is mainly in connection with the diet, I presume?—With the diet and the visits he paid to each patient and the medicines they may have had have to be entered as well.

39058. (Mr. Nunn.) I do not think they go further than to say he is responsible for keeping that book. It is a book he could delegate to an assistant officer if he had one at his disposal, could he not?—He could do so; but there are so very, very few workhouses in the country where there is any assistant officer or resident at all.

29 Jan. 1907. 39059. The dispenser, for instance?—He could do it through the dispenser, certainly, but even then he has very often to provide his own dispenser.

39060. (Mr. Lansbury.) Do they not sometimes employ an inmate to do a good deal of that entering up for them?—Not in the register, I think. Of course, sometimes they can.

39061. (Chairman.) Diet seems to me to convey a little more than at first sight the word implies. The diet of the inmates of a hospital is, to a large extent, a matter of discipline?—But the medical officer is responsible for extras, and those extras, when ordered, have to be entered in the register.

39062. For instance, a medical officer may put all the able-bodied on to extra diet?—Yes, of course he might do that, but the able-bodied would not be in the infirmary part of the workhouse.

Need of recognised holidays for Poor Law medical officers.

39063. Then, we come to the question of holidays. At the present, is it the practice in any union if a medical officer goes on leave or holidays that he has to pay for his own substitute? (Mr. Whitaker.) As a rule, he has to. It is exceptional for the union to pay for the substitute, but there are cases in which the union does pay for the substitute, and the association thinks that should be extended and made the general principle.

39064. Some annual holiday is recognised in all unions, is it not?—Not officially; as a matter of practice, the medical officers, take practically such holiday as they like provided that they pay the cost of the substitutes—of course, a reasonable holiday.

39065. Is the pay for the substitutes for leave of absence beyond the annual holiday?—No, the guardians, as a rule, do not pay for any substitute at all for any leave of absence.

39066. (Mr. Bentham.) Is that in accordance with the replies you got?—Yes. From the replies of 231 part-time workhouse officers it appears that 220 out of the 231 have to pay for the services of their substitute; eight state that the guardians pay for the substitute; one that the guardians pay half the cost, and one that the guardians allow £8 towards the expenses of the substitute. Then as to the district medical officers, out of 560 replies 556 state that they have to pay; two are allowed a holiday, the guardians paying for the substitute; one states that the guardians pay £5 towards the expense; and one states that the guardians have paid on one occasion.

39067. (Mr. Loch.) What would the holiday ordinarily be?—Two, three, or four weeks; I do not think the guardians often pay for more than a fortnight.

Objections to uniting offices of public vaccinator and district medical officer.

39068. (Chairman.) As regards the office of public vaccinator, you see no objection to that being held by the same officer, but you think that the remuneration for the two offices should be fixed separately?—Yes, and also that the offices should not necessarily be combined. There should not be supposed to be any connection between them. For example, there should be nothing to prevent the public vaccinator being transferred to the sanitary authority if thought more convenient; there is no reason why the public vaccinator should be treated as a Poor Law officer.

39069. In advertising, the two positions should not be put together?—No, they should be put quite separate.

39070. (Mr. Bentham.) That is so at present, is it not, they are not necessarily combined?—They are not necessarily combined, but the guardians practically seek to combine them. We had a case, for example, at Chipping Norton in which the guardians refused to raise the salary of the Poor Law district medical officer, and he, considering the salary inadequate, resigned his appointment; the guardians thereupon dismissed him from the post of public vaccinator in order that they might be able to offer that with the district medical officership.

39071. Do you suggest that power should not be given to boards of guardians to combine the two?—They should not be combined.

39072. They should not be at liberty to combine the two if they thought fit?—If the same body have both appointments it is very difficult to prevent them from practically combining them.

39073. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The point is this really, is it not, that the guardians can get rid of a public vaccinator at their own option?—At a month's notice.

39074. But the remuneration of the two offices is always perfectly distinct, is it not?—The remuneration is distinct theoretically, but in practice they attempt to make the remuneration of the public vaccinator pay in part for the work of the district medical officer.

39075. The matter is one for arrangement between the medical officer and the guardians, is it not?—To an extent it is.

39076. (Chairman.) Do I understand the Poor Law guardians can get rid of the public vaccinator at a month's notice?—Yes.

39077. But assuming the public vaccinator held the post of medical officer, they would not be able to do that?—They cannot get rid of a Poor Law medical officer, of course, without the consent of the Local Government Board, if it is a resident appointment, but they can get rid of a public vaccinator at a month's notice. They use the public vaccinators as a weapon to compel the district medical officer to accept a lower salary. That was the case at Chipping Norton, and we have had another case of the same kind to deal with.

39078. They made the double appointment and took one away?—When the medical man would not accept the salary they were offering for the district medical officership, they deprived him of the public vaccinators, or sought to do so.

39079. (Sir Samuel Provis.) He wanted his salary raised, and they would not do it?—Yes, that was so.

39080. (Chairman.) So they took away the public vaccinators?—Yes.

39081. (Sir Samuel Provis.) In the end the guardians gave way, did they not?—They had to give way owing to the action of the British Medical Association. We made it known throughout the district and no medical man in Oxfordshire would accept the appointment which they offered.

39082. (Chairman.) Was that occurrence exceptional?—No, the result was exceptional, but the case, I am afraid, is not exceptional.

39083. Pressure can occasionally be brought to bear in the way you have mentioned?—Yes.

39084. Now we come to the question of superannuation; Grievances are most of the medical officers now earning superannuation?—Yes; those who have accepted office since the adoption of the system are compelled to subscribe towards the superannuation. There are really two grievances felt about the matter of superannuation. One is that medical men who may have contributed for some time in one district (they are required to contribute), if, for any reason, they move to another district, lose the entire benefit of their contributions towards superannuation, because those are kept in the district in which they have paid them; they get no benefit from what they have paid; they are compelled to pay, and yet they lose the benefit if they leave the district. The other grievance is in the case of the non-resident appointments. Those are hardly ever made permanent, being usually terminable at the end of three years or something of that kind. When that district medical officer is getting near the time when he would qualify for superannuation the guardians quietly drop him and appoint another man so that they escape having to pay superannuation. We have two or three cases of grave complaint of that; men who have reached nearly sixty years of age, when the guardians have taken advantage of their power not to reappoint them, and all they have paid goes for nothing. There is no legal redress for that at present.

39085. Is there not another difficulty or hardship connected with superannuation, that is to say, that if a man at a certain time of life leaves, or is displaced, or goes out of employment in a certain union, there is a reluctance in another union to take him on?—Yes. I am afraid I did not make my first point clear. If he moves to another union there is a reluctance to appoint him if he is getting near the time for superannuation.

39086. There seems to be considerable difficulty about attempting to pool contributions unless the terms of appointment or the salaries are more uniform throughout the country?—Yes.

39087. I suppose it is found that until there is some uniformity it would be almost impossible to have a common fund?—We recommend greater uniformity both as regards salary and terms of appointment. Our scheme would really be consistent because we recommend both.

39088. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I thought I understood you that one grievance is that the guardians get rid of a man when he is approaching sixty?—Yes.

39089. But how can they?—That is with reference to the non-residents.

39090. That is where his appointment has been renewed from year to year?—Or every few years. We have had really several cases that have seemed pitiful of men who have got near to the time when they would have been entitled to claim superannuation.

39091. (Chairman.) Taking the question of superannuation and others into consideration, you suggest, or have had under consideration, various systems of appointment?—Yes.

39092. The first is the creation of a state medical service consisting of whole-time officers to whom, perhaps, other duties in addition to that of Poor Law medical officer would be assigned; the second is the appointment of special officers, devoting as a rule only part of their time to Poor Law work; and the third is the appointment of no special officers, but a provision whereby any patient receiving medical relief under the Poor Law may be attended by any local medical practitioner who has previously intimated to the guardians his willingness to undertake such work in accordance with the regulations of the service for the time being. There apparently is no general dissatisfaction with the present system of appointment?—No, there is dissatisfaction with some results of the present system, but no general dissatisfaction with the system as a whole.

39093. What proportion of those who are dissatisfied would prefer System A. as compared with System C.?—I am afraid it would be impossible to say; the proposals for either A. or C. comes from individuals who have paid special attention to the subject, and who have urged their own remedies. I do not think it would be possible to form any estimate of the number of those who favour either system. It has not really been systematically considered by the profession.

39094. It really comes to this: that the alternatives to the present system are either the creation of a State Medical Service, or working what I may call under contract for the Poor Law?—Yes.

39095. (Mr. Gardiner.) You said the profession is dissatisfied with the results of the present system. Would you tell us in what way? I think one of the results was with regard to the superannuation; is there anything else?—There is the want of uniformity of salaries, the want of provision for holidays and the various points we enumerate in the first part of our statement.

39096. Nothing else?—No.

39097. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) It is nothing to do with the possibility of promotion?—The great majority of the Poor Law medical officers at present look rather to their private practice than to the Poor Law appointment. The Poor Law appointment forms a comparatively small proportion of their income, and the chance of promotion in a part-time service of that kind would be inappreciable.

39098. Unless you had a State service?—Unless you had a whole-time state service it would not be worth consideration for the majority of the men; they would have to sacrifice their practice if they left the district, and that would be of more importance to them than a slight increase of salary for the Poor Law appointment.

39099. (Chairman.) Coming back to C., the idea would be, I assume that any local practitioner who had intimated his willingness to accept the conditions laid down by the guardians would have his name on a list, and any person requiring relief who could not pay for it would have the option of sending for him. Is that the idea?—That is the suggestion.

39100. Do you know if that practice prevails in many parts?—No, I do not know any district where it prevails. It is very strongly urged by some members of the profession, and it is very analogous to the system which the association recommends with regard to club practice, and work of that kind. The association has come to the conclusion that that is the best way to work all kinds of private contract medical practice.

39101. Should you say that the feeling of the profession was growing in favour of Plan C.?—I am not able to say that. I know that certain districts have taken it up strongly. Our South Manchester division, largely under the influence of Dr. Milsom Rhodes, has recently passed a resolution adopting it; that was passed in a general meeting of the local members of the profession.

39102. In talking of Poor Law medical officers, I assume that Paragraph 19 mainly refers to the district medical officers?—No, it refers to both workhouse and district officers.

39103. But are not the terms of the appointment of workhouse officers more permanent?—I think it would apply to either.

39104. The tenure of appointment is more continuous in the infirmary, is it not?—In those cases where a Poor Law infirmary has a resident whole-time staff, but those are only in certain large centres; the majority of infirmaries throughout the country are staffed by part-time men.

39105. The big infirmaries in London, for instance?—Yes, and in cities such as Manchester and Liverpool some of the Poor Law infirmaries are staffed by whole-time men.

39106. A very small proportion, if any, I suppose, of the district Poor Law medical officers give up their whole time to Poor Law work?—Very few. I think there are some cases, particularly in London, where workhouse officers have districts assigned to them as well. We know of this existing in Lambeth.

39107. In Lambeth they have started the system of putting indoor and outdoor relief under one medical man?—Yes.

39108. You are not aware that that is prevalent?—No.

39109. Or that it has been adopted anywhere else?—No.

39110. With regard to non-resident medical practitioners, what are the powers of the Local Government Board that you want more frequently exercised?—The medical power to refuse to sanction appointments, where it is proposed to appoint a non-resident officer who lives a long way from the district which he is to serve. Guardians sometimes seek, as a means of reducing salaries, to take a medical officer from an adjoining district; we had a case latterly at Lutterworth, where the guardians were attempting to appoint a medical officer who lives ten miles from the district; it was proposed he should serve. He was already medical officer for one district, and they proposed to give him the other district, the object being to reduce the salary to a very low point; they think the officer will accept a reduction for taking the two appointments.

39111. (Mr. Benthams.) The medical officer must reside in the district?—Not necessarily. He cannot be appointed by the board of guardians without the sanction of the Local Government Board, but the Local Government Board may sanction the appointment if they think proper.

39112. Any deviation from the usual course would require the sanction of the Local Government Board?—Yes.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Proposal to have unlimited list of district medical officers.

Non-resident district officers and attitude of Local Government Board thereto.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

39113. That is a safeguard already, is it not?—We think in some cases the Local Government Board have been rather too tender towards the Poor Law authority, and not exercised a strong enough hold over them.

39114. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Are you thinking of cases where there is a resident medical man?—Yes, in the district.

39115. In those cases there must be a special minute of the guardians, must there not?—Yes.

39116. Stating the reasons why a non-resident should be appointed, and the appointment is only made for a limited time?—Yes, but we consider that even so, the Local Government Board in some cases might do well to refuse their sanction absolutely to appointments which they have confirmed.

39117. Your association are of course in favour of a resident man, and want a resident man appointed if practicable?—Yes.

39118. (Chairman.) Does the non-resident medical officer in consequence of the duality of his appointment become a whole-time Poor Law officer?—I do not know of any case; I have not had any case brought under my notice where there is a whole-time appointment for several districts.

39119. That is not the object?—No. I think the object is reduction of salary in the cases we have had in view.

39120. Now we come to the question of the relation of Poor Law administration to the hospitals. You say that from enquiries you have made you do not think there is any general prevalence of the arrangement by which patients are being relieved under the Poor Law who ought to be treated as out-patients of hospitals?—We have not had evidence of such prevalence.

Overlapping between Poor Law and voluntary hospitals' out-patients' department.

39121. Is not the sentence "who ought to be treated as outpatients of hospitals" a little ambiguous? Are you in favour of all out-patients being treated gratuitously at hospitals?—Yes.

39122. You are in favour of that?—Yes, we consider that such persons as are suitable for out-patient treatment should be treated gratuitously.

39123. In the hospitals?—Yes.

39124. How do you draw the distinction between them and those who should be relieved by the Poor Law?—We consider those should be relieved by the Poor Law who are unable to maintain themselves; but those should be treated as out-patients of hospitals who are able to maintain themselves, but are not able to afford the special medical attention they require. Our association is of opinion that the out-patients department should not be used for the treatment of ordinary cases of disease; if a person is able to maintain himself he should pay for his own medical treatment in ordinary cases of illness, and the out-patient department should only be used for special cases and consultations where special medical advice is required beyond what the patient can reasonably be expected to pay for himself.

Social distinction between hospital out-patients and Poor Law cases.

39125. What is your definition of an out-patient of a hospital?—He should be a person who requires medical care beyond what he can reasonably be expected to pay for, for himself.

39126. Then the distinction you draw between the out-patients of what I may call the charitable hospitals, and of the Poor Law is that those who go to hospitals would, under ordinary circumstances, be able to maintain themselves, but cannot pay for the medical treatment they require, whereas those who go to the Poor Law are unable to maintain themselves?—That is the distinction.

39127. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Would you leave it to the medical attendant to decide whether the person must go to the out-patient department and whether it is necessary for him to have those extra things?—No, we consider that hospitals should employ almoners or inquiry officers who would look into those circumstances, but we think, as regards the medical side of the matter, that no person should be treated as an out-patient of a hospital without a medical certificate as to the nature of his illness being such that he does require the treatment that he can only obtain through the hospital, and the hospitals should satisfy themselves as to their economic position.

39128. The first thing would be for his own medical attendant to say under a certificate "This person requires more attention than he can reasonably be expected to pay for"?—Yes.

39129. (Chairman.) I do not want to go very much into the subject, but is it not a matter of notoriety that a very large number of the patients at hospitals can pay towards the medical treatment they receive?—Yes, that is so: our association feels that very strongly.

39130. I assume that you would be in favour of this: that while giving medical relief to those who could otherwise maintain themselves, you would insist upon repayment in the case of those persons who could afford to pay?—Putting Poor Law cases on one side, and taking only those that can maintain themselves, the distinction we should suggest between treatment at the hospitals and treatment elsewhere would be in respect of the nature of the illness; it would be that the illness was of a special character, requiring special skill or special treatment which would be more expensive than the patient could afford, but that in the interests of providence they should be required to contribute to provident dispensaries or clubs or institutions of that kind, by which they could get medical care for their ordinary illnesses.

39131. And, in the case of members of a provident institution, upon receiving an order from the doctor, they would get at the hospitals the attendance that you mention?—Yes, the special attendance they required; ordinary illness treated through the provident arrangement, and special illness at the hospital.

39132. The patients should be all treated gratuitously but an inquiry should be made into their circumstances, so that they should contribute according to their means?—They should not pay the hospital, but go to some other institution. If they can afford to pay, they should do it through some other source, not the hospitals; the hospitals should only treat those who cannot afford to pay. That is the essential distinction. The hospital is only to treat those cases which cannot afford to pay for the medical treatment they require.

39133. (Bishop of Ross.) What would be your idea for the treatment of a person who was in fairly good circumstances, but was requiring an expensive operation that would cost say, £50? He could afford a £5 note or a £10 note, but could not afford £50?—We consider that there is a necessity for the provision of public nursing homes into which such cases could be taken and treated by their own medical attendants or treated by a specialist who might be able to accept a reduced fee if he thought the circumstances justified a reduced fee. We do not think that the people who can afford to pay should be made a burthen upon charitable institutions. We think there should be some machinery whereby they should pay according to their means: they should be in separate pay wards or institutions. You should not mix up the provident with the charitable institutions.

39134. (Chairman.) Let me get clearly how your ideas operate: a well-to-do person goes to a hospital for some serious operation: would you charge him the cost?—If there were any institution within reach that he could be sent to, I would not admit him to the hospital.

39135. Not even if he paid?—If it were a case of absolute emergency and he required immediate attendance, of course you must admit him, but if there was time to send him to some other institution, I should send him to a nursing home, or if you have proper paying wards you would admit him to the paying wards; but if he is admitted to the paying wards, if he pays for his maintenance he should pay for his medical attendance.

39136. (Bishop of Ross.) The difficulty is he may be able to pay for his maintenance, but not able to pay the specialist, whose services he requires?—Why should he not pay what he can afford to pay to each? Why should he pay all for maintenance and nothing for the medical attendance? It would be a proposition of the association that he should pay for both.

39137. If both took a reduced fee, it would be all right?—Yes.

Gratuitous treatment by voluntary hospitals patients to pay. Criteria of hospital domicile treatment and for gratuitous application thereof.

Proposed special nursing homes for paying patients exclusive of such patient from voluntary hospitals

Objections to "paying" patients in voluntary
hospitals.

39138. (Mr. Nunn.) May I ask if your association is in favour of pay wards generally in hospitals?—That is a controverted question, very controverted. Perhaps I might refer to the exact word of the resolution which was carried on the matter? "That it is desirable that public nursing homes should be established for patients who, being ineligible for the voluntary hospitals, are yet unable to pay the charges usually made in private nursing homes. That pay wards should not be established in connection with general hospitals." By "in connection" it does not mean they should not be part of the building, but that the services of the staff of the hospital should not be assigned to those pay wards; that they should be under entirely separate management, separate institutions, so that the patient who is admitted may be attended by any doctor of his selection, and not necessarily by the staff of the general hospital.

39139. (Miss Hill.) I gather you rather think if there were almoners or other people looking thoroughly into the circumstances of the case so that those cases were not admitted free to the hospitals, such paying institutions would grow up; either pay wards or nursing institutions would be established to meet this unquestioned want, and it would be better to have them quite distinct?—Yes.

39140. (Mr. Nunn.) Do I understand that the pay ward established in conjunction with such a hospital, but not actually in the hospital would derive any economic advantage from its connection with the hospital so that it could offer treatment cheaper?—That would be a difficulty, of course; if they used part of the building of the hospital, it may be they would save on the item of rent, but if the institution were to use part of the hospital, it should pay something into the hospital funds.

39141. Then what is the advantage of being connected with the hospital?—None.

39142. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) May I ask whether you see any danger under your system of a large increase in the number of doctors inclined to take very small fees indeed, setting themselves up in various directions to get these small patients?—I do not think that danger has been contemplated: I think the reasons which prevent men of any standing, or who have any desire to have any reputation from undercharging would prevail in that case as they do at present.

Objections to
voluntary
hospitals charging fees from out-patients.

39143. (Chairman.) Coming back to the question of hospitals, the British Medical Association I assume, from your evidence, do not approve of the practice which I understand prevails in certain hospitals in London by which the out-patients pay a small sum of say threepence?—No, they do not approve of that.

39144. The ground being, I suppose, that the payment of that sum does not cover the cost of the treatment rendered, and is misleading in the mind of the patient?—Yes. The patient thinks he is paying for all that he gets, just as in the case of the contribution of the working classes in some towns to the hospital funds: large contributions are collected under the Hospital Saturday Funds, and many of the working-class consider that they are paying for the whole cost of their admission and they are perfectly entitled to use the hospitals quite freely for all their ordinary illnesses on the ground merely of those contributions.

39145. Really what you are contending for is that in cases where the people cannot pay the full price of the cost of treatment, they should pay nothing?—The really poor.

39146. The poor who can maintain themselves when they are in health, but who cannot put by and have not the funds necessary to meet the medical treatment they require?—Yes, there are three classes: those who cannot maintain themselves who are provided for by the Poor Law; the persons who can maintain themselves, but cannot pay for special medical attendance, who should be provided for by the charitable hospitals; then the poorer middle class who would be provided for by nursing homes and institutions of that kind, where they could pay a certain proportion, pay the bare cost, but could not pay the very high fees of leading specialists.

39147. (Mr. Bentham.) How do you suggest those homes should be maintained if the payments do not meet the expenses?—I think they would: I say they could pay the bare cost, but not the fees of the great specialists or the charges of a private nursing home. The charges of some nursing homes are very high and they provide a luxurious scale of treatment that is not really necessary.

39148. Do you suggest that these homes should be provided by some public authority, or would you leave it to the ordinary spontaneous supply of a demand?—We think they should be under public management, as far as possible.

39149. And established by some public authority?—Established by some public authority. We think that it is very undesirable that these nursing homes should be carried on as speculations.

39150. (Chairman.) Coming back to the classes which you enumerated to me: where would you put the members of a provident medical institution? You would put them, I suppose, under the heading of those who could afford to pay for a certain kind of medical treatment but who would have to be provided for gratuitously in the case of any severe illness or operation?—Yes, all who were suitable for medical attendance as members of friendly societies or provident dispensaries, all persons in receipt of a weekly wage, practically speaking, would be provided for by the hospitals in the case of special illness.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Classes of patients suitable for voluntary hospitals.

39151. Do you assume that the weekly payments to provident institutions provide sums which remunerate the medical practitioners associated with them?—In some cases. In our Contract Practice Report we have analysed this matter very closely. Perhaps I may refer to that. The opinion of the profession for some time has been that many kinds of contract practice are underpaid, and require to be put on a different basis. We consider it is undesirable there should be the existing monopoly in contract practices: we think they should be thrown open—so that all the patients should have a choice of all the medical men in the district. With regard to remuneration, that differs. In some parts of the country, it is distinctly unremunerative; in other parts of the country I think there is general satisfaction with the payment.

Attitude of British Medical Association to contract practice and to Provident Medical Institutions.

39152. There is a certain class of provident institution which, either from its numbers or from the amounts weekly paid, is able, in the judgment of the Medical Association, to remunerate adequately the medical men employed?—Yes, for ordinary illnesses.

39153. I assume that your association are strongly in favour of these provident institutions, and desire if possible that they should be put upon that basis?—A strong section of the profession regards all kinds of contract practice as injurious to medical practitioners, but the prevalent opinion in the association is this: this matter has been very carefully debated and the conclusion was as stated in the Contract Practice Report, p. 28, "Conclusions and Recommendations." "There are districts in which it appears to be necessary, under present conditions, that certain classes of the community should be enabled to provide for the cost of medical attendance and expenses directly related thereto by some system of small periodic payments." That is the medium opinion. There are members of the profession who consider that the contract practice is really the best system, and there are others who consider that it is entirely injurious, and to be avoided as far as possible, but the report represents the definite moderate opinion of the profession.

39154. There must be a contract system in connection with these provident institutions?—Yes.

39155. (Miss Hill.) That is the only way in which certain classes of the people could pay for their treatment?—That is the opinion of the association.

39156. It has to be rather on the principle of insurance. It is not only a contract but an insurance?—Insurance is the essence of the system.

39157. (Chairman.) Therefore I suppose you come to the conclusion that although there may be something in the abstract objection to the contract system it is the only system, properly worked, by which the mass of the poor could insure themselves against sickness?—Yes, we recognise that those who receive a weekly wage must be able to insure themselves by a weekly payment against the risk of cost of medical attendance.

Proposed nursing homes for paying patients.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Proposed special nursing homes for paying patients, question of their management and scale of medical officers' fees therein.

39158. (Miss Hill.) And that is a much better form of small payment than the 3d. when they come to the hospital, which seems to them to pay for that particular attendance?—Yes, it is very much better.

39159. (Mr. Nunn.) I should like to have clear in my own mind exactly how the deficit with regard to these small paying nursing homes is to be made up?—I am afraid I must have given rise to a misapprehension there. I do not think the association would suggest there should be a deficit. We consider it is quite possible to make them self-supporting by much smaller charges than are made by existing nursing homes.

39160. By cutting down the luxuries?—By careful management. We consider they should be under public management, so that there should be no suggestion of private profits. They should not be paying homes for the owners or the medical men to derive a profit from; they should be run at cost price.

39161. Would a specialist who came to perform an operation be paid his full fee?—No, the profession would be willing to reduce the fees as they always are if they see cause for it.

39162. (Mr. Loch.) What authority would build these homes?—I am afraid the association have not gone into that; they have come to the conclusion that they should be put under public management, but have not considered where the public management should come from; I think the idea was that they should be on the lines of a hospital or of the large lunatic hospitals.

39163. Would it be municipal?—The Committee did not suggest municipal management.

39164. (Mr. Bentham.) Is it likely that a medical man would take part payment for the operation he has performed and allow the authority to get full pay for the maintenance?—The whole scale of medical fees is based upon the principle of people paying according to their means; the fees throughout the medical profession are based upon that principle, that is to say various people have different scales of charges, the same medical man will charge half-a-crown to one person and half-a-guinea to another patient for a visit.—(Dr. Macdonald.) That is what happens in the present paying wards of the hospitals; what you find there is that the medical man gets no fee at all and the hospital gets its cost of maintenance.

39165. The object is to get a scheme by which the medical man would get a fee which he cannot do in a voluntary hospital; my point is, is it likely that the medical man will continue to perform these operations for a very small amount and allow the public authority who has provided the institution to be fully reimbursed for all the outlay; is it not natural that the medical man would say, "The public authority must stand part of this loss; why should it fall on the medical man"?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Would that be the case? I know when I was in private practice if I went to a London consulting surgeon and told him that I had a patient who required an operation but could not afford to pay the full fee, if he was a reasonable man he would say: "I will do the operation at a reduced fee, if the patient cannot afford the full fee."

39166. (Mr. Phelps.) Do you think it would be the same if it was a public institution?—I do not think specialists would charge the full fee to those. At present I am expressing my own opinion; it has not been considered.

39167. (Mr. Loch.) Are you of opinion there are in the hospitals a great many cases in which, if a full fee could not be paid, a certain amount could be paid?—Yes.

39168. Have you any statistical evidence on that head?—We have no statistical evidence on that head, but it is common knowledge that patients are admitted to hospitals at present who could afford to pay if there were proper provision.

39169. Would the result of this proposal of yours be to move a great many cases practically out of the hospitals into these new homes?—A certain number, but I could not give any idea of the proportion.

39170. Would not your check have to be at the hospitals?—Yes.

39171. How would you supervise a hospital check of an institution outside your own control?—I suppose we assume that the hospital would protect its own funds by refusing to admit cases if they knew other provision could be made—by refusing cases which could afford to pay.

39172. If the hospital stands as organised at the present time would it be at all to its interest necessarily, unless the profession governed the hospital from this point of view?—(Dr. Langley Browne.) The proposal by the Association was that all nursing homes should be licensed by either the sanitary authority or by provision made in the Bill for State registration for nurses, and therefore they should be under the inspection of the sanitary authority.

39173. That is with regard to the nursing homes, I am thinking of the other side of the question: a patient goes to the hospital, and would in ordinary circumstances be admitted. He could pay £10 for an operation, but the hospital has no particular interest in getting that patient of the hospital to give the specialist that £10?—No, they have not.

39174. Who is to come in at the hospital, for it must be there if anywhere, and say that patient can pay £10 and must go to a home, and have the patient removed to a home?—I think the enquiry officer, who should exist at every hospital.

39175. That enquiry officer would have to serve in the interests of the profession generally instead of only the hospital, because he might pass the case as not so bad?—That would be so.

39176. Can you control the thing really unless you bring the hospitals under control?—No, you cannot until you bring it under the control of the general agreement of the hospital authorities, they are disposed, I think very largely now, to fall in with the views of the profession if those views are shown to be fair.

39177. Your proposal really comes at last to there being a general agreement which would be more or less in legal form, and would throw definite obligations on the hospitals and definite obligations on another group of institutions, namely the nursing homes?—That is so.

39178. That carries us on a good way; can you at all tell us how far this has been discussed by the hospitals themselves, and how far at all they seem willing to accept terms of this kind?—It has been largely discussed by the association and the different hospitals; we have already communicated with several hospitals, and the matter has been before the boards of the different hospitals. We have not got the answer of the boards yet to anything like a complete extent but in a great many cases they are willing, and in fact they have appointed enquiry officers for some number.

39179. Comparing the work of an enquiry officer as done ordinarily in a hospital with the enquiry which you would want done in order to ascertain whether a person of fairly good position would be able to pay ten or twelve guineas, I think you would say at once that the position and the fitness of the ordinary enquiry officer as at present employed would not quite suit that task?—I think that would be so. At present I do not think there is any system for doing that, but the enquiry might be put to the applicant. First you would have to do away with the whole idea that you can get into hospitals by a ticket given by a subscriber. That has to go first. Then I think that hospitals must be provided for those who really cannot afford to pay ordinary fees for the special things they want; then enquiries might be made, except in urgent cases, when of course any case would be taken in straight away; except in an urgent case there is time for an enquiry to be made whether a person can afford to pay.

39180. Accepting in principle your proposal I think it is a question of administration; consider for instance the London Hospital or any large hospital, what number of enquiry officers would be necessary really to understand whether Mrs. So-and-So could pay such and such an amount, or her husband could; would they have to bear the brunt of that investigation, that is the test of it?—I think it would to a certain extent. If the number of patients were properly limited then it would be quite an easy matter to do it. (Dr. Macdonald.) Might I suggest one thing with regard to that; there is a recommendation from the association that no patient should be admitted to the hospital without a recommendation from a doctor in his neighbourhood. The doctor is pretty certain to know whether the man is capable of paying a reasonable fee or whether he should be treated entirely charitably in the hospital. This doctor's statement in the matter ought to be sufficient.

Proposed license an inspection of nursing homes for paying patients.

Attitude of voluntary hospitals as to excluding patients as to pay, a question of machinery for such exclusion.

Effect on voluntary hospitals of proposed homes for paying patients.

Proposed admission of voluntary hospitals or recommendation of outside doctor only, and attitude of hospitals thereto.

39181. I am glad to have heard that, that is to say whatever is done by the enquiry officer he will be braced up very effectively by what the medical officer says, and practically the admission to the hospital will in a good measure lie with the medical man recommending the case?—Yes.

39182. Are the hospitals at all in favour of that system now?—(Mr. Whitaker.) A certain number are and others have considered it. The proposal has been very carefully considered by King's College in connection with their removal to South London. They met a joint committee of the British Medical Association in South London who put forward that proposal. Bolingbroke Hospital in South London, I believe, works entirely on that system now. I have had to go through the replies of the hospitals to certain enquiries by the Association. Many of them say they are quite open to consider the matter, but these proposals have never been worked out definitely enough for hospitals generally to give a definite assent to them.

39183. Then practically the system depends on a point which hardly comes out in your statement, I think, namely, that medical men in every district should be allied to the hospital in such a way as to send in cases?—That comes out in recommendations which the Association has made in another connection with regard to hospitals, but it was not realised that we should have to deal with this matter in giving evidence before the Royal Commission, therefore those were not put in in our statement of evidence.

39184. May I press the point a little further. Would you reduce the number of patients that were sent to the hospital by at the same time sending more to the provident dispensary?—Yes. Our proposal is that every medical practitioner in the district of a provident dispensary should be a member of the staff of the dispensary, and so he would be one of the medical officers attending. (Dr. Macdonald.) Do you mean the provident dispensaries or the nursing homes?

39185. The provident dispensary as clearing out the out-patient department to that extent; are the medical profession prepared to accept these conditions so that a medical man who bought his practice in a poor district comparatively, but with a certain return, would become a member of the staff of the provident dispensary practising in connection with it more or less, so far as he is called upon, and at the same time use his influence to increase that dispensary and at the same time clear the out-patients' department of the hospital, and send his cases there for treatment?—(Mr. Whitaker.) It would work automatically in time as the members became used to the arrangement.

39186. Would the members of the profession be bound more or less professionally to take this line?—Yes, they would.

39187. Do you think it is possible, having regard to the personal views of medical men in particular districts?—They have been negligent in the past, but are becoming gradually educated; since the Medical Association has been more active they are being more educated; in districts where they have been apathetic in the past they have been more active lately.

39188. Have there not been waves of medical opinion with regard to these medical matters which have been followed by periods when very little was done in this direction; would you not have to rely upon a law or professional feeling of a very strong description that would carry you through a generation or two?—That we have now; we consider that the British Medical Association's present organisation provides a machinery for this kind of work which has not existed in the past, and gives definiteness to agreements of this kind which has not existed before.

39189. I think it is common knowledge that the staff of the London Hospital was opposed to the three penny payment. Do you think that in view of the managers still controlling the hospitals as they now do, the medical staff would have a power of their own to carry out such a proposal as this, taking for granted that the board of general managers may be against it?—Against abolishing the payment.

39190. Yes, or to carry out your scheme?—I think the boards of hospitals are in favour of the carrying out of the scheme of co-ordination with the provident dispensaries; we have the general tendency to that in London.

39191. It is not a mere general approval, it is accepted so that it becomes part of their scheme of life?—Yes; I have just been going through the replies for another purpose, and on that it is remarkable how many hospitals who only give general replies on other matters go out of their way to say that they would welcome co-ordination of the provident dispensaries.

39192. How many of those hospitals have a thorough system of almoners or enquirers?—I could not say the number now, I am afraid, but two or three claim that they have a big staff.

39193. There would be very few of the total number?—Of the twelve large hospitals, those that have medical schools, I should say that half claim definitely that they have a system of medical enquiry that they regard as satisfactory.

39194. Have you yourself examined that at all to see how far really they know whom they are passing?—I know the medical practitioners of the district do not consider that their system is so satisfactory as the hospital managers suppose.

39195. One is only afraid that a proposal which seems so extremely good from many points of view may after all be built on sand, unless the profession gives it a certain consolidation which it will ultimately possibly depend on?—That is what the British Medical Association are now striving very earnestly to do through their organisation; we have the means of bringing medical men together and of educating them. A Committee, of which Dr. Ford Anderson is chairman, is drawing the attention of all the practitioners throughout London to these matters, and is endeavouring to bring about a definite agreement.

39196. Are you in favour of the Poor Law cases being dealt with under your C. Scheme mentioned just above?—Of course I could not speak officially on behalf of the association as to that.

39197. Is not that C. Scheme consistent with your provident dispensary scheme?—Quite; that is the argument of those who advocate it.

39198. Therefore if you advocate the one, which you do with regard to out-patients, are you not perforce led to advocate the other with regard to the Poor Law?—The Association has not come to that conclusion, but those who advocate the C. System urge that argument. They say that logically if we approve this system with regard to contract medical practice apart from the Poor Law we ought to approve the same system with regard to the public appointments.

39199. Would the medical officers of the Poor Law who are at present doing work which would come under the C. Scheme approve of this?—We do not know; I should think as a rule not.

39200. (Chairman.) Is the Association in favour of a minimum medical fee?—The Association so far has refused to fix a minimum fee for private practice. The question has come up several times, and in many districts there is a strong feeling that it should be left to each medical man to put his own price on his own brains. With regard to contract practice, the Association is in favour of fixing minimum rates, but with regard to the ordinary fee for private visiting they have refused to fix a minimum so far. One or two districts have been in favour of fixing a minimum, but I do not think the Association generally is in favour.

39201. (Dr. Downes.) I think some years ago one of your branches—I think it was the Shropshire branch—drew up a scale of fees?—Yes.

39202. What became of that?—It was really Dr. De Styrap's scale, and that has been accepted in many parts of the country and in the colonies. We had before one of the committees of which I am secretary a set of rules of one of our branches—I believe it was in New Zealand—which proposed to adopt Dr. De Styrap's scale as binding on their members; but in the United Kingdom I should say generally the opinion of the profession has been against making such a scale binding; they would adopt it as a guide to practitioners, but not to make it binding on them not to charge less.

39203. Dr. De Styrap's scale was drawn up about thirty or forty years ago, I think?—Yes.

39204. Are the scales which he then advised still in operation?—They are not really applicable to certain conditions in certain respects.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Proportion of voluntary hospitals having almoners.

Attitude of British Medical Association to system of unlimited number of district medical officers and minimum medical fees.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Brown, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

39205. The cost of attending has increased, has it not? —Yes, to some extent, although there are lower scales in some districts.

39206. (Mr. Loch.) Is it your experience in the profession that when a minimum is fixed it becomes the normal?—That is the fear, that if a minimum is fixed it will become the normal.

39207. (Chairman.) Is that the main objection, or is it that the local conditions are so varied?—I think one great objection is the desire not to interfere with individual liberty more than is proved to be necessary.

39208. You think without a minimum fee you could work Scheme C. on that idea of provident dispensaries?—If that Scheme C. were accepted of course there would be an agreement by which practitioners would come under a kind of contract; that would be quite different from ordinary private fees.

39209. And the others?—Those are the same. There you have a rate, and wherever you have a rate the association is in favour of fixing a limit.

39210. So a minimum fee is not necessary for either of those two?—No, the question of minimum fee would not apply to those, because it is a question of a certain rate.

39211. (Mr. Loch.) Is it not the outcome of this pamphlet that you would have rates of payment on the contract lines in different parts of England submitted to a committee of the Medical Association and approved by them?—No. The view of the Association is that no central committee should attempt to prescribe what should be the rate in any part of the country; it must be left to local committees.

39212. It must be local?—Yes, certainly, to the general meeting of our local "Division," which is our unit: it would be left to the general meeting of the division to say what should be the rate in that district.

39213. You introduce by your new method the wage or salary system?—Yes.

39214. In so far as it touches any form of contract?—Yes, that has been recognised definitely in about the last four years, and there are now about twenty divisions of the association which have laid down rules which enable them to fix rates, and which have passed resolutions fixing rates.

39215. Taking Liverpool as a centre, the profession there would set down terms which would come under contract—we will say the "C." form—which would be acceptable to the men at the hospitals and in the Poor Law?—They would be prepared to specify the rate which would be acceptable throughout the city.

39216. (Chairman.) You said in twenty divisions?—I am speaking quite roughly, from recollection. I think it is about twenty divisions that have adopted resolutions as to rates.

39217. How many divisions have you altogether?—In the United Kingdom, close upon 200.

39218. So that it is one-tenth?—Yes. Those are chiefly in England and Wales; none of the Irish divisions, and very few of the Scotch divisions have adopted it.

39219. Is the idea gaining ground?—Very strongly; it is growing rapidly. The association was re-organised about four years ago. Up till that time we had not actually several small units with definite rules dealing with this matter, but as one district adopted them, and found them to work well, others have adopted them very largely, but it is left very largely to local autonomy.

39220. (Mr. Nunn.) May I take your classification of these patients: first, there is the Poor Law patient; then there is the patient who is given free hospital treatment, and then there is the patient who makes a smaller payment in a nursing home. It is difficult, of course, but it would be the almoner's business to decide which class belonged to the class above the out-patient's department, and in making the distinction between the Poor Law cases and the class of patients for hospital treatment would the association be prepared to accept subscription to some recognised dispensary or sick benefit club?—That would be one test. I do not say that would be the sole test, but a very valuable test, that every patient who paid to a provident institution of some kind would be eligible for admission to the hospital.

39221. Under those circumstances?—Yes.

39222. (Mr. Loch.) The beds of the hospitals (and your proposal would cover organisation inside the hospital as well as outside), are now very often filled, are they not, by medical men attached to the hospitals or actually working in them?—You mean they admit patients at their own discretion?

39223. Yes, patients in which they have an interest from various points of view?—That is so.

39224. You would propose really that all that should be set aside?—I do not know. I suppose they would select suitable cases; it would be all right, I think, because there would be objection from the profession outside, and possibly from the hospital, if the staff took to admitting cases which could afford to pay.

39225. I am not looking at it from the point of view if they could afford to pay. You have at the hospitals now a large number of beds and the admission to those beds is in the hands very largely of the medical men who work the hospitals?—Yes.

39226. You propose that a new scheme should come in by which the power which they have would have to be given up because under it patients would be admitted not on that basis of the medical men's personal or scientific interest in the case, but they would be admitted on the basis of possible payment, which might produce just the contrary results, and might have the effect of taking patients in which the medical man was interested on the grounds I have mentioned out of the hospital and putting them in one of the nursing homes. How do you propose to make those two points of view coincide in any way?—I think the test would be in the rules of the institution: if the rules of the institution provided that a person who could afford to pay for his medical attendance should not be admitted that rule would be binding on a member of the staff; if they sought to admit a patient of that kind, the whole question would be a question of the suitability of the patient.

39227. There is the medical question that a man may for his own purposes want to have a case under his own control and disposal?—Could not he do that in the nursing home in the same way? That would be admissible. The idea of the public nursing home is that it should be open to each patient that he should be attended by the doctor of his own choice in that home, and if a practitioner had a case of a kind which he was interested in, which could afford to pay, there would be nothing to prevent that case going to the nursing home and the practitioner attending on him there.

39228. The medical man would look after that case in the home?—Yes.

39229. (Mr. Nunn.) Supposing the schools were attached to the hospitals and there were not schools attached to the homes, I suppose for the sake of the schools certain cases would be taken in the hospitals?—I take it that all arrangements would be interpreted reasonably, and the public advantage looked to.

39230. To what extent is the Association prepared to throw open the hospitals, as it proposes to throw open the dispensaries to the medical practitioners of the district?—It has not yet considered the idea of throwing the hospitals open to all the medical men in the district. We have considered the case of the suburban and provincial hospitals, and it is suggested they should be worked on cottage hospital lines, that is to say, the staff should be those practitioners of the district who would be prepared to conform to the regulations and whom the patients choose to employ. There would be no proposal to apply that to all the hospitals, for example the large London teaching hospitals; at any rate I have not heard of the proposal.

39231. You would do it in the provinces?—(Dr. Ford Anderson.) It would be applicable to a suburban hospital like the Hampstead Hospital, but as Mr. Whitaker says, not to St. Bartholomew's or King's. The idea is that in those suburban hospitals the attendance should be given by the medical man of the patient.

39232. (Mr. Loch.) Are you in favour of the Poor Law infirmaries being made available for general medical relief?—I am.

39233. And medical attendance?—Very much so.

Existing system of admission to voluntary hospitals or recommendation of outside doctors and proposals thereof.

Method of fixing rates for medical contract practice.

Proposal to make subscriptions to provident institutions a qualification for admission to voluntary hospitals.

Question of making all resident doctors eligible for staff of hospitals in town and country.

Proposal to raise standard of Poor Law infirmaries to that of voluntary
hospitals.

39234. (Chairman.) We come next to the proposal for the assimilation of Poor Law infirmaries to general hospitals. You suggest that in certain respects the provision for the care of the sick in Poor Law infirmaries should be assimilated to that of hospitals supported by voluntary contributions. Of course that is rather a broad general contention. You would not wish that every Poor Law infirmary in a rural district should be brought up to the standard of say a hospital in London?—(Mr. Whitaker.) I think that is the opinion of the Association. May we take paragraph 26 in conjunction with that, because the opinion of the Association I think is that you could bring that about if you had greater amalgamation of rural Poor Law infirmaries, that the infirmaries should be brought up to the standard, and the supply of food and drugs should be brought up to the standard in a well-managed London hospital.

39235. You say I assume that the big Poor Law infirmaries in London do approximate to the standard of the hospitals?—I might perhaps say with regard to this that one of our members, an infirmary superintendent, said that he quite agreed with this paragraph, except that it should be worded the other way, namely, that the large hospitals should be brought up to the standard of the London Poor Law infirmaries.

39236. Putting it in that way what you would wish is that there should be more uniformity in the Poor Law infirmaries so that they should be brought up?—Yes, to a really satisfactory standard.

Question of
medical students at
Poor Law
infirmaries.

39237. That is as to the standard of nursing, food and drugs, the provision for the purpose of important operations in the institutions where possible, and the use of the institutions for the purpose of clinical medical instruction. That means, I assume, that you would attach medical schools to them?—Or make them available for the medical schools; you would throw the Poor Law infirmaries open for the purpose of instruction.

Number of beds in London
Poor Law
infirmaries
and voluntary hospitals

39238. I do not know if my figures are correct, but I got some figures out the other day, in which it appears that the number of beds in the Poor Law infirmaries, including the rural ones, which are in the workhouses, is something like 60,000, that is a rough estimate, and the number of beds in the general hospitals is about 18,000 or 19,000?—(Dr. Ford Anderson.) May I say the figures I have got are these, so far as London is concerned; 15,784 beds in the twenty-eight London infirmaries as compared with 10,601 in the voluntary hospitals. Those are the correct figures for London, I believe.

Question of
medical students at
Poor Law
infirmaries.

39239. Then assuming, as I think we must all agree, that the Poor Law infirmaries have a larger number of beds and that they deal with many chronic cases, is that not a considerable loss to medical science?—(Mr. Whitaker.) A very serious loss. The difficulty as to chronic cases is very strongly felt by the profession; that the medical student in the ordinary hospital does not really see a sufficient number of the cases that he will be likely to meet in private practice, and that he would see a far larger number of those in the Poor Law infirmaries.

39240. It being the practice to remove those cases to the Poor Law infirmaries?—Yes. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) I should like to say that there is one aspect of the case that I think ought to be impressed upon this Commission; it is that you see in those Poor Law infirmaries the termination of diseases to an extent which you cannot see them in voluntary hospitals; such a case as disseminated sclerosis, in which the system degenerates through the nervous system, and the patient dies a lingering death. It is very important for the practitioner to know those cases. You see them in Poor Law infirmaries, but the medical student in the voluntary hospital never sees them. Also cases like rheumatoid arthritis, which is a very prevalent disease; you see that in its termination in infirmaries, but you do not see it in the voluntary hospitals. Then there are many casualties and many operations, so that the opportunities for a medical student in the Poor Law infirmary are perhaps in a different degree, but to a great extent, nearly as good as in the voluntary hospitals.

39241. Therefore you attach great importance to it?—Great importance.

39242. How the clinical schools should be created or managed would be of course a matter of arrangement?—

Might I make a suggestion? I see no objection to appointing for short service outside practitioners as a visiting staff, and also to admitting senior students for keeping the records. I believe such an arrangement would quicken the life of the institutions and do incalculable good, and help to utilise the enormous material which exists in those Poor Law infirmaries.

39243. What is your experience with regard to patients? It is sometimes suggested as an argument against the creation of medical schools that the patients do not like to be diagnosed or examined?—I think they get to like it; they like to show their importance, they glory in a bad case. I recollect a patient with a peculiar aneurism who delighted in going round to the different hospitals of London showing his case.

39244. You think that is an objection which really wears away in practice?—I am sure that at the medical societies in London it is quite easy to obtain a full attendance of patients to show their cases; that does not look as if they objected to it. (Dr. Macdonald.) I do not think there is any real ground for that objection. I think it is more a sentimental difficulty than otherwise. I find in my experience of a country hospital that the people make no objection to it.

39245. It is an outside objection?—I think so altogether.

39246. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Do you not think some people do object? I have been told that some patients have a very strong objection?—Not as a rule.

39247. Should not there be some refuge for people who have a very strong objection against this?—I agree with you there ought to be. Medical men as a rule exercise discretion in the matter. If they find a patient has a reasonable objection to being examined they take care that he or she is not exposed to more examination than is necessary. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) With regard to the figures, I have it in my notes that there were 2,900 operations done in the Poor Law infirmaries last year; 2,900 operations, all done by the senior medical officers with the assistants in the house.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907

Question of attitude of patients to medical students.

Number of operations performed in Poor Law
infirmaries and facilitie for such operation

39248. (Mr. Loch.) With no other medical man assisting?—With the junior assistants probably. That was spread over the different infirmaries. An immense experience thus goes to the senior medical officer of such institutions; it is a most valuable appointment for him. It gives him individual skill, but his knowledge is not diffused through the medical profession, and it is not utilised for the public benefit.

39249. (Chairman.) That means the operations were performed by one man?—Yes, one man in each infirmary.

39250. (Dr. Downes.) With assistants?—Yes, of course.

39251. (Mr. Nunn.) How many of those infirmaries have operating rooms?—I think all the infirmaries have.

39252. That have been approved by the Association?—I have been through a good many of them; I think they are very good. I think that the weak point about these infirmaries is the excessive number of probationers on the nursing staff.

39253. (Chairman.) I think we have got so far as the question of establishing medical schools in connection with infirmaries?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes.

39254. Then you suggest that there should be clinical records kept of cases?—Yes, we do.

39255. Is that not done now?—Not in all infirmaries; that is, it is not done scientifically. We think it adds greatly to the value of the work, and makes men do their work better if they are required to keep such records as would be kept in a general hospital.

39256. Is there some authorised record which is in vogue in most hospitals?—In the large teaching hospitals there are recognised systems of case-taking, and of keeping certain records.

39257. And you would suggest that the Poor Law infirmaries should fit into that?—Yes, throughout the country, including quite the small workhouse infirmaries.

39258. You consider there should be a uniform system of record?—A uniform system of keeping the purely clinical facts, the purely medical facts.

Need of clinical record of cases in Poor Law
infirmaries

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Proposal to make Poor Law infirmaries open to public inspection.

Need of power to call in and pay for specialists for Poor Law infirmaries cases.

Proposed combination of rural unions for medical relief with a view to classification by institutions.

The sanitary authority should be solely responsible for notifiable infectious diseases.

39259. Your next point, I see, is as regards the institutions being open to reasonable public inspection; what have you to say on that?—The point of it is, that you can only get admission to a Poor Law infirmery by order of a guardian. If any respectable person went to a large general hospital at a reasonable time and asked to be allowed to go over that institution, he would be allowed to do so. We consider that the Poor Law infirmaries should be open to public inspection in the same way, and that it is a guarantee of the efficiency of the institution that any respectable person going at a reasonable time should be allowed to go over it, and see how the place is being conducted.

39260. But surely the entrance into a hospital is optional, and at the discretion of the Secretary, or whoever may be there in authority?—Yes, it is at discretion, but leave would not be refused to a person who went at a reasonable time. With the Poor Law infirmery, on the other hand, you would not get admission except by a special order from a guardian.

39261. And that order would have to be obtained in advance?—Yes.

39262. In Paragraph 25 you say, "Provision should be made for obtaining special medical or surgical assistance in Poor Law infirmaries where necessary"; what do you mean by that?—That in cases of a special nature, for example, a difficult case requiring special skill for diagnosis, or requiring special skill for an operation, there should be provision, whereby the person who possesses that skill can be called in and paid for doing whatever is necessary.

39263. Is that not the practice now?—No. It comes really under the same head as the suggestion as to consultations in Paragraphs 10, 11, and 12.

39264. Your next proposal is the amalgamation of groups of infirmaries, and that is associated rather with your suggestion as regards the classification of work-houses. In both those cases it would be necessary to increase the area if you want compulsory classification, would it not?—Yes.

39265. Would your idea be to have so large an area that you would only have one particular form of disease treated in one infirmery?—That certain groups of diseases should be treated in one infirmery; for example, you would probably provide special infirmaries for incurable cases.

39266. Of course that would only be possible where there were large centres of population?—Or in very large country districts.

39267. You see you would remove these patients some little distance from their relatives, and they might be in a dying state?—Yes.

39268. Then according to Paragraph 28, you would wish that the responsibility for dealing with all cases of infectious disease should be placed upon the sanitary authority?—Yes. There are very varying practices we find in that matter. Both authorities have the power to deal with these cases. In some instances, the sanitary authority deals with all these cases; and in some instances the guardians deal with their own infectious diseases, and sometimes they send them to the sanitary authority, paying the sanitary authority for the care of them. We think it is much better that the sanitary authority should deal with all questions of infectious disease.

39269. Is not the tendency in our days to increase the number and scope of infectious diseases, and to treat as infectious diseases diseases which were not previously considered so?—Many diseases are now found to be infectious which were not previously thought to be so, such as phthisis for example.

39270. This recommendation (28), would result in gradually giving to the sanitary authority more and more cases to deal with, would it not?—I think perhaps the Committee had in mind notifiable infectious diseases, say, those that would be compulsorily notified under the Notification Act. (Dr. Langley Browne.) I think it is claimed very often that the guardians are not bound to provide for infectious diseases. I know they hold in some places that the sanitary authority has to provide for the isolation of infectious diseases in the case of every burgess and everyone living in the district. Then others hold,

I know, very often, that they are not bound to provide at the infirmaries for infectious diseases, and that that is the duty of the sanitary authority. I am only giving my own opinion, but I believe there is no settled law upon the subject.

39271. In London, of course, you have an asylums board?—(Dr. Ford Anderson.) Yes; but the guardians pay, and they treat the different cases in different ways. For instance cases of measles are sent to the infirmaries, ringworm in the first instance is sent to the infirmaries, and erysipelas is sent to the infirmaries; but all the others go to the Metropolitan Asylums Board, and the guardians pay.

39272. I believe that there are difficulties in connection with the treatment of certain diseases, such as whooping-cough and measles?—Yes.

39273. They are not notifiable?—That is so.

39274. But they are infectious?—Yes. They go to the infirmaries.

39275. Is it your idea that you would give those cases to the sanitary authority?—(Mr. Whitaker.) I think that the committee in making this recommendation had in mind the notifiable cases.

39276. They did not wish to go beyond those?—I do not think they were going beyond the notifiable cases.

39277. (Mr. Nunn.) Has the Association come to any definite conclusion as to the treatment of phthisis as a voluntarily notifiable disease?—No; there has been no definite conclusion come to on the point.

39278. They do not take a side either with the Local Government Board or with the Metropolitan Asylums Board on the subject?—They have not done as a body; there has been no definite finding on the matter.

39279. I suppose the Association will be in favour of making it a compulsory disease?—One can only speak as to one's impression. I should imagine that the majority of medical practitioners would be in favour of some kind of provision for the notification of phthisis.

39280. (Chairman.) Do you know whether the objection to the notification of phthisis is at all based on the difficulty of dealing with the case afterwards, on account of its duration?—I could not say. (Dr. Langley Browne.) I think, taking the good of the whole community, that we are decidedly of opinion that phthisis ought to be notified; but that is a very cruel proceeding, and a very hard one on a great many people. It is terribly cruel, but still I think myself it is right, and should be done, and I believe most of us hold that view now. You should notify early, although you must remember it will get known, and very often if you notify that anyone is suffering from phthisis, that means that he will get his discharge from his employment. Until there are provisions for taking and isolating a case, or giving him sanatorium treatment, until he is certified as being free from the active condition of phthisis, it is very doubtful whether it would do good generally; but I think if you take medical opinion only, medical men will say that it ought to be done, although it is a very cruel and hard thing to have to do it.

39281. And it further involves probably, if the man is married and has children, throwing them upon the rates while he is being treated?—Yes, it does involve that.

39282. (Mr. Nunn.) May I ask whether the Association has had its attention directed to any actual cases in which a man has lost his work through consumption having been notified in his case?—I do not know of any case in which it has been notified. It has been done voluntarily in one town only, I believe, and that is Bradford. (Mr. Whitaker.) Bradford, I think, is the chief case where there is notification of phthisis.

39283. It is done in a great many places, I understand?—(Dr. Ford Anderson.) We have got it in some of the London parishes. In Hampstead we have got voluntary notification, and it is very successful there, so far as it goes. Sheffield is one of the towns where it is compulsory.

39284. It is the only town, I think. I was anxious to ascertain if there were any cases actually known of Attitude of British Medical Association as to treatment of phthisis.

The notification of phthisis and difficulties thereof.

persons who have lost their appointment through notification, because I have never, after very diligent search, come across one?—I have never heard of any.

39285. (Chairman.) I suppose what you rather had in your mind was that if a man does declare himself as phthisical, or presents himself for examination on the ground that he is suffering from phthisis, and that is proved, it would imperil his employment?—(Dr. Langley Browne.) That is so. I know of cases in which a man has been sent away from his work because he has had infectious disease in his house, when he has not been suffering from it himself, and his wages have not been paid. On the other hand, I know of a very large firm in which they pay the wages of every man who stops away while he has, say, scarlet fever in his house.

39286. (Mr. Nunn.) Do you regard this as desirable from the point of view of the other workmen and of their families?—Yes, I think so.

39287. So that, either way you take it, there is not very much bottom in the argument, is there, that it may injure a man with his employer?—No.

39288. Even if one found cases where a man did lose his work through the notification of phthisis, the probability is, at all events, that it would be better for him to find a different kind of work, more isolated in the country, than to go on working with companions in a workshop in a town?—In the case of the ordinary workman that might be so; but for the large class of clerks, for instance, it would be very hard upon them, because it would be very difficult for them to find work anywhere else.

39289. Ought they to be going on with their work?—No; you are quite right there; they ought not. (Dr. Macdonald.) What are you going to do with them.

39290. (Sir Samuel Provis.) That is a question I was going to ask you. What are you going to do with them?—(Dr. Ford Anderson.) Although the Association has not touched upon the subject, I may state that with regard to London it has been proposed by a large section of the profession that the Metropolitan Asylums Board should undertake the care of advanced cases of phthisis, as it is chiefly through the advanced cases of phthisis that the disease spreads; but so far the Metropolitan Asylums Board has not seen its way to accede to the request.

39291. The cost would be very great, I suppose?—Yes, I suppose that is it. May I say one word before this paragraph is left with regard to London? I wish to express my opinion that from a knowledge of the voluntary notification of phthisis which has come under my notice I cannot believe it is possible for the knowledge of that to be spread through the neighbourhood. If the patient himself chooses to tell that is his affair, but it is impossible that it could transpire through the officials, except through some grave neglect of duty, which would be punishable. So that I do not see how it is possible for the knowledge of the existence of the disease to spread in London as a result of notification, except through the patient or the patient's friends whom we cannot control.

39292. Would not the medical officer visit the patient?—It is generally some one else who visits, at least within my field of experience.

39293. Perhaps you did not quite understand. What I thought you said was that if the disease was notified no one would know anything about it?—No one would know who could injure the patient by that knowledge.

39294. But would not the result of notification be that the medical officer of health, or one of his assistants, would visit the case?—That is not the way it is done in my borough. It is done in a very unostentatious way, and every care is taken. It is done through a private society which works in conjunction with the sanitary officer, and it is done so as to keep the matter absolutely secret. It has been asked if any one can cite a case in which the knowledge has injured the patient. I can say from my own experience that I have never known of such a case in the Borough of Hampstead.

39295. So that to make the suggestion work, you would want some voluntary association which would undertake labours of the kind you refer to?—Yes, I think that is desirable.

39296. (Chairman.) Then as regards venereal disease, you suggest that all persons suffering under this ailment who seek relief from the Poor Law should be detained until no longer infectious. I assume that you would apply, or you would wish to apply, the same powers of detention to those in any hospital who are suffering from the same disease?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes. It should be treated as a matter of infectious disease, and they should be detained until, as far as can be reasonably certified, they are no longer a danger to the community.

39297. Now we come to the proposition for bringing 29 Jan. 1907.
Poor Law infirmaries and general hospitals under common management. You state that the only plan that you are aware of, which has been up to now put forward, is that the municipality should maintain and control these hospitals, and that the opinion of the medical profession is at present adverse to this proposal?—Yes.

39298. The objections to a proposal of that kind are pretty obvious; they would freeze up charity, and the hospitals would lose their distinct autonomy?—Yes.

39299. But I assume that the British Medical Association would be in favour of some system, by which you could bring the Poor Law infirmaries and the general hospitals to work together on agreed and common principles?—Yes. If any suggestion of the kind should be made, I think in the interests of efficiency they would be glad to see co-ordination. But I may say that, on this question up to the present, the Association has not pronounced any definite opinion. It was only seeing that they had to give evidence that the question was considered, and the Council of the Association have felt that all they could say at the moment is that opinion is adverse to the only plan that, so far as they know, has been definitely put forward.

39300. You have not gone further than that?—No.

39301. I was going to suggest that it might be possible to frame a scheme by which certain conditions might be laid down for the hospitals, and, if they accepted those conditions, they might get some support; but you have not considered that?—It has not been considered, so far as I am aware.

39302. I suppose a municipality now can erect a hospital out of the rates?—Yes.

39303. And can practically give a very considerable amount of medical relief?—Yes. That is under the powers of the Public Health Act, Sec. 155, I think.

39304. As you are aware, they are powers about which certain questions are raised, but I think the construction put upon them is that they give a very wide latitude?—Those powers, which are very wide powers, have been utilised lately for the payment of medical men called in to assist midwives, I believe.

39305. Then we come to the question of attendance in emergencies. Have you had any cases brought before you in reply to your queries, in which inconvenience has arisen from having to comply with the existing machinery before medical relief could be obtained?—I am afraid that the wording of Paragraph 31 is imperfect. As a matter of fact, there is nothing to prevent the medical officer attending in a case of emergency. The paragraph only means that it is an addition to his work for which he does not get any remuneration. I rather think the point there is that where a Poor Law medical officer is required to attend in cases of emergency, provision should be made for payment in certain of those cases—the particular cases of emergency where it is found the patient could afford to pay, for example; and also, that the Poor Law medical officer should not be overworked by night calls and emergency calls, which add enormously to the strain upon him, without some compensation. (Dr. Langley Browne.) I think provision ought to be made by which anybody can have a doctor in a case of emergency. One should not have to run about from doctor to doctor, and that either in the night or in the day one visit should be paid for by the sanitary authority to any doctor going.

39306. Or by the Poor Law?—No, I would say by the sanitary authority. I think that in that case it should not be provided for paupers only. Any one wanting a doctor in a hurry, and not having the money ready, should be able to get one visit either in the day or in the night. I believe that in the public medical

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

Proposed detention of venereal cases.

Objections to amalgamation of Poor Law and voluntary hospitals.

Power of sanitary authority to provide hospitals.

Difficulty as to payment for attendance of district medical officer without relieving officer's order.

Suggestion that sanitary authority should provide emergency medical relief.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

service in Paris, for instance, a certain sum is paid at night and a certain sum in the day. In England the police have power to call in a doctor in special cases, and there is a sum fixed which is paid out of the Police Fund. Therefore, the police being under the Watch Committee, it would be better that the sanitary authority should pay the fees, so that any doctor who liked and who chose to put his name on a list, people would be able to go to and could get one visit from him. That is for emergency visits. Without going to the relieving officer at all, or without going into the question whether a person is a pauper or not, people who have not money should be able to get a doctor, and the doctor himself should be paid a moderate amount just for one visit in the day or one visit in the night. Then afterwards the patient has time to arrange.

39307. Admitting that there should be something done to facilitate dealing with cases of emergency, would it not be inconvenient to give another authority than the Poor Law the power of paying for these cases?—I do not mind which authority pays, but I do not think that would be very inconvenient myself. For instance, the police visits are already paid for by the town councils in towns when a policeman sends for medical help at night.

39308. (Mr. Nunn.) Why would you prefer the sanitary authority to the Poor Law authority?—I do not mind which.

Alleged inaccessibility of medical relief

39309. (Mr. Phelps.) I should like to ask whether the Association have had brought before them any instances of hardships arising under these circumstances?—Yes. The other day there was a case published in the papers of a woman who had been to seven doctors and could not get one to come. It often does arise.

39310. Those cases that appear in the papers require very careful sifting. I should have thought that almost any Poor Law doctor you could name would go at once if sent for under those circumstances. At least that is my experience. You neglect the pecuniary question, but surely that question arises afterwards when the patient goes to the relieving officer for an order, and if the relieving officer thinks he is able to pay he refuses the order, and then he does have to pay the medical practitioner?—(Dr. Macdonald.) That is not the point, because they frequently find that the Poor Law medical officer is not at home, and so they go to another doctor. He is summoned in an emergency, and if he does not go, the local press and everybody else are down on the hard-heartedness of the medical profession, of course. It may not suit him just then to go; or, if he goes, he gets no payment for it.

Existing special facilities for emergency medical relief.

39311. (Dr. Downes.) Are the association acquainted with what is done in some of the eastern unions in London, whereby they notify all the medical practitioners in their district that they will, in emergency cases, pay 3s. 6d. for a day visit and 7s. for a night visit?—No.

39312. That is being done in certain unions under the Poor Law?—That is exactly what Dr. Langley Browne is asking for.

39313. That is in the case of poor persons who cannot pay for themselves, of course?—(Dr. Langley Browne.) That is all I want really.

39314. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You are aware, are you not, that there is a statutory provision enabling the guardians to pay a fee in a case of emergency?—But they never do it.

Difficulty as to payment for attendance of medical officer without relieving officer's order.

39315. Dr. Downes has given you a case?—You cannot give a country case. (Mr. Whitaker.) It is on the question of hardship that this question has come under the notice of the Association. We have again and again had instances where doctors were called in to attend cases, and they can either accept or refuse. They go, perhaps at considerable inconvenience, with the probability that they will not be paid for going, or that they will have to take the risk of not being paid. If they do not go and anything goes wrong, then they are accused of cruelty and inhumanity. If they do go the rule is that they do not get paid.

39316. (Mr. Phelps.) Take again your Paragraph 25, which is the same sort of question. Is it not the fact that Poor Law guardians are empowered to supply special medical or surgical attendance in the infirmaries?—(Dr.

Macdonald.) There is no compulsion on the board of guardians to pay a doctor who assists in a case. Only the other day one of our committee, who mentioned it himself, was called in to assist a medical officer; he went and gave his assistance and he claimed his fees afterward. The man said, "Certainly not; if you had asked for permission beforehand, we should probably have given it, but as you have only asked afterwards we shall not pay."

Difficulty as to payment of fees of consultants called in by Poor Law medical officers.

39317. (Mr. Loch.) It is compulsion you now ask for, is it not?—We want some authority to require the payment of fees in those cases.

39318. (Mr. Phelps.) Paragraph 25 would be better worded then if it were to read, "remunerated specially" instead of "obtaining"?—(Mr. Whitaker.) We should say that the provision should be improved.

39319. (Chairman.) That paragraph does want a little re-drafting?—(Dr. Macdonald.) I should like you to look at it from the other point of view. It is not only from a medical man's point of view that I should like you to take cognisance of this thing. It is from the point of view of the people themselves. There is no question that they would get better attention in many cases if it were understood that there was some provision made for payment and for seeing that this necessary medical help was called in. Medical men are only human, and I have no doubt that in very many cases men refuse to go and see patients who would go if they had any idea that they would get their payment.

39320. (Mr. Nunn.) Outside the Poor Law is there any general obligation on the part of medical men as a matter of professional feeling to attend to a case of emergency?—Yes. (Mr. Whitaker.) Of course there is the sense of responsibility in the profession and if they believed it was a real emergency they would go. The difficulty always is to know whether it is an emergency. You are called so frequently to cases which are stated to be cases of emergency, and when you see the patient you find they are not so. (Dr. Macdonald.) The common sort of call we get is that a person comes to you between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, and says: "Can you see this case, she is very ill, and it is a case of sudden emergency." You go there and find the patient has probably been ill for three or four days, and they could just as well have sent for you early in the day or the next morning. These are cases that are constantly coming under medical men's notice. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) In the district in which I live that is chiefly met by the police. The policeman comes and tells you that a case of emergency requires immediate attention, and he gives you a paper promising to pay 3s. 6d. in the day and 7s. 6d. at night. The coming of the policeman is a guarantee that it is a real emergency. I have not met with the system which Dr. Downes alludes to as being done by the Poor Law; I have no doubt it is. In my district it is carried out chiefly by the police, which answers the purpose quite well.

39321. (Sir Samuel Provis.) How are the police put in action in those cases?—They are called in, and they see that the case really wants attention, and then they come to us. (Mr. Whitaker.) We have had the question of payment through the police carefully gone into, and I think the Watch Committee are the authority through whom the payment is made. In some parts of the country there have been great complaints that the system is too lax, and that the policemen are allowed to call doctors in without giving any guarantee for payment.

39322. (Chairman.) Now we will pass to Paragraph 33, which deals with the question of district nurses. Would you make it compulsory on Poor Law authorities to subscribe towards the maintenance of district nurses?—Yes.

Proposed compulsory provision of district nurses by guardians.

39323. In proportion to the population?—Yes, there should be a reasonable provision with regard to population.

39324. Apparently you think that at present district nurses are not under sufficient control?—Yes.

Need of medical control of district nurses.

39325. How are they regulated now?—They are usually employed by voluntary associations, and they become a kind of unqualified general practitioners for the district for children's ailments, and medical matters generally.

39326. And you would wish that all district nurses, no matter who employed them, should be put under medical control?—Yes.

39327. Would it be the medical control of the Poor Law?—It should be medical supervision either by the Poor Law medical officers or by the medical officer of health. That would depend on the arrangement and the convenience of the district.

39328. Now we come to part C, which deals with questions of Poor Law administration not relating specially to medical relief, but considered from the public health standpoint. I think we had better take Paragraphs 34, 35 and 36 together, because they fit one into another. You say that the medical officers have expressed an adverse opinion to the present system of administration by boards of guardians; does that mean that they would like to have another body administering the functions which boards of guardians now discharge?—Yes. I think in some instances it is merely a complaint that boards of guardians, or the board of guardians of which the medical officer has experience, are not competent for their work; and in other cases it is really a reasoned opinion that bodies selected from wider areas, and having perhaps wider functions, would attract a class of men who are really more competent to do the work, and that the kinds of people who become guardians are in many cases not really qualified for the responsibilities of the position.

39329. That is, they are not qualified for the duties which they have to discharge, which are very difficult, and in certain cases above their capacity?—The duties of boards of guardians do not attract people of the type which is required in some cases.

39330. The first suggestion is that the unit of the Poor Law should be larger. We have had a good deal of evidence to that effect. Of course the larger the area the easier classification would become?—Yes.

39331. Why do you think county council areas would not be possible or suitable?—That question came before the association in connection with the report of the committee on the housing of the working-classes, where the suggestion was made that the county council areas should be adopted instead of the present rural district council areas. It was considered that in many cases the county council areas would be too large for effective supervision. Of course the county councils have been created in conformity with conditions that have grown up historically, and if you are really trying to elaborate a scientific system of administration you should not be fettered by the existing geographical conditions, but should adapt the system to the real requirements of administration.

39332. If that involves great dislocation of existing areas, it raises almost insuperable objections, does it not?—In the creation of the county councils, existing areas were interfered with very considerably in some districts. For instance, you have Lincolnshire; that was broken up into three or four county council areas. Then you have Yorkshire again, which was broken up into several county council areas.

39333. (Sir Samuel Provis.) But they were all existing areas previously, were they not?—Were those in Lindsey? (Dr. Langley-Browne.) Yes. They took out the county boroughs too.

39334. (Chairman.) Your objection is really a practical objection; you think that you would accept whatever area would be found to be the most suitable?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes, taking all considerations into account, especially having regard to the general convenience, which would not necessarily mean county council areas. We find for sanitary purposes, and also perhaps for Poor Law purposes many of the county council areas would be too large.

39335. That is, of course, assuming that there were centralised in the body governing that area all the duties now performed by boards of guardians?—Yes.

39336. But it might be possible to have a large area, with a central body discharging a great many of these duties and devolving minor duties upon local bodies?—Yes, I think so.

39337. I suppose what was really meant was that the county council areas were too big, assuming you attempted to combine in one body all the duties that are now discharged by several bodies?—Yes. The county council area is too big an area.

39338. We have had a great deal of evidence recently about the administration of medical relief, and there have been certain suggestions made. It has been suggested in the first place that vaccination and the registration of births and deaths should be taken from the Poor Law authorities and transferred to the health authorities?—I think the medical profession would be in favour of that.

39339. Then it has also been suggested that there should be an amalgamation of the duties now performed by the health officers and the Poor Law medical officers. Would it be possible to construct a scheme by which they would fit one into another?—Yes. That has been suggested by some members of the profession, and that was considered by the Association to fall under paragraph 19, Section A. They would consider that, if you were putting it under the health officers, that would correspond to the creation of a State medical service to perform practically all these duties, and we could not say that the opinion of the profession was at all in favour of that at present. I know that many members of the profession feel very strongly that the duties of the medical officer of health are duties of inspection and administration, and are quite different from the duties of attendance on patients which the Poor Law medical officer has to perform—that there is all the difference in the world between the prevention of disease and administration on the one side, and actual attendance on disease on the other side; and that there is not necessarily any advantage in giving the medical officer of health these other duties.

39340. But you have not gone very much into this matter, have you?—No, the Association has not.

39341. It has been suggested to us on the other side that there is, so to say, a direct association between the two duties of the prevention of outbreaks of disease, and the individual treatment which subsequently follows, because it enables the officers, very often, to trace the disease to its source?—There might be a certain amount of co-ordination between the two services. In any case, the medical officer of health has quite enough to do, and he could not personally do the duties of a Poor Law medical officer. You could have a service which was all linked together, but you would require far more medical officers of health, in other words, a far larger health service than you have if the yare to take over the Poor Law duties as well. (Dr. Ford Anderson) I think with regard to vaccination the idea has been expressed by the association that the sanitary authority which deals with the disease should also deal with the prevention of the disease. (Mr. Whitaker) That is so as regards vaccination, and as regards births and deaths registration, but not as regards transferring to the medical officer of health the whole of the Poor Law work. (Dr. Langley Browne) I think it is a great general idea that the medical officer of health should whenever possible not be a man in private practice, but that he should have sufficient administrative duties to take him away from competition with the doctors in the neighbourhood; and that the control of the vaccination, but not the performance of the vaccination, should be under the sanitary authority; I mean that the vaccination should not actually be performed by the medical officer of health, but that the control of it should be in his hands, because like isolation it is one of his means of preventing disease. I think the general feeling is that there should, wherever possible, be sufficiently good health appointments, and sufficiently enough for them to do, to take them out of the list of general practitioners.

39342. The appointments of health officers carry higher pay than those of Poor Law officers, and I think it was suggested rather that it would attract men into the Poor Law medical service if they had a chance of promotion afterwards?—Yes. It would be quite impossible in many places for the medical officer of health to attend to cases also. You want a much larger Poor Law staff than you want health staff.

39343. (Mr. Nunn.) Would it not amount very much to the present district medical officers being put under the nominal supervision of the medical officer of health for the district?—But there is a change of authority again.

39344. I am assuming the change of authority; does it amount to much more than that?—Yes, because if

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan 1907.

Proposal to remove vaccination and registration of births and deaths from Poor Law. Objections to amalgamation of offices of medical officer of health, and Poor Law medical officer.

Proposal to remove vaccination and registration of births and deaths from Poor Law.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

you put them under the medical officer of health, their pay has to go over as well. They would have to be paid by the sanitary authority too.

39345. You were saying that the medical officer of health would have to visit every individual case, and therefore the combination would break down, but I am suggesting that it would not necessarily mean that at all?—No, it would not mean that. From what I know of the work the sanitary authorities have to do, not only under the Public Health Act, but in connection with the diseases of animals, lodging houses, canal boats and many other things, I do not think they would have any possible time to take up the work of the Poor Law.

29 Jan. 1907.

Difficulties of amalgamating offices of medical officers of health and Poor Law medical officer.

39346. (Mr. Loch.) And you think there is a logical distinction between the work of the medical officer of health and the work of the Poor Law medical officer?—There may be; I think so myself.

39347. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Would you say it is desirable that the area of the medical officer of health should be one of some size?—Yes, undoubtedly.

39348. In the case of the Poor Law medical officer is it not desirable that it should be rather small, so that the poor should readily get at him?—Undoubtedly, and you have got that regulation now, although it is not carried out. To prevent a man being over-worked the area has to be so much and the population so much, only it is never stuck to.

Proposal to make Poor Law and sanitary areas coterminous

39349. (Chairman.) You suggest here that the areas of the local Poor Law authority and of the local sanitary authority should be identical?—Yes; that means the authority, not the officer.

39350. Would it not amount to what Mr. Nunn says, namely, that the sanitary officer would be in charge of the whole district, but the district medical officers would remain as before in charge of their respective portions of the district?—That would be so.

Extent to which sanitary authorities give medical relief.

39351. Have you ever looked at it from this point of view—that the sanitary or health committees of these large boroughs are developing a good deal of activity and are giving a good deal of medical relief and help in one way and another, and that they may in course of time compete with, or impinge on, the medical relief given by the Poor Law?—It should not do so. The sanitary authority have the powers under private Acts recently of giving special medical relief and of providing nurses, but otherwise I do not know that they do develop the medical relief at all on any other lines except those of the medical officer of health.

e.g., question of milk depôts.

39352. (Mr. Gardiner.) What do you say about these milk depôts, for instance?—Those again come under the medical officer of health. They could not come under anyone else.

39353. But it is distinctly poor relief, is it not?—I do not think so.

39354. What is the difference? Is not the mother too poor to provide the milk her baby requires?—I think it goes a good deal further than that. If you go in for municipal milk depôts, I think what you want to do is to insure that the children shall be decently fed for the sake of the good of the community. I do not think it has anything whatever to do with the Poor Law or with pauperism.

39355. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The milk is not supplied gratuitously, is it?—It may be, I think it is worth supplying gratuitously.

39356. Generally at these depôts do they not sell it?—It is not supplied gratuitously as a rule, but I think they might very well do it with great advantage.

39357. (Mr. Nunn.) I think they generally get good milk at the price of bad, do they not?—(Dr. Macdonald.) What is the price of bad milk?

Proposed continuance of ad hoc Poor Law authorities.

39358. (Chairman.) Whilst you would like to increase the area, I assume that you would still want an authority directly elected for the purpose of the Poor Law?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes, I think so.

39359. You would not propose to graft their duties upon any existing administration?—Certainly the association has not considered that point or made any recommendation upon it; but, of course, we think that the areas should be identical for every purpose, whatever authorities there are.

39360. For sanitary and Poor Law purposes, and I assume, if possible, for municipal purposes?—Yes.

39361. (Dr. Downes.) I do not quite understand this: The areas of local sanitary administration are as a rule very much smaller than the areas of Poor Law administration, are they not?—Yes.

39362. Then I cannot reconcile that with your suggestion in Paragraph 36?—The association agrees with the recommendation of the Select Committee on the Housing of the Working Classes that the sanitary areas ought to be much larger.

39363. Then you are assuming that the sanitary areas ought to be larger than they are?—Yes.

39364. (Chairman.) Have you any objection in the rural districts to the same officer being medical officer and sanitary officer?—That very often is the case. I should think as a rule in a really small rural district the same man does all the work; he is private practitioner, district medical officer and sanitary officer, he has to do the whole thing.

39365. (Mr. Loch.) Do you approve of that?—It is inevitable. There are not enough medical men to go round.

39366. (Sir Samuel Provis.) If you could abolish it, would you think that desirable?—It would be entirely a question of whether he had time to carry out his duties.

39367. Would it not also be the case that sometimes a man who might be a very good district medical officer would not have the special qualifications required for health work?—Yes, that might be so.

39368. (Chairman.) If it is advisable in rural districts that the same man should do this work, does it not rather follow that in urban districts, if you could adjust the conditions, it might be advisable that there should be the same arrangement?—The only justification for it in rural districts is that because of the paucity of medical men you must have the same man to do the work, and you may be not able to get anybody else. It depends on the size of the district so much.

39369. And on that ground only would you approve of it there?—On that ground only.

39370. (Mr. Nunn.) May we ask whether any defects have been observed in the administration either of the Poor Law or of the Sanitary Law, where the two offices are combined in one man?—Of course there are many districts where there are complaints, but I do not know whether it has been proved that they are due to that cause. You may have an incompetent man under any system.

39371. You cannot say whether the grounds for the complaints have been traced to the combination of the two offices in one man?—I do not know of any cases that have been particularly brought under our notice.

39372. May we ask, therefore, why you are not in favour of the two offices being combined?—The opinion of the association has been that the sanitary areas ought to be made larger than they are at present. I think the answer to the question was given just now by a member of the Commission, that, whereas in Poor Law work you require a man who is in close contact with his work and who is immediately available, to get an efficient medical officer of health you may require a man serving a wider area, so that you can pay the salary and get the work of inspection properly done.

39373. I see you put it in your statement that you think the sanitary and Poor Law areas ought to be the same?—That is for the governing body, the administrative body; but it does not follow that the medical officers would have the same area. You might have several Poor Law medical officers for one Poor Law area, just as you have for the present unions, where you have several districts each with its district medical officer, but the administrative unit is the union.

39374. What other objection have you to one medical officer of health having the Poor Law medical officers under him in whatever area may be found most convenient?—We have not raised any objection to that.

39375. And you do not raise any objection to that?—No, we do not raise any objection to that.

Proposal to make Poor Law and sanitary areas coterminous

Question of union of offices of district medical officer and medical officer of health in rural districts.

Objection to amalgamation of offices of medical officer of health and district medical officer.

39376. (Mr. Loch.) I understand that one of the witnesses said that he saw between the sanitary work and the Poor Law medical work a logical division?—If the same man was doing both kinds of work, but not if the medical officer of health was merely an inspector and supervisor. That would be quite another matter. The point was whether the same man should do both kinds of work.

39377. (Mr. Nunn.) Actually himself?—Yes, whether actually himself he should do both kinds of work.

39378. (Mr. Loch.) But your answer leads to this, does it not, that your sanitary officer or inspector becomes a two-fold functionary; on the one hand he is doing the preventive work of health, which he is now doing, and on the other hand, he becomes simply an inspector of those officers under him, but not doing work kindred to them otherwise?—Would not his work, so far as he was their inspector or supervisor, really be part of his general preventive work? It would not be clinical attendance. The distinction which I think we made was between the actual clinical attendance in illness and the administrative duties and preventive duties of the medical officer of health.

39379. The work of a medical officer of health would be so far different that part of his work would be preventive work—that is allowed, is it not?—Yes.

39380. And the other part of his work would be really the work of the officials under him, who would be doing no preventive work, but would be doing actual medical healing work?—But they are all part of the same, and they are only different aspects of the same work. Their clinical work has its preventive aspect.

39381. Undoubtedly, only if you want the one group of officers to undertake the work of medical relief with all its calls and all its duties, it is a question whether the person to supervise them is to be a medical officer who takes no part in their relief work, but is primarily engaged in doing something entirely different, namely, the preventive work of the community?—Yes, that is so.

39382. It seemed to me that practically, unconsciously almost, you seemed to be tacking on to the medical officer of health's new functions, qua inspector, a branch of work which otherwise would not come under his cognisance?—I do not think we went further really than saying we raised no objection to that. The whole difficulty is that the association has not definitely considered these proposals, and the difficulty is in giving a positive answer on matters that have not been so considered.

39383. (Mr. Nunn.) I think you understood my question as not covering the question of relief, but as covering the question of medical attendance. It is quite possible, is it not, to conceive of a medical officer attending a case medically just as he does in a rich family, and some totally different authority supplying the relief as it does in a rich family?—Yes. (Dr. Langley Browne.) I think the great point is this, that the medical officer of health should not be the medical attendant of the authority he works for. That is really it. If a man has half-a-dozen good patients on the board, how can he really do his duty? We want to separate him altogether from the necessity of attendance on patients.

39384. You mean we must assume that he has no private practice—I think there are several factors we must assume, and that, of course, must be one of them?—Yes; but that is not so at present.

39385. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Do you assume that he is to have no private practice?—We think that all these officers ought to be sufficiently well paid so that they should have no private practice, and that their areas should be sufficiently large to give them enough work to do.

39386. Are you thinking of the temptation, which is rather possible at the present day, that a man would take some of these offices on account of his getting a private practice as well?—(Dr. Macdonald.) Yes.

39387. That is the temptation, that a man might not care very much for the work, either his sanitary work or his Poor Law work, but might take the office because of the private practice he would get in consequence?—(Mr. Whitaker.) There is that difficulty.

39388. (Miss Hill.) Has it not to be considered in relation to the amalgamation of the duties of the medical officer of health and of the Poor Law medical officer, that unless you are prepared to give the medical attendance, you must have a staff of officers to make inquiries, and that you have at present attached to the public health office no staff of inquirers, and no one analogous to the relieving officer; but that if you were to appoint them, you would be doing the duty twice over, because the question of maintenance would come in, and you would have the relieving officers inquiring whether the people could pay for maintenance, and the sanitary inspectors inquiring whether they could pay for medical attendance?

(Mr. Nunn.) Is it not true that the same objections do not apply to the giving of medical assistance as arise when you are giving the additional nourishments? (Miss Hill.) Probably, but you would have two sets of functionaries inquiring into the case?—(Dr. Macdonald.) I think a mistake has arisen with regard to the word "supervision." I think one of the Commissioners suggested that the Poor Law medical officer should be under the supervision of the medical officer of health, but I do not see how that is possible. There is no supervision at present of the Poor Law medical officers, except the report to the authority every time. But it is quite possible that you may have a medical officer of health with a large district, and many Poor Law medical officers in the district, who would be responsible to him for the public health work, the sanitary arrangements, and such things as that, but not for his attendances on the patients as patients. There would be no supervision of their attendances as Poor Law medical officers, but there would be supervision of their work as far as the sanitary work went. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) Mr. Loch, in speaking of this, spoke as if the Poor Law medical officer would be under the medical officer of health. I do not think the Association ever meant that. I think what the Association meant was that the Poor Law medical officer should be under the sanitary authority, that is, under the same authority as the medical officer of health.

39389. (Chairman.) You are aware of the argument used against the continuance of the present system of medical relief under the Poor Law, namely, that the fact of its being associated with the Poor Law is in certain cases a deterrent to people asking in the early stages of illness for medical help?—(Mr. Whitaker.) That is so; it is the fact that it is a deterrent.

39390. What is your opinion as an Association? Do you believe that it is a deterrent?—We know, as a matter of fact, that it is a deterrent.

39391. You know that?—The experience of every practitioner shows that people avoid calling in the parish doctor, because he is the parish doctor. (Dr. Macdonald.) That is so; there is no question of it. That is the experience of every medical officer, I think.

39392. Assuming you could dissociate a satisfactory system of medical relief from the Poor Law, it would in its operation in that sense be more satisfactory, then?—I think so; and that is why some of the members suggested that "(C)" system, which was referred to just now, that is, that the Poor Law should pay the contract rates to the medical officer, and they should not come under Poor Law relief at all. There is no necessity why it should be known.

39393. How would the system work? You see a Proposed person would select one of those officers, but if the patient would not pay how would the officer get paid?—He should be paid by the Poor Law authority. May I just explain what the scheme is at the present time? The British Medical Association propose what we call a public medical service, that is, every medical man in the district who wishes may serve on this public medical service, and every patient in the district can apply to whatever medical man he likes. We suggest that they should pay a very nominal sum for this medical attendance. Supposing a person is too poor even to pay that, then in order to take the place of Poor Law relief it is quite possible that the Poor Law authorities should pay that subscription to the public medical service and there would be no distinction between the pauper and the other.

39394. Who would investigate the case of the pauper?—You would still require to have a relieving officer, as you have at present.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Question of supervision of district medical officers by medical officer of health.

Deterrence of medical relief.

objections to medical officer of health with private practice.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.
 39395. Then, supposing the relieving officer on investigation found out, or was of opinion, that the person who obtained the medical relief could afford to pay for it, I assume you would contemplate that they would proceed against him?—Quite so.

39396. That is the way it would work?—That is the way we suggest. I am not giving this as the opinion of the Association. It is only the opinion of some few of us who have thought the thing out. This had not been proposed when we made our investigation; it has arisen since.

29 Jan. 1907.

39397. You really think that one of the advantages of system "(C)" would be that it would dissociate to a greater extent than now medical relief from the Poor Law?—I think that is the great advantage; and I think another advantage would be that in the case of any dissatisfaction arising, which you sometimes find with a particular man, if you found the patients were dissatisfied—because there will be friction between one personality and another, no matter what you do—those patients could go to another medical man instead.

39398. Just following that up, and assuming there was a list of practitioners, some of them might live some little distance off, and then it would be more expensive to employ a far-off doctor than the near one; would the patients, do you think, generally take the near one, who would usually be one they knew something about?—Yes, they would pretty certainly do that.

39399. You think that really would be the case?—Almost invariably. There might be an instance in which there was some quarrel between them, in which case they would prefer to go to the further man, but I think in the majority of instances it would be certain that they would go to the nearest man, partly to save themselves the trouble of going further.

39400. Then the question of distance is not worth entering into?—I do not think so. I think it would be probable in case the system were worked out in thinly-populated districts that it would be necessary to have a mileage rate. Take, for instance, Devonshire and some of those districts where a man would have to travel eight or ten miles to see a patient; you could not expect a man to do that for the contract rates.

39401. And, moreover, by the very nature of the case there would probably be in some instances only one doctor who could be sent for?—Quite so.

Proposal to extend supervision of Lunacy Commissioners to all cases of mental infirmity.

39402. Now we come to your paragraph 37 dealing with classification. I think we are all agreed on that. In regard to the feeble-minded, you recommend that all cases of mental infirmity should be placed under the supervision of the Lunacy Commissioners, and I suppose under the control of the existing authority, which is the county authority?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes.

39403. What is your definition of mental infirmity? What would you really include as cases of mental infirmity?—All cases that are at present classified either as certified lunatics or as feeble-minded, imbeciles, idiots or epileptics. We also propose that under a certain modified supervision cases of unconfirmed mental disease should be brought within the cognisance of the Lunacy Commission for a limited period. We also propose in the case of inebriates and persons suffering from drug habits it should be made possible to bring them under supervision without the necessity of any criminal conviction in the first instance.

39404. I suppose you have given that evidence before the Commission on the Feeble-minded?—Yes.

Scheme of classification for sick and infirm patients.

39405. (Mr. Nunn.) Has the association drawn up any scheme of classification for sick and infirm patients?—No.

39406. Would you be prepared to put one in?—There were some suggestions made by the workhouse medical officers. They were very varied, and my committee had not the opportunity of going into a preparation of a careful classification and they did not attempt to do so.

39407. It would be very valuable if you could give us a classification of infirm patients, that is, of the sick and infirm. Taking a certain area and supposing the area were enlarged, and classification became possible, what classes of institutions, and what classes of patients would the association recommend?—If there were any advantage in it, I think there would be no difficulties in our making inquiries that would enable us to give evidence later on that.

39408. (Chairman.) We should certainly like to know what your association would say on that point with regard to the sick and infirm other than the feeble-minded?—We could easily get information from those who have had experience and tabulate it and send it to the Commission.*

39409. Then we come to the case of the indigent aged. You would make them comfortable?—Yes. Objection of Poor Law medical officers to outdoor relief to the aged.

39410. Keeping them if possible together?—Yes, and in institutions. The feeling is strong that they are kept in much better health in institutions than by outdoor relief in their own homes.

39411. (Mr. Gardiner.) So that your association on that ground is against out-relief to the aged?—The opinion of Poor Law medical officers is overwhelmingly in favour of provision in institutions. The replies are all to the same effect, that the aged are kept cleaner and in better health in institutions than if you give them outdoor relief, and that they really suffer in health and in every other way if they are left to provide for themselves outdoors.

39412. (Mr. Nunn.) And that opinion is given in face of the fact that it would tend to deprive the present district medical officers of their employment?—I take it so. There is no doubt as to the general tendency of the replies. These replies come from both workhouse officers and from district officers. Medical opinion seems quite clear in favour of institutional provision.

39413. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You would not make it compulsory, would you?—The association can only say what, on the evidence before them, seems to be the healthiest provision. We look at it from the health point of view. The provision is put in that the married couples should not be compulsorily separated, and some have added the qualification that they should not be compelled to live together where they do not wish to do so.

39414. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) This is all purely from the health point of view?—Yes, as making the more hygienic system more personally acceptable.

39415. (Chairman.) Then we pass on to the provision for children. You say there that the preponderance of opinion is in favour of the system of boarding-out?—Yes, it is. Attitude of British Medical Association to boarding-out children.

39416. Does that mean separate boarding-out under foster-mothers?—Yes, that is the system preferred. We submitted four different alternatives, and boarding-out under foster-parents was the one preferred.

39417. What were the four alternatives; do you recollect?—In workhouses, in separate Poor Law schools on a large scale, in cottages or scattered homes under Poor Law management, and boarding-out with foster-parents in a family. Those were the four heads, and the large majority were of opinion that boarding-out with foster-parents was the best system. Many add that its practicability is necessarily limited, and that strict supervision by the the medical and relieving officers is necessary. It is frequently stated by medical officers that this is the only system which does away with the workhouse taint. Attitude of British Medical Association to various forms of relieving children.

39418. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Do you mean boarding-out outside the union, or do you mean boarding-out within the union?—We did not draw any distinction. The suggestion is boarding-out with foster-parents in a family—not in homes under Poor Law management, but with a private family.

39419. (Miss Hill.) Your members would not have any special experience of it, would they?—We got our replies both from workhouse medical officers, and from district medical officers. The workhouse medical officers see it from the one side, and the district medical officers from the other side; so that we really get both sides of experience.

39420. (Mr. Phelps.) As a general rule, they would only have experience of the one system which obtains in their union?—Some have a comparative experience, and do definitely compare the systems. I went through the replies on this point myself, and can say that certainly the tendency of opinion was quite clear in favour, first of boarding-out with foster-parents, then scattered homes under Poor Law management came next, then Poor Law schools on a large scale, and then workhouses came last, in the opinion of those who had looked into it. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) The workhouse taint has been alluded to in connection with the management of children. I have to say that, at all events in the parishes of St. Pancras and Marylebone, there are excellent schools. The parish of St. Pancras has got excellent schools, the children are well brought up, and they attend the elementary schools. In the Marylebone parish establishment at Southall, the school is said to be on a very fine scale. Also, in both of those the taint is non-existent, and perfect satisfaction is felt.

* Not sent.

39421. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Not only that, but would you say that the children are rather proud of those schools?—Yes. Southall school has been compared to Eton—in fact it is said that there is more luxury at the Southall school than there is at Eton. (Dr. Macdonald.) That is quite likely.

39422. (Mr. Chandler.) Would it not be the fact that the majority who were in favour of the boarding-out system would only have the two systems to choose from?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) That is why I intervened—because I am referring to a condition of things which is not thought of, I think, in this return. (Mr. Whitaker.) Our returns are from medical officers all over the country; many of whom, of course, would have no experience of the school system.

39423. (Sir Samuel Provis.) They knew about boarded-out children when they had boarded-out children in their own localities?—They would be able to compare the boarding-out with the workhouse.

39424. (Chairman.) And they further put, very strongly, limitations upon the possibility of extending the scheme?—Yes, they do. They draw attention very emphatically to the necessity of very close supervision. They say it should be done by the medical officer and the relieving officer and not by the guardians, because they do not think that the guardians supervise satisfactorily.

39425. You suggest that the powers under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Acts, should be extended so as to give more power of adoption—I suppose by guardians or otherwise—of children who are under the control of vicious parents?—There seems to be some difficulty on that point. That paragraph was based on the replies of two or three medical officers who stated cases in which they had been unable to get children taken from under the control of vicious parents. But on inquiring of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, we were assured by them that there is sufficient power under the existing Acts, if the proper steps are taken and if the proper procedure is adopted. So that we have had to qualify this by saying that the Acts, should “if necessary” be so extended. We cannot speak definitely as to the existing powers, but there are cases recorded where the magistrates appear to have found themselves unable to take the children from under the control of the parents.

39426. Then we come to the provision for deserted wives. You suggest that the Poor Law authority should have power to make provision for deserted wives by outdoor relief. There has been rather strong evidence produced before us from various quarters to indicate that there is a suspicion of collusion in a good many of these cases; did that appear on your answers?—No. Several medical officers pointed out how undesirable it was that guardians should have no power, even after the fullest investigation, to provide by outdoor relief for these cases.

39427. (Sir Samuel Provis.) They can now, can they not?—We were under the impression that they could not.

39428. As a matter of law, the guardians are empowered now to give relief to a deserted wife as if she were a widow?—I think they have to take certain proceedings first.

39429. (Miss Hill.) They certainly do give the relief?—I was not aware of it.

39430. (Mr. Phelps.) How is the health of these good women affected by either of the two systems?—I am not quite sure.

39431. I mean that I do not quite see the drift of that paragraph from your point of view?—It was simply an expression of opinion by the medical officers as to matters that come within their cognisance. Of course the only point of view for us to look at it from, would be if people were being starved or were suffering through being refused relief.

39432. But that was not the evidence you had before you, was it?—All the evidence we had was evidence of hardship, in the opinion of medical officers, through the refusal of outdoor relief. (Dr. Macdonald.) I think the point is very often that the relieving officer refuses to give them outdoor relief, in order to compel them to go into the workhouse, and these people who look on it as rather a disgrace to go into the workhouse, will not do it, so they get the hardship of not being relieved at all. I am quite sure that the opinion prevails in a great many cases that they cannot relieve them otherwise than by sending them into the workhouse, and they cannot give them outdoor relief.

39433. (Chairman.) Your next suggestion is one which has been almost universally endorsed, namely, that “feeble-minded unmarried mothers should be detained in public institutions, and statutory provision should be made for such detention.” But you went a little further, did you not, Mr. Whitaker? Did you not suggest that a feeble-minded girl should be detained on account of her feeble-mindedness?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes. That paragraph arose out of the replies of the medical officers, but from the Association point of view, it would be covered by our evidence before the Royal Commission on the Feeble-Minded. They should be brought under the control of the Lunacy Commissioners.

39434. I suppose there are a number of cases which are so on the line, that it would be difficult to decide whether a girl was feeble-minded or not?—It is very difficult at times, but if you find her coming in again and again, of course that would be sufficient evidence.

39435. Did they suggest in what shape the Bill should be framed?—Did they say one child, for instance?—No; we had not any definite suggestion before us. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) I am told by resident medical officers in the infirmaries that they could be employed in the infirmaries, and that if they could get them certified immediately, even on their first entrance into the infirmary, it would prevent the scandal of returning three or four times afterwards, which is so much objected to.

39436. You would then get the power of detention and could utilise them as you suggest?—They could be utilised for laundry work and other duties in the infirmary. That is the information which I have.

39437. As regards outdoor relief, you make two suggestions which have also come to us from a good many quarters, namely, that in certain cases the relief is inadequate, and that in other cases, relief is given which stricter supervision would show to be unnecessary?—(Mr. Whitaker.) Yes, that is so.

39438. I suppose these two come in connection with the question of how far the relief given is sufficient to keep a woman and her children in health?—Yes, it would. But under the head of “Other matters,” we asked the medical officers to add any points, and a great many drew attention to the fact that outdoor relief in many cases was not sufficient to maintain people in health.

39439. Your last three recommendations are general recommendations which, I suppose, you also suggest in connection with health. First, you suggest that the able-bodied should be discouraged “by increasing the amount of work to be done and reducing the diet?”—There was a feeling, no doubt, in the Committee that these were perhaps rather outside our province, but they were made from so many sources, that we included them.

39440. Reducing the dietaries is a practical suggestion?—Yes.

39441. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) It is a very important suggestion, if it is possible that these people can do their work on a lower dietary?—I believe the feeling of a great many of the medical officers is that they could do their work on a lower diet. They could be kept in health on a lower diet certainly; and it would discourage them

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Need of special provisions in aid of genuine searchers for work.

Attitude of British Medical Association towards incorporation of London Hospital Fund.

Failure of guardians to pay extra operation and midwifery fees.

Difficulty as to payment of doctor called in by midwife.

Lack of uniformity in salaries of medical officers and difficulty as to payment of fees for lunacy certificates.

from coming under the Poor Law, if it were possible without any inhumanity to reduce their diet and increase their work. I think that would be the way to state it.

39442. (Chairman.) You have not worked this out at all, I suppose?—No.

39443. And it is only a general suggestion?—It was a suggestion of the medical officers who replied, and my Committee thought that they should place it before you.

39444. In the same way you make a suggestion in favour of Labour Colonies, and another suggestion that you would discriminate between the genuine workers travelling in search of work and the habitual vagrants?—Yes; that is a very strong opinion. Really it is rather a matter of health that you should make provision for the genuine worker travelling in search of work, so that he may be maintained in health and not become a burden on the community.

39445. With separate treatment and separate diet, I suppose?—Yes.

39446. He would probably require to have a dossier or something to show where he had been employed and what work he was seeking?—Yes. He would have a kind of passport or waybill, which he would take with him.

39447. There is just one general question I should like to put to you. There is a Bill before Parliament which is to incorporate King Edward's Hospital Fund for London; that may possibly, if given effect to, in some way or other pre-judge or affect the decisions at which this Commission might arrive; may I ask whether the British Medical Association are in favour of the Bill?—The Council of the Association passed a resolution last week disapproving of the Bill on certain grounds, and representations are about to be made on the subject. (Dr. Langley Browne.) I want to draw attention to the failure of the guardians to pay fees. In many districts they have never paid extra fees at all. I know that in the Black Country for forty years they have never paid a midwifery fee in any way, and they have never paid for a fracture or an accident at all. I believe that in one part of the district there was a special order forty years ago granted, by which they might escape those fees, because it was supposed that some medical officers—very few of them, and it was only supposed—were charging a special midwifery fee instead of the common one. But ever since then, they have gone on that tack, and now the Midwives' Bill has passed and it is imperative that the midwife should call in a doctor, it is extremely hard all through those districts that when the district medical officer is called in there should be no fee at all for him. The guardians in their advertisements, whenever they advertise for a medical officer, insert the paragraph—"No extra fees will be paid." I have drawn the attention of the Local Government Board to it several times. When Sir Walter Foster was Parliamentary Secretary to the Board he sent out a circular, but it has been taken no notice of whatever. I think if in the different districts throughout the country that matter were inquired into, it would be a very great boon at the present time, because I do think these midwives should have the help of the district medical officer or of another medical officer, and I think it is most important that there should be some arrangement for the payment of fees. Under the Midwives Act there is none whatever, but the midwives must send for a doctor, although there is no provision whatever for the doctor's fees, and if the guardians do not pay the fee, and the relieving officer simply hands over a note, as they do generally, then the doctor has to go and he gets nothing at all for it.

39448. Have any women in consequence been neglected?—No, I cannot say that, because I am afraid the doctors go when they ought to neglect them. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) Might I say one word? I think there was some question of the want of uniformity in the salaries of medical officers when we were discussing Paragraph 3; but I do not think that this aspect of the question was brought in. I refer to the residents in the Poor Law infirmaries of London. A subject which causes a great deal of discontent is that the salaries vary so much. The normal salary is about £400 a year, with some perquisites; but some residents, at all events one resident, gets as much as £825 a year—that is a difference of over £400. This gets known, and it creates a feeling of discontent. On inquiry into the cause of the discrepancy, I find that it is due to the lunacy certificates, which are sometimes given to a resident and sometimes not. Apparently it is a matter which depends on the whim of the justice. It seems to me, and I am speaking for the residents in the infirmaries of London, so far as I know them—that there should be some uniform custom with regard to these certificates, so as to do away with this discontent which prevails in regard to the salaries of resident medical officers in infirmaries.

39449. (Chairman.) Did you say that it depends on the whim of a justice?—Yes, on the whim of a justice of the peace.

39450. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You mean that the justice can call in any medical practitioner he likes?—Yes.

39451. The salaries themselves are on a scale, I think?—Yes.

39452. But your point is that the lunacy fees differ so much in different cases that a doctor naturally takes them into account?—Yes, and it creates a feeling of unfair treatment.

39453. Would there be any difficulty in the doctor agreeing to hand over the fees if he had an inclusive salary?—I should think that they would like to keep the fees.

39454. But suppose he did agree to that, would that meet the case?—Yes, I should think so.

39455. (Bishop of Ross.) In Paragraph 8 you refer to the desirability of drugs and medicine being supplied by the public authority and not by the doctor himself; I suppose one of your reasons would be that if the drugs were supplied by the guardians, the doctor would be perhaps freer in giving the necessary drugs, and especially drugs of a more expensive nature than if they were supplied at his own cost?—(Mr. Whitaker.) We think that his remuneration should be in respect of his medical services, and that he should not be out of pocket or in pocket—either one way or the other—that he should not be taken to make any profit out of drugs, and that he should not lose by giving drugs.

39456. But the doctor would naturally be the judge of the quality of the drugs supplied?—If the guardians supply them, they would choose the chemist who supplied. They would have, to a certain extent, to carry out what the doctor recommended, but they would not absolutely do so.

39457. The doctor would really be the only experienced person to decide whether the drugs were up to quality or not, because the guardians are not skilled persons themselves on such a question?—That would apply, to some extent; but we have experience of these systems. In the case of some contract practice engagements, take, for example, the provident dispensaries of the country, they nearly all work on the system of buying their own drugs, and paying the medical officer a salary. They seem to manage fairly well, to choose the drugs, to see that there is no extravagance, and yet to satisfy the patients.

39458. Would there be any difficulty, as you suggested in Paragraph 8, in the contract being made by the guardians with the doctor himself?—In some cases that would be the only way possible, because there might be no chemist in the district who would be capable of supplying them, and it would be the cheapest way for the guardians to do it so. But that would be a separate contract, of course, and it should be quite independent of his remuneration as a medical man.

39459. I quite understand that, but it seemed to me that if possible it would be better to have a distinct contractor, rather than the doctor himself?—We think it better to have a distinct contractor wherever possible, but in some remote country districts that might be the only practical way of carrying it out.

39460. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) In Paragraph 19 (a) you mention that the Association had under consideration "The creation of a State medical service consisting of whole-time medical officers to whom perhaps other duties in addition to that of Poor Law medical officer would be assigned." Might I ask whether the "other duties" were defined by any of those who replied?—Those who took that view would be in favour of the amalgamation, probably, of the public health service with the Poor Law service, and they would be in favour of the creation of a State medical service which would include all kind of public duties.

Proposed reform as to drug supply by medical officers.

Attitude of British Medical Association towards State medical service, etc.

39461. And which would have its preferment and its promotion and so on?—Yes. That would not be a local service but it would be a State service so that promotion would go from district to district irrespective of the local authorities.

39462. Might I asked whether 19 (a) received much favour in the replies?—Very few people have put it forward. It is only an idea of a few people who have paid special attention to these questions. Neither (a) nor (c) have really been thought out by the majority of the men.

39463. It has not been before all the individuals?—Not really.

39464. So it would not be fair to say that there is anything against either (a) or (c) or strongly in favour of them?—No, it would not.

question of
classification of children.

39465. But they might be considered. The only other thing I want to ask about is with regard to the children. Did your association gather anything in any replies in reference to a classification of the children, from the point of view of health and morals and everything else?—No, there was no suggestion as to a classification of the children, but there were many suggestions as to classifying adults in respect of morals and in respect of ability.

39466. But there was no suggestion with regard to the children?—I do not recollect any at the moment.

39467. It would not be fair to ask for your views upon the advisability of their classification?—We have had 1,900 replies, and they have not been minutely classified on every point. We could refer to the replies again on any question where it was desired to know the opinion of our members.

question of payment of Poor Law
medical officers by case or by salary.

39468. (Mr. Phelps.) Have the Association any views as to whether it is wiser to pay medical officers by case or by salary?—We have not considered that closely. There have been discussions on the subject. Of course there are those in the profession who look upon every kind of contract medical practice as objectionable. They consider that the medical man does his work far better if he is paid by fee than if he is paid by contract. Those who would take that view would apply the same system to the Poor Law, but I do not think that view is generally prevalent.

maximum fee for Poor Law medical officer.

39469. Has the Association any views, first of all as to the number of cases in an urban district that a medical officer can attend to?—No, we have not gone into that. We consider that several of the districts are far too large, and that the limits laid down by the Poor Law Orders have been allowed to be exceeded; that is to say, the Poor Law Orders specify a population of 15,000, and there is one district which, I think, has over 40,000, and another district which has 63,000. We think it is regrettable that the Local Government Board should allow the limits to be exceeded.

39470. Similarly, I suppose, you have no definite idea as to what area in the country a doctor can cover in that way?—No.

superannuation age for Poor Law
medical officer.

39471. Have you any views with regard to the age at which superannuation is desirable in the case of medical men?—At sixty or sixty-five.

39472. You think then it might stand on the same footing as the other professions?—Yes.

39473. You do not think there is anything special in your calling in that respect?—We know by experience that some medical men retain their health and go on working very late in life.

Faculty of payment of medical officer called by midwife.

39474. (Dr. Downes.) With reference to the difficulty of not getting medical assistance in the instances where midwives are unable to complete their case, are you acquainted with the practice which has been adopted, I understand, at Wandsworth, where the guardians undertake to pay 15s. each to their Poor Law medical officer, if he is called in?—No, we had not heard of that. We do not think it is desirable that the work should always be done by Poor Law medical officers, because we think the patient should have the right to choose her own doctor.

39475. Of course the guardians would have no direct control over the other medical men?—We think the best system is that followed in the city of Manchester, where it is done by the local sanitary authority, under the powers of the Public Health Act.

39476. Dr. Langley Browne has gone, but I was going to ask him with regard to that question of the clerical work of the medical officer, whether it was not the medical relief book that he referred to, and in that case whether any suggestions have been made by the Association for its replacement by some other system?—I do not think any suggestion has been made, but there is evidently a very strong feeling among workhouse medical officers of objection to it.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

39477. Are you acquainted with the usual hospital system of case papers?—Yes.

29 Jan. 1907.

39478. Are you aware of any reason why that should not be adopted in the Poor Law service?—I think our opinion is that they should have that or some analogous system.

Objection to clerical work by workhouse medical officers.

39479. In some cases it has been already adopted?—We think that in the smallest infirmaries the responsible medical officer ought to keep a clinical record of each case, and that it would improve his work if he does.

Need of clinical records and case papers in Poor Law infirmaries.

39480. The case-paper would furnish the best clinical record, would it not?—Yes.

39481. It would also serve, would it not, as a voucher for the issue of diets and extras?—Yes.

39482. And it would be a record of the medical officer's attendances?—Yes. We think that would be the system to adopt.

39483. On the question of hospital administration and its relation to the Poor Law, it is assumed that only one method has been proposed, namely, municipal maintenance. I do not know whether the Association's attention has been directed to the report of the Lords' Committee of 1892, on Metropolitan hospitals?—I am afraid we have not considered it from that point of view.

39484. There were proposals then for a central board not necessarily municipal?—We did not know that it was proposed to bring the Poor Law infirmaries under that. That was the reason the Association opposed the Charter of the Hospital Sunday Fund, on the ground that we thought it was a mistake to establish any of those funds.

Attitude of British Medical Association towards incorporation of Hospital Sunday Fund.

39485. I think it was in the minds of the Lords' Committee, because one paragraph in the report refers to it as follows:—"Proposed Central Board. It was generally felt by those who called for a reform of the out-patient department, for the supervision of accounts, for a restriction on the creation of new hospitals, and for a better organisation of medical relief as a whole, through the co-operation of hospitals, dispensaries, private practitioners, and Poor Law, that these changes could only be brought about through the direct agency or the indirect influence of a Central Board?"—I am afraid that we had overlooked that that applied to the Poor Law.

39486. You have not really considered that?—No. (Dr. Ford Anderson.) The Metropolitan Counties Branch which represents the practitioners in the Metropolitan area, have considered that. It came up in protest against the Hospital Sunday Fund Charter. You know they applied for a Charter for the Hospital Sunday Fund, and the Metropolitan Counties Branch, representing the practitioners of London, took proceedings as far as they could against it; they opposed it, and they decided that they would not support a combined management like this—a Central Hospital Board. They said it would be quite sufficient if there could be co-operation between the boards, for this reason, that very likely it would weaken the powers of collection of the different boards if they were amalgamated, as people instead of giving as they do now, to three, would give to one, and therefore the total receipts for distribution amongst the hospitals would be lessened by perhaps two-thirds.

Question of Central Hospital Board for London and its functions.

39487. Would that objection apply to a supervising or co-ordinating board?—No; on the contrary. I say a co-ordinating board is all right, but a central hospital board such as the House of Lords were asked to pass by Lord Sandhurst's Committee, the Branch Council did not consider desirable.

39488. I gather that there is not the same objection to a co-ordinating board?—No.

39489. It would be possible, would it not, on a co-ordinating board to have all the interests concerned represented?—Yes.

39490. Including that of the medical profession?—Yes; that is what we hope for.

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907.

Need of detention of venereal cases.

Proposal to make Poor Law and sanitary areas coterminous.

Attitude of British Medical Association towards gratuitous medical relief.

Proposed classification of cases as between Poor Law and voluntary hospitals.

39491. Could not such a board furnish a hope of preserving the voluntary system of hospitals as opposed to the municipal system?—Yes, that is what we desire, too.

39492. On the question of the detention of cases suffering from venereal disease, I daresay you are aware that the Law Officers' opinion was taken years ago as to whether such cases came within the Act of Parliament which enables compulsory detention in workhouses of persons suffering from contagious disease, and that the Law Officers' opinion was that those cases did not come within the Act. Are you aware of any medical reason—I am not speaking of legal reasons—why they should not?—(Mr. Whitaker.) From a medical point of view they certainly should come within the Act, but we think it should be applied without discrimination of sex, that it should be applied equally to all persons suffering from the disease, and that they should be detained for sanitary reasons until they are no longer dangerous to the community from the medical point of view.

39493. From the medical point of view, then, there is no reason why they should not come under that Act?—Quite so.

39494. In Paragraph 36 you say the opinion of the Poor Law medical officers and the profession is in favour of making the Poor Law areas and the sanitary areas identical; do you imply that they should be under one administration?—Really I think the word "co-terminous" would have been better than "identical," because I think it is possible that we might face the possibility, say, of one set of areas being smaller than the other; but the boundaries of the one set should coincide with the boundaries of a group of the other. The boundaries, for example, of one large sanitary district might correspond with those of a group of unions or vice versa; but they should be co-terminous, and then there would not be the overlapping that there is at present.

39495. (Mr. Loch.) Have you considered the suggestion which might possibly come under your Paragraph 19 (a) that all public medical relief should be free?—The Association has not considered that officially, but it has been discussed, of course, in the Committee.

39496. Do you consider it consistent with your suggestion of a State medical service?—If there were free relief, I suppose some kind of State medical service would be almost necessary.

39497. With the payment of all medical men as functionaries of the State?—Yes, I take it so.

39498. Do you know whether there is any large opinion in that direction connected with the Association?—No. Many medical men have discussed it, and, as a matter of fact, it has been brought forward, but we look upon it as a matter not likely to affect this generation probably. All we say is, that whenever any definite proposal of the kind is put forward, the Association will be willing to discuss it from the point of view of an efficient service. It is a political question really, and we have not considered its desirability.

39499. And you do not advocate it on behalf of the Association in any sense?—No.

39500. With regard to the division of labour between the Poor Law infirmaries and the general hospitals how would you avoid duplication of the cases between the one and the other? Do you propose to bring to the infirmary the chronic cases and long-time cases, and to have the acute cases dealt with at the general hospitals?—The distinction that we have contemplated was that the Poor Law infirmary should receive cases of people who are in need of relief or maintenance, and that the general hospitals should only receive those cases that require purely medical relief on the ground that they cannot afford the special medical attendance which is required.

39501. Then the basis of your distinction is the fact whether they want or do not want maintenance? That is it.

39502. (Dr. Downes.) Would the hospitals take the chronic cases?—I do not think they would. The definition the Association has laid down of the test for hospital admission is that the patient is unable to pay for the special medical attendance which he requires, as the hospitals should only receive cases requiring special medical assistance; and the association would not regard a chronic case as coming under that head.

39503. Where would a chronic case go that was able to maintain itself, but yet could not pay for the necessary medical attendance?—From the charitable point of view, I suppose there should be provision through institutions for incurables; there should be special hospitals for those cases.

39504. There would be need, apart from the Poor Law apparently, for cases of that class?—There might be.

39505. Do you think the accommodation exists at the present time?—No, I should think it is not sufficient.

39506. (Miss Hill.) There is no accommodation for them other than the Poor Law at present, is there, I mean very few hospitals keep them for more than a week?—(Dr. Ford Anderson.) That is so.

39507. (Mr. Loch.) Therefore, does it not come to this, that all of those chronic cases should really, under present conditions or conditions approaching those of the present time, fall back naturally on the Poor Law?—(Mr. Whitaker.) If the sums now subscribed for the general hospitals which are being paid for cases that ought not to be allowed to go into the general hospitals, were liberated, there might be more money for provision for incurable cases.

39508. With regard to the Public Health Act, would you be in favour of the Act being restricted to infectious hospitals, or to some similar group of work, so that the municipalities would not need to start general hospitals?—No, I should not be in favour of restricting the powers which the sanitary authorities have, and I do not think the association would be in favour of restricting the powers under the Public Health Act. I think they would say that it was a pity to confine things too closely to the present experimental lines, and that you had better feel your way.

39509. With regard to maternity cases and cases of that kind, are you in favour of those being handed over to the sanitary authority?—We have prepared a memorial to the Privy Council on the subject, and the reason that we assign for preferring that it should be done through the sanitary authority is that the Poor Law authority at present would only be able to apply to the Poor Law medical officer, and we do not think the patient should be restricted to the Poor Law medical officer as her attendant; we think she should have a free choice of attendant.

39510. So you would advocate something like the action of Manchester in starting a hospital from the sanitary resources, as it were, of the community for puerperal cases?—Are they starting a hospital there?

39511. They have done it?—I did not know that they had got a hospital; but I knew they were making provision for medical practitioners to attend these cases.

39512. Do you not think it is rather a serious matter, in view of your own proposed classification, that the sanitary authority should undertake a good deal more than the treatment of cases coming necessarily under that Act?—I think the matter has not been definitely considered, and I should perhaps be only giving my own opinion, if I gave an opinion.

39513. Might I ask whether the association is likely to consider questions like that further within the present twelve months or so, and the very important question under Paragraph 30 which practically is only very partially settled by the semi-negative here?—They might consider them further. I think their feeling probably upon the question of the sanitary authorities establishing hospitals would be that, though they would not advocate such a system as a matter of general principle, they would not be disposed to oppose an experiment in an individual place that might be a guide to the future.

39514. You have not thought of there being a kind of public health committee for the locality which would include the whole of the hospital administration, have you?—It was suggested, indeed, in the case of London—and therefore would be outside the scope of the sanitary authority, and yet would provide the sanitary authority not only with hospitals for such a purpose as this, which does not lie necessarily within the Act, but for other purposes as well, and so co-ordinating the whole?—I suppose, really, the difficulty in all these matters arises from the present functions of the Poor Law authority, and what is regarded as the stigma of pauperism associated with the Poor Law authority. Take the question of maternity hospitals. I think the reason the association would not oppose the establishment of maternity hospitals by the sanitary authority is on the simple ground that the sanitary authority have a much freer hand than the Poor Law authority—that would be the only reason.

39515. Therefore if your peculiar difficulty as to Poor Law relief is met somehow, then the organisation of a board for hospitals as proposed by the Lords and elsewhere could be brought into existence?—Yes.

39516. Practically owing to that difficulty, may I say that all kinds of more or less hedging arrangements have to be made in other quarters to keep freedom?—Yes.

39517. (Sir Samuel Provis.) With regard to district medical officers not getting fees for operations, do I understand that in some cases guardians refuse to give those fees when the district medical officer considers that he is entitled to them?—No. Our difficulty is that the existence of those old contracts which have been kept on in the Black Country particularly for such a long time is contrary to the public interest and ought to be disallowed by the Local Government Board.

39518. You are aware that the Consolidated Order provides that the salary of the district medical officer shall not include payment for certain operations, and that he is entitled to a fee for those operations?—Quite so.

39519. In some cases those articles have been suspended; is it in those cases that this difficulty arises?—Yes. I mentioned formerly the case of the Black Country generally; then there is the case of Kingsbridge in Devonshire, where the medical officer is medical officer for two districts; he gets a salary of £55 a year, and his average visiting list is something like 600 visits per annum. He has to do every kind of work for that inclusive salary, and he gets no fees for anaesthetics, operations, midwifery, or any kind of extra work. The whole of his duties come under that inclusive salary for the two districts.

39520. Is it the case that the salaries in those kind of districts are higher than in other places?—I do not think so. I have compared that salary with the salary paid in other districts, and I should say that it is not higher.

39521. Is it the case that the medical officer has to perform those operations, and that the cases are not sent to some other hospitals to be operated upon?—He speaks of having to perform the operations, and he makes a point that he has to do all this work for the one inclusive salary.

39522. Now about sanitary areas; you were in favour, you said, of the Poor Law areas and the sanitary areas being co-extensive, or at least having the boundaries interlaced?—Yes.

39523. How would that work with an urban district? I rather gather you were thinking probably of rural districts, and of putting rural districts under one authority for some large area; but you could not supersede urban authorities, could you?—Could not the Poor Law areas be made to correspond with the areas of the urban sanitary authorities?

39524. Some of them are very small; they are places with populations varying from 1,000 to 5,000 or 6,000 in a great many cases?—Those would be the old municipalities—the old boroughs, I suppose?

39525. The old urban districts which were formerly local board districts. Many of those districts were formed simply for highway purposes; still they are urban sanitary districts now. You would not think they were suitable for Poor Law areas now?—No, we do not think them suitable for urban areas; we think that there are urban sanitary authorities which are unsatisfactory.

39526. Just so; but they are difficult to get rid of, because they exist?—I thought the recommendations of the Lords' Committee on the Housing of the Working Classes might help to get rid of those small authorities.

39527. They speak chiefly of rural areas?—We are proposing to make a recommendation, and I would urge it rather strongly, that not only are the small rural authorities unsatisfactory, but the small urban authorities are unsatisfactory also—perhaps even more so in some cases.

39528. Push that a little bit further, and take a place, say, with a population of 10,000 which could not very well be got rid of as an urban district, even on the grounds you are considering; that would be a small area for Poor Law purposes, would it not?—It is getting near the limit. 15,000 is your limit for Poor Law purposes.

39529. They would want a workhouse if you are going to have a separate area, and 10,000 is too small a population for a separate workhouse?—There are many unions with a much smaller population than 10,000.

39530. There are, but then one of the things now desired is to get a classification of workhouses, and you could not have a classification of workhouses, could you, unless you have a large population?—Not to have a workhouse for each district.

39531. That is one point I was leading up to; you are proposing that unions should combine for indoor relief, although they existed separately for outdoor relief?—Yes.

39532. That is rather what you had in view?—Yes.

39533. (Mr. Loch.) Have you ever thought of utilising possibly an infirmary in a rural district as a hospital, instead of having what, I think, you propose, a cottage hospital parallel to it, there being possibly not demand enough for two institutions in such a place?—There would be the objection that you would bring the hospital patient, whom we have classified as distinct from the Poor Law patient, into the same institution as the Poor Law patient.

39534. I am taking your previous answer to a certain extent, namely, that you might possibly find a way out of what we have called the pauper taint, if it were set aside in some way. Would there be any difficulty in your mind on a point like that?—Bringing them into one institution?

39535. Yes?—That would be the objection, I take it, and that would be the only objection perhaps.

39536. (Chairman.) The Irish Commission on the Poor Laws have sat and made a report; has their report come under the notice of your association?—Yes, it has.

39537. I should be much obliged if your association would look at the proposals they make for combining the health authorities and the medical authorities in the rural districts of Ireland, and let us have your opinion?—Is that as applied to Ireland?

39538. As applied only to Ireland?—Our Irish Committee are going through that report, but they are not sure whether this Commission will take evidence as regards Ireland. If you are free to take evidence as regards Ireland, then the Irish Committee of the association will be prepared to submit evidence to you.

39539. Perhaps you would have no objection to sending us their report when it is prepared?—We will do so with pleasure. (The following report was subsequently sent:—

“That the Irish Committee of the British Medical Association having considered very fully the Report desire to express their conviction that it is most desirable that the Royal Commission on the Poor Law should accept and approve this Report as a satisfactory solution of the problem so far as the Report goes.” Further:—

“That there are some sections of the Report, and many important matters chiefly connected with the dispensary system which have not been touched upon in the Report, with reference to which the Irish Committee consider the Royal Commission should seek for evidence. On these points the Irish Committee will be prepared at a later period to assist the Royal Commission.”

Drs. F. Anderson, M.D., J. A. Macdonald, M.D., H. L. Browne, M.D., and Mr. J. S. Whitaker, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

29 Jan. 1907

Proposed combination of unions for indoor relief.

Question of utilising Poor Law infirmaries as voluntary hospitals.

Attitude of British Medical Association towards report of Irish Veterinary Poor Law Commission.

SEVENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Monday, 11th February, 1907,

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I. etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
 Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
 The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
 Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL, C.B.
 Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.
 The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.

The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.
 Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
 Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
 Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
 The Right Rev. The LORD BISHOP OF ROSS.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Miss MARGARET BAINES, called; and Examined.

Miss M. Baines. 39540. (Chairman.) You are a member of the Leeds Board of Guardians?—I am.

11 Feb. 1907. 39541. You have been good enough to prepare a written statement, which, if you will hand it in, we will treat as your evidence-in-chief?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following statement).

Methods of dealing with Poor Law children at Leeds.

1. During the last ten years the Leeds Board of Guardians has entirely altered its method of dealing with the children under its care. There used to be a small barrack-school within the workhouse grounds. This has been done away with and the "Scattered Home System" has been adopted step by step in its place, against a good deal of opposition on the part of some guardians, but with what is now acknowledged to be conspicuous success.

2. We have now eleven small homes in different parts of the city, one receiving home outside the workhouse grounds, where children are placed for a fortnight as a safeguard against infection, and one distributing home, three miles from the city, holding forty children, where the children are sorted and distributed to the various small homes.

3. The life in the small homes, is simple, free, natural and economical. It is exactly like that of a respectable working man's home. The home is looked after by a foster-mother, who is responsible for its conduct, under the supervision of a Visiting Superintendent—a most excellent man. This plan gives the children a loving home atmosphere and individual care, and at the same time it gives them freedom, self-respect and companionship with the outside, independent, non-pauper population.

4. I consider this constructive work the best that we have done during the last ten years, and those for whom it is done, viz., the children, are the only really hopeful part of Poor Law work.

5. It seems to me thoroughly on right lines in every way, and it is at the same time the most economical of any branch of our Poor Law administration.

6. We also board-out with seven different boarding-out committees outside the union.

7. We have also emigrated seventeen children to Canada during the last two years, all of whom are doing well.

Proposed restriction of out-relief. 8. My own opinion is that it would be well to almost entirely limit Poor Law relief to indoor relief, and to deal with every deserving, respectable, destitute person or family who was not received into the workhouse, by some system of organized voluntary charity, such as the Charity Organisation Society, or the Elberfield system, adapted to English methods.

9. The class that I think outdoor relief does the least harm to and the most good to, is that of widows with children, and to these I would give a considerably larger amount than is usually given. Here in Leeds the ordinary scale is 1s. 6d. for each child, and nothing for the mother, who is urged to go out to work to supplement what is given.

I would give to a really respectable widow, 4s. for each child if there are only four children, 3s. for each child if there are more than four children.

The mother could then stay at home and look after her own children properly, a most desirable and rare thing.

10. Old people, single or married. Here come in many questions which do not come into the case of the widow, e.g., could the people desiring relief have saved, or joined a friendly society, or been more sober, or be assisted by relations? If you give outdoor relief (which is compulsorily levied) to cases like these, you take away much of the inducement to others who live near, to save or join friendly societies, or be sober.

I think it would be better for such cases to be dealt with by voluntary agencies, and taken into the workhouse if not helped by them.

11. Young permanently disabled fathers of families. Here I should not give outdoor relief. It seems hard to the family to refuse, but it is harder to the nation as a whole to give. I am referring to cases of phthisis, syphilis, partial paralysis, etc.

By giving outdoor relief you make three evils possible:

(1) You make it possible, for more children to be born into an entirely pauper household.

(2) You make it possible for those children to be born of thoroughly diseased persons, and so the race is deteriorated.

(3) You make it possible for the family to live in constantly insanitary conditions.

One such case, I know, cost the Leeds ratepayers beside the evils which it brought in its train.

12. Deserted wives. We have a large number. My own opinion is that a man deserts his wife more easily if he thinks he will find the home still going on when he chooses to reappear. Also we have had many cases of collusion between husband and wife.—I should give it very seldom to deserted wives.

13. In my opinion the chief causes of pauperism are:—(a) Allowing feeble-minded or diseased persons to marry and have families, e.g., syphilitic and phthisical.

By tending them as carefully and scientifically as we do now in our union infirmaries, by means of the best medical skill and trained nursing, we send them out, over and sons;

Suitability of out-relief for respectable widows with children: proposed increased allowances for such cases.

Objections to out-relief to (a) aged poor

(b) Young disabled married men

(c) Deserted wives

Causes of pauperism (a) Marriage of feeble-minded or diseased persons over again, temporarily cured, to the possibilities of marriage, and of having families.

Surely by doing this we are increasing with compound interest on the one hand what we are feebly trying to diminish on the other.

I cannot do better than append the paper read by Dr. Allan, our medical superintendent, at the Yorkshire Poor Law Conference held in Leeds last November. (Paper printed as part of Dr. Allan's Statement of Evidence. See Q. 41233.)

(b) Drink. It goes without saying that this is one great cause of pauperism.

(c) Workmen's Compensation Act, which, though no doubt excellently intended, and excellent in its results for those who are injured in their work, yet makes employers very unwilling, and naturally unwilling, to employ anyone who is not in the fullest possession of all their faculties. Men who have been deaf, or with not the best sight, have told me this many times.

(d) Trades union regulations with regard to the minimum wage in a trade.

Here again, no doubt, these regulations have done much good in raising the standard of wages, but for those workers who have got a little beyond middle life, and who are not quite equal to the work of a younger man, it means that they get no work in that trade to which they have been brought up, and they have to turn at that age and try to find more or less casual work, of a sort to which they are not accustomed.

(e) Indiscriminate and careless giving of outdoor relief, e.g., one ward in the Leeds Union doubled its out-door relief during the first year after the present board came in. There was some exceptional distress, but not anything in proportion to the increase of outdoor relief.

The same ward has gradually been diminishing its outdoor relief for the last two years, although worked by the same guardians—and they themselves have acknowledged that the policy of the first year was unwise.

14. The board divides itself into six small committees for outdoor relief work, but as very little more than half the guardians attend this department of the work with any regularity—some, not at all—it follows that committees for this work sometimes consist of three or fewer members. One committee for this purpose has consisted of one guardian and the relieving officer for weeks together, and it deals with an average of 800 people.

15. I think it is most important to secure the enforced detention of syphilis cases of both sexes, until, at any rate, cure of the primary disease is effected.

16. That there should be power to detain feeble-minded cases of both sexes, preferably in homes set apart for that purpose.

17. That married daughters should be required to contribute to the maintenance of their parents, when in a position to do so.

18. I have now been a guardian for twelve years, and have been through four triennial elections. In my opinion each of the four boards elected has been less good than the last.

19. The men on it are proposed and elected without, as it seems to me, the slightest regard to whether they are fitted for the position and work of a guardian.

20. They are chosen and elected (often avowedly so), in order to try the strength of the political party to which they belong, and to many of them one cannot help thinking that the chief idea in being a guardian is that it brings some notoriety, and may be the first step towards a seat in the city council—a sort of practising ground for it.

21. Every three years our whole board goes out, and only about one-third returns. The new two-thirds come totally ignorant of everything to do with Poor Law, not content to wait to learn, not even waiting to understand what is going on in their particular union, much less what has been the history of the Poor Law, and of pauperism for some years and centuries.

22. It is not a question of the social status of the guardians, still less of wealth or poverty—I have known some of the best guardians the poorest, and vice versa—but is it too much to ask that for such skilled, important, far-reaching work as that of a guardian, the candidates put up should:—

(a) Have a real interest in, and capacity for, the work.

(b) Be elected for that work, and not for an entirely different purpose.

(c) Should be sufficiently educated to be able to see beyond the present moment, both as to the past, and as to the future.

23. The present class of persons seeking election as guardians is, in my opinion, deplorably unsuitable, and increasingly so.

24. If I may mention my own case I would say that for my four elections I stood:—

(a) Politically (knowing no better), as a Liberal.

(b) Refusing offers from both parties, I stood independently, and got in head of poll.

(c) Independently, unopposed by Conservatives, again head of poll.

(d) Independently, defeated, co-opted afterwards.

25. I am venturing to append a letter which was published in the papers on this subject in December last, signed by representatives of both political parties in Leeds. (See Appendix, No. VIII. (A.))

26. I shall probably be defeated again, but I would much rather that this should be so, than that I should add to the ranks of those who stand politically for a non-political office.

39542. (Chairman.) You have been a guardian for a good many years, I think?—Twelve years.

39543. You have taken a good deal of interest in that part of your duties which relates to the education of children?—Yes.

39544. You think that the scattered homes system has worked well?—I think it has worked excellently.

39545. How long has that system been in force? Practically eight years now.

39546. Have you been able to test its results?—I think so. I know all the children very well, and I think the difference in them is very noticeable; after they have got into one of these homes and been there for a few weeks or months they get quite a different sort of character; they get individuality, self-respect, and are different altogether; they are like an ordinary child instead of being like a workhouse child.

39547. I rather meant afterwards; have you been able to place the children?—Yes, we place the girls in situations and we try to get our boys some regular work—proper work; we apprentice them if possible, or we send them to the "Indefatigable." If they are rather tire-some or difficult, we send them to the "Indefatigable." We have got boys out in various trades, but the girls are almost entirely in service.

39548. The girls go mostly into service?—Almost entirely.

39549. I suppose there is a considerable demand for them?—Yes.

39550. There has been a good deal of difference as to the manner in which the various foster mothers have performed their work; should you say that the average woman is able to look after eight children; I should imagine she would be able to look after eight pretty easily?—Quite so. We have one or two homes with nine or ten in, and in the older boys' home we have eleven; there we have a most excellent mother; she is quite able to manage eleven boys.

39551. You have other children who are boarded outside the union?—Yes.

39552. Have you watched the operation of that system?—Yes.

39553. How does that work?—I always think, as Miss Mason said, "Well done it is the best system and badly done it is the worst." We have had a good many failures from one or two boarding-out committees that

Miss M.
Baines.

11 Feb. 1907.

Need for election of properly qualified guardians.

Success of Leeds scattered homes for Poor Law children.

After careers of Leeds Poor Law children.

Leeds Poor Law children boarded outside the union.

Miss M.
Baines.

11 Feb. 1907.

we have had, otherwise they have been on the whole good. We have had a good many children returned to us as unmanageable.

39554. Have there been any cases of maltreatment ?—There have been two cases lately, about a year ago, where I think the children were entirely neglected; the woman did not care for them at all.

Objections to boarding-out within the union.

39555. I suppose your opinion is that which has been expressed by other witnesses: that the system is not a bad one, but it has its limitations, and it must be subject to very strict supervision ?—Very strict supervision. May I say here that the boarding-out within the union, I think is most undesirable, unless there is more inspection than there is at present, and inspection by women inspectors.

39556. At present the children inside the union are really less looked after than the children outside ?—Much less.

Visitation of scattered homes by guardians and its advantages.

39557. Do you take a certain number of these scattered homes under your personal charge so as to know all the children, and do other guardians do the same ?—The Local Government Board insists that ladies shall visit all the homes once a week, if possible. That is what I and my two co-lady guardians have tried to do; we have also tried to have a system of the other guardians visiting, say, one home every week for three months, and a few of them have done it fairly regularly once a week for three months at a time, and have then changed round and visited another home.

39558. Did any of the male guardians co-operate in this work of visiting ?—They do now; some of them very well.

39559. I assume that one of the advantages of this system is that if the guardians will give the necessary time to visit they get a personal knowledge of the children which is very difficult to obtain under any other system ?—Certainly.

Leeds receiving home
for children.

39560. Have you any large schools ?—No, we have only one receiving home, which is supposed to hold forty children. You must have one rather large place in case you have a family of eight coming in all at once. That is a sort of sorting home; our children first go to the small receiving home near the workhouse, where they stay for a fortnight to see if they have any infectious disease; then they go up to the larger home, or a scattered home according as there is space.

Proposed restriction of out-relief and more adequate relief when granted.

39561. Now we come to out-door relief; you would like to see restrictions on out-door relief, and I think also you would like associated with those restrictions an endeavour to ensure that the relief given is adequate ?—Yes.

39562. I suppose you would say that the present system is rather wanting in those two respects ?—I should certainly.

39563. Would you agree with the view that is put forward, that if out-door relief is given rather freely it generally results in being inadequate ?—Yes, I think so.

39564. The one rather follows the other ?—Yes, certainly. Personally I should like to give to many fewer people and much more adequately to the ones we do give to, as I have mentioned about the widows in my statement.

Inadequacy of out-relief to widows with young children and evil results therefrom.

37565. At present you think the widows with children get insufficient ?—Yes, they are obliged to go out and work, which is very unsatisfactory if they have children of two or three years of age.

39566. On that point, Leeds is a manufacturing town; many of the widows work in the factories ?—Yes, a good many of them do.

39567. What is the result as regards the home life ?—I think it must and does contribute to the great neglect of the children that there is now.

39568. Do any widows on out-relief work in the factories ?—Yes.

39569. What would you say about that; would you go so far as to try and stop them from working in the factories ?—Not if they have not small children. I think if they have small children they certainly should not, but if the children are all going to school I do not see why they should not work in the factories.

39570. (Mr. Booth.) Would you make an increased allowance for each child and make a stipulation that no woman was to go out who was wanted to stay at home ?—I should personally like to do that.

39571. (Chairman.) I think you are beginning rather to consider the difficulties about that; it would be very difficult to enforce it, would it not ?—I do not think so.

39572. Not as regards the small children ?—No. If you have a careful Relieving Officer he would know whether the woman was working or not.

39573. Do you relieve widows who have families by taking one or two children away from them ?—No, we do not do that at all in Leeds; we either take them altogether into the house or give them out-door relief.

Methods of relieving widows with children at Leeds.

39574. Have you any voluntary agencies associated with the Board of Guardians in Leeds ?—Yes, a good many associated with them; we work in with several voluntary agencies.

Co-operation between Leeds
guardians
and charity

39575. The Charity Organisation Society ?—Yes, the Charity Organisation Society has been a very small body in Leeds and not done very much, but they now have a good new paid Secretary who, we hope, is going to do a great deal of good.

39576. You would wish to hand over those cases which are verging towards the Poor Law ?—Yes.

39577. You sum up here, I think, succinctly your objections to out-door relief; the system makes it possible for more children to be born into an entirely pauper household; it makes it possible for those children to be born of thoroughly diseased persons, and it is possible for the family to live in constantly insanitary conditions. I assume that the evidence you get is not very thorough as regards the sanitary conditions of the homes of the people to whom you give out-door relief ?—It is thorough to this extent, that there may be six or eight children and the father and mother sleeping in the same room. May I give you one case ? I have the case here of a man who was forty-four years of age; he had asthma; he had relief for six years, ending with 6s. a week; it was rather higher before. He had three children born during that time and the youngest child was eight months old when the father died. The total sum spent on that case would be about £90, but some of the former books have been destroyed so that we cannot quite make it out.

Instances of
out-relief granted to unsuitable
cases.

39578. (Mr. Gardiner.) Is that the figure which was left blank in your paper ?—No, that was another case.

39579. (Chairman.) What was the illness he had ?—He was ill with asthma; what he died of I do not know. That was not a phthisical case, but we have very many phthisical cases.

39580. Supposing you had your own way, how would you have dealt with a case of that sort ?—If it had to be dealt with by the Poor Law I should say that man ought to have come into the infirmary for everyone's sake. If the guardians did not give him outdoor relief, but voluntary people chose to do so, it would then be their responsibility.

39581. You would contend that about £90 of public money was spent really in creating, as far as the State was concerned, a worse condition of things with regard to that family than there was before ?—I think so.

39582. Can you give us any other case of the same nature ?—There was the case of a man who was forty-one, he was a tin worker, he had seven children and he had out-relief. He was supposed to be a phthisical case. I so constantly come across phthisical cases that I have not any other instance put down here.

39583. Could you describe to us what is the result of your experience in these phthisical cases ?—As to whether the father gets well ?

39584. I will take the case of a father who begins to show signs of phthisical affection, what generally happens in your experience ?—It will come to us for outdoor relief and we very often give it, and it will go on perhaps for two or three years with the father living in much too close touch with the children until he dies.

39585. I assume he does not come to you until the disease has made considerable progress ?—Not generally.

Difficulties
dealing with phthisical
cases,

39586. When practically it has got almost beyond cure ?—Yes; if it is at all curable we send them to a sanatorium near Leeds. We have two permanent beds there.

39587. I want to put to you rather the practical difficulties in dealing with them. Assuming you were to deal compulsorily with a case of that kind in its early stages, you are face to face rather with this difficulty, that the man would have to be maintained for a long time in the sanatorium at the public expense and his children would probably have to receive relief from the rates?—Yes.

39588. What do you say to that, would you face that in these cases?—I think it would be better for the family as a whole, and I think it would be really more economical in the end.

39589. The expenditure at first would be spread over a considerable time, but there might be a prospect of a cure?—Yes, at any rate if phthisis is infectious, as it is supposed to be, you would not be going on infecting other people in the house, nor would you be increasing the family.

39590. Is there great reluctance in phthisical cases to come in?—Great reluctance generally. We have a great number in the house who are very comfortable when they are there; it is the first step that is the difficulty, I think.

39591. Is there much imposture in the case of deserted wives?—I think there is a good deal. I have one case here, for instance, of a wife who was deserted and in the workhouse for three years. She came out after three years; she had three working boys and two dependent children; she had out-door relief given her because she said she had never seen her husband for that time; she had 3s. a week for the two dependent children, when we found that her husband had been living within a hundred yards of her; she had visited him whilst she was in the workhouse and when she left. That is not an uncommon case.

39592. You go into the causes of pauperism, and I see throughout your statement you attach great importance to giving compulsory powers to the guardians to detain people who are suffering from diseases which have not yet been cured. You put that as a big contributing cause of pauperism?—Yes. I think especially the first one that I mention, and that I suppose need not necessarily come to the Poor Law at all, but as it is, that is what happens to us according to Dr. Allan's paper.

39593. Dr. Allan is coming; I have your opinion so perhaps I need not press you upon that point. While on the subject of detention, I assume that you would wish to keep feeble-minded girls?—Keep them somewhere; I should say in a voluntary home. We have a few now perfectly certain to come to grief if they go outside; you do not want to keep them the whole of their lives in the workhouse, and you cannot keep them against their will, if uncertified.

39594. Would you wish to have a general power of detention in the workhouse so that if persons go in there they cannot come out when they choose?—For that first particular disease?

39595. No, generally?—No.

39596. Have you complaints made that people go in and discharge themselves whenever it is convenient to themselves?—Yes.

39597. You have not much inconvenience from that?—We have a good deal, but I do not think you can ask for compulsory detention on that ground; it only makes inconvenience in working.

39598. I do not mean for long; if they come for relief to the guardians, it has been suggested that the guardians should have power to detain them such time as they think necessary?—I really have not thought about that.

39599. Should you say that drink is on the increase or not?—I should not have thought it was on the increase.

39600. We have had a good deal of indirect evidence as regards the Workmen's Compensation Act to the effect that it has rather curtailed the age at which people can get employment. That is your impression too, is it?—Certainly.

39601. You have no figures to show that?—I am afraid I have not; it is only what the men themselves have said to me. I know a man of forty who had to dye his hair because he was afraid of being thought too old.

39602. It has also been suggested to us that as machinery gets speeded up so it becomes a greater strain on the people, and the old people are not equal to the work and consequently they have greater difficulty in getting employment. Have you ever heard of that?—No, but there is the general argument that a man when he gets beyond fifty is not as equal to the work as he was before.

39603. And if the tendency is to speed up machinery more and more, there will be less prospect of men over fifty getting employment than before?—Yes, certainly.

39604. You also think that the Trade Union minimum wage in certain cases tends to unemployment?—Yes, I think so, because naturally the employer will not take on a man for the full wage except one who is able to do a full day's work.

39605. Leeds is a general trade town, is it not?—Yes.

39606. You think that the personnel of the guardians, so far as their capacity and training for the work they undertake are concerned, has not improved of recent years?—Certainly not.

39607. I see you are strongly of opinion that only one-third of the Board should go out every year so as to ensure continuity of policy?—Yes.

39608. You notice that a very small proportion, or a comparatively small proportion, of the guardians who come on have ever attempted to qualify or train themselves in advance for the work they undertake?—Not in the slightest degree; I think perhaps it never occurred to them to stand till they had been asked to stand by the political party in order to get a victory in that ward for the particular political party.

39609. You have been elected four times?—Yes.

39610. I see you begin by saying "Politically (knowing no better) as a Liberal"?—I am afraid the grammar of that was not quite correct.

39611. What you want to make clear there is that it is very difficult for anybody to stand without some organisation behind them?—It is in Leeds.

39612. In the first instance the only organisation is that which belongs to political parties?—Yes. I think it is only in Leeds; in Halifax one of the guardians told me he never stood politically, nor do they in Huddersfield, which is also near us. A lady told me she did not stand politically there.

39613. Have you found that when your work got known you could stand independently, so to say?—Yes. There is a lady standing in the same way as I am doing now for another division of Leeds. I hope she has a fair chance, she is a well-known lady.

39614. What is the sort of question that in your judgment mainly interests the electors; is it the question of outdoor relief?—That is the thing that most candidates say on their platforms when they are speaking before an election, that they will not send a deserving person to the workhouse, that is the general thing to say.

39615. Does the out-relief go up as the next election approaches? Is there a tendency that way?—I think there is a tendency, certainly.

39616. (Mr. Booth.) In addition to the kind of homes that you have mentioned, the barrack form and the scattered homes, there is another system in some unions which I think they call "grouped homes"?—Cottage homes.

39617. Have you any experience of that system?—No, I have not any personal experience.

39618. But you do not think so favourably of it as of the scattered homes?—I think it is neither one thing nor the other quite, and it also keeps up the institution system; the children go to the same school in the grounds, and they go to the same church or chapel in the grounds. In Leeds our children are divided, no two homes go to the same church or chapel or to the same school, and therefore they mix entirely with the non-pauper population; it seems to me the essence of the thing that they should do that. When you have a large number of homes together, as in the cottage home system, you cannot do that. Also I think the cottage homes are much more stereotyped. One of our foster mothers came from one of the cottage homes in another town, and she said they always had the same pudding every day all round the

Miss M.
Baines.

11 Feb. 1907.

Out-relief to deserted wives a temptation to imposture.

Need for power to compulsorily detain persons suffering from syphilis and girls of weak mind.

The "ins and outs" of problem.

The Workmen's Compensation Act; the "speeding up" of machinery; and trade unionism as causes of pauperism.

Need for tripartite retirement of
guardians.
The influence of politics in guardians' elections.

"Out-relief"
as an electionering placard.

Advantages of "scattered" over "grouped" homes for children.

Miss M.
Evins.

11 Feb. 1907.

Question as to best method of dealing with widows with
children.
The need for relieving young disabled married men only in the workhouse.

homes. That is an illustration of the stereotyping of the homes. In ours each mother just manages her home like an ordinary mother would.

39619. Do you disapprove of the guardians taking charge of some of the children of a widow. You say they do not do it at all in your union. Do you disapprove of it?—No, I think it might be a good thing, but we have never done it.

39620. With regard to these sick cases which you think would be better in the workhouse, the men still continue their work although phthisical or asthmatical?—Sometimes they do for a short time, and then they are in bed for weeks or months.

39621. So that you disregard the earnings?—If there are earnings, they probably would be earning their ordinary wages.

39622. It would be more serious to break up the home if the man was still able to earn money?—Yes, we should not do it if the man were earning anything.

39623. You would not wish to bring him in unless the case was one of the spreading of infection?—No, I think not; as long as he was earning anything one would not.

39624. The only justification for enforcing his coming in would be that he might spread the disease?—The question is whether we should give outdoor relief, but that is not what you are asking me, is it?

39625. I thought you wished to have some power to compel them to come in, or is it merely the indirect compulsion of refusing out-relief?—That is what I was mentioning here, the indirect compulsion. My chief point was that by giving outdoor relief you make possible and perpetuate the conditions previously mentioned. (Q. 39577.)

39626. (Bishop of Ross.) Have you any classification of the children in the scattered homes?—No. They are just like a family in the scattered homes.

39627. But the children will be of various ages under the same foster mother?—Yes, they vary from about fourteen to four.

39628. Do you pay any attention to the religion of the children in the scattered homes?—Certainly.

39629. And you take care that the foster mother will be of the same religion as the children under her care?—I proposed that about seven years ago, because I thought it was the only fair thing to do, and I was told then it was a very narrow thing to propose, and it has been brought up against me at two elections since that I did propose it. We had a discussion about it and lost it; eight guardians did not vote either way on that subject. It seems to me the only fair thing.

39630. What has been done, actually?—What has been done is that we are supposed to choose a mother without any regard to her religious belief. The children happily are obliged to go to the church or chapel of the particular denomination to which they belong.

39631. With regard to going to school or chapel?—Yes, church or chapel school. Notwithstanding the above-mentioned decision of the board, the guardians have in practice only chosen a Roman Catholic mother for a Roman Catholic home. In that they are entirely inconsistent.

39632. But they do not take the same precaution with regard to other denominations?—No.

39633. But they do with regard to the Roman Catholics?—Yes.

39634. So that the Roman Catholic children are placed in homes with a Roman Catholic foster mother?—Yes.

39635. (Miss Hill.) With a Roman Catholic foster mother, did the guardians agree to that?—They seem to think they cannot do anything else.

39636. (Bishop of Ross.) That condition of things could not so well prevail in the cottage home system; you could hardly get the Catholic children together under the cottage home system?—You could have a home for the Roman Catholics.

39637. Of course they must all attend the schools within the area?—Yes, certainly.

39638. Then they will attend church or chapel within the area of the home itself, and they would not have the same opportunity of being absorbed by their own co-religionists?—No.

39639. You object to a widow who has young children going out to work?—Yes.

39640. On account of the evil effect on the family?—Yes.

39641. Do you see the same objection to a woman whose husband is alive and has young children going out to work?—I think it would be better that she should not, if she has young children.

39642. Will not the effect on the family be precisely the same whether the woman is a widow or not a widow if she has young children?—Yes, I think it would, but we, as guardians, have nothing to do with a woman whose husband is alive and working.

39643. (Chairman.) I understood you referred to factory work?—Any sort of work which takes the mother away when she has young children.

39644. (Mr. Booth.) Any sort of work which takes them from their homes?—Yes.

39645. (Mr. Gardiner.) Your point is that the board of guardians has no responsibility as long as the father lives?—That is so.

39646. (Bishop of Ross.) Would you have any suggestion to make with regard to young women going to work in the factories?—I think it is a bad thing for the families if they have a husband.

39647. A bad thing for the future of the race?—Yes, that is my own opinion.

39648. (Mr. Bentham.) Did the guardians take any action with regard to the feeding of school children under the Underfed School Children Order?—Yes, last year we had a committee about it, and we received a certain number of names from the School Board; we then fed them by the help of a voluntary agency, a doctor in the town who is very enthusiastic on that point.

39649. Was any special provision made for feeding those children who were in receipt of outdoor relief?—No, we did not feed the children in receipt of outdoor relief.

39650. Was it held that 1s. 6d. for each child and nothing for the mother would be quite sufficient to maintain the child in proper physical condition?—I suppose it was in addition to what the mother might be earning. That is what I do not often think right.

39651. No special provision really was made for those apart from the relief?—No.

39652. With regard to your relief committees, would you prefer to have a change of members on the various committees?—Very much.

39653. You think that would lead to more uniformity and better administration all round?—Yes.

39654. Has it ever been tried?—A few guardians change round, because they think it is the right thing to do, but others say they prefer to stay on their own committee.

39655. Was that ever proposed before the board?—I do not quite remember that.

39656. You have no superintendent relieving officer, have you?—No.

39657. Was that ever tested at a full board meeting?—I think not.

39658. Is it felt at all that there is any necessity for a superintendent relieving officer now in your opinion?—I think it would be a good thing, and I have heard one or two others say so.

39659. With regard to your children's homes, has an Order been issued by the Local Government Board for the management of the homes?—Yes.

39660. Is there a dietary fixed under the Order?—Yes.

39661. Do you find any difficulties in getting suitable foster mothers?—No, we have been very successful in getting foster mothers.

39662. Have you had to dismiss any for bad conduct?—No, we only had one who was utterly without care for her children, we soon got rid of her.

Objections to women with young children going out to work.

Action by
Leeds Guardians as to Underfed School
Children
Order.

Inadequate out-relief to women with children.

Advantages of rota relief committees.

Need for appointment of superintendent relieving officer.

Local Government Board Order
as to mang^t ment and dietary of scattered homes Satisfactory foster
mothers.

Children in scattered homes.

Religious care of children in scattered homes and cottage
homes.

Receiving home for children and extent to which used. Children adopted by guardians and methods of dealing with them.

39663. Can you say that all healthy children above the age of three are admitted through the receiving home and not through the workhouse?—Yes.

39664. Have any children been adopted under the Act of 1899, children of undesirable parents?—About 150, I think.

39665. What do you do with those?—We have some of them in the homes, some of them we have boarded-out with the boarding-out outside the union committees.

39666. Would not those left in the homes be almost sure to come in contact with the parents if the parents care to keep in touch with them?—We have not found that much. If we do find that they are at all coming into contact with them, we often board them out, outside the union.

39667. Could you say as a matter of practice, it is your policy to board those out who belong to undesirable parents as much as possible, if you can find suitable homes in boarding-out districts?—Yes.

Methods and results of emigrating Poor Law children.

39668. (Miss Hill.) You say you have emigrated seventeen children to Canada, and that they are doing well. What length of time have they had there?—I think they went last August twelvemonth.

39669. Through what agency did you send them?—We sent some through Dr. Barnardo, some through Mrs. Burt of Liverpool, and some through the Roman Catholic Emigration Agency in Liverpool.

39670. Have they all been equally successful as far as you can see?—We have only had one unsatisfactory account, and that was of one of the Roman Catholic boys.

Example of out-relief to an unsuitable case.

39671. You speak of the evil of out-door relief enabling people to live in insanitary conditions. Do not your guardians make a point of withdrawing out-door relief when the sanitary conditions are unsatisfactory?—They try to, but some of them are not strong enough to do it. I will give you a case here, not exactly of unsanitary conditions, but I think it was rather a case they would help; there was an old woman asking for out-door relief; the doctor said she had something the matter with her knee, and she was recommended by the doctor to go into the house; he recommended that she should go into the infirmary. The other people in the house were her daughter, who was separated from her husband, and five children, and there was a man living in the house who was said to be the brother of the husband. The old grandmother slept downstairs on a sofa and the doctor said she ought to come into the workhouse infirmary. The whole of the rest of the family we suppose slept upstairs in one room. There was only one bedroom. We said that was not a case for outdoor relief, and we gave her an order for the house. Two of the guardians who had made this decision (one of them being myself) happened to be away at the next board meeting. The case was brought up by a guardian living in that locality, our decision, was reversed and the woman was given 3s. a week outdoor relief.

39672. There would seem one way to meet that particular difficulty; one knows boards of guardians where the sanitary conditions of the homes are enquired into and looked into very strictly and outrelief withdrawn if they are unsatisfactory?—Yes.

Need for further co-operation between the guardians and charity and instances thereof.

39673. I gather you would be in favour of the voluntary agencies, such as the Charity Organisation Society, attending to the old people. Has the Charity Organisation Society or any other voluntary agency any system of pensions in Leeds?—There are a few small charitable societies in Leeds giving pensions. I was thinking if the Charity Organisation Society could be better worked and fully worked they would help.

39374. These voluntary agencies could take some of these better cases?—I think so. May I mention one case that seemed very suitable when it came to us the other day. There was an old boatman of sixty-eight; he had kept himself all his life, he had been in a friendly society and had also saved money. At sixty-eight he hurt his knee. He lived on his savings and his friendly society pay of 8s. 6d. for about six months; then the friendly society had to reduce it to 2s. 6d. He came to us and we gave him gladly the 6s. to raise it up again, but that does not seem to me a case that ought to come to the Poor Law at all.

39675. There must be a good deal of charity going on in Leeds, and it would be a good thing if it were organised to take up such cases as that?—Yes.

39676. And also the case of a man with phthisis; if the sanitary conditions could be looked after and that case taken up by a voluntary agency that would seem to be the right thing to do?—Yes.

39677. You feel very strongly about this question of only one-third of the Board going out at the same time?—Very strongly.

39678. Has there been any movement to secure that?—No.

39679. It was left optional by the law to the guardians themselves?—Yes.

39680. Do you think the difficulty in the way of it is that the guardians who are elected do not want to go out when they have only been one year in, or is it the expense of an election coming every year?—I think it is both.

39681. But it would seem to be very important?—I think so, because two-thirds come in knowing nothing whatever.

39682. They know a good deal more at the end of three years than they do at the beginning?—Yes.

39683. (Mr. Phelps.) Have you lived in Leeds all your life?—Yes.

39684. And worked amongst the poor for a good many years?—Yes.

39685. Have you noticed much in the way of improvement in the condition of the poor, or the reverse, in that time?—You see now I do not see the ordinary working-classes so much as people who have failed, so I do not think I am quite able to judge about them.

39686. I will now ask a question which perhaps rather arises out of that. Do you think the administration of relief by your board of guardians is a real factor in the life of the town which makes much difference to the poor?—Yes, I think in many ways lax administration of out-door relief does increase the pauperism.

39687. It increases the pauperism, do you think it really strengthens improvidence?—I think it must do. There are very few people who belong to friendly societies who come to us.

39688. You think a change in the policy of the board would very soon make itself felt in the lives of the population?—I think so, and more careful administration.

39689. When your guardians decide cases of out-door relief are they largely influenced by questions of character?—Of the recipient? The popular distinction between cases for out-relief and the workhouse.

39690. Yes?—They take it into consideration, but it is more income, character, and surroundings all taken together.

39691. They would make rather a point of saying that it was the deserving poor who were given out-door relief and the undeserving who were offered the workhouse?—I think so, because you perpetuate the possibility of wrong doing, in the way of drink and that sort of thing if you give out-door relief.

39692. I was rather thinking when people present themselves on public platforms or sit on out-relief committees they would roughly divide the poor into the deserving who would get an order for out-relief and the undeserving who would be offered the house?—I think they probably would.

39693. When people come into the house do you classify them at all?—We have tried to do so very slightly. We have had a first class both for men and women for about six years or more than that; perhaps nine years now, but the workhouse is so full that we cannot do anything more about that until we get our workhouse extended.

39694. Were you satisfied with the result of that?—Yes, I think so, as far as the first class was concerned.

39695. What was the effect on the rest, do you think?—I do not know that there was any effect on the rest.

39696. You do not think it affected them?—No.

39697. Who decides into which class a person is to go?—A small committee.

Miss M. Baines.

11 Feb. 1907.

Advantages of tripartite retirement of guardians.

The effect of administration on pauperism.

The popular distinction between cases for out-relief and the workhouse.

The method of classifying workhouse inmates at Leeds.

Miss M.
Baines.

11 Feb. 1907.

39698. Do they decide on the ground of their conduct inside the house or outside the house?—It was then on their conduct outside the house, whether they had been convicted of crime; there was a set of questions that were given as to whether they had been sober, how long they had been in Leeds, and that sort of thing.

39699. What kind of proportion of the inmates were found qualified for class one?—We had only room for about twenty men and twenty women so we could not do any more than that.

39700. Do you think there was a much larger supply than that?—I hardly think for the first class there would have been a much larger supply.

39701. You say that the qualifications and efficiency of guardians is not increasing as time goes on. Does that show itself in the administration of the institutions?—Yes, I think so.

39702. They do not take so much pains about the administration?—I do not know about so much pains, but they do not do it wisely, some of them do not take so much pains.

39703. Do they exercise much control over their officers?—Yes, but they exercise it sometimes in an unwise way; I think some of them are too much inclined to make friends of the officers, and to make friends rather of the subordinate officers as against the others.

39704. Do you find a tendency to reduce salaries?—With a few, yes. I should not say that was a prevailing tendency.

39705. It is a popular position to take up when you stand for an election?—It might be at elections, but it does not go on afterwards.

39706. I see with regard to out-door relief you say that two or more guardians changed their opinion very much with regard to it after some experience?—Yes.

39707. Do you think that is common?—Yes, most of the new ones change their opinion when they have been on about two years.

39708. Do you think a healthier public opinion is growing up with regard to it?—On the present board it has changed, but when we get two-thirds new again with the same class of persons we shall have the same thing to go through over again.

39709. If you are continually educating them there must be a time when the public opinion is changed. I quite understand the difficulty with regard to new guardians, but it does seem to me that a much larger class of people are learning their work now as guardians than ever did under the old system?—It is a very small drop in the bucket.

39710. You were not on the Board I think before the change in 1894?—No.

39711. Is that looked back to as a golden age?—I do not know; I compare the present Board with my first Board, which was very much better.

39712. (Mr. Gardiner.) Will you tell us what the cost per head in the Scattered Homes is?—We have had two Returns asked for; a few years ago we had one got out which included everything, administration charges and every single thing, that was got out about four years ago, and it was 10s. 6½d. About a year ago another return was got out, and it was 9s. 11½d.

39713. And the widow's children you provide for at a cost of 1s. 6d.?—Yes, but of course you have to pay for the supervision of children in the Scattered Homes.

39714. The widow's children by this present system are very unfairly treated?—Yes, in some cases.

39715. Supposing the case of a respectable widow with four children and you paid her 10s. a week provided she did not go to work, she would be absolutely in clover?—She would, if she worked also.

39716. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) What is the cost of food alone?—Food and clothing we have taken together, which is the lowest of any department of our indoor relief. Last year the workhouse food and clothing cost 4s. 2d., the Scattered Homes cost 3s. 9d. for food and clothing.

39717. (Mr. Bentham.) Would that include "and necessaries"?—Yes.

39718. (Miss Hill.) I conclude that the widow is supposed to go out to work, it may not be a good plan; she is supposed to earn?—She is.

39719. The children are not supposed really to be kept on the 1s. 6d.; there would be the mother's wage to supplement the Poor Law allowance, would there not. When you give out-relief to a widow with children it may not be a desirable thing, but she is supposed to go out to work, and there is that money to add to the 1s. 6d.?—Yes. We calculate that each child costs 4½d. a day in food alone in the Scattered Homes.

39720. (Mr. Gardiner.) As regards the corporation sanatorium you mentioned, have you gone at all into the figures of that by way of comparison with your own infirmary?—As to the recoveries?

39721. No, as to cost?—We pay £70 a year a bed for that.

39722. That probably covers the whole cost—perhaps you know nothing about that?—No, except that it costs us £70 a bed.

39723. In regard to the endowed charities, is there any scheme for their administration. Have they been pooled by a scheme drafted by the Charity Commissioners?—No.

39724. They are all independent charities?—Yes.

39725. And independent bodies of trustees?—Yes.

39726. Is there any feeling in Leeds in favour of getting a scheme for the endowed charities?—I have not heard of any.

39727. The guardians qua guardians do not take any interest in that?—No.

39728. Could you give us any information as to the effect of workhouse life on the inmates. You have taken great interest, have you not, in the workhouse administration?—Yes, I have. I do not know whether you know what the Brabazon system is. We have used that a great deal; that has very much improved the inmates we have had working it; it has raised the tone of the house altogether because of the contact with the outside people who come in to teach it. It is a very good thing.

39729. And it provides occupation?—Yes.

39730. Now take the younger classes who are not eligible for that; the girls or young men who come in. Have you any information to give us about them?—There are very few young men of course that come in except to the infirmary.

39731. With regard to the workhouse proper, do you get many men there for test purposes?—Not inside.

39732. You get a good many young women, do you not?—Yes, we do get a good number.

39733. Have you ever known any of them sufficiently intimately to give us any opinion as to the effect of workhouse life upon them?—Except generally it is an undesirable and bad thing for them to be in communication with so many undesirable older women.

39734. You could not give us any detailed information?—No.

39735. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Can you tell us how long you keep in touch with the children after they are placed at work or in service?—I have kept in touch with almost all of them up to now.

39736. It goes on regularly?—Yes.

39737. Is there an inspector who goes round?—We have a volunteer lady who visits them after they leave us and reports to us about once in three months how they are getting on.

39738. That is all the children who are placed out?—Yes, boys and girls.

39739. Are those records kept?—Yes.

39740. Could they be consulted if any one wanted to see what became of the children?—Yes.

39741. Do you not think it would be a good plan to make it compulsory on all boards of guardians that they should keep records of the children till they attain twenty-one years or so?—I think it would be a good plan.

39742. Speaking about the insanitary conditions it seems to me in Leeds, from what I saw that there were certain districts or streets in the town that were absolutely

Cost to guardians of sending cases to corporation sanatorium.

Endowed charities in Leeds.

Advantages of Brabazon system of employing workhouse inmates.

Question as to effect of workhouse life on young women.

Supervision of Poor Law children placed at work or in service.

Records of after career of Poor Law children and suggestion for such records being universally kept.

Effect on workhouse administration of less qualified and less efficient guardians.

Effect of practical experience on guardians with extreme views as to out-relief.

Dis-advantages of triennial retirement of guardians.

Cost per head in scattered homes compared with out-relief allowances to children of widows.

insanitary and should be condemned, and there was a great deal of out-relief going into them. Would it be a good thing do you think if there was some power in the guardians or an inspector to say no out-relief is to go into those districts?—You could not say it generally, you could only judge of each case.

39743. Would it not be possible to remove any respectable case into a neighbouring street which was not insanitary?—We often say we cannot give out-relief unless they go into more sanitary houses.

39744. Supposing it was made compulsory on the guardians that they should remove cases out of certain areas if they give out-relief, do you think that would be possible?—I do not know I am sure.

3.745. Is there any communication between the sanitary officers and the guardians?—The guardian reports to the sanitary officer if he thinks it is a suitable case.

39746. Does the sanitary officer report back what steps he has taken?—The relieving officer would always know what steps he had taken.

39747. (Mr. Chandler.) Do you have many applications for relief in Leeds from members of trade unions?—No, I should not think we do.

39748. Would that not be on account of those institutions making provision for their members in case of unemployment, sickness, old age, etc.?—Certainly.

39749. Then that class of men whom you spoke of in your evidence as driven to pauperism by reason of the trade union minimum wage cannot possibly be members of the trade unions?—It is when they get beyond a certain age that they cannot earn the trade union wage, and the trade union would not help them then, would it?

39750. If they were members I assume the trade union would be looking after them?—Until their death?

39751. Yes. You do not know that?—I did not know that they looked after them except when they were ill and out of work temporarily.

39752. So long as they pay their contributions as a member they look after them in all conditions of life, both sickness, out of work, old age and everything. Perhaps it is not so with all trade unions. There are a large number of factories in Leeds?—Yes.

39753. Tailoring largely?—A great many.

39754. Are not most of those factories conducted on the principle of payment by result?—By piece, yes.

39755. Then the minimum wage would not affect them?—No, those factories chiefly employ women; I do not know about men.

39756. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) I did not notice whether you gave us the cost per head per child of the scattered homes, including everything—including the institution charges and everything?—Yes, including everything, it was 10s. 6½d. about three years ago, and it is now 9s. 11½d., so we have reduced that.

39757. And all these homes are within the city, are they not?—Yes.

39758. And all have been built by the Board of Guardians?—They have not been built; they are hired, so that they can be given up if you find you have not so many children.

39759. You think it is a good system to have them in the city; that that is preferable to having the homes in the country?—I think it is very good; we have them in as healthy situations as we live in ourselves, very often, and the children are perfectly healthy; they mix with the ordinary population and have more opportunities of getting to know people and getting occupation when they begin to be able to work. Outside people get to know them.

39760. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I believe that the number of children in a particular home never goes beyond eleven?—We have only one home that has as many as eleven.

39761. You would see objections, would you not, to homes that had twenty or twenty-five; you would not think that was desirable, would you?—No, I think it takes away from the home feeling.

39762. Do you think there is any necessity for anything in the shape of classification of children with regard to getting one undesirable one into the home. Do you believe it would be a good thing to try to classify the children?—I do not think so. We have a very good superintendent, who knows the character of almost every child and he puts a child whom he thinks suitable in a certain home.

39763. Assuming in a good many cases these homes are for more than eleven, sometimes reaching up to twenty, or even more than that, in the country there would be a necessity for classification in a case like that?—Yes, I think there might.

39764. Do the children come back in later life to the old home to see the superintendent?—Constantly, to see him, and their own special foster mother.

39765. That touch is kept up very strongly?—Yes.

39766. (Miss Hill.) Do you think there is any danger that the school feeding which is now being so largely introduced will tend to make the women go out to work more?—Yes, I do.

39767. Both the widows and the married women?—Yes.

39768. They will distinctly feel that the children will have a mid-day meal and they will not think it important for themselves to be at home?—It strikes me very much that will be so; they are careless as it is.

39769. (Mr. Patten MacDougall.) May I ask whether you have heard of a system, which I think prevails in some cities, of the municipality or public authority providing homes for the very young children in order to enable the mothers to go out during the day—crèches; have you heard of that system?—I have heard of it, but we have not it in Leeds.

39770. Would you approve of it?—I really have not thought of that.

39771. (Chairman.) Have you any home for boys after they have left school in which they board and lodge during the earlier stages of their working life?—No, we have tried, and once or twice been on the point of founding a working boys' home, but we have not done it, and so far we have really hardly needed it. We have supplemented their wages, which the Local Government Board have allowed us to do, and then let them live in lodgings. The usual charge for a boy's board and lodging is 8s. a week to begin with, rising as he gets older.

39772. Is that now a general practice in your union?—No, we have only done it in a few cases. The boys do not earn enough if we put them to a proper trade to keep themselves for the first few years, and if, say, they begin with 5s. a week, the Local Government Board will allow us to supplement that up to 8s. a week.

39773. Have the guardians done that, knowing that they are supplementing wages?—Yes, but it is only in the case of a child.

39774. That is under the age of eighteen?—Yes.

Miss M. Baines.

11 Feb. 1907.

The proper number of children to be placed in one home.

Question as to classification of children in scattered homes.

Attachment of children to scattered homes.

The feeding of school children and its effect on responsibilities of mothers.

Wages of boys learning trades supplemented by guardians.

Mr. JAMES HENRY FORD, called; and Examined.

39775. You are Clerk to the Leeds Guardians?—I am.

39776. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence in chief and supplement by a few questions, if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following statement.)

1. In ordinary times Leeds is fairly prosperous—there are numerous trades and wages generally are fair in amount and not apt to fluctuate. The ready-made clothing trade finds employment at remunerative wages for large numbers of women and girls.

2. The population generally is fairly self-reliant, and not prone to seek relief from the rates.

3. Rents are low and good accommodation can be secured for a small outlay, although rates are high. This

Mr. J. H. Ford.

11 Feb. 1907.

Mr. J. H.
Ford
11 Feb. 1907.

applies to houses for such of the working classes as have fairly steady employment, but for the very poor it is difficult—if not impossible—to find sanitary and healthy dwellings.

4. There are many Irish amongst the unskilled labourers and those having no settled occupation, and this class is perhaps the most difficult one with which the guardians have to deal.

5. There is a fairly large Jewish population which also contributes its quota to the pauper lists.

6. As far as my experience carries me, I should say that in Leeds the surroundings of the working classes compare favourably with those of many large centres of population, but the conditions under which the very poor live are unsatisfactory in every possible way.

7. There have been no special experiments in Poor Law in the Leeds Union, or I should rather say that what may have been at one time in the nature of experiments have now been confirmed in practice.

8. For instance this Board has adopted at the earliest possible moment such schemes as the boarding-out of children both within and beyond the union, emigration to Canada, Scattered Homes, the doing away with the distinctive uniform for children, trained nursing in the union infirmary, cellular system of dealing with tramps, separate accommodation for imbeciles, and possibly within a short time special accommodation for imbecile children and sane epileptics.

9. I do not know that my board initiated any of the above schemes or were the first to adopt them, but in every instance they have been amongst the very earliest boards to move on fresh lines.

10. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion that indoor relief should be the rule, and outdoor relief the exception.

11. The only claims upon the Poor Law is that of destitution, and the only efficient test of destitution in many instances is by offering the house.

12. Indoor relief is refused repeatedly where the applicants allege they are entirely without means, and yet subsequent investigation shows that they continue to exist outside, and apparently without great difficulty.

13. Those not destitute but simply poor, can be, and in many instances, are helped from private charity. It is far from infrequent to find that the outdoor relief paupers are in possession of considerable sums of money or have other means which they had not divulged to the relieving officer.

14. Again the system of out-relief as carried out in this union is more in the nature of inadequate doles than in supplying sufficient to meet the reasonable needs of the applicants, and the guardians show they believe that the applicant has not made a full statement of all his resources by giving an amount that is barely sufficient to provide shelter alone.

15. On the other hand relief in the workhouse is adequate as it proves food, shelter, clothing, medical care and a reasonable amount of comfort, but not sufficient to be an inducement to those to enter its gates, who can by any proper means support themselves outside.

16. Many of the cases on the out-relief list are those of aged people living with relatives who are often able, but unwilling, to provide more than shelter for them, and who usually take them off the guardians' hands when the house is insisted upon.

17. There are also many paupers appearing on the list, who are not in a sense paupers at all, but only appear on the list because sons or other relatives though well able to maintain them will only do so through the medium of the guardians, by repaying the whole amount of the relief advanced. When these cases are offered the house only, as is sometimes done, they are taken off the guardians' hands.

18. There is no supervision as to how the out-relief is expended. Many instances have come to the guardians' notice where it has been ridiculously misapplied.

19. The relief districts are too large for the cases to be closely watched, but where special investigations have been made time after time has it been found that many of the paupers were in possession of sufficient means to put them entirely out of the pale of relief.

20. Again, when the guardians made a definite stand with regard to a certain class such as able-bodied single men and declined to give test labour although a large number were on the books at the time very few went into the house and of the few who did all discharged themselves in a very short time.

21. I believe that with a strict investigation and a determination on the part of the guardians to give out-relief to those cases only where there is no doubt as to further the destitution and where the character of the applicants restricting is of such a special nature as to justify relief out of the house possibly 20 per cent. of the cases on the books could be removed without hardship.

22. The amounts paid to widows with children are altogether inadequate for their proper support and the appearance of the children brought up in the guardians' homes and that of those relieved outside is a sufficient indication as to which system is the most humane.

23. Deserted wives are very frequently given relief in spite of repeated cases of collusion that have been brought to the guardians' notice. In many instances of alleged desertion, it has been found that the husband or father has never left the town.

24. There are several cases on the books of phthisical parents living in small houses with large families in which it is absolutely necessary that the persons suffering from the disease at least should be received into the house.

25. In spite of all arguments, they decline to go and the guardians from a mistaken feeling of pity grant out-relief regardless of the fact that such a course entails the certainty of the parent's earlier decrease in the absence of proper treatment and the probable risk of infection to the family.

26. Again, there is, no doubt, that the children of out-relief cases frequently become paupers themselves.

27. They are taught to regard the guardians' dole as an assistance in all times of hardship and readily apply when distress occurs. There are several cases of what I may term hereditary paupers on the books.

28. Possibly, the most unsatisfactory cases are those of able-bodied men with families given out-relief and put to work, very few complete their task or attempt to do so, the men in many instances come for their money but send their children to carry home the bread, they have even sold it at the gate of the Labour Yard.

29. In several instances these men, in spite of the meagre pay, have declined offers of employment, and one man who had been refused further relief informed the relieving officer a few weeks later that it was the best thing that had happened to him as he got a job directly the guardians turned him off.

30. The class of persons applying for relief to a very great extent depends upon the knowledge that obtains outside as to what classes the guardians are likely to give out-relief.

31. For instance the number of able-bodied men working test work varies to a very great extent according to the sympathy or otherwise with which their cases are regarded.

32. As already pointed out, when the guardians struck off out-relief all single men and widowers without children, very few of this class entered the workhouse or have applied for relief since.

33. In past years when the guardians used to close their test yard in the summer, they had very few, if any, applications from able-bodied men for relief after the date of the closing of the yard, until it was about to be opened again.

34. The increase in the out-relief in this union of late years has been almost entirely owing to the number of men put upon test and these men are to a very great extent composed of unskilled labourers, and of men who have not had regular employment for years and others of a still more unworthy character.

35. Very few skilled artisans apply for relief, the other classes are principally composed of old people who have got beyond work or are suffering from illness, of widows recently bereaved, with a fair number of deserted or alleged deserted wives.

36. A number of cases sent into the house can only be classed as "inefficients" unable from mental or physical weakness to adequately provide for themselves under any

Methods of dealing with children,
tramps,
imbeciles,
etc., at Leeds.

Views as to indoor and outdoor
relief.

Destitution
as the qualification for relief, and efficiency of the workhouse as a test of destitution.

Undisclosed sources of income of outdoor paupers.

General inadequacy of out-relief allowances at Leeds.

Indoor relief adequate but deterrent.

Effect of workhouse test on maintenance
by relatives.

Need for further supervision of out-relief and smaller relief districts.

Result of abolishing outdoor labour test for able-bodied single men.

Probable results of further restricting out-relief.

Inadequate

out-relief to widows with
children.

Objections to out-relief to phthisical parents.

Out-relief as a cause of hereditary pauperism.

Evils of outdoor labour test relief.

Effect of administration on class of persons applying for relief.

Cause of increased out-relief at Leeds and classes of persons relieved.

circumstances, whilst very many become inmates solely owing to drunkenness and profligacy.

37. The Jews and Irish appear to marry young and have large families and any diminution of the income of the family frequently results in an application for relief.

Effect of trade fluctuations on Leeds
pauperism.

38. Fluctuation in trade does not appear to affect us very materially in Leeds. If it had not been for the great breakdown in the building and allied trades a few years ago the guardians would not have had any material addition to their list of paupers.

Causes of pauperism at
Leeds.

39. Putting aside the class of able-bodied men, a large number of whom have never adequately maintained themselves but have made shift the best way they could, the principal causes of pauperism are old age and sickness.

40. There is no doubt, however, that drinking and immorality account for a large proportion of the indoor population. The fact that Leeds has always been an outdoor relief union has undoubtedly kept up the proportion of paupers. Many cases apply without real justification.

41. Sheer laziness is another frequent cause, many of the husbands who are alleged to have deserted or neglected their wives being simply too lazy to work, and knowing that their wives and families will be relieved they simply absent themselves, and as the guardians have a great difficulty in obtaining a conviction, unless it can be proved that the man has or can obtain employment, this fact becomes known and the number increases.

42. There are cases where the husband remains outside when his family is admitted, and it being impossible to prove he has means no conviction can be secured. A considerable proportion of those who come to the guardians for assistance are congenitally deficient.

Class of persons seeking election as guardians at Leeds and influence of politics on the elections.

43. The class of persons seeking election as guardians has in my opinion deteriorated during the past ten or twelve years. Some of the guardians are neither by education nor training fitted to deal with and discriminate in the many difficult cases that come before them. Often their position and surroundings prevent their being independent, and they are elected in almost every instance purely as nominees of political parties.

Ability of guardians to devote sufficient time to Poor Law
work.

44. The fact that they are engaged in shops and in businesses requiring their almost constant personal attention also militates against efficient administration; they are unable to give the time necessary for carrying out their duties, more especially for the hearing of applications for relief; the time devoted to this subject is altogether inadequate, and I am afraid many of the guardians do not recognise this work as being undoubtedly the most difficult and responsible task they have to perform. This is shown by their attendance at relief committees.

Attitude of
guardians towards the "poor und" and its result.

45. They remain for such a short period on the board that they never fully grasp the principles that underlie the relief of pauperism; they appear to regard themselves as being simply the almoners of a public fund for the relief of poverty, and do not possess in many instances the strength of character required to enable them to carry out in the best interests of the public what are often unpleasant duties.

46. The result is a careless granting of relief and consequent heavy expenditure and chronic pauperism on the part of those who by firm treatment might be restored to self-respect and independence.

The ideal
guardians.

47. I regard it as absolutely necessary that boards of guardians should consist of men or women whose education and position in life remove them from close association with the pauper class and its consequent undue influence on their action when acting as they should in a judicial capacity.

Suitability of present guardians for dealing with children and indoor poor.

48. It is only fair to state that the present guardians in many directions such as looking after the children and the indoor poor, perform their duties admirably.

Evil effects of politics on guardians' elections and actions.

49. The system of political election is ruinous to efficient administration; whatever a man's qualifications may be, whatever his position may be, he has no chance of being elected unless he comes forward as the candidate of a political party. Some excellent independent candidates have sought election, but have been in nearly every instance rejected. The appointment of officers is often made on political or personal grounds, quite apart from the question of merit on the part of the candidates.

50. Relief is administered in this union by relief committees and not by the full board. There are six relieving officers at present and one general relieving officer who is warrant officer; an assistant relieving officer and boarding-out inspector, and another assistant relieving officer for the removal of lunatics to asylums and paupers to their places of settlement. A collector who is supposed to also act as cross visitor, but whose duties as collector preclude much being done by him in this direction. Another assistant relieving officer acts as cross visitor, but has so frequently to act in the case of absent officers and to take special duties that he is unable to do much cross visiting.

Mr. J. H.
Ford.

11 Feb. 1907.

Relief
arrangements at Leeds.

Relieving officers and cross-visitors,
etc.

Relief
committees.

51. The board is divided into three relief committees, each of which divides into two sub-committees, each sub-committee dealing with one relief district. The quorum is three, but as a matter of practice it is not unusual for two or even a single guardian to sit and administer relief. There is no revision committee, and the board exercises no definite supervision over the relief committees. Special cases may be referred to the board by the committees for decision, but this is rarely done.

52. The guardians do not circulate, but remain on the same committee for the whole twelve months; the result of this arrangement is that there is a great difference in the working of the various relief committees.

53. There are eight outdoor medical officers and there is a central dispensary, from which all medicines are given medical out. There is a pay clerk who pays the greater portion of relief the paupers at the central offices, and the others in pay stations in various parts of the union. He pays in money and in kind at the offices; but in money only at the various pay stations. The relieving officers do not pay any cases. The paupers are paid weekly—except the test men, who are paid daily at the labour yard.

Outdoor
medical

Method of paying out-
relief allowances.

54. Medical extras are sparingly given, and intoxicants are seldom if ever ordered. In this direction both indoor and outdoor, I believe Leeds spends less per head than alcohol any other union in the country, and this has been the case for about twenty years.

Medical extras and alcohol.

55. The indoor paupers (apart from the sick) are accommodated in the workhouse and in many temporary buildings which are at present being used for this purpose. The guardians are about to accept tenders for very large extensions.

Workhouse
accommodation.

56. There is a separate infirmary with a resident medical superintendent, two resident assistant medical officers, dispenser, steward, matron, and assistant matron and sixty nurses.

Provision for indoor sick and imbeciles.

57. There are also separate imbecile wards entirely separated from the workhouse and under the management of the medical superintendent of the infirmary and having a special staff.

58. There are large and well fitted vagrant wards with a resident vagrant master and mistress and receiving wards with ample accommodation for all cases.

Vagrant and receiving wards.

59. There is a superintendent of test labour but he has no staff beyond a boy.

Superintendent of test
labour.

60. Children are never received into the workhouse, they are sent immediately to the receiving home, and after a fortnight's probation are sent to the central home, where with the exception of the cripples, children of "ins and outs," or defective children, they are transferred to the scattered homes.

Methods of dealing with
children.

61. The scattered homes are situated in various parts of the union, the houses are rented by the guardians. A matron is placed in charge of each, and eight or twelve children and generally eight or nine are accommodated in each home.

62. The homes are supervised by the superintendent, who has a house within the grounds at the central home. A few children are emigrated, a large number are boarded-out, both within and beyond the union, and a considerable number are accommodated in certified schools in the union.

Insufficient
number of

63. As regards the outdoor staff, I regard it as altogether inadequate; both relieving officers and medical officers have far more cases than they can properly look after, and this tends to a higher rate of pauperism than is in my opinion at all justified.

relieving officers and district
medical officers and its effect on
pauperism.

64. Generally speaking, I think the present Poor Law is entirely adequate if properly administered to meet all cases of destitution, which are the only cases with which it is framed to deal. The law is sufficiently elastic to meet all legitimate claims upon it.

Adequacy of Poor Law if properly administered.

Mr. J. H.
Ford.

11 Feb. 1907.

Proposal that guardians should be elected for whole area of union.

Advantages of propter hoc
guardians.

Need for tripartite retirement of guardians.
Further control by Local Government
Board.

Co-operation between
guardians
and charity.

Further control by Local Government
Board.

Cross
visitors.

Compulsory powers of detention.

Joint workhouses for able-bodied.

Compulsory
powers of detention.

Need for better
workhouse
classification.

Harmless
lunatics.

Punishment of lazy and
"in and out"
paupers.

Proposed alteration of law as to liability for maintenance.

Proposed simplification or abolition
of settlement.

65. There are great difficulties in the efficient administration of Poor Law relief, and it should be as far as possible in the hands of experts or at all events in the hands of competent and judicious representatives of the ratepayers. I know there are difficulties in the way, but I should certainly like, if the present method of election is to be retained, that guardians should represent the whole area of the union and not wards; it is difficult in Leeds in some wards to obtain the services of guardians of a type entirely independent of unfair influence.

67. If guardians could be elected as overseers are, i.e., by being selected and compelled to serve in the office, it would be possible, I believe, to find many competent and energetic men or women to fill the office of guardian.

68. All boards of guardians should retire annually in thirds; there is no continuity of administration otherwise, and new members often decline to be bound by the opinions and actions of their predecessors. The Local Government Board should insist that only competent officials shall be appointed to the principal posts. At present personal interest is frequently the cause of unsuitable persons obtaining such appointments.

69. There should be closer working between the guardians and organisers of private charity. It would be an advantage in many ways if the members of Charity Organisation Societies were allowed to sit at relief committees.

70. The Local Government Board should fix and insist upon a maximum number of cases that any relieving officer or medical officer should deal with. Area and population are altogether unsuitable matters for determining the size of a district. A thorough system of cross visiting should be instituted; the separate working of two officers often results in exposing cases of fraud and deception.

71. Powers should be given to the guardians to remove to and detain in the workhouse all sick or destitute persons unable to properly look after themselves outside, having no friends willing to undertake this duty, and whose surroundings are unhealthy or insanitary. In many cases where out-door medical relief is obtained, it would be much better that the sick person should be admitted to the infirmary.

72. It would be an advantage for large unions to combine and have a separate workhouse for able-bodied male inmates. This class is not now-a-days a large one, but often prevents an effective administration of the workhouse. Feeble-minded girls becoming chargeable should on a certificate by the medical officer approved by a magistrate be detained in the workhouse. The same procedure might apply to persons entering the workhouse owing to venereal disease—in Leeds this is a numerous and troublesome class.

73. Greater attention might be given to classification in workhouses; but the classification should be by behaviour and habits in the house and not by reports as to past life which are often biased.

74. A large number of inmates now treated as sick cases might preferably be treated as infirm which would make a great reduction in the cost of administration.

75. The guardians might deal with many cases of lunatics harmless to themselves and others, who simply require care and supervision in the imbecile wards, and a grant might be made for their maintenance as in the case of lunatics in asylums.

76. It should be less difficult to obtain the conviction and punishment of confirmed lazy paupers, and in and out should be detained for longer periods without requiring a special resolution of the guardians.

77. The law should provide that parents or others should have the right of appealing to justices without coming to the guardians to compel children to support them.

78. Illegitimate children should be liable to maintain their mothers.

79. The law of settlement should be simplified or abolished. Residence should be in the union and twelve months should be sufficient as in cases of irremovability. In all cases of divided parishes settlements should be retained.

80. Many of the above suggestions are simply matters of practice and could readily be applied now if the guardians were willing to adopt them. It would be easy to add to them but I have contented myself with setting out only those proposed changes that my service in this union has led me to believe to be specially desirable.

39777. (Chairman.) You say you have a large Jewish population in Leeds. Is there any special organisation connected with them of a Jewish character?—There is a Jewish Board of Guardians.. The Leeds Jewish Board of Guardians and its work 39778. Do they help you materially?—Not materially; they do the best they can, but their funds are limited and the amount of relief is very small. They help us morally in this way, that we very seldom relieve a Jewish family unless the Jewish Board is doing something in the first instance.

39779. In consequence, do you find there is rather an attempt on the part of the Jewish population to get orders of some kind from your Board in order that they may be supplemented by assistance from the Jewish Board of Guardians?—No, I do not think so.

39780. Your statement up to paragraph 48 deals largely with out-door relief and the difficulties of it; you then go on to say that the boards of guardians perform their duties admirably with regard to looking after the children and the in-door poor. I assume from that, that you rather discriminate between work connected with out door relief and the other work of the guardians?—I do. Distinction between qualities required for administration of in-door and of outdoor relief.

39781. I assume you would contend that the work in dealing with out-door relief is of a judicial character?—That is so.

39782. And many of the questions are very difficult?—They are very difficult.

39783. It is impossible for persons adequately to discharge those duties who either have not a judicial temperament or are not prepared to give up a very great deal of time?—That is so.

39784. I rather gather from your statement that the result of the system of appointing gentlemen who perhaps have not that previous training and are not able to give the great amount of time it requires to thoroughly investigate these cases is that there is a tendency rather to give relief without full investigation and that a good deal of the relief in consequence is, in your judgment, inadequate?—That is so. Evil effects of inefficient and insufficient relieving officers.

39785. I suppose you would say the two matters go together, insufficient investigation results rather in the relief being widespread and inadequate?—I think there is no doubt about it that relief is very often given in small quantities because the guardians feel that the case is not altogether a good or proper one.

39786. It is a sort of conscience salve?—That is so, exactly.

39787. Have you ever thought how you could improve the manner of investigating these cases?—In the first place the staff of relieving officers is very much too small; and with the number of cases the situation reacts upon itself; for the number of cases we have, our staff is too small to properly investigate them, and, as a result of the lack of proper investigation, the cases not only remain but increase. I certainly think with a proper staff, a superintendent relieving officer and a sufficient number of relieving officers, our relief would go down very materially, even under the present conditions so far as the personnel of the board is concerned.

39788. The policy of the board has been rather to relax the workhouse test, has it not?—Yes. Effect of lax administration on pauperism.

39789. The result has been shown by an immediate rise?—Undoubtedly.

39790. You do not seem to think that the fluctuations in trade very materially affect the relief?—In Leeds, very little indeed, until three or four years ago when the building trade was very bad, but in former times of distress in various parts of the country, we have been asked by the Local Government Board to send them returns of the increase in relief, but in Leeds it has been practically nil; the varied number of trades in Leeds is, I think, one of the reasons for that. Effect of trade fluctuations on Leeds pauperism.

39791. In your experience comparatively a very small proportion of paupers are skilled working-men?—Very few. That again I might qualify by saying that two or three years ago we had more applications from that class than we had had for very many years. Three or four years ago when the building trade was bad we did get applications from skilled artisans. Paucity of skilled workmen and paupers. Effect on pauperism of dullness in building trade.

39792. Connected with the building trade?—Yes; not a very great number, but greater than obtained previously.

39793. I suppose the building trade is really a seasonal difficulty?—Not entirely that, Leeds had been very much overbuilt, and when trade was bad three or four years ago the building trade seemed to feel it more acutely than it had before.

39794. Leeds is spreading very fast?—Yes, it had been spreading, as far as building is concerned, too fast, it had been spreading in excess of its population.

suggested abolition of ward areas or guardians'
elections.

39795. Admitting as I think we may do (or at least as I do) the validity of a good many of your objections to the present system, can you make any suggestions other than that your relieving staff should be increased? I think you suggest that the elections should be over the whole union area?—There are difficulties of course, in the actual election, but as far as the principle is concerned I am satisfied that we should get then a very much better class of guardian.

39796. That is to say you would have a ticket which so many people would stand for?—I would have them stand for the entire number of seats on the lines of the old School Board Elections. The School Board of Leeds obtained a better class of representative than the guardians did I think solely for that reason, I do not think it was that the work was more attractive, but the political action had not such a strong edge when spread over the whole area as it has in a ward election.

39797. The objection to that is that the person is one of a ticket?—Yes, but to stand any real chance of election then a candidate must be fairly well-known all over the area.

39798. Did you not find that politics entered as much into the School Board elections?—They did not with us; I can only speak, of course, of my own impression.

The influence of politics on guardians'
elections.

39799. I suppose politics enter into the election of the board of guardians in this sense that the political organisations are the only organisations?—That is so.

39800. So that a man must associate himself with one at the first in order to get in?—Yes.

39801. It is very rarely that a man gets in independently?—Independently I do not think a man would get in.

39802. If he did not belong to one of the recognised parties he would probably be a Labour candidate?—In all probability. An exception should be made in that answer with regard to two Roman Catholic Priests; they are elected simply as representing their creed.

Want of proper revision of relief committee's decisions and
need for uniformity as to out relief.

39803. I think you also point out that there is no revision or insufficient revision of the work of Relief Committees?—A Relief Committee simply consists of two, and sometimes even one guardian, a single guardian frequently in my union sits to administer relief the whole afternoon without a single colleague to assist him. Although a legal quorum of three is required by our regulations.

39804. What you want I suppose is first to have the principle of out-relief laid down and then more or less uniformly applied by all your Committees?—That is so.

39805. I think one of the witnesses suggested that you should have a sort of stipendiary to go round?—That is not my suggestion.

Proposed
method of securing uniformity as to out-relief at Leeds.

39806. How would you secure uniformity?—I think by the system which obtains in Bradford; if I had a sufficient number, the members of the Relief Committee should circulate. With my present Board the Committees are elected annually as all other Committees are, and speaking from the experience of the last three years a guardian will prefer to remain in one particular district, very frequently the district he belongs to, which is very objectionable.

39807. That is because direct pressure may be brought to bear upon him?—Undoubtedly. In one or two cases that obtains very strongly indeed in Leeds, in one ward in particular.

Effect of experience in modifying views of newly elected
guardians.

39808. There seems the objection to the present system that if a man or a number of men make promises about giving out-door relief, when they get returned they are asked to make those promises good?—I do not think they promise exactly that; indirectly they do so, I think as far as their promise goes as a rule it is that they will not be parties to forcing deserving cases into the work-house. I think that is the phrase, but it amounts to the same thing. I think generally on that point it is want of Poor Law education on the part of the guardians; the difference in actions and words after three years sitting and in the first six months of their service is very astonishing.

Mr. J. H.
Ford.
11 Feb. 1907.

39809. Do you make any suggestions with regard to Unrepresentative the system of election which you would prefer?—I did not make one or two suggestions, but I do not know that I can evolve an ideal system. The boards we get now are not properly representative; with the exception of two or three professional men they are very largely of one class, the small shopkeeper or tradesman, who is not as a rule an ideal representative.

39810. They again in certain districts are subject to pressure, are they not?—That is so, undoubtedly.

39811. You say the administration of the Poor Law Need for should, as far as possible, be in the hands of experts; "expert" by that you do not mean salaried persons, but persons who have given real study to the matter, do you not?—Undoubtedly; or who, by their own standing in life, have been accustomed to deal judicially with matters.

39812. I see you would like to have, with regard to Need for out-relief, closer connection than at present exists between organised charity and out-relief?—Yes, although we have only had a few cases with the Charity Organisation Society since its new secretary came it has already done better; they have taken one or two cases from us that ought to be off our books. On the other hand, we find that cases have applied to them for assistance which have been on our books for relief.

39813. It has been suggested that it would be of advantage if there were a kind of statutory committee of charity connected with the out-relief?—I have not thought of that specially, but at first sight it seems to be a good thing.

39814. The separate spheres of the work between the two is quite sufficiently defined?—I think so.

39815. As regards the scope of a relieving officer's work, you think area and population are not altogether conclusive factors for determining the size of a district?—Not invariably; in my own union I could find you a population that is above the Local Government Board's scale that would not contain a single pauper.

39816. How would you give effect to your ideal; you would say that no relieving officer must deal with more than a certain number of cases?—That is so. That, again, would require revision soon, because if you had a sufficient staff the cases would go down so rapidly that you would be frequently altering the districts; I think that would be rather an advantage than otherwise.

39817. Would your plan be that if the number of cases in a district rose beyond a certain amount the relieving officer there should have an assistant?—Undoubtedly.

39818. (Mr. Bentham.) Have you not a general relieving officer for that purpose?—He is practically a warrant officer. Our general relieving officer we did not reappoint because his duties were confined almost entirely to prosecutions; he never really acted as a general relieving officer, although he was so appointed by the Local Government Board.

39819. Was not that the object of his appointment when he was originally appointed?—No, I think the appointment was in view of there being a superintendent relieving officer appointed at a later date.

39820. (Chairman.) You have a strong opinion with regard to increasing or giving the power of detention with regard to certain classes, such as feeble-minded cases, lock hospital cases, and so on?—Yes, very strong.

39821. Apparently that view as regards the latter class of case, if I can judge from the evidence, strongly prevails in Leeds?—That is so. Dr. Allan has some very interesting statistics on that matter, so I did not prepare any figures with regard to it.

39822. You think that the law of settlement might even be abolished?—I think so; the larger towns would suffer to some extent, but I think the disadvantages of settlement are greater than its advantages. We remove every case we can, but I often find cases which personally I should prefer to allow to remain where they are.

Proposed
compulsory detention of feeble-minded and lock cases.

Advantages of abolishing
settlement and of giving
Local Government Board further powers of settling disputes.

Mr. J. H.
Ford.

11 Feb. 1907.

Advantages of abolishing settlement and of giving
Local Government
Board further powers of settling disputes.

Need for cooperation between endowed charities and guardians.

Instances of the need.

Evils of labour test
relief.

39823. You have no arrangement with the adjoining unions?—We had at one time with Hunslet that there should be no settlement removals between us except with regard to lunatics, but that dropped.

39824. Do you know why it dropped?—I do not know. I think the arrangement was originally made on account of the difficulties of the two then clerks, that does not apply to myself and my colleague at Hunslet. In an area like Leeds where there are four unions, it does seem to revive the old conditions of parish settlements; there is a good deal of exchange between us which might be well set aside.

39825. The cost is not the least of the drawbacks and evils arising from the law of settlement; there is also the time taken?—The time taken is very material, the cost is not very large. In ten years we have only had one case in the courts; that was not a case with which we were really concerned. We had a person who belonged to either A or B and we had to decide which was to take it; it was a case of a wandering lunatic who was with us one day. That is the only case we have taken to the courts.

39826. Have you thought of the advisability of giving the Local Government Board certain powers of adjudication in these circumstances?—Certainly.

39827. You would agree with that?—Most undoubtedly. I think every possible provision should be made rather than fight the cause out in the courts, which is only done at a very heavy expenditure, and then only to be reversed later by another decision.

39828. You have a considerable Irish population?—Very considerable.

39829. Is there any difficulty with regard to their settlement?—No, they are Irish but they have been in England a good many years and most of them have gained settlements here. We do not remove a large number to Ireland nor to Scotland.

39830. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Have you many charitable endowed funds for the benefit of the poor in Leeds?—There is a number.

39831. Do the administrators of these funds co-operate with the boards of guardians at all?—Not at all.

39832. So that the relief that they distribute is not relief that is known to the board of guardians at all?—No.

39833. Do you not think it would be very advisable it should be?—Undoubtedly I do. I think the board of guardians for many years has worked very much upon its own lines without working in combination with other bodies. I think with advantage they might work in combination. I might give you a case which came before the Charity Organisation Society. They supplied half the cost of a wooden limb, an artificial limb for a man, and asked the guardians to provide the other. The guardians did so, and it was afterwards found that the man had collected the cost of his limb from his last employer and was getting it a second time from the public. We have heard from the Charity Organisation Society that they have been relieving a case and we have been relieving it at the same time. With their new secretary I think we shall work better. I have obtained the consent of the relief committees of my board that he shall, when he can, sit with them. That has already had its advantages.

39834. I rather understood the difficulty lay with the board of guardians?—I do not think they have ever raised any definite objection, but there has been no approach on either side; we have worked on independent lines.

39835. In paragraph 28 of your Statement you comment upon a condition of things which seems very odd, where able-bodied men with families are given out-relief and put to work inside the house?—In the test yard within the grounds.

39836. Where they get money and are paid each afternoon. I think?—Yes, at five o'clock.

39837. And they also get food to take home, tea and sugar, and I understand from you that in many cases this food, the sugar and all the rest of it, is sold outside?—The bread chiefly.

39838. Almost before they leave the gate of the labour yard. Has that condition of things been under the notice of the board of guardians?—Yes. Might I point out how that arose. The test men were required to come down to our Poor Law office every day to be paid their relief. The guardians stopped that because the men would come and take the money and bring their young children to carry home the bread; they would not carry it home themselves. The guardians put up a notice that the relief would not be given to children, the men themselves must take it. The only result of that was the men kept the children outside and then took it out and handed it over to them in the street. In order to obviate that we decided that the relief should be paid at the workhouse, thinking the men would not bring the children out there because the workhouse was two miles away, but some of them did and some of them did not. It soon spread that the bread was actually being sold, some of the guardians did not believe it, but one of the guardians—or to speak more strictly, one of the guardians' wives—went and purchased some of the bread at the gate of the workhouse from a test man. As the bread is given to them at cost price—we make no profit on it—they are very large loaves, and it is very cheap bread, they have a ready sale.

39839. I think sometimes these test men have been known to purchase, with the money they got for the bread, drink and cigarettes?—Reports have been made to the board that that has been done.

39840. Has the board not now taken the question into serious consideration?—Only in this direction, that where a complaint against a man has been made and is verified, his relief is stopped. The guardians have tried every means to obviate the difficulty and it is very hard to find any remedy so long as relief out of the workhouse is given in that way. When we forbade the children to come for the bread it was only a question of the children being kept waiting in the street, which was worse in the inclement weather; it did not stop the difficulty that the men would not carry home two or three big loaves of bread.

39841. Out-relief is still given?—Yes, in very much smaller quantities, but the men are not a very good class. Two-thirds of them should not have out-relief at all in any shape or form, that is fairly well known to my guardians. It is the ever-present difficulty of sympathy for the wife and children. There would be very little hesitation, even with my guardians, in striking those off the books if it was not for the sake of the wife.

39842. As I understand, very little reaches the wife and family?—In my opinion very little does in some cases.

39843. Is there any thorough investigation with regard to the wives and families by the relieving officers?—They visit, but there is the difficulty that they have so many cases that they cannot visit them all properly.

39844. You have not sufficient relieving officers?—We have not. We are asking the Local Government Board to increase the number of their districts by one, but it would be better if it were three, at all events for a time. I think after a time the number could be reduced. It is because of the paucity of officers that the figures are so high. In the matter of cross-visiting I have been able to do something in this direction. I have not been able to do enough because my two assistants cannot devote much time to that question. I should say that 10 per cent. at least of those visited have been struck off, which were cases where there was no real claim for relief at all. If that were carried further a large number of our present cases would come off.

39845. In your test yard you have stick-splitting and firewood chopping?—Only for the weaker men.

39846. Have you any statistics with regard to that; is there any profit made?—There is a pseudo-profit made. If you estimated the cost of the labour there would be none; there is a very little profit made because the cost of the wood is so high. We make very little profit on the wood, not more than to cover the cost of the wood and the repair of the tools; we do not allow anything for the labour.

39847. Is there much difference between the cost of the wood and what you get for it when it is chopped?—Very little, and, having regard to the price we have been paying for wood lately, I am afraid it will be the other way and we shall have to sustain a loss unless we increase the price.

Insufficient relieving officers at Leeds and beneficial results of cross-visitation.

Nature and
question of profits on labour test
work.

potism by eds
ardians.

39848. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Are there any members on your board whose relatives have been appointed officers?—Two or three.

39849. Can you give us any particulars of that?—I can give you one. The one I am speaking of is one of the workhouse indoor officers. He is the son of one of my guardians, and, though canvassing is always prohibited, this particular guardian canvassed for his appointment at the time with the result, in my opinion, that the best candidate was not appointed. The other had had experience and this man had had none.

39850. Are there any other cases?—Yes, there is one quite recently of a vaccination officer; in his case not so much is to be said, because I think really he was equal to any candidate who applied.

ardians ministering ef to their n constitu-es and culty of aining table idates in ain wards.

39851. Can you give us any detailed information bearing on the question of guardians giving relief in their own wards and pressing for it?—Detailed in what way?

39852. Can you give us any figures as to the way in which they influence the giving of relief?—I had better take one ward, it is the worst in my union. There are usually three guardians sitting to administer relief in that section; one guardian comes from the opposite end of the town and I believe acts impartially; the second guardian is a Roman Catholic priest who does not very frequently attend, but attends as frequently as it is possible for him to do; and the other is a small shop-keeper in the district, a man who I believe pays something like 6s. a week for his house and shop. He is a small tailor. It is very difficult indeed to find a candidate in that ward who is free from improper pressure, because there is nobody but small shopkeepers or labourers living in the ward, and one guardian has admitted to me that he cannot take a perfectly impartial view of all the cases, because, if so, he could not continue to live in his ward. That particular guardian has been, on more than one occasion, the cause of cases being reinstated upon the books that have been struck off by the Board for misrepresentation or some other reason.

age-
erty ers as dians.

39853. (Mr. Gardiner.) With regard to paragraph 44 of your statement, do you find that many owners of cottage property seek election?—I do not think so. I can only call one to mind, although there are one or two builders in addition. You could hardly call them cottage-property owners.

39854. It is suggested that an additional column ought to be provided in which the applicant for relief should give the name of his landlord?—I do not think that that would be much good.

proper ber of as to be et with by ieving ter.

39855. Can you give us an idea what is the maximum number of cases which a relieving officer could deal with?—Personally I should think with regard to relief cases 200 would be quite sufficient for any relieving officer to look after properly. I would rather bring it lower than that, only I do not want to go to extremes.

39856. A 200 average?—Yes.

ability of oting
an area.

39857. Have you any suggestion to make with regard to the enlargement of the present union?—I do not think so, I think it is large enough. There are three other unions in the city. We might, with regard to the treatment of certain cases, combine. I fancy if a union gets too large it gets unwieldy, unless there is a different type of guardian. I have thirty-two guardians and sometimes I cannot find a quorum for all my Relief Committees.

39858. Why should not the same area be used as for the Corporation?—It would be a very large area, one of the largest in the country, it would have a population approaching half a million and, unless there is a material alteration in the present law, it would not be possible to carry it out with the present Board of Guardians.

39859. Supposing there were some sort of alteration of that kind, do you think a large area would make for better administration?—I cannot speak from experience. A large area is better than a small one up to a certain limit.

Vel for per-red elving offers.

39860. Have you anything to tell us with regard to the training of relieving officers?—They have no preliminary training, they come to us from outside without any training of any description.

39861. Do you think they ought to be trained?—I do, undoubtedly.

39862. Would you like to see a kind of branch of the civil service for relieving officers?—I think the principal officers of the Poor Law should be a branch of the civil service.

39863. You would include among them relieving officers?—Undoubtedly.

39864. Could you elaborate at all how that civil service should be developed?—I have not given much thought to the subject. I see the necessity every day. A relieving officer comes to me and becomes an invaluable officer after two or three years, but unfortunately during that three years the things go the wrong way. Our superintendent of test men is a good man for that post; he was a warrant officer having a pension; he was appointed temporary relieving officer because my officer was practically dying for some months, suffering from paralysis. In that time the relief went up very materially, although his district was watched as much as it could be; but he had so much work that the increase in the number of cases was very marked.

39865. You have nothing further to tell us about the out-relief of the able-bodied in addition to what you tell us in your statement?—I can only say in Leeds we have a very undesirable class which has been given out-door relief.

39866. Although you insist upon a man coming into the house as a test of destitution or poverty?—I do not like to go to extremes; there are cases where I think the present arrangement is beneficial, but there is a very small number. It is the old disadvantage of taking exceptions too strongly as against a good general rule.

39867. I think you heard the questions put to Miss Baines about widows and their children and the relief given so them. Have you anything to add to that?—Too small relief is given; I think that is undoubtedly so.

39868. You would like to give a sufficiently large amount, say in the case of a widow with four children?—I would Taking it as it is given I think there is too great a discrepancy between what is given in boarded-out cases and to them. And, not only is that the case with widows, but children boarded-out within the union. With us the child is often allowed to live with a relative, an aunt or a grandmother; although they are not able to do much for them, we find there is an amount of affection which is a valuable asset, but the amount paid for that class of child is much less than a child boarded-out beyond the union. Of course, there will always be a certain amount of expense to provide a suitable foster parent, but still there is too great a difference; we are often content to pay 2s. or 2s. 6d. for a child within the union and to pay 4s. or 5s. with extras beyond the union, and with a widow with children 1s. 6d. is often not enough. Of course the widows have earnings, but they are very little very frequently.

39869. (Mr. Phelps.) I see that the out-door relief is paid almost entirely from your office?—Yes, our pay-stations. I have a pay clerk and the pay clerk goes to the various centres of the town to pay the relief.

39870. Does that give you any insight into the relief?—No, I do not think it does. The pay clerk pays simply as a clerk would do.

39871. The pay clerk is not a revision officer, so to speak?—Not at all.

39872. Do you think it is a good thing for the relieving officers not to pay their cases?—Really, I have had no experience of the contrary system, but I think our present system is not the best in some respects. I think if the officer had to pay he would often visit the homes at such times when he might discover things and exercise supervision over the relief. The pay clerk does not do that; he is simply a clerk accounting for so much money and goods.

39873. You draw a distinction between relieving officers paying in the homes and at the pay-stations?—The relieving officer does not pay at the pay-stations, he has nothing to do with money in any shape or form.

39874. Have you any opinion about the desirability of pay-stations?—The feeling of the guardians is rather to increase pay-stations for the convenience of the poor; some we have, have been brought into existence in the last three or four years.

Mr. J. H. Ford.

11 Feb. 1907.

Proposal that principal Poor Law officers should be civil servants.

Lax out-relief at Leeds.

Inadequate relief to widows and children.

Method of paying out-relief at Leeds.

Establishment of pay-stations and reasons therefor.

Mr. J. H. Ford. 39875. That is as against visiting them in their homes ? —Yes.

11 Feb. 1907. 39876. I should have thought the convenience of the poor would have been the other way ?—When I said the convenience of the poor as being one of the reasons for starting more pay-stations, I was only differentiating between that and the paying at the central offices, which are a considerable distance from the outlying parts of the union.

The influence of politics on guardians' elections and question of best method of obtaining guardians.

39877. In Paragraph 67 you say : "If the guardians could be elected as overseers are, that is, by being selected and compelled to serve in the office"—who selects the overseers ?—The vestry and the justices I believe, or they did. I am afraid I have not very much knowledge as to their appointment. The vestries used to. What I mean by that is this : I might give a case in point, in which one of the most prominent medical men in Leeds came to see me some time ago, with regard to Poor Law relief ; he was much interested in the subject, he was a very busy man, a specialist, and he said as years went on if he found he could relinquish part of his practice he would like a seat upon the board of guardians. He asked my opinion as to what was the best method of becoming one, and I asked him at once, was he prepared to stand on any political lines. He said if he stood he would stand as an independent. I said : I can only tell you from my own experience that all the Independents I have ever known put up have been left most ingloriously at the bottom of the sheet on the occasion of the polls.

39878. You would like some Independents on your board ?—They are not properly represented at present.

39879. In whose hands would you place the selection ? —I could not say. I would like to see different classes sitting on the board, not of any particular position or calling. I would like to see the board representative of all classes, but at present it is not.

39880. You think a method of selection and election would be the best ?—Yes, I think that would form the best board.

Objections to transfer of guardians' duties to the city council.

39881. Have you considered the proposal to entrust the poor relief to the city council ?—I should not like to see it in Leeds.

39882. On what ground ?—I do not think that there would be the slightest improvement. The main objections I have urged against the method of election for the board of guardians, obtains against the city council. If the city councillors administered relief, I hope the Local Government Board's supervision would be retained, otherwise it would be an additional expense. If it were likely that the city council were to do the work at present carried out by the board of guardians, I hope the Local Government Board's powers of supervision and audit would also be imposed.

39883. Is the work of the city council much more highly estimated than the work of the board of guardians at Leeds ?—It is more highly estimated.

39884. Can you say why ?—I do not know, it has always been a puzzle to me.

Proposal that illegitimate children should be liable to maintain their mothers.

39885. In Paragraph 78 you say illegitimate children should be liable to maintain their mothers. On what ground do you put that ?—I think as a fact if the mother has brought up an illegitimate child in its younger years with the same care that the mother of a legitimate child has done, I do not see why the child should not be compelled to maintain its mother in later years. I do not see any reason for the difference.

39886. Illegitimate children suffer from great disabilities, do they not ?—They do undoubtedly.

39887. Is it not fair there should be some compensation ?—That is, I think, a punishment perhaps on the mother.

39888. I am not thinking of punishing the mother so much as relief to the child ?—That is the way I regard it.

The abolition of settlement and question as to its effect. 39889. If you put them under certain disabilities, is it not fair to give them some compensation ?—My view was with regard to the ratepayers, so that they should not suffer.

39890. You think your views with regard to the law of settlement are commonly held by clerks ?—By a very large number, I think.

39891. Do you think the locality makes a difference ? The abolition of settlement and question as to its effect. —It does undoubtedly. The argument has been used that large towns would suffer. We should suffer undoubtedly ; Leeds is a Mecca of labour, we get people from all parts of the country, but as we have the advantage of the labour of those men when fit and strong, I think we could justly undertake the support of them when they are old and unable to work.

39892. Do you remove many to Ireland ?—No.

39893. Or to Scotland ?—Not six a year.

39894. You think twelve months should be enough to give a status ?—Yes, that would prevent actual vagrancy, in the sense, that is to say, of the people who come to a place for a little while and then ask for relief ; therefore I would keep the twelve months.

39895. You think that would entail much more uniformity of administration in workhouses ?—It is obviously essential otherwise I should not make the recommendation ; it would alter the way things are worked in some unions, otherwise undoubtedly those unions would suffer by people going to them. We find that ourselves with regard to the confinement of girls ; it is a regular thing for girls to come to Leeds for their confinements from considerable distances round, because of the kindness of the treatment in the infirmary. In the question of the settlement of those cases, there is very great difficulty because the mother has often discharged herself before the other union has had time to make investigation with regard to the settlement.

39896. Have you any idea what proportion of your chargeable cases become chargeable on a status of irremovability compared with settlement ?—A small proportion only on account of irremovability.

39897. And the cases which come before you as doubtful cases ?—I should think they are evenly divided. I really have not the figures in my mind. I should not like to be tied to anything definite.

39898. (Miss Hill.) The position of the foster-mother in the scattered homes is one of great responsibility ?—Undoubtedly. Responsibilities and tenure of foster mothers in scattered homes.

39899. And requires very various capacities ?—Yes. 39900. Are they irremovable without reference to the Local Government Board like other officers ?—No, they can be removed.

39901. So it would be possible for a committee, or whoever appoints them, to make a change if they should find it necessary ?—The board of guardians, it is not in the hands of a committee.

39902. And they are free to discharge the foster parents ? —Yes.

39903. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to the treatment of phthisis, has any special provision been made by the guardians in Leeds ?—No, it has not, beyond the provision that you have already heard of what we pay for two beds We give a subscription that gives us the right to two beds in the Gateforth Sanatorium. Provision by Leeds guardians for phthisis cases.

39904. Since you have paid that subscription has it involved a closer examination of the inmates of the workhouse with the object of discovering whether they suffer from phthisis ?—We do not send the inmates of the workhouse there, they are simply cases from out-relief, we have sent none of the indoor cases. The only difference we make with regard to indoor phthisical cases is to put them together as one class and treat them apart from the other patients.

39905. Is there voluntary notification of phthisis in Leeds ?—No. Absence of co-operation between guardians and sanitarian authority as to phthisis.

39906. Has the health authority ever brought any case under your notice that would be best removed into the workhouse ?—They may have in one or two solitary instances.

39907. There has been no attempt at co-operation between the guardians and the health authority, with a view to stamping out phthisis ?—No.

39908. And there is no sign of any co-operation ?—None.

39909. With regard to the outdoor relief, the numbers are higher than the average of the West Riding, I think ? —Yes, higher than the average.

39910. Taking outdoor and in, it is higher than the average excluding vagrancy and the lunatics in asylums ? —Yes.

Causes of increased pauperism at Leeds and proposed remedies herefor.

39911. To what do you attribute that increase after your statement that there is a great diversity of trade in Leeds and not much fluctuation in employment?—Simply to administration, and the easy granting of out-relief.

39912. You attribute it all to the administration?—I do; that has been clearly evidenced by the fact that once or twice my Board has made up its mind on certain things, say, for instance, with regard to able-bodied men, to strike off all single able-bodied men from out-relief test work. I believe one did come to the workhouse, the others remained outside and maintained themselves. Quite recently as the result of a report by the superintendent of test labour, eleven men were struck off the list on account of their bad character and refusal to work; there were eleven wives, and forty-nine children; the earnings the last week they worked were £3 ls. 2d., not a single one of those men has been admitted to the workhouse or applied.

39913. Is it not your opinion that if you had a superintendent relieving officer, smaller relieving officer's districts, and better cross-visiting of cases, you would materially reduce the number of cases?—I am sure of it.

39914. Without hardship?—I am sure of it. I do not think we should ever go to the extent of hardship. Leeds has always been an out-relief union; I have not very strong views on that subject, but I do think if all the undesirable cases were struck off our list we could much better relieve those who are apparently proper cases.

39915. That is if those whom you consider to be undeserving of outdoor relief were offered the house, you would reduce the number materially?—Yes, and I think my guardians would not try to cut down the individual amount so much, they are often led to keep the amount down on account of the addition to the rates.

Proposed scheme for reforming out-relief at Leeds.

39916. Has any serious attempt been made at reforming your administration of out-relief on the lines you have indicated?—I am sorry to say a scheme was drawn up and then dropped; or partially adopted by the appointment of cross-visitors.

39917. Was it dropped on account of the expense?—No, it was a question of opinion. It was left in the hands of a committee who were supposed to be experts, the committee were divided in opinion, the strong minds were against it unfortunately, instead of being for it.

39918. What was the number on the committee?—Five.

39919. Did they pay visits to other places?—Yes, they went to Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and two or three of the prominent London Unions. In every instance but one they were assured that the principle of a superintendent relieving officer was a sound and good one, but there was one exception to that.

39920. Still they did not report in favour of a superintendent relieving officer?—No. Two members of the committee, the minority, ruled the committee.

Suggested abolition of ward areas for guardians' elections.

39921. In order to get a better class of guardian which you very much desire, would it tend in that direction if your area happened to be all one and you had larger wards for election purposes?—Yes.

39922. Do you not think you would get a better class of guardian?—I think so. The reason I suggested the whole area was to do away with the ward representation; there are wards where you can only get guardians of a certain type, and that is not the best type, not a reasonable type even.

39923. Did you mean a large area for electoral purposes rather than for the union?—Yes, for electoral purposes.

39924. When you are speaking of a larger area you mean a larger electoral area as it were for the guardians within the union?—That is so, to do away with the small petty representation, because the ward representation with my board does obtain very strongly, guardians repeatedly mention the fact that they are looking after the interests of the particular district they represent, instead of being representative of the whole area of the union.

39925. There would be another difficulty would there not, that it would become more and more imperative that they should run on political lines, because it is more difficult for an independent person to run in a large area than a small one?—You have perhaps had more experience, but that is hardly what I thought. Take the School Board in Leeds; there was a division that you found in a sense thoroughly upheld, but I think it was really Church and Nonconformist; there politics were not so strong.

39926. It was a very clean line?—Yes, and there will always be a division between the opposite sets of thought whatever is the line, whether you take capital and labour or anything else.

39927. Do you think that Leeds taken as a whole, that is if the Leeds County Borough was taken as the area for Poor Law purposes, would be too large to administer, provided that for Poor Law purposes it was properly divided up into districts? So far as institutions are concerned would it be too large?—No, the out-relief was the difficulty I was thinking of. I am speaking entirely from theory; I do not think possibly the same objection would arise with regard to the supervision of indoor institutions. I was thinking of my own position. I attend the relief committees; it is now on account of their meetings at the same time impossible for me to attend all of them. I think the clerk should attend them, but if you were to add to that double the number, it would be absolutely impossible, not difficult.

39928. If the relieving officers were specially relegated to a special department with a suitable head for dealing with outdoor relief, it would not necessarily devolve on you?—If it had a properly trained superintendent I should rely on him; I should keep a check on him as on any other officer, but leave the special work of out-relief to him and make him responsible for it.

39929. From that point of view it would reduce the difficulty?—It would reduce it very greatly indeed.

39930. In Paragraph 76 of your statement you refer to the difficulty of getting convictions. Have you had experience in that respect?—Very considerable. I may say that is evidenced by the fact that Mr. Bageral, the inspector, has written a letter to my board on the question. He has recognised the fact from an entirely independent enquiry made by himself when he was visiting my union for seven or eight days in succession. It is a very great difficulty to obtain a conviction. In fact prosecution under the Vagrancy Act for desertion is very difficult unless there is a clear running away, and the man has expressed the intention before he went away that he would go away.

39931. Still you do get convictions?—Yes.

39932. (Miss Hill.) Is it the fact that the stipendiary is unwilling to convict?—Would you like me to give you a case in point with regard to neglect? I had a man who was given an order for the house for his wife and family. He gave the order to the wife and she was admitted, properly she should not be admitted without the husband; but you know in practical administration you are bound to take them in. The man was approached to see whether he was going to maintain his wife or to show his destitution by going into the workhouse. He declined to do either. He was working for a relative who kept a lodging-house, and he was acting as deputy. The guardians prosecuted him; he came before the stipendiary, and the stipendiary asked him what he was doing. He said: "I am working for my brother-in-law." "Does not he give you money?" "No, nothing; he gives me a little food." "Cannot you maintain your wife and children?" "No." The stipendiary asked my officer, "What do the guardians want? The man cannot maintain himself." The officer said he might go into the workhouse, as that would be some proof that he was unable to maintain himself and his family. He would not do that, and the stipendiary refused to convict. That is a typical case.

39933. (Mr. Bentham.) The action of the stipendiary makes it difficult for the guardians to deal with this sort of case?—Very difficult. Unless the man runs away or announces his intention of deserting his family beforehand, or it can be clearly proved that he can obtain work, it is difficult to obtain a conviction.

39934. Supposing he went away stating he was going to seek work, what would the stipendiary say then?—I should never apply for a warrant if a man had gone to seek work unless I had evidence that the man was not trying to maintain his family and had got work. I should not go on the mere fact of his absence.

39935. With regard to the children's homes, to what do you attribute the great cost of the homes, that is, the

Mr. J. H. Ford.

11 Feb. 1907.

Question as to practicality of enlarging Poor Law area.

Difficulty in obtaining convictions for wife desertion.

Instance of the difficulty.

Difficulty in obtaining convictions for wife desertion.

Question as to cost of children's homes.

Mr. J. H.
Ford.

11 Feb. 1907.

Question as to cost of children's homes.

total cost including fixed charges, it is rather high for the scattered home system, is it not?—I do not think it is.

39936. It is higher than Sheffield, is it not?—I do not know what their figures are. The last time I noticed them we were much on the same lines. The only question is, do they put everything in establishment charges that we do? I put in a proportion of the clerks in the office and stationery and things of that kind so as to make it cover everything. Do they do the same?

39937. In getting out the cost per head, do you take the number provided for or the average day's maintenance of the children?—I take the number of children and the actual cost of the homes for the year.

39938. And then average that out?—Yes.

39939. With regard to the fixed charges, did you calculate it per bed or on the average number of children?—I took the whole of the rent and rates and the number of children accommodated each day and divided it out in that way by the collective number of days.

39940. That is not the usual way?—It would give the actual cost per bed, supposing all the beds were filled.

39941. You took it on that supposition?—I should say that our homes as a rule are not only filled, but occasionally we have to put an extra child in if we can do so.

39942. Is there not a danger of being misled in getting out figures and comparing them. If you take the fixed figure of accommodation it would naturally come out lower than if you took it on the average of the children in the homes?—This was done some little time ago. The actual workings were done by my clerk. I would like to be quite certain; I think it was as I said, but I will correct that if I am not right.

Proposal to circulate to voluntary agencies lists of persons receiving
relief.

39943. (Mr. Nunn.) You were speaking of overlapping just now. Has it occurred to you that the guardians might set an example to other agencies by issuing lists of the relief which they grant?—I should be very glad if they would. Years ago we used to publish a list giving all the particulars, it gave the name of every pauper in receipt of relief. The last part was the reason of its being discontinued. One or two of the guardians said it was a great shame that the names should be bandied about all over the city. They not only stopped that but the other part also.

39944. It might be circulated confidentially?—I think there is no objection to that, and I think it would be good if it were done.

39945. It might be adopted by the other agencies?—Yes.

39946. (Chairman.) The objection was to including medical relief, was it not?—It was published in the shape of a book; it was not in any way private.

39947. It included medical relief?—Medical relief and outdoor relief, everything, indoor relief as well.

39948. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) Did it include applicants for relief?—All relief granted.

39949. (Chairman.) Was the main objection that it included medical relief?—No, it was the publication of the names.

39950. (Mr. Booth.) Was the kind of relief specified opposite the names?—Yes. In fact they were grouped; outdoor relief, No. 1 district, so and so, and Nos. 2, 3, and 4, indoor, sick and medical.

39951. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I rather understood it was including the names of those who applied and did not receive?—No, they were not included.

39952. I thought you said all applicants?—Only those who were actually in receipt of relief. It was practically a publication of the list and was sent across to the overseers with regard to the register.

39953. (Mr. Nunn.) You know there is a special Order in London permitting the London Unions to do that and spend money upon them?—I think that is so.

39954. I believe there is no difficulty?—We did it, and our right to do it was never questioned. We did it for some three, four or perhaps five years.

39955. Was it taken up at all by any of the other agencies?—I do not think so. The Charity Organisation Society in those days, twenty years ago, was not very well organised. I think at present there is every likelihood that with that body we shall work in harmony. I think my board would only too gladly take up work with the other bodies in the City, but my guardians change so frequently. Of my present board two-thirds came on new three years ago and there is a likelihood of the same change next April.

39956. (Mr. Bentham.) Does not the one-third, which represents the unchanged portion, really rule the board?—No, it does not. I only wish it did.

39957. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) I rather gathered from your evidence that the main difficulty seems to be the quality of the guardians?—Yes.

39958. The administration would be all right if there were an improvement in the quality of the guardians?—Yes.

39959. Do you find plenty of candidates coming forward for the office?—No, there is a very great difficulty in some wards to obtain candidates of any kind.

39960. Are there a good many uncontested wards?—Not many.

39961. In answer to one question, you said you noticed the City Council was rather more attractive to a better class than the board of guardians?—I did not put it in quite such emphatic terms as that. It is more attractive, I know, as an instance of that, that some of my best guardians when they have been on a year or two go in for the city council.

39962. You have a difficulty in explaining why that should be?—I always have had. Personally, I should much rather sit on the board of guardians.

39963. Is not a member of the city council far more in the public eye than a guardian?—That is one reason.

39964. And his actions are more reported in the papers; and are there not more rewards for a local ambitious man on the city council than on the board of guardians?—Yes, there are.

39965. Is there not a little more patronage to be dispensed if they are on the city council than if they are on the board of guardians?—Considerably more.

39966. Is there not also the fact that there are more matters that are in dispute which are far more exciting?—That is so.

39967. Would you not think so long as human nature is human nature those things would appeal to an ambitious man?—They would appeal to a vain or ambitious man, but a good many men who have left my board to go to the city council have been of the opposite type; they have been very good Poor Law authorities. After a time on the city council they have given public work up altogether; they have not come back to the board of guardians.

39968. A vain ambitious man in a district is more likely to go to the city council than to the board of guardians?—That is so, undoubtedly.

39969. I was rather surprised to get your answer that if candidates were chosen and the election were over a larger area there would be less political influence in the matter. I should have thought there would have been rather more, but in regard to choosing in the smaller areas would not smaller and meaner ideas come in with regard to them?—I do not think I said that. I did not say that political feeling would be less in the larger areas, only that I should get a better class of guardian, because he would have to be known all over the area. I am not so far averse to a political election, because it is difficult to find any other, but where it results in a bad type of candidate, as it does under the present ward arrangement, that is what I want to see changed.

39970. It is practically impossible over a large area, is it not, for a person who has not the backing of a party organisation to get elected?—As at present, it is, but I do not see why it should be. At present it is worked down to a farce.

39971. What is the solution you would find?—There you are asking me a difficult question to answer. I quite admit the difficulty, and I do not see a better way. I am only hoping we may find a better way. The ward political election at present in a large union like Leeds is carried to a ridiculous extreme.

39972. It is a great disadvantage, is it not, that in order to get a good guardian or a good man for certain municipal work you have to have the backing of a political organisation?—Undoubtedly.

Frequent changes in personnel of guardians of the same change next April.

Need for higher-class
guardians.

Difficulty in obtaining candidates for guardian
elections.

The attractiveness of the city council and reasons therefor.

The comparative influence of politics in large versus small areas for guardian
elections.

Objections to ward areas
for guardian
elections.

fect of ennial reement of ardians on continuity of ministraon.

39973. (Mr. Booth.) In paragraph 68, which deals with the question of continuity of administration, is that not putting it that there is no continuity of administration unless they retire yearly sectionally in thirds; does that not need some qualification?—I can only speak of my own board; I will take the present board, in many matters that had been brought to a certain stage when the present board were elected the new board would not take them up until, as they said, they had had the opportunity of going into them and finding out for themselves; in some instances they directly reversed the policy of what they called the "last board." What I want to see abolished is all this question of "this board" and the "last board." As I tell them it is one board, but that feeling obtains strongly in boards where there is such a large change in the constitution every election time.

proportion of ardians re-ected.

39974. You do get continuity of a kind, but it is not the only kind of continuity. Your statement seems rather to assume that no guardian is ever re-elected; you might have the whole board re-elected?—Yes, but since 1894 the guardians seem to have gone off after much shorter service. Out of thirty-two elected guardians, speaking from memory I have twelve which have sat more than three years, and of those, three are district councillors who do not care for guardians' work and are seldom seen, so it practically resolves itself in my having eight or nine guardians who have had more than three years' experience.

Mr. J. H. Ford.

11 Feb. 1907.

39975. (Mr. Bentham.) Does that not mean that the old guardians were re-elected?—In one or two instances, but they have had enough in some cases; they have emphatically stated that they have had enough and are not coming back.

Proportion of guardians re-elected.

39976. (Mr. Booth.) So the portion continuing after three years is small?—Yes.

39977. Do you think if the elections were yearly and consequently two-thirds of the guardians remained on, that there would be the same small proportion of old members re-elected?—That might be so, but still I think at all events there would not be the disruption that there is. There is a very great disruption of public business every election time. I may mention as a case in point that the scheme of infirmary extension has been twice thrown back because the new board wanted to go into the matter before being bound by the recommendation of its predecessors.

39978. You do not want it considered a new board?—No, that is the only thing.

Mr. FREDERICK WRIGHT, called; and Examined.

39979. (Chairman.) You are a relieving officer of the Leeds Union?—I am.

39980. You have prepared a statement which we will take as your evidence-in-chief if you will hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. The following statement is based upon knowledge derived from my experience in administering relief in the district under my control and from impressions conveyed to me in carrying out the duties connected or appertaining to that district.

social and dustrial conditions of Leeds relief
district.

2. The district itself has a population between 30,000 and 40,000, embracing the very lowest classes of society, whose life is one long struggle with poverty, most of whom belong to the casual or outdoor labouring class. There are few workshops and factories, though a few years ago it was a centre of the flax-spinning industry, which has now left these shores for America. The social position, as before indicated, is a low one. The housing of the poor is unsatisfactory and insanitary, the property in many parts consisting of old dilapidated two-roomed back-to-back houses; overcrowding is common. There are many cellar dwellings damp and unwholesome. The moral tone of the district is low and it is a resort of the criminal element. These remarks refer expressly to my district only, which is the worst in the city.

ut-relief :
s difficulties ad bad moral effect.

3. Outdoor relief is very difficult to control and requires constant and unceasing watching and visiting, more especially in a large district. In the outdoor administration of relief every attempt is made by unscrupulous persons, by mis-statements or otherwise, to deceive relieving officers, and it often happens that, having obtained the relief on the ground of infirmity, it is found that the person relieved is working and receiving relief at the same time. The punishment for this offence is not sufficiently severe. Indeed punishments for offences generally against the Poor Law are not sufficiently deterrent. Generally out-relief conduces to wholesale fraud. In indoor relief the persons are under the immediate control of officers; and relief colonies would, in my opinion, be an excellent method of dealing with this class of relief and would be better in every way than out-relief as it is at present administered.

adequacy punishment for offences against Poor
Law.

4. In my district applicants for relief are nearly all of the labouring class. A few are miners and painters.

proposal to substitute relief colonies or out-relief.

5. The most important causes of pauperism are:—(a) old age; (b) the early marriage of persons dependent upon casual labour. Large families are the rule. Owing to the low wages earned no provision can be made to meet such contingencies as non-employment, sickness, or of imprisonment for debt. The latter is a crying scandal, and I have had to relieve the families of hard working respectable men who have been committed for long periods on non-compliance of a county court judge's order for a few shillings. These orders are usually made in respect of small sums. I have known men lose their employment as a result of their commitment. I have relieved their families during their incarceration and afterwards given the men test work on their release from prison. (c) Imprisonment for criminal offences is a large factor in pauperism. (d) Venereal disease also contributes largely; much of the misery entailed by this disease would be obviated if it were made notifiable. Its ramifications are appalling. (e) Intemperance is another contribution, and in this I find females to be the worst offenders. Many men are perforce paupers by the intemperance of their wives. I have had numbers of these cases. Women easily obtain drink on credit at shops having beer, spirit and wine licences. (f) Indiscriminate relief by private persons and religious bodies also contributes largely towards pauperism, and cases have occurred where relief has been in the first instance given in this manner and the recipients eventually become confirmed paupers. (g) Cases are not wanting to show that pauperism is hereditary—two generations being quite common, and third generations occasionally occur.

Mr. F. Wright.

11 Feb. 1907.

6. The Poor Law authorities should have the power of applying to the magistrates for permission to remove and detain in a suitable place any person who refused to act upon the recommendation of the medical officer—that he or she should be removed to the union infirmary. Cases occur almost daily where much misery and positive danger are entailed upon the patient and members of the family by their refusal to consent to removal. Power should be given to compulsorily remove to the workhouse, for a period to be determined upon, persons who neglect to provide for their families; also to remove persons who are incapable of properly looking after themselves, e.g., persons of weak intellect, aged persons, and destitute or neglected families who refuse a Board's or relieving officer's order of admission to the workhouse.

Need for compulsory power to detain certain classes of paupers in the workhouse or infirmary.

7. Efficient and intelligent relieving officers are essential for the administration of relief. They should be entirely under Government control and selected by competition.

The need for efficient relieving officers with improved status.

39981. (Chairman.) You think that the punishments for offences against the Poor Law are not sufficiently deterrent?—That is my experience.

Insufficient
powers of punishment for offences against the
Poor Law.

39982. You heard the evidence of the preceding witness that there is difficulty in getting a conviction for an offence against the Poor Law from the stipendiary magistrate?—Exactly.

39983. That has come under your observation?—Yes. the cases which Mr. Ford stated are really cases arising out of my district.

39984. The result of your experience is that you think that outdoor relief conduces to wholesale fraud?—That is my experience.

Demoralising effect of out-relief on applicants.

39985. That statements are made in connection with it which are not true?—Quite so.

Mr. F.
Wright.

11 Feb. 1907.

Evils of indiscriminate and inadequate out-relief.

Number of guardians on relief committees and average attendance at meetings.

Imprisonment for non-payment of fees of child in an industrial school as a cause of pauperism.

39986. Do you agree with the preceding witness that the present system of giving rather wide outdoor relief and small sums associated with it is bad?—I do.

39987. You think the relief insufficient and the number of cases relieved are not sufficiently investigated?—I do.

39988. Of how many guardians does your committee consist?—I think the committee consists of twelve, but the committee is divided into two relief sections, I think six guardians on each.

39989. What is the average attendance?—I was going to say never more than three, but there are some times four, very often two, some times one.

39990. Among the causes of pauperism which you enumerate, you put imprisonment by the county court judge?—Yes, and since I wrote this I have been making some inquiries about it, and I find that latterly orders are not made in respect of any persons working test, that is a county court order is not made against any person who is working test, and lately I have not had to relieve cases of that kind, so I presume the circumstances must have been altered.

39991. What do you call working test?—On test relief.

39992. You mean to say that orders have been made against persons who are practically paupers?—That is so.

39993. Have you had any complaints of orders being given against heads of families for the non-payment of fees for children at industrial schools?—Yes.

39994. Have the parents been imprisoned in those cases?—Yes, I have had to relieve families of men who have been imprisoned.

39995. For that purpose?—Yes.

39996. What is your idea about it, are there many of these cases?—No, I think I have only had two within the last three years.

39997. The result of course is that the ratepayer is unfortunate because the debt is not recovered, the man is sent to prison, he loses his work and the family is on the rates?—That is so.

39998. Do you know what happened to those men when they came out; did they remain on the rates?—In one case the man remained on the rates for a considerable time, and I had the greatest difficulty personally in getting rid of him.

39999. Was he a respectable man?—He was a very respectable man.

40000. You do not think he would have come on the rates if it had not been for that?—I do not think he would.

40001. The child was sent to the industrial school by the education committee?—Yes.

40002. So he had no option in the matter?—No option at all.

Venereal disease as a cause of pauperism and need for power to detain cases suffering from it.

40003. You think that lock diseases contribute very much to the distress and misery in Leeds?—Very much.

40004. The general impression seems to be that its ravages are very great in Leeds?—It is my experience; in my district its ravages are simply terrible.

40005. From generation to generation?—Yes, that is so. You find men under treatment at the dispensary living with their wives and families; in one case I know of where the man was suffering severely, there was only one bed in the establishment and his wife, he and four children were occupying that bed.

40006. You would wish to have powers of detention with regard to those cases?—Certainly.

40007. And you also wish to have power of removal in the case of persons whose dwellings were insanitary and also persons of weak intellect?—That is so.

40008. Would you wish the board of guardians to have power to keep people in the workhouse, to prevent them discharging themselves very lightly?—Yes.

40009. Do you think that is important?—I think it is very important.

40010. I suppose you have cases of people constantly discharging themselves?—I frequently send them in one day and they discharge themselves the next. They do it for the purpose of obtaining relief, in this way, the guardians make an order with the condition that the man must go into the infirmary. I send him into the infirmary and probably immediately after the first payment of relief to his family he discharges himself, frequently I do not get to hear of it till some time afterwards, and there he is at home with his family receiving relief.

40011. And you think if the guardians had this power it would make people more chary about getting relief in that way?—I do.

40012. Coming to the discharge of your duties as relieving officer you think that the present system of relief and working-class relief committees by which guardians become associated with the interests of those whom they represent is detrimental to the work of the relieving officer?—It absolutely paralyzes the efforts of a relieving officer to keep down relief. Some of the cases I have on my books are no more deserving of out-relief than the very worst in the district.

40013. Has what you complain of grown of recent years?—It has grown largely.

40014. Do you find the discharge of your duties more difficult?—I do.

40015. There is no revision of cases by the board?—No.

40016. Are the guardians who sit on these cases representatives of the districts from which they come?—One guardian only in my case.

40017. They do not shift from district to district?—No.

40018. (Mr. Bentham.) As a relieving officer would you object to having a superintending relieving officer over you?—I should be very pleased if we had one. I think it would help us materially.

40019. You think it would tend to more uniformity of relief through the whole area?—Yes.

40020. There are great differences of treatment between one district and another?—Yes, that is so.

40021. Take the case of a widow, for instance, with a family; in one district she might receive more relief than if she was an applicant in another district?—That is so.

40022. Do the people change residence at all in order to get into a district where relief is given more rapidly or more freely?—That is watched.

40023. Supposing it is watched, you cannot help it, can you? You must relieve if it is a case of necessity?—If she was in one district and she removed into another she would not get more relief in that district than she got in the one she came from.

40024. Would the relieving officer communicate with the relieving officer in the other district and communicate what happened there?—Yes.

40025. He would say Mrs. So-and-so got so much in such-and-such a district?—Yes.

40026. She would get the same even although a widow on the same day might be given a higher scale of relief?—No.

40027. Supposing the scale of relief in that district was higher on the average than in this particular case we are speaking of, they would not lower all round because a new case had come into their district which had been receiving less from another district?—In my district if an applicant came who was receiving more relief in that district than we were in the habit of giving we should bring it down to our standard.

40028. And if it were less?—Probably if it were a bona fide case we might increase it in our district.

40029. I thought you said it would be the same?—The probability is if it were a deserving case we should raise it.

40030. You would treat it on its merits alone?—Certainly.

40031. You have some rules for the administration of relief, I notice?—Yes.

40032. Are those fairly well kept?—Yes, they are fairly well adhered to.

40033. Do you not submit any single person to the labour test yard for outdoor relief?—No, we used to but our experience was such that we discontinued it.

40034. Is an able-bodied woman with only one child in practice refused outdoor relief on all occasions?—No, Discouraging effect on relieving officers' work of intimacy between guardians and applicants for relief.

No revision of cases by board of guardians.

Advantage of appointing a superintending relieving officer.

Question as to effect on pauper's allowance of change of residence from one relief district to another.

Rules for administration of relief.

Question as to relief of able-bodied.

Proposed compulsory power to remove certain classes to workhouse and to detain them therein.

but I only remember one application where there was an able-bodied woman with one child, and in that case we gave her test work, we gave her scrubbing at the workhouse, and I believe she is there still. That is the only case I have had.

40035. In the case of an able-bodied married couple, with only one child, that would be a case of a person who would be put on outdoor labour test?—He would not be put on.

40036. Even with one child?—No.

operation between relieving officers and charitable agencies and difficulties. 40037. Do the relieving officers communicate at all with charitable agencies with regard to cases which might be relieved through those agencies?—Yes.

40038. Have you had many cases yourself that you have brought under their notice?—Frequently, but only this week I have had to discontinue giving any information at all to a Charity Society till I get a matter settled up. They send round every week a book in which the names of applicants for relief to that society are entered. There are two columns left for the remarks of the relieving officer or other societies in the locality. The other day a name came in well known to myself, and I made an entry in the book telling the society what I knew of this man; it turned out afterwards that there were two men of the same name living in the same street, one was the father, which was the one I thought this thing dealt with, and the other was the son. On the board of this particular Charitable Society there is an extreme Socialist; he took this case up. He thought, of course, that my remarks applied to the young person, whereupon he wrote to my board complaining that the information I had given was incorrect, and asking the board to deal with me with regard to the matter.

40039. It was in fact incorrect was it not?—It was, but I explained at an interview I had with the person making the complaint that it referred to the old man and not to the young one, and of course he has made capital out of it. I thought that all information given to these societies was confidential, and until I receive their assurance that this is so I have refused to give any information. It places an officer in a very difficult position.

40040. You render yourself liable to be proceeded against if your information is not true, do you not?—I do not know. If we inadvertently make a mistake, I do not think we ought to be placed in the position of being shot at.

40041. Not for a mere mistake?—No.

relief persons living with relatives able to maintain them. 40042. How many people were relieved in your district who were living in circumstances that you would say they had quite sufficient for the necessities of life, living with relatives who had a good income, but who had nothing in their own right; they earn nothing and they have no income, but they are living in very good circumstances; would they be considered eligible for relief if they applied?—Yes, I have several cases like that, not where they are living with people with good incomes, but people who have sufficient for themselves.

40043. On what ground is relief given to these cases?—If the people are comfortable, they are living in most instances with either sons or married daughters, and if we make an order for the house it would act very harshly as we think against them.

40044. They would not come in would they?—I have known cases where orders have been made by the guardians, where they have taken the order and gone into the house.

40045. If they did not come in they would not suffer would they, if there was sufficient income in the house?—No, of course not.

40046. You were going to give some cases were you?—They are mostly widows residing with married daughters.

40047. Aged persons?—Yes, all of them aged.

40048. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think you have been in Leeds about three years?—I have lived in Leeds all my life, but I have only had this district three years, although I have been connected with it more or less for years.

40049. Have you reduced the relief considerably since you went there?—I have.

discriminating out-relief in Leeds; instances of. 40050. Can you tell us something of your early experiences when you were attempting to reduce it?—When I took over the district the relief had been rather laxly administered; we were paying about £135 a week. I commenced investigating the cases, and I found there were a lot of recipients of relief who were not deserving. In many cases the relief had been obtained by fraud; and by reporting the cases to the committee, and in some cases prosecuting, we got the relief down more than half. Some of the cases were most flagrant. I had one case where a woman was in receipt of relief, her husband, the second husband, was in the workhouse and the married daughter was living in a villa in one of the best suburbs of Leeds, and yet that woman was in receipt of 3s. a week.

Relieving officer's attempts at reform met by persecution of, and violence against himself and his family. When the relief was discontinued the relatives came and endeavoured to get it reinstated. The daughter drove to the relief office to appear before my committee. That is a sample of them. In some of the cases I found that there were deserted wives who were receiving remittances from their husbands. I successfully prosecuted in one or two of those cases, but finally I found that I was being persecuted. First of all I had my house broken into three times in three months. I had five robberies in my house in fifteen months. I prosecuted two men, and one of them got a long term of imprisonment. It culminated in my family being attacked. My daughter was assaulted in the streets; my wife was followed about from the tramcar up to my house, and in the streets she was abused and life became perfectly intolerable. An attack was made upon my daughter; she was almost stripped in the streets. A crowd of between 200 and 300 persons assembled outside my house, and I had to seek police protection. I came on the scene and I recognised the ringleaders, who were three women. One was a woman whose husband had been prosecuted for desertion, one who had obtained relief by false pretences, and the other an unsuccessful applicant for relief, who was a drunkard. I prosecuted them, or rather the board did on my behalf, and they were sentenced to imprisonment; but right the way along I was persecuted to such an extent that I have had to send my wife and child to live outside the boundary of my district, and I have to occupy a house within my district with a caretaker, and that is how I am living at the present time. Out-relief has been given in an indiscriminate manner and in prosecuting and discontinuing the relief I got across these people, and have had to suffer.

40051. (Mr. Booth.) How long ago was that?—The first occasion I think was two years last November, and the last time I had any trouble was about three months ago in my own office.

40052. When did you first come to the district?—Three years ago.

40053. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Is it within the last three months that your wife and family had to move?—I sent them away in June last year.

40054. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Do you consider you have got rid of all your fraudulent cases?—No.

40055. You know there are others?—Yes.

40056. You have not time, I suppose?—I get them every week, but of course it takes time. I have to investigate, I have had to almost live in the district, investigating old cases.

40057. How many cases have you on your books?—At present?

40058. Yes, tell me roughly?—It varies. I had 361 last week and 372 the week before.

40059. (Mr. Bentham.) Is that cases or persons?—Cases. I had 1,004 persons the week before last; it is not usually less than 900 persons.

40060. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) You showed me something of your district and pointed out the houses that were very bad there; there were a good many furnished rooms?—Of the worst class.

40061. Into those rooms out-relief is going in some cases?—Yes, in the form of test work.

40062. I think you took me to one case where relief was going where it was not even test work, the man was at home?—That man was a test man, but he was sick and in receipt of out-relief temporarily because he refused to go into the infirmary.

40063. Could you describe that furnished room to us and the system on which they are worked?—It is one small room of a large tenement; the room I do not suppose

Mr. P. Wright.

11 Feb. 1907.

Number of cases under relieving officer's care.

Description of worst class of "furnished" rooms in Leeds, and rents charged therefor.

Mr. F. Wright.
11 Feb. 1907.

is more than 12 feet square, there was one bed common to the whole family, one box for a table and one chair. For that the man pays 4s. 6d. a week.

40064. (Mr. Booth.) Is that considered a furnished room?—That is considered a furnished room. Some of them pay with very little more accommodation, as high as 8s. 6d. a week. They are peopled by the lowest class, and there is no supervision over them at all—no police supervision.

Possibility and advantage of prohibiting out-relief to persons living in an insanitary area.

40065. Are they registered?—No, they are not.

40066. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Do you think it would be a possible plan, when you get a district like that in an area, to make it a rule that no out-relief should go into such an area?—I think it is possible.

40067. Would you find a difficulty in moving good cases out of it?—No.

40068. They would be willing to go?—They would.

40069. Would that help your work, do you think?—I think it would materially.

Debauchery among Army pensioners on pension days.

40070. Have you any view about the payment of Army pensions in particular?—On pension day I have been once into my district and I have not been since. It is a veritable pandemonium. They get their pension and they drink it hand over head as long as it lasts. I have seen as many as a dozen fights going on in one street at a time on pension day.

40071. (Mr. Gardiner.) What do the police do?—The police apparently give them a wide berth.

"Pension papers" pledged for groceries.

40072. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Is there any system by which they make use of their pension papers with the grocers?—Yes, I find they deposit their pension papers with the grocers and obtain goods on credit, which is of course set off against the pension.

40073. Can you give us any instances of what you would consider inadequate relief especially to children?—I have generally endeavoured to get adequate relief in my district, so that I am afraid I cannot give you any assistance.

40074. You think it is generally adequate?—As a Adequacy rule, yes. relief to children.

40075. I think all your relief is paid at the office?—Yes.

40076. Can you tell us what happens in cases where recipients are unable to come up themselves?—In those of The method cases there are women who draw the relief and take it of out-relief round to the paupers; they receive probably a penny from at Leeds each one.

40077. That is organised by these women themselves?—Yes.

40078. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) You say you have Imprisoned had to relieve the families of hard working respectable ment for men who have been committed for long periods on non-debt as a compliance with a County Court Judge's Order for a few cause of shillings. In many of those cases is that for non-pay- pauperism ment of rent?—No, I have never come across a single nature of case where an order has been made against a man for debt. non-payment of rent.

40079. Where are the majority of these cases?—They are generally small tradesmen's accounts.

40080. There has been no case for non-payment of rent at the instance of the landlord?—No, I have not come across one case.

SEVENTY-NINTH DAY.

Tuesday, 12th February, 1907.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.
Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.
Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.
Dr. A. H. DOWNES.
The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.
Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.
Mr. J. PATTEN-MACDOUGALL, C.B.
Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.

The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.
The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.
Mrs. BERNARD BOSANQUET.
Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
Mr. FRANCIS CHANDLER.
The Right Rev. The Lord BISHOP of Ross.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).
Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. JOHN WYCLIFFE WILSON, called; and Examined.

Mr. J. W. Wilson.
12 Feb. 1907.

40081. (Chairman.) You have been a member of the Sheffield Board of Guardians for nearly thirty years, I think?—It is nearly twenty-nine really, if I leave out a year when I was out.

40082. You are now the Chairman?—Yes.

40083. For how many years have you been Chairman?—For about eleven, I think it is.

40084. You are an Alderman of Sheffield, and past Lord Mayor of that city?—Yes.

40085. You have prepared a statement for us, I understand, which, following our usual practice, we can take as your evidence in-chief, if you will hand it in?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following statement.)

1. There are two special matters in connection with which the Sheffield Union has taken what may be called pioneer action, namely "Character Classification" and "Scattered Homes for Children."

2. A good many years ago, some members of our Board Character became very much impressed with the hardship inflicted Classification on the respectable and deserving poor by causing them of workhouse to associate in the workhouse with the profane and dis- inmates at solute characters who generally form the majority in such Sheffield. institutions, and a very complete and successful plan has been devised to remedy the evil.

Character
Classification of workhouse inmates at
Sheffield.

3. By careful investigation of the antecedents of applicants for relief, through the relieving officers, such applicants are divided into four classes A, B, C, and D—

A. comprises those of unblemished character who have been long resident in the union without receiving relief.

B. All other persons of distinctly good character, but who are not equal to A.

C. comprises those who are neither distinctly good nor distinctly bad, and also persons of whose character little or nothing is known.

This may be called the normal class, or the residuum after sorting out those who are entitled to rank higher or lower respectively.

D. which is unfortunately far the largest class, comprises all whose character is distinctly bad.

4. The classification is reviewed by the Classification Committee from time to time, and individuals are put higher or lower as may appear desirable.

5. Treatment of the different Classes :—

Class C., the normal class, are treated as all were before Character Classification was introduced.

Class D. have less comfortable wards, harder work, shabbier clothing and less appetising food.

Class B. have better furnished and appointed wards, superior clothing, not uniform, more freedom to go outside the departmental airing yards and even outside the workhouse precincts, more appetising food, and more consideration generally.

Class A. have all the same advantages as B. Indeed, they are in no way separated except so far that they are eligible to be housed in the Aged People's Cottages, residence in which is much appreciated.

These cottages consist of eight single-roomed dwellings, connected by a corridor with one another and with the caretaker's residence. Each is constructed to house a married couple, or two men or two women as the case may be.

Character
Classification more important than Age Classification.

6. Believing, as I do, that Character Classification is much more important than the mere Age Classification as laid down in Art. 98 of the Consolidated Order 1847, it would appear desirable that in any fresh Consolidated Order the conditions in the Article referred to should be made less stringent. It may be possible in large workhouses to carry out a combination of both systems, but in small workhouses some commingling of ages should be permissible.

Food for more varied dietary for certain classes of workhouse
inmates.

7. I have referred above to more or less appetising food. We have had some difficulty in carrying this out owing to the restrictions the Local Government Board place on the Dietary, holding, as they do, that all should have good and sufficient food and none more than that. Nevertheless, it appears to me that a little more liberty should be given to the guardians, so that while we give sufficient wholesome food to all, we should be free to give more variety or more appetising food (not necessarily more expensive) to the better classes.

Results of aged people's cottages at
Sheffield.

8. The erection of the Aged People's Cottages was experimental, and they have no doubt given much satisfaction and happiness to a number of deserving old people who have in succession occupied them. Still, they are not essential to the system, and the simple division into good, bad and indifferent, with treatment differentiated, would perhaps in most cases suffice.

9. As these cottages, except for married couples, are I believe unique, it is to be hoped the Commissioners will see them, even though they do not include among their recommendations the erection of similar ones elsewhere.

Scattered
children's homes at
Sheffield.

10. As I was the first person to conceive the idea of these scattered, or isolated homes as we called them in the first instance, and as the Sheffield Board was the first to obtain permission from the Local Government Board to put the system into operation, I may be permitted to call the Commissioners' attention to the system established here.

11. The original and still the main object of the scheme is to secure for all the children as many of the advantages as possible both of Boarding Out and the Cottage Homes Village, with a minimum of their risks.

12. Our first homes were opened in 1893, so that the experimental period has passed, and the utility of the plan is fully established.

Mr. J. W.
Wilson.

12 Feb. 1907.

13. It seems right to point out that being pioneers, to some extent we groped in the dark and naturally made mistakes. In the light of experience, we are of opinion that our Headquarters Homes were unnecessarily large and expensive, that fifteen was too large a number to fix as the minimum number of children to be accommodated in each Home, and that having an even larger number of children, as we still have in some of the Homes, is distinctly undesirable.

14. As we have recently erected several pairs of new homes on a carefully considered plan that provides a maximum of accommodation (room for 11 children in each) at a minimum of cost, I should like to direct the Commissioners' attention, when they visit Sheffield, especially to these and also to the general system on which the Homes are worked.

15. The way in which the system has spread throughout the country seems to indicate that it commends itself to the judgment of the more thoughtful and therefore more progressive Boards.

16. I claim for it and for the children brought up under it, inter alia, the following advantages :—

Advantages of Scattered Homes for Poor Law
children.

(a) The system, as we work it, is applicable to all the children and not only to orphans, deserted or adopted, as in the case of Boarding Out.

(b) That it is applicable in both large and small unions :

(1) In large unions it may be arranged, as with us, that the children never enter the workhouse precincts, thereby securing an additional advantage.

(2) In small unions, where only a very few cottages may be required, it may be necessary to have it administered from the Workhouse, or by an outside officer performing other duties also.

(c) The children are distributed among the non-pauper population in a way that is impossible in a district school or Cottage Homes Village.

(d) They attend day and Sunday schools, churches and chapels, week-day meetings and entertainments, etc. in numbers sufficiently small to prevent their being specially noticeable.

(For example, in Sheffield they mostly attend the large Council schools, where, being distributed among the different departments and standards, their proportion in each class to the non-pauper children is inappreciable.)

(e) They make friends with their non-pauper schoolfellows and their individuality is developed, and so they do not become the little machines that the units in a large institution frequently do.

(f) By their freedom in going to and from School, etc. without uniform and unattended, they become prepared for independence in after life.

(g) While still under the eye of the Superintendent and Matron and the Guardians, they live very much the life, both in and out of their Homes, of the children of the respectable working classes.

(h) They compete, both in lessons and games, with their non-pauper companions and schoolfellows, and obtain a very fair proportion of prizes and certificates.

(i) They escape the danger of petty tyranny if unfortunately "boarded out" in unsuitable homes, and of associating only with other pauper children, as is generally the case in a "Cottage Homes Village."

17. Placing out the Boys. It having become increasingly difficult to obtain positions as indoor apprentices for our boys, we have sent a number of them as outdoor apprentices to different trades in the town, and for their advantage have established a Boys' Working Home at Sheffield.

18. The boys reside in this Home under the care of a foster father and mother. They pay their wages towards the maintenance of the home and receive a reasonable amount of pocket-money, part of which they are at liberty to spend and the other part is banked. At the present time we have boys apprenticed to the following trades :— butcher (1), plumber (1), baker (2), barber (2), shoemaker (1). One boy is assisting the Homes' tailor and learning the trade. Two work as errand and office boys respectively with firms in the town, while one boy acts as house boy in the Home.

- Mr. J. W. Wilson. 19. In placing out the Girls, the following is our procedure :—
- 12 Feb. 1907. They receive a certain amount of training after leaving school, in their own Homes, and are then handed over to a Ladies' Committee in connection with a Voluntary Home, the ladies of the Home undertaking to train them for three months at 6s. per week, and then to find them suitable places and to look after them until they reach the age of twenty.
- Method of training and placing Poor Law girls.
- Careful administration of out-relief at Sheffield and its results.
20. Outdoor versus Indoor Relief.—Prior to the year 1886, the Sheffield Board administered out-relief with a very free hand, but in that year a system of much more careful inquiry was instituted, and both indoor and outdoor relief was very largely reduced.
21. The principle acted upon since then has generally been to give outdoor relief wherever after careful inquiry the case is found to be deserving, and where the home is satisfactory, and only to send into the workhouse those cases where these conditions do not obtain. This method of discrimination probably accounts for the small proportion of classes A and B (see Character Classification ante) found in the House.
22. I am strongly of opinion that this is the right way to act, that is, in brief, to ascertain the character of the people by exhaustive inquiry rather than by ruthlessly applying the "Workhouse Test."
- Difficulty of securing candidates at guardians' elections and motives of candidates.
23. Classes of Persons seeking Election as Guardians.—The securing of suitable candidates to be elected as guardians is exceedingly difficult, as the time occupied in the proper discharge of the duties is very considerable. No doubt there are some who offer themselves from a sincere desire to do useful public service. There are others who look to it as a stepping-stone to the City Council, or take it up from a little personal ambition.
- Objections to transferring guardians' duties to town councils.
24. I regret that I do not see my way to make any suggestion as to what alterations in the law would lead to the office being more readily accepted, but from local knowledge of the circumstances attending the handing over of the work of the School Boards to a Committee selected by the City Council, I am perfectly satisfied that matters would not be mended, but quite the reverse, were the duties of guardians similarly transferred. The City Council has already too many diverse interests devolving upon it, and it is much better that persons who have to do the Poor Law work should be specially elected for the purpose. The City Council Committees have been distinctly weakened by the withdrawal of some of the members who now devote their energies principally to education, and I am satisfied that the same thing would operate if the Poor Law were handed over to the Council.
- Need for (1) simpler system of book-keeping; (2) more elasticity in Poor Law Orders; (3) more freedom from Local Government Board control in matters of detail.
25. I am disposed to believe that a little less detailed dictation from the Local Government Board, thus making the guardians realise the importance and responsibility of their office, would tend gradually to an improvement in the tone and status of the members.
26. Reform in Law or Practice Suggested by Experience.—Beyond what is implied in my previous remarks, I have little to add. If a system of book-keeping could be introduced less voluminous and intricate; if the Orders generally could be made more elastic; if the correspondence with the Local Government Board could be curtailed and the replies from that body sent more promptly; and if the guardians could be allowed a little more freedom in their control over officers and in their expenditure in certain directions, I think a good deal of friction would be avoided and improved administration result.
- ADDITIONAL NOTES.*
- DESIRABLE ALTERATIONS IN THE POOR LAW, OR "ORDERS."
- Need for revision and codification of existing Statutes and Orders.
27. The complete Revision and Codification of the Statutes, including the repeal of all the old laws.
- The more general and elastic this Act can be drawn, the better, leaving all details and rules to be dealt with by the central authority by one comprehensive General Consolidated Order and such subsequent General or Local Orders as may be found necessary. This last-named General Consolidated Order should supersede all General Orders now in existence.
- If the new Poor Law is made sufficiently general and elastic, it may last as long as the original Act of 1834 has done.
28. Destitution should not be a necessary preliminary condition entitling to relief.
- Legally, as I understand it, no person is entitled to receive relief under the Poor Law unless absolutely destitute. In a revised Poor Law a less severe and more explanatory definition of claim for relief should be introduced.
- No doubt in a large number of unions the absence of a sufficient income to procure the necessities of life is the interpretation put upon the term "destitution." But, on the other hand, some Poor Law administrators act on the strict letter of the law and apply the "workhouse test" where a kindlier and more economical treatment would be advisable. For example, some guardians would require an applicant's house to be stripped not only of luxuries but of many comforts before out-door relief would be granted. I believe real economy would be effected by beginning to relieve needy cases (widows and aged persons in particular) before they reach a condition of complete destitution or have lost their health by undue privation.
- Powers should be granted to enable guardians to prevent pauperism, and not only to deal with it when it becomes an accomplished fact.
- I believe it will be very desirable to establish some machinery whereby persons in case of temporary distress owing to lack of employment or sickness or other sufficient genuine cause, might be kept from becoming permanent paupers.
- Guardians should have power to relieve persons not absolutely destitute.
- Guardians should have power to "prevent" pauperism.
29. The law of Settlement and Removal should be either abolished or greatly amended and simplified. If not abolished, improvements might be made in regard to the removal to Scotland and Ireland of paupers having their settlement in those countries, and, further, it should be made quite clear what is to be done with paupers who are settled in a union that has been divided since the settlement was acquired.
- Need for reform of settlement and removal.
30. The Vagrancy Laws should be amended in order :—
- (a) To differentiate between the able-bodied searcher for employment and the habitual tramp.
- (b) To assist the searcher for employment in accomplishing his quest.
- (c) To drive the habitual tramp off the road, with power to the guardians or police to detain him and remove him to suitable quarters in a labour colony or otherwise.
- (d) To safeguard the interests of the children of vagrants through powers of detention and compulsory education.
- Proposed amendment of Vagrancy Laws.
31. Classification in Workhouses.—Considerable relaxation is desirable in the rules as set forth in Art. 98 and 99 of the General Consolidated Order, July 24th, 1847), with a view to permit of inmates being classified more on the grounds of character and conduct and less on age and physical condition. In the case of inmates of good character and conduct, there would appear to be positive advantage in the co-mingling of younger persons (not children) with the aged and somewhat infirm. The younger persons would often cheer and assist the older. Wide latitude to guardians in this respect would be desirable.
- Advantages of character classification over age classification of workhouse inmates.
32. Relaxation in the dietary rules will also be desirable, so that the well-behaved and deserving may have more varied and appetising food than the idle and dissolute. At present, hard and fast lines are drawn, founded only on age and physical condition. Guardians should have some latitude in this matter also.
- Need for more varied dietary for certain classes of workhouse inmates.
- In Sheffield we find great benefit from our system of character classification, but have been not a little hampered by the rules referred to in this and the preceding paragraph.
33. Children should be absolutely excluded from work-houses.—At one time it seemed impossible for this to be done in case of very small numbers of children, but under the Scattered Homes System and with some extension of the Boarding-Out Orders, no serious difficulty need be experienced.
- Suggestion to exclude children from work-houses.

* These notes were submitted in January, 1906, in response to the request for a Statement pointing out any serious defects which, in the opinion of Chairmen of Boards of Guardians, exist in the present Poor Law system, and the remedies they would propose.

Objection to applying epithet "pauper" to Poor Law children.

Advantage of scattered homes over boarding-out system.

Need for powers to detain dissolute, immoral and feeble-minded persons.

Workhouse accounts: need for simpler system, etc.

Need for revision of grants in aid of officers' salaries and gratuities, etc.

Proposed extension of principle of exemption from disfranchisement.

Suggested greater discretion to district auditors.

Travelling expenses of guardians and clerks.

Advantages of guardians having greater freedom from Local Government Board control in matters of detail.

Undesirability of transferring guardians' duties to a propter hoc authority.

34. Boarding-out of Pauper Children. (N.B.—I use the word "pauper" to make my meaning clear, but I hope to see the time when it will be eliminated from all official documents referring to children.)

I am not favourable to any wide extension of this system unless under much closer supervision than at present, and believe that, generally speaking, the system of scattered homes under the immediate superintendence of the guardians and their officials is a wiser arrangement.

35. Further powers of detention are required for several classes in addition to the vagrants already referred to in paragraph 4:—

(a) For dissolute and immoral persons who should not be allowed to go in and out of the workhouse as often as they like. This should include unmarried young women who come into the lying-in-wards, especially if they come more than once.

(b) Feeble-minded persons of either sex, who are liable to become parents of children still more unfit.

(N.B.—The Report of the Commission on the Feeble-minded, now sitting, should be invaluable in regard to this matter.)

36. Workhouse Accounts.—These, at present, are of an exceedingly complicated character, involving a large amount of clerical labour, which labour has been recently seriously increased by the amended dietaries prescribed. Some considerable simplification of this system should be possible, whereby a smaller number of books would be necessary and less clerking, with a corresponding saving in expenditure. If the accounts were closed once instead of twice a year, some further saving of labour and expense would be effected and the duties of the auditor would be lightened.

37. County Council Grants in Respect of Officers' Salaries are paid on figures which were fixed in 1888. These figures should be revised periodically, say once in three or at most five years.

38. Four Shilling Grant in Respect of Lunatics.—This grant is only made for such lunatics, etc., as are confined in county asylums, while unions where provision is made for such in their own workhouses receive no benefit.

All pauper lunatics, etc., should either be placed under the care of the county council or else the unions where suitable provision is made for them should receive a similar grant.

Great injustice is done to certain unions by the present arrangement.

39. Medical Relief Disqualification Removal Act.—Except in a few isolated instances, this Act is held to exempt from disfranchisement only persons receiving outdoor medical relief, while voters forced by sickness to claim temporary admittance to a workhouse hospital lose their votes. It would be highly desirable that those remaining in the workhouse only during temporary sickness should not be thereby disfranchised.

40. District Auditors should be permitted to exercise more discretion with regard to allowing or disallowing certain payments, so that guardians need not be surcharged for any bona-fide and evidently useful expenditure. Much irritating and needless correspondence would also be prevented.

41. Travelling Expenses.—Guardians and clerks should be allowed reasonable expenses of conveyance to institutions within the union area or when engaged in Poor Law business.

42. Local Government Board Control.—I am of opinion that considerable advantage would result from giving local elected guardians wider powers within clearly defined limits. The constant necessity to report on, or to ask leave concerning, comparatively trifling matters involves an enormous amount of correspondence from which it will be most desirable that both the Local Government Board and the union clerks should be relieved.

Besides this, the minute control of the Local Government Board over boards locally elected, who in most cases are far better posted up with regard to the details, naturally causes irritation and interferes with those cordial relations which should exist between the central and the local bodies.

43. Boards of Guardians.—Lastly, and most important of all, I believe it would be most undesirable that the powers and duties of guardians of the poor should be transferred to any other body. I believe that they will be much more efficiently exercised by a body specially elected for the purpose than by a Committee of a county or district council. Those councils are elected for a variety of purposes connected with highways, sanitation and such matters, and individuals elected to attend to these will not necessarily be at all suitable Poor Law administrators. As a member of our own Corporation, I have observed many disadvantages in the handing over to a committee formed principally of councillors, of the duties of the late School Board, and believe that the proper work of the Corporation is less efficiently managed in consequence.

40086. (Chairman.) Have you got the time-table of your board with you?—I am afraid not. We have a kind of diary, giving a list of our meetings.

40087. You have a Relief Committee, I think, which meets on most days in the week?—We have administering six Relief Committees, two sitting on the Tuesday, and relief at one on each of the other days up to and including Friday. Sheffield. I believe you had the pleasure or discomfort—I will not say which—of sitting on one of them last Monday.

40088. I saw the time-table, and I assume that if the guardians comply with it, and do their duty, the work must occupy a great deal of their time in the week?—It occupies a very great deal of time. Then there are the fortnightly meetings, there is almost weekly a committee, then there are five Visiting Committees; and besides those there are a number of special and extra committees on finance and other things, meeting at longer intervals.

40089. Following that point up, I understand that you are strongly averse to transferring the administration to the Poor Laws to the City Council, or to any body which is not directly elected for Poor Law purposes?—Yes. guardians' duties to a propter hoc authority.

40090. I assume that one of your objections would be that it would not be possible for the City Council to give the time and attention to Poor Law purposes which is required?—I think it would not. I think if members of the City Council were put on a Poor Law Committee, of the council we will say, they would have to give their whole time to Poor Law work, and they would not be of any use for any other part of the council's business. You would either have to have a very large council in order to do that, or else you would impoverish the other departments of the council's work.

40091. I suppose the work that you, with your great experience, would say is by far the most difficult that a guardian has to do, is the work of sitting on out-relief committees, and deciding on the different cases which come up?—I think so. There are a great many difficulties in the other departments, even with the children, and so on; very often very difficult questions arise on how to treat the children, whether to adopt or not. But still, the Relief Committee is certainly the bottom of it all.

40092. Would you say that the very essence of good Poor Law administration was making detailed and close investigation in each case?—Yes. I think everything depends on the first inquiries, and the thoroughness of those inquiries which are made by the officers, and on the understanding of them by the committees, in order that the committees may know how to deal with the different cases.

40093. The committees really have to act in a judicial capacity, do they not?—Very much so.

40094. In your judgment, I gather that it would be detrimental to attempt to transfer this class of work to people who were untrained or unaccustomed to it?—I think so—very much indeed.

40095. Therefore, whatever changes are made in the law, you would be in favour of a body being elected for the special purpose of administering the Poor Laws?—Very much so indeed; I very strongly feel that. I think that the effect of the Education Act in putting under the council the matter of education has drawn away many councillors and aldermen from work in which they were exceedingly useful in order that they might devote themselves entirely to education. I think that has been a cause of weakness. We had fifteen extra people specially at work on this subject before; now, the same number

Mr. J. W. Wilson.

12 Feb. 1907.

Mr. J. W.
Wilson.

12 Feb. 1907.

of people have to be taken out of the council to do the work of those extra fifteen, which I think is a very great disadvantage. I have seen it personally. Some of the members who were very useful in particular committees of the council, are now of no use in those committees, because they have to give their whole time to the education question.

40096. Therefore, you would argue from that, I take it, that to add another duty of a very special and onerous character on to the council would result in a still further abstraction of useful members from the general work of the council?—I think it would be a desperate mistake. That is my opinion, and I am both on the council and on the guardians.

40097. Coming now to some of the characteristics of your administration, I think you adopted some years ago a system of character classification, did you not?—Yes, we did.

System of character
classification
at Sheffield.

40098. Have you found that that has worked well?—Very well indeed, I think.

40099. Your classification applies not only to the in-door inmates, but also to recipients of out-door relief, I understand?—Yes, it does. I have not seen so much of it personally in the out-door department, but I know of course that the scale of relief there is in accordance with character.

Classification of indoor paupers.

40100. As regards in-door relief, I assume that the master or some authority has the power of putting persons back from Class A. or Class B. if they misconduct themselves?—The master does it temporarily, but that has to be confirmed by the Classification Committee which meets once in five weeks. I do not think they are ever put forward without the Committee doing it.

40101. Is the putting back a sort of punishment which is much felt by the person to whom it is applied?—Yes, it is very much felt in many cases.

40102. I presume that this classification allows order and discipline to be easily maintained?—Yes, I think so. It helps the discipline very much.

40103. Would you say that it rather raised the standard of workhouse life?—Very much so indeed, as far as the better classes are concerned. They are very happy.

40104. What is the main characteristic of Class A. when in the workhouse? They have a much greater extension of personal liberty, and they are allowed to go out very frequently, are they not?—Yes.

40105. Are they allowed to go out every day?—The idea is that they shall have a card which they can show at the gate, and be able to go out whenever they want to. We have very large grounds attached to the workhouse, and most of these old people do not want to go further than to have a walk round the grounds. The door of the particular airing grounds for Classes A. and B. is supposed to be open, so that they can go beyond if they like. The cottages are quite outside the workhouse wall, and the inmates of those are, therefore, quite free.

40106. Then the C. Class; would they have equal liberty to go out?—No.

40107. In what way would their liberty be restricted?—They would go out on leave at certain specified intervals.

40108. I assume that if a person in Class C. behaves well, and does not abuse his privileges of leave and so on, he would have a chance of getting up into a higher class?—Yes, he would. I think we might improve this arrangement. I think we might regularly have a roll call of those in each class and consider whether they should go up or down. The idea of it is that they should go up. At the same time we depend very much more on their antecedents and character before they come into the workhouse than on their conduct in the workhouse itself. I remember Major Ballantine, the master of the Manchester workhouse, saying that some individuals who were very good in their conduct in the workhouse, he had sometimes found when outside the workhouse using bad language and altogether showing that they were not really at all satisfactory. Therefore, I think it is much better to depend on the inquiries we make as to their previous character than on their conduct in the workhouse. Still, I would give them a chance of getting up into a higher class.

40109. Let us follow up that idea and assume that a person of good character came for relief and was put into the workhouse; would you put him into Class A.?—We should put him into Class B. We should only put them into Class A. if they were of very specially good character and had been in the union a certain length of time. System of character classification at Sheffield.

40110. If previous character is the foundation of the original classification, I assume conduct in the workhouse is the test as to whether they are to be moved up or down from the class into which they are first put?—Yes, that is so.

40111. Are many moved up from their original class?—No, I do not think there are very many. I think, as a rule, they stay in the place where they were first put. Still there are a few changes made every meeting.

40112. To put it in other words, you find that the classification you make before they come into the workhouse is sustained by the conduct of the individual in the workhouse?—Generally, that is so.

40113. Now as regards out-door relief, you classify that too, and give a different allowance, do you not?—Yes. The maximum that the District Relief Committees are able to give without referring to the general Out-relief Committee or to the board, varies up to 5s. in Class A.; Classification up to 4s. in Class B.; and up to a lower figure in Class C. of outdoor. But we do not always give the A's or B's the maximum paupers. amount if their circumstances do not require it.

40114. What is the theory underlying that? Is it that you give out-door relief in order to provide persons who are otherwise destitute with what you believe to be the necessaries of life?—Yes.

40115. Then what is the principle on which you give more than that to the well-conducted person?—I do not know that I can say that there is any theory which one can put forward, only that very often the more indifferent classes are hiding something from us, and very often they have some other means of livelihood that we do not get to know of. Generally, with the best class, we have every reason to believe them to be perfectly honest in their statements. So that there is a certain reason in it from that point of view. I have referred, I think, in some part of my statement to the position of the Local Government Board with regard to dietary—that all must have enough and none ought to have too much; and yet that we want to give rather a better dietary to the better classes, or a more appetising dietary than we give to the lower classes, and we think it is worth while to do so. Still, that does not necessarily mean more money.

40116. The statement you make in Paragraph 7 refers to the indoor paupers, does it not?—Yes, but still the same principle rather applies to outdoor relief.

40117. Is the supposition that the lower classes of applicants have some resources behind them sustained by subsequent experience as a rule?—I do not know, and I could not press that point very far. There is no doubt that we do find out from time to time that we are imposed upon, and it is likely that we are more imposed upon by the people of the worst character.

40118. But the supposition is that the members of Class A. have told the whole truth?—Yes.

40119. You, I think, were rather the fathers in that part of Yorkshire, of the scattered homes system?—Yes, we began it. Success of Sheffield scattered homes for pauper children.

40120. Has it been satisfactory in every respect?—Yes, I think so in every respect. We do not profess to turn out all good people from it; there are some who, unfortunately, are bad. But we often wonder that they turn out as well as they do because of the terrible bringings up that some of them have had.

40121. You have now been able to test the results as regards those who have passed away from these homes, and, as I understand, you are fairly satisfied with them?—Yes, we are, I think they have done a great deal better than we were able to do with the same class previously, there is no doubt about that.

40122. Previously, you had a school in the workhouse for the children, I think?—Yes, we had a school in the foster-workhouse when first I was on the board and indeed, until thirteen years ago. Selection of mothers and the proper number of children to each foster mother.

40123. Have you much difficulty in getting proper mothers for these homes?—No. We take a great deal of pains about it. We always go to visit them and so mother.

Selection of foster-mothers and the proper number of children to each foster-mother.

on before we engage them, and so make sure we have got the right sort. We generally have quite as many applicants of a suitable character as we have vacancies.

40124. I gather that your experience points to eleven children as being about the proper number?—We did fix it at twelve and we drew up a plan for a home on that basis, but the Local Government Board said there was only room for eleven in that, and, therefore, we went to eleven. But if we were pressed at any time, we should put another in and report it weekly, I suppose. We got the idea of the smaller number from Bradford. They were going in for eight at that time, but we thought that was going a little bit too far, so we fixed it at twelve; some wanted ten; and some wanted twelve, but twelve was carried though, and these homes were built and certified for eleven. We generally only put ten into them unless under an emergency.

40125. Are all your children now in these scattered homes?—They are all at head-quarters or in the scattered homes.

Relative cost of scattered homes and boarding-out: advantages of former over latter.

40126. How does the cost of scattered homes compare with, say, boarding out?—Is it much heavier?—Yes, it would be more expensive than boarding out, but boarding out, of course, is not applicable to nearly all the children. I think the scattered home system has very great, and very many advantages over the boarding out system. I have mentioned a number of the advantages that we claim for it in my statement, but one of the advantages that I have not mentioned is that the scattered home system is not open to abuse to the same extent that other systems are. The children in these scattered homes go to both day and Sunday schools, walking backwards and forwards with their companions, and so on, so that if they are ill-treated they can tell of it at once to somebody outside, and it will get to be known. In a village where they do not go outside at all, I think there is very much more room for ill-treatment than there is in our homes; and of course in boarding-out, when they are only visited quarterly or something of that sort, there is a great deal of room for abuse.

boarding-out within and without the union at Sheffield.

40127. Have you any children boarded out now?—Yes. We have a few boarded out within the union, and quite a number, thirty or forty I think, outside the union in different country districts.

40128. I suppose your experience as regards the boarding-out system would point to its having limitations, and to the necessity of its being very strictly supervised?—I think so indeed. I should not at all like to see it extended unless the supervision could become more thorough.

40129. Is your supervision of children boarded out within the union effective, do you think?—I think it is fairly effective, but we have not found that we get really satisfactory homes within the union, and so we much prefer to keep the children in our own homes under our own eyes. The fact is we have not boarded out any within the union for a considerable time, and those that have been boarded out have most of them grown out of it and are now over age.

poor Law girls placed in domestic service.

40130. Now as regards the girls, they are mainly placed out as domestic servants, are they not?—Almost entirely. There have been certain cases where the children were cripples, or where there was some defect in health, and some of these cases we have sent to the Flower Girls' Mission in London, and they have been taken in by Mr. Groom to be taught artificial flower-making.

difficulty of placing boys in indoor apprentices.

40131. And as regards the boys, I think you found it very difficult to get them placed as indoor apprentices?—Very difficult indeed, except as colliers. We can get any number of them out as colliers. But we do not want to send them all to that occupation.

40132. What do they do as collier boys?—I suppose the first thing they do is to drive a pony in the pit.

40133. They do not pull the trucks then?—No, I think not. I think they drive a pony or do work of that sort.

40134. I am afraid I am rather ignorant, but what is the difference in a trade between an indoor apprentice and an outdoor apprentice?—An outdoor apprentice is one who is apprenticed to the trade, but does not live in the master's house.

40135. But the work is the same in both cases, is it?—Yes.

40133. You have established a working boys' home for these out-apprentices, have you not?—Yes. That is comparatively new, and we can scarcely have had sufficient experience to judge much of its success.

40137. We have visited one of these homes. You have a system, I think, by which the wages are paid to the matron, or whoever is looking after the home?—Yes.

40138. And a certain allowance is given to the boys for pocket money?—Yes, and something is put into the bank.

40139. That was not apparent from the accounts that we saw, because the money was stated to be handed over to the guardians. What sort of proportion of their wages do you put into the bank?—No definite proportion of wages is banked, but the boys are encouraged to deposit a part of their pocket money. I find little is done except by those who receive a good many "tips." The guardians are already considering this question. The witness subsequently sent the following explanation:—

In reference to this, I have made careful enquiry, and find that in almost every case some money has been deposited, but the amounts are not, I think, as large as they ought to be, and the matter has already been taken up by the guardians.

40140. I suppose that what they give to the matron does not cover the cost of their maintenance?—No, it does not cover that. When their wages have got to the extent that they are able to cover the cost, we should say that then it was time for them to find their own lodgings.

40141. The principle which seems to govern your administration is to try and ascertain the character of the people by exhaustive enquiries rather than by merely applying the workhouse test?—That is so. We are very much against applying the workhouse test, especially if the people have any furniture or anything of that sort or any place to live in; because when once the workhouse test has been applied, the probability is that they will have to stay there if they accept it. No doubt in certain cases we should save funds, because people would not go into the workhouse, as they would rather live a miserable existence outside.

40142. In your system, the workhouse is the last resort?—Quite so. If their character is distinctly bad, we should give them a workhouse order. I do not think we have an allowance for Class D, and if the people in Class D apply for relief, I think they would be offered the workhouse.

40143. Have you sufficient officers to be able to ascertain what is the character of the dwelling and of the surroundings of the people to whom you give this out-relief?—Yes, I think so. We attach a great deal of importance to those officers, and we have increased their number lately from five to six. Then we have a superintendent of out-relief and a cross visitor with an assistant. They visit all the new cases and occasionally the old ones. Then the relieving officer must visit every case at least once in three months, as we only make the orders for thirteen or fourteen weeks.

40144. I suppose you occasionally have to remove into the workhouse people whose surroundings are unhealthy and insanitary?—Yes, we should not give them out-relief. Then, for instance, an old person who seemed very miserable and unhappy with a great number of grandchildren about her we might think that she would enjoy the quiet of the workhouse, and we might give her a workhouse order.

40145. As regards the general duties of guardians, you make various suggestions, but I suppose what you would really like is a codification and simplification of the law?—Yes. I mention that in the first part of my additional notes. There should be a new law, an elastic law, and then a general order (subject to modification) which should include the old Consolidated General Order and all the others that have been made since.

40146. We have had some evidence from local administrators of the Poor Law that they think boards of guardians have got almost too great optional powers in certain directions, but that boards of guardians were interfered with too much in small details by the Local Government Board. I see you would like the orders to be even more elastic than they are?—I should; I think in many cases it would be very desirable. I think in matters of expenditure that perhaps there should not be very much more elasticity, but in little matters of trifling arrangements and so on it seems to me a great pity that we should have to refer to the Local Government Board. I believe we should get better guardians if they

Mr. J. W. Wilson.

12 Feb. 1907.

Home for pauper out-door apprentices at Sheffield.

Poor relief principles at Sheffield.

Sufficiency and method of inspection of out-relief cases at Sheffield.

Removal to out-relief of persons living under insanitary conditions.

Need for revision and codification of Poor Law Statutes and Orders.

Need for greater freedom from Local Government Board control in matters of detail.

- Mr. J. W. Wilson. did not feel themselves to be in quite such tight leading strings.
- 12 Feb. 1907. 40147. Then you would define more clearly the principles of the administration of the Poor Law?—Yes.
- Need for more clearly defined Poor Law principles. 40148. But you would not wish to make those more elastic?—No, not the general principles, I think.
40149. But in the administrative details arising out of their application you think more option should be given to guardians than they at present possess?—Yes.
- Need for guardians having greater freedom from Local Government Board control in matters of detail. 40150. (Sir Samuel Provis.) What other sort of details have you in your mind in which you think the guardians are unduly interfered with?—I think they have to report a very great many things to the Local Government Board, and especially they have to ask permission about a great many things where they might be left a little bit more to their own discretion.
40151. Have you got classes of things in your own mind in which you think greater freedom might be given to the guardians?—There is one thing which our clerk has suggested. We can send children to certified homes without any inquiry of the Local Government Board, but if we know of some good home that is suitable for the particular character and class of child we have to deal with it is necessary for us to apply specially to the Local Government Board for permission to send the child there and to pay for the child.
40152. Is that not quite right? The object of having certified schools is that it can be ascertained that the schools are suitable for these children to be sent to; and if the guardians could send to places that were not certified there would be no use in having certified schools, would there?—There is a great deal to be said for that view I quite admit, and I do not know that I should press that point further. Personally, I have got on exceedingly well in my administration with the Local Government Board, and I have generally found them exceedingly ready to help things forward. But we thought at the beginning of our scattered homes system that they were rather conservative in their ideas.
40153. It was a new experiment then, was it not?—Yes, it was a new experiment. We are getting on very well now, and the thing has taken on thoroughly.
- The proper number of children for a scattered home foster mother. 40154. With regard to those scattered homes, are you satisfied that fifteen children are too many for one foster-mother?—Yes, I think so. I think she must certainly have some assistance in the way of a charwoman or something like that, unless she happens to have several older girls, which generally she has not. We have rather a difficulty in having in each home one girl who has left school.
- Character classification as affecting workhouse accommodation. 40155. With regard to classification, you classify according to character I understand?—Yes.
40156. Have you found that that has made a considerable demand on your space?—It does in some cases. It might need some amount of structural alteration and so on in some places to do it, because there might be more variation in the inmates.
40157. Is your workhouse very large?—It is built for about 1,800 I think.
40158. Having a building as large as that would facilitate your making those divisions, I suppose, would it not?—Just at present in regard to the men in Class A and Class B, the better class men, we have not a day-room which is really small enough for them, and they are occupying a larger room than they need do. We have got a scheme in view which will probably meet that case. Of course that room might be divided.
40159. Was it the case that you had more people in the workhouse before you adopted this plan, or were you able at once to provide in this way for the usual number?—When first we began with the classification we were so crowded that we could only imperfectly carry it out; but we made some extensions, and I think now we are not quite as full as we were at that time.
- Situation, etc., of aged people's cottages at Sheffield. 40160. I think you said your cottages for the aged are outside the workhouse walls?—Yes, they are.
40161. Does the master look after them, or do they have a separate person to look after them?—The master looks after them. It is really a part of the workhouse, but they have a separate entrance. There is a way between, but it is kept locked. There is an outside gate which is kept open for them to go in and out.
40162. Do they have their meals in the workhouse?—No they have their meals in their own rooms.
40163. (Miss Hill.) With regard to your objection to the idea of transferring the Poor Law work to the municipality, do you think it would lose in dignity if it were done by a committee rather than by the main body?—Yes, I think it would. But I think the main objection is that it would require such a very large council to be able to pick out of it a committee to do the guardians' work that it would make the council unmanageable.
40164. At the time of election, candidates would not know really whether they would be undertaking Poor Law work or other work?—No, they would not at all.
40165. Therefore, those people who are especially interested in Poor Law work might hesitate to come forward, not knowing perhaps what would be the work which would be delegated to them?—Quite so. Of course they might have such questions as drainage referred to them which they would know nothing at all about.
40166. The experience that would be required for drainage and road and assessment work would be rather different to that which is needed for Poor Law work?—Yes, I should think so.
40167. Therefore, you think there should be a special body for Poor Law purposes?—Yes, I think that is most important.
40168. And you think that the Poor Law work is quite enough to occupy their time?—Quite.
40169. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) In answer to the Chairman you said that the cost of the scattered homes system was considerably greater than that of boarding-out. Can you give us any figures as regards that?—Can you say, for instance, what is the cost of the scattered homes system per head?—The total cost is something like 10s. or 11s. per week, including capital charges, officers, and everything.
40170. 10s. per head per week?—Yes.
40171. (Mr. Phelps.) You classify your outdoor relief cases, I think you say?—Yes; partly so that if they have to go into the house we may know which class they are on. It is done for the other purpose too.
40172. With regard to the best class of those, should you be in favour of removing the disfranchisement?—Yes. I think that would be a very good thing indeed—if it could be done in regard to the highest class A, and class B perhaps.
40173. What kind of test do you use in classifying applicants for outdoor relief?—It is a character test—whether they drink, for instance. The question of providence is supposed to have some influence on it, but you can never judge very much from that, because there are a great many people who have never had an opportunity of saving anything.
40174. Your test is more negative than positive, then?—It is their general character, their reputation in the neighbourhood where they live, and so on that we go by.
40175. With regard to the best class, do you co-operate charitable funds or charitable bodies at all?—We have not had any Charity Organisation in Sheffield and no public body of that sort with whom we exactly could co-operate; but we are just now establishing a Guild of Help in Sheffield, and we anticipate a good deal of co-operation.
40176. What direction would that take?—That will divide the city into a very large number of small districts, with a helper or a friend in each to look after the people and to try to keep them from coming to pauperism.
40177. Would that lighten your work, do you think?—I hope that there would be a great number that would apply to that institution and would be visited and helped in some way and got into some better position, so that they would not need to come to us. They would certainly prefer to go to an organisation of that sort rather than to the parish; they would generally go there first, I think.
40178. Do you look forward to Class A being entirely taken off your hands?—I should think that is quite establishment of kind of help at Sheffield and is probable effect on the Poor Law.

possible, but I do not know. Unless this organisation gets very large funds they will be almost obliged to recommend a case to us and say, "They have no means of subsistence at all, but they are first-class people; can you not put them at once into your Class A?"

40179. Do you look forward to a time when the board would refer to the society any cases coming before it which suggested that they should be put in Class A?—I think that will be so. I think if they come to us and only want some temporary help to get over a difficulty and so on, we should probably say, "You had better go and see what they can do for you." But then, as I say, we have not had much to do with charitable organisation. We have got what is called a House of Help for Friendless Girls, and if applicants to us have a daughter who is not out at service because she has not got clothes we say, "Go to the House of Help and see if they cannot help you to start her."

40180. Have you any large endowed charities in Sheffield?—No. I think almost all our endowments are just given in the way of annual doles or something of that sort.

40181. Do you not think it would be possible to co-operate with them?—I do not know, but I think it is more likely that this Guild of Help will co-operate with them and work with them.

40182. Do you think a time might possibly come when they will render all out-door relief unnecessary?—No, I do not think so at all; not in my time.

40183. Would you look forward to that as an ideal?—I do not think so. I should not like to see in Sheffield the state of things which obtains in some of the unions where there is no outdoor relief given or scarcely any. I think outdoor relief is the right thing, if you are quite satisfied that they are deserving.

40184. If you had a well-organised system of charity do you think you could look forward to its covering all those cases?—If it is sufficiently large to do so, yes; but I cannot say that I have much hope in that direction.

40185. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) I think that your girls after they leave you are looked after until they reach the age of twenty?—Yes, that is so.

40186. Is there any one who looks after the boys when they are placed out?—Our superintendent of the Children's Homes keeps the boys in hand and visits them; but I do not know whether he goes quite so far as twenty, though he may do so sometimes.

40187. Does he report on them to the guardians?—Yes.

40188. Does any one look after the boys who go to the Colonies?—The only boys we have sent to the Colonies have been Roman Catholics, who were sent through some of their emigration societies, and a number who were sent through Dr. Barnardo's Agency. Dr. Barnardo's Superintendent in Canada looks after them splendidly, and I think the annual reports are very good reports indeed. They are full reports, and we are very much satisfied with those who have emigrated through that agency.

40189. And the boys who go to the collieries, are they looked after?—They are looked after fairly well by the superintendent, but not by anybody else.

40190. Does he go to visit them?—Yes.

40191. Does he report on them also?—Yes; he makes periodical reports.

40192. Do you know about how many boys there are in the collieries?—I do not think there are more than from a dozen to twenty. We send some to the training ships, but they are generally the rather incorrigible ones.

40193. (Mr. Gardiner.) Have you any records of the results obtained by the old schools which were abolished about 1893?—I do not think we have.

40194. In those days, I suppose, you never adopted any system of record so that you might now say what has been the result of the Scattered Homes System as compared with the old school system?—I know this that the girls get better wages when they go from the Scattered Homes than they used to do when they went from the workhouse. They seem to get to understand housework beforehand in a different way. But there were some who went out from the schools and did very well; there is no doubt about that.

40195. In reference to what you were saying to the Chairman about the difficulties you have with the Local Government Board, would they be overcome, do you think, if you saw more of the Local Government Board inspector?—I dare say some of them would.

40196. Do you think your inspector's area is too large, having regard to the help, that he could give you?—I should think he could not give us much more attention than he does.

40197. Is that owing to the size of his district?—His district is the whole of the West Riding and part of the East Riding, I think.

40198. Would you recommend in your area a smaller district?—That is not a matter to which I have given any serious consideration, but I should think that that would be an advantage.

40199. Then going to the size of your own union, are you satisfied with its size, or would you like it enlarged?—I think the only reason that I should care about its being enlarged would be so that it should cover the whole city and so make settlement questions less troublesome than they are now between the two; otherwise I think our workhouse is quite large enough.

40200. Supposing the city area became the unit of administration, do you think that would be satisfactory?—I think it would be a great advantage in certain ways, but we should want a larger board, and we should probably want two or more different workhouses.

40201. Would that not make classification more easy?—Yes, I think it would.

40202. Now as regards the training of your officers; have you given any thought to the training, say, of your relieving officers?—When we have had a new relieving officer we have generally tried to arrange for a cross-visitor or one of the older officers to take him in hand and work the double district between them, or something of that sort.

40203. Would you like to see a kind of civil service established for Poor Law officers?—I have never thought of it.

40204. Have you ever known cases where the relations of guardians have been candidates for and have been appointed to offices to which the guardians appoint?—I do know one case where the relative of a guardian was appointed, and I believe he was a very good officer; but I do not think I have heard of other cases.

40205. Then you do not think the system has worked badly?—I do not think there has been a sufficient number of cases. There has certainly been no abuse of it that I am aware of.

40206. What is your experience of guardians themselves resigning their office as guardian in order to apply for a post under the board?—We have no case of that sort.

40207. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to the children, do you approve of boarding-out at all. I understand you to say in answer to a question, that you prefer to deal with all children on the Scattered Homes principle?—I referred especially to boarding-out within the union when I was saying that. I think it is very desirable sometimes with weakly children to take them far away and get a change of air; and sometimes with children who have parents who are troublesome it is good to get them away from the neighbourhood.

40208. You are referring now to children who have been adopted under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1899, are you not?—Yes.

40209. And you would prefer to board those out rather than to deal with them in the Scattered Homes, would you?—I should not prefer that in the case of all adopted children certainly. A great many of them are orphans who have nobody concerned with them at all, and I think we can do for them better than anybody else can.

40210. Then you would only board out those who have undesirable parents in the neighbourhood?—Either parents, or aunts, or uncles or something of that sort in the neighbourhood.

40211. Would you board out deserted children?—Certainly.

Mr. J. W. Wilson.

12 Feb. 1907.

Question as to size of general inspector's district.

Proposed enlargement of Poor Law area and its effect.

The training of relieving officers.

Advantages of scattered homes for children, but need for other methods of dealing with exceptional cases.

ne after-near of Poor Law
children.

fect on ages of s of taining in attered nes.

Mr. J. W.
Wilson.

12 Feb. 1907.

40212. It follows therefore that one system of dealing with children could not be adopted with advantage?—No, I do not think it could; the boarding-out system certainly could not.

40213. Nor the Scattered Homes system, could it? Really it is a question of dealing with each child according to its condition and surroundings, is it not?—Yes. Still I think the Scattered Homes can practically be used for all children unless they have very undesirable relatives in the neighbourhood, or unless we think their health would be greatly improved by some different air.

40214. Of the various systems you believe that the best is to deal with them in Scattered Homes, barring those exceptions which might be better dealt with in other ways?—Yes.

40215. Either through institutions, or by boarding-out without the union, or in such other way as would meet the real need of the particular child?—Yes. We deal with them in a great variety of ways and we send them to different institutions.

40216. Do you know from memory how many children you have adopted under the Act?—I do not know, but it is a very considerable number.

Criticism of Sheffield
Scattered Homes for
children.

40217. If you had to begin again with the experience you have already got, would you provide so much accommodation at the Central Home?—No, certainly not. That is the greatest mistake we made as pioneers. I think we should probably have four small cottages, two each for Protestants and Catholics (boys and girls).

Assistance to foster-mothers and the proper number of children to each mother.

40218. With regard to the number of children who are accommodated in each home, does it necessitate assistance being given to the mother?—In the case of those who have only the smaller homes—where there are eleven children—we give them some assistance in the clothes-making but not in the housework or washing.

40219. Do they do their own baking?—No, very few of them do.

40220. What about the washing, do you say?—They wash all the smaller things but the sheets and the blankets, and things like those go to the central laundry.

40221. Is there no charwoman allowed?—Not in the small homes, but there is in the larger ones.

40222. Do you think a mother can look after eleven children and do all that work?—Yes, we think so. If she happens to have no child over school age we might give her half a day of a charwoman per week, possibly.

40223. Do you arrange to put some older girls in these homes to assist in the house-work and be trained?—We try to have one in each home as far as possible, but we very often have a home without them.

Method of utilising cross-visitors' reports at
Sheffield.

40224. With regard to the out-relief, how are the cross-visitors' reports dealt with?—We had the system of a superintendent of out-relief and a cross-visitor—that is two different officers. We have now adopted the plan of the superintendent being the cross-visitor with only an assistant. The superintendent in either case has the whole information from the cross-visitors as the results of their visits, and he sits with the Relief Committee and puts in the information that he has got to supplement, or possibly correct the information which the relieving officers lay before the Committee.

40225. Then the report of the cross-visitor is not an independent report which is laid before the guardians in order to check the relieving officers' information?—No; it is not sent to them in that way; that is, it is not delivered in writing. The cross-visitor is there personally or by his superintendent, and if the relieving officer on a new case does not give all the facts the superintendent says, "You have missed an important point so and so," and tells the Committee.

Question as to sufficiency of inspection of out-relief cases at
Sheffield.

40226. With the large number of people who are in receipt of out-door relief, is it possible for a superintendent relieving officer with an assistant to cross-visit all the cases within the three months?—No, I do not think it is, and I do not think they do that. They visit all the new cases if possible before they are presented, but I daresay they would think that if they visited the old-established cases in the half year, or in the year even, they had done as much as they could.

40227. Then changes of circumstances in the meantime may be liable to escape the notice of the officers?—That is just possible.

40228. Have you any system of revision, that is, do you go through the whole of the cases by a Committee?—No.

40229. There is rather a large number in proportion to the population in receipt of out-door relief in Sheffield, is there not?—Yes, I believe it is rather large.

40230. Do you attribute that to the conditions of labour in the district?—I do not know, I am sure. I think it must have something to do with them. There is not so much employment for women as there is in the Lancashire towns, but still there is a good deal of employment for women with us.

40231. Do you suffer somewhat from the early age at which men are dismissed?—I think we have suffered very much in that respect. Coming to the unemployed question, of which I do not know very much, I think where we suffer in Sheffield more than anything else is where a Government order comes in for armour plates and things of that sort, which is a large order generally, and there are a great many men drawn in from other places; and then when the order is finished and there is no other order to take its place, a very large number of the men are dismissed.

40232. (Chairman.) A certain proportion of the men so drawn in are unskilled men, as a rule, are they not?—Yes; almost all of them are labourers.

40233. They are drawn in to work with the skilled men on the heavy ordnance stuff?—Yes, I think that is it.

40234. Following up Mr. Bentham's question, have you noticed in recent years a diminution in the working age of the people, that is to say, is it more difficult for a man to get employment now as he gets older?—Yes, I think I have noticed that; their age is looked to very much more.

40235. Some people attribute that to the Workmen's Compensation Act?—Yes, and I have heard that too.

40236. But you have nothing beyond an impression on this point?—No; but I think that the Act must have some effect in that direction.

40237. (Mr. Bentham.) Do the guardians sit on the Committees which administer relief in the districts they represent?—Very rarely. Sometimes one member of a Committee may possibly be the representative of a part of the district which the Committee deals with. We did go on the principle at one time that the Committee should be composed partly of those who are resident in the district and partly of those who are not; but we have got gradually into not having them representative at all. The evil of it in some places has been very great indeed, where the guardians forming the Committee have entirely represented the district in which they sat.

40238. Are the Committees selected by resolution of the Board?—Yes. There is generally a Committee of Arrangements appointed to arrange the committees, and then they are passed by the Board.

40239. With regard to the disfranchisement of people who are in receipt of medical relief, if persons are admitted to and discharged from the Poor Law hospital direct are they disfranchised in Sheffield?—They are I believe, as we have it now. We have tried to avoid that, and we did avoid it in a case where there was some particular complaint. I think we had a great deal of typhoid fever or something of that sort. We did it by the overseers not reporting the cases, or by the cases not being reported to the overseers.

40240. Was any instruction given to the relieving officers by the guardians not to report those cases to the overseers?—Yes; I think it was a kind of mutual arrangement that was made between the guardians and the overseers.

40241. Has any test case been taken before the revising barrister?—I think not, but as you are aware probably, in some places it is a regular thing; in Birmingham, for instance, I think they do not take any notice whatever of their having been in the union hospital.

40242. With regard to Paragraph 2 of your additional notes, in referring to destitution you say, "destitution should not be a necessary preliminary condition entitling to relief." What had you in mind when you wrote that? What I have in my mind is that I think more effort should

Large proportion of out-relief at Sheffield and question as to its causes.

Effect of Government work on unemployment in Sheffield.

Effect of Workmen's Compensation Act on working period of a man's life.

Question as to guardian administering relief to their own constituents

Method of appointing Relief Committees at Sheffield.

Non-uniformity of practice as to disfranchisement & medical relief

Proposal to grant relief to non-destitute persons

Proposal to grant relief to non-destitute persons and question of such persons being dealt with by charity.

be made to save people from being destitute, and that they should be saved in time, instead of waiting till they have lost everything and sold their goods and so cannot take in lodgers or do anything to support themselves. They want often a little temporary relief at a much earlier stage; and that would save a great deal in the long run.

40243. Suppose a person had an investment bringing in a small annuity which was not quite sufficient to live upon, would you say that that was a case which should be relieved by the Poor Law?—Yes, I think I should.

40244. Even though the principal might be withdrawn from the bank for the purposes of maintenance?—Yes. Perhaps it should be for a few weeks or a few months only. I should think that was just the kind of case. It would be a very great shame if nothing could be done. Help might be given, something in the way of purchasing an annuity with the money and then making it up, because of course, you do not exactly want that person to leave money behind him.

40245. (Chairman.) With regard to the machinery for doing this and the cost of doing it, would you propose that that should come out of the Poor Law, or would you try and affiliate with the Poor Law charitable machinery which could do that?—Do you mean this Guild of Help that we have got?

40246. I was taking the case Mr. Bentham put to you. Here is a man who has an annuity or has saved money which is not sufficient to keep him, and you would like to supplement that so as to give him an adequate maintenance; would you propose to do that out of the Poor Law?—I think it might be done in some way in connection with the Poor Law. But it seems to me that there is a point—the very last point of all that I mentioned—that while it would be a great pity for the money to be all spent in a short time upon the person, on the other hand the money eventually ought to come into the hands of the guardians, that is to say, a person in those circumstances should not be in the position of leaving money behind him to somebody who did not need it perhaps.

40247. (Mr. Bentham.) Would you not prefer to see this kind of work done by a closer co-operation with charitable agencies?—I should think it would be better if it could be done so.

40248. (Mr. Lansbury.) To follow up that point, there is not any reason why private charity should not do it now, is there?—No, I do not think there is any reason why it should not, but it does not.

40249. If anybody wants to do it there is nothing to stop them from doing it, is there?—No; I do not think so.

40250. If there are people in Sheffield who are willing to subscribe the money to prevent you bringing Class A. on to the Poor Law, there is nothing in the world to prevent their doing it just as they subscribe to hospitals and all the rest of it?—That is so; but people are not very apt to subscribe to things that they think can be paid for out of public funds.

40251. Is that not just the rub of the whole business—that people do not care to subscribe in this sort of way, and therefore they do not subscribe?—Yes.

40252. And consequently a person is obliged to go to the Poor Law?—Yes.

ut-relief allowances at Sheffield.

40253. Can you tell me how much it costs for your Class A., your very best class who get out-door relief?—Five shillings per week is the maximum.

40254. Could you tell me what the total is in a year?—No, I could not.

40255. Do you think that if you were to set up an organisation in Sheffield there are sufficient people there with money to subscribe the necessary amount?—They could do it, if they would, I think.

fficulty in obtaining descriptions of voluntary hospitals at Sheffield.

40256. But would they?—I do not think they would.

40257. Have you any voluntary hospitals in Sheffield?—Yes, we have four.

40258. Do you have much trouble to get the funds for those?—They are always behind-hand I think, more or less.

40259. So that the charitable people have plenty of opportunity to subscribe to these things already if they want to do so?—Yes.

40260. It is very difficult to get them to subscribe to them, is it not?—Very difficult indeed. All the smaller charities, the Servants' Home to which we send our girls for example, which is a voluntary institution, find it very difficult to get the money necessary to carry them on.

Mr. J. W. Wilson.
12 Feb. 1907.

40261. So that there is not much encouragement to hope, either in my time or in your time, that by voluntary agencies we are going to get rid of out-door relief?—I think there is very little hope.

40262. Are you in favour of national old-age pensions paid for out of the Consolidated Fund?—I am very doubtful about that, that is to say, about its being a universal thing.

Extended poor relief with character classification preferred to universal old-age pensions.

40263. But for your Class A.?—My impression is that with an extension of the Poor Law, and with a character classification, it might be dealt with much better than by giving everybody, however badly they have lived their lives, a pension at a certain age.

40264. What is the percentage of bad people that you would have to deal with?—It is very large indeed 75 per cent. at least, I should think.

Character classification of workhouse inmates at Sheffield.

40265. So that only 25 per cent. of your applicants belong to Class A., is that so?—Not so many as that belong to Class A.; but if you take Classes A., B., and C. I should think there would be very nearly 75 per cent. of the grand total in Class D., the fourth class. That is, as far as the workhouse is concerned; I do not think I can speak with positiveness with regard to those outside the workhouse.

40266. All those who get out-door relief are decent people, are they not?—Fairly so.

40267. What do you term a "bad person," I mean what are the qualifications for getting into Class D.?—If you will permit me I should have to modify slightly what I have said about the 75 per cent. I should say that that applies to the workhouse only and not to the outside.

40268. I should think that the outside cases, if you have any classification at all, must be rather better. But what I want to get at is this—when you write down a man as a wrong 'un, what do you have in your mind concerning him?—I think that he has wasted his money on drink very much, not necessarily very frequently drunk, but that he has wasted his money. These people in many cases are people of immoral character, but still drink is the main thing, I think; that settles the question.

40269. Taking it for granted that your information spread over a period of forty or fifty years is always correct—you think that on that information a man's present character ought not to be judged at all, but he ought to be put into a class because of what he has done and what he has been, and not because of what he is now? I understood that was the line you took in the workhouse?—What he has been and what he is at the time that he comes into the workhouse I should say. It would be what he was up to the time of coming in. I think if a man were said to have been a bad character but to have reformed and to have become very different recently, he would not be put into the worst class.

40270. Do you think you are able to really judge of a man's character, and of all the circumstances that may have led him to drink and all the other circumstances of his life, and to pass a kind of final judgement on him in that sort of way?—I do not want to call it a final judgement, because there is a chance of their rising. It is rough and ready, there is no doubt to a certain extent, but I think it is better than the old plan of mixing the vile with the really deserving.

40271. Do you give out-door relief to widows with children?—Yes.

Method of relieving widows with children at Sheffield.

40272. Have you any objection to boarding the children out definitely with their own mothers?—We have not done it certainly in that way. We cannot board them out with relatives under the Boarding-out Orders, I think.

40273. You could give them out-door relief with their relatives, could you not?—Yes, and we do.

40274. Do you give them anything like 10s. per week per head?—No, we give them 2s. per child as a rule.

Mr. J. W. Wilson.
12 Feb. 1907.
Method of relieving widows with children at Sheffield.

40275. Why should you not give the mother more than that to enable her to bring up her children decently?—I do not know. We have sometimes adopted the plan of relieving the mother if, say, she has four children by taking two of them into the Homes if she can manage to get on with the other two.

40276. Is not the principle underlying your Homes that you want to dissociate a child from the workhouse in the first place?—Yes.

40277. And, secondly, you want to give the child as much of a home life as it is possible to give it?—Yes.

40278. Would that not be better done with a decent mother than by putting it under a foster-mother with eleven children, most of whom she has never seen before?—Perhaps there is something to be said for that. Do you mean to say to give 10s. instead of giving 2s. or substantially something like that?

40279. Or 5s. instead of 2s. I recognise Sheffield as pioneers about children, but I want to suggest to you that you might carry it a step further and preserve the real home with the real mother. I am always supposing the mother is a decent woman and I do not mean a bad home or anything of that sort; I mean, too, that her home should be open to inspection just the same as your Homes are now. Given those conditions, is there any reason why you should not treat the mother as the person who is best able to carry out your ideal of preserving the home?—That would have the effect of less cost than if they came into the Homes, and at the same time it would preserve the natural home.

40280. That is my point?—I think it is a very good idea. We have not done that certainly.

Possibility of City Council undertaking guardians' duties and proportion of guardians taking an active interest in Poor Law work.

40281. Just a question or two about the very first point the Chairman put to you in reference to City Councils and Boards of Guardians: you are on your City Council are you not?—I am.

40282. Do you find it very difficult to carry out your duties as a councillor and as a guardian?—I do.

40283. Yet you do it?—If I were attending to business now I could not do it.

40284. But you are not attending to business and you are able to do it. I want to suggest to you that you are a living example of a man's being able to do the work both of a councillor and of a guardian?—I am afraid it is a very bad example.

40285. Do you not find that it is a comparative few of the members of either body that do the real work?—That is so; and that makes it worse still, I think, when it is proposed that that same few should have extra work to do.

40286. How many members of your board are members of the council?—At present I think one other besides myself. We have generally got two or three on—not more.

40287. Is it not the fact supposing this work were handed over to the council and you had more members, that if a person wanted to be selected specially to do the work of the Poor Law, you generally find it is a rule that when there is a person on the council who wants to do a particular kind of work, the council is only too anxious to let him do that work, because nobody wants to do more than he can help?—I think there is no doubt about that. There would not be a very great difficulty there.

40288. Then that could be got over?—But then you would have the disadvantage that we have twenty-eight members on our board of guardians, and we do not find that number at all too many to divide between all the committees and all the work there is to do. Supposing you added twenty-eight members to the council in order to enable them to do the Poor Law work that would make the council a very much more unmanageable body.

40289. I would suggest to you that out of your twenty-eight there are probably a dozen of you who are really doing the work?—There are many more than that who are doing committee work and so on.

40290. Who are actively engaged in it and who initiate things?—I should not think that of more than a quarter of our twenty-eight it can be said that they are scarcely doing any work. I should think fully 70 or 80 per cent. of our men are working hard at the guardians' work.

40291. So you could reduce the number, could you not, by 20 or 25 per cent?—I should not like to reduce the number now on the board, because we should still have 20 per cent. of those who are left who did not do work probably. You could not ensure, if you reduced our numbers down to 80 per cent. of the present numbers, that you would get all who would be then on to work.

40292. (Bishop of Ross.) Do you think that the scattered homes system provides for almost all the children you could deal with?—Yes, I think so.

40293. In forming that opinion I presume that you have before your mind the conditions of a large urban centre like Sheffield?—Yes.

40294. Have you any experience of the purely rural unions in England?—No, I have no experience of them, but it seems to me perfectly easy for a small union to have two or three cottages instead of a large number—thirty say, as we have.

40295. I suppose we might assume that the inmates of the homes in those rural unions would come almost entirely from the agricultural classes?—Yes.

40296. Would you think it desirable that those children should be absorbed back among the agricultural classes from which they have come?—Yes, if possible.

40297. Now do you not think that for the purposes of absorbing them back it might be desirable to board them out with small farmers or agricultural labourers?—I think it might be very desirable as far as they were orphan, deserted or adopted children; but I think it would be very undesirable to adopt the principle of boarding-out in the cases of children who might be claimed by their parents at any time. The thing would get into disrepute altogether, because the foster parents having got to like and love the children would be extremely grieved if they had to give up the children before they were grown up; and that would bring the whole thing into disrepute in my opinion.

40298. If the children are to go back to the agricultural classes, do you not think it necessary that they should commence early in agricultural life? Must you not get your experience in agriculture from an early period?—Would it not be possible to have the cottages connected with an agricultural union, placed sufficiently in the country to let them do field work, or whatever other work they wanted the children to do?

40299. Then would you not have some difficulty with regard to schools and churches? You would not have churches and schools scattered over thinly populated agricultural districts, would you?—I daresay there might be some difficulty there. One of the things I did not mention with regard to our Scattered Homes is that the religious difficulty is very much solved by them, and that in fact we have no difficulty, because we have both Protestant Homes and Roman Catholic Homes.

40300. I gather from your answer to Mr. Bentham that you have special homes for Protestants and Catholics?—We have; and in the Roman Catholic homes we have Roman Catholic mothers, of course.

40301. Would you have much more difficulty in the purely rural districts from that point of view?—Perhaps we should.

40302. (Mr. Booth.) I suppose the provisions for classification do not apply at all to the sick?—No, they do not, and that is the weakness of the system. Everybody seems to have the notion outside that old couples are separated in the workhouses. I tell them that they are not separated except they wish to be so, or they are infirm, or they are hospital cases, and then they must be separated. The only plan I say by which they could be kept together would be by having in our infirm wards cubicles for the married couples.

40303. I am not speaking of married couples. I am speaking of the sick, and I am trying to get at the proportion of those who come under the Poor Law and can be classified as bad. Your classification does not apply at all to the sick, does it?—No, it does not.

40304. If they have already been in the workhouse and then go into the sick asylum, they are treated as sick people and all are on an equality of course?—Yes, that is so.

40305. But I take it that those who come to the Poor Law because they are sick, and go direct into the sick Scattered Homes versus boarding-out for Poor Law children in rural districts.

Character classification inapplicable to sick poor.

asylum, never are classified?—We make a point of classifying them when they come in, even if they are sick, that is to say, on paper they are classified so that if they come out of the hospital into the workhouse afterwards we know to what class they belong.

40306. When you speak of 75 per cent. being bad, of you do not mean including all the sick individuals, do you?—I do not. That makes a great difference no doubt.

Mr. WILLIAM WHEATLEY, called; and Examined.

40309. (Chairman.) I understand that you are a councillor for the county borough of Huddersfield and a guardian of the poor for the Union of Huddersfield?—Yes.

40310. You have prepared a statement for us which, following our practice, we will take as your evidence-in-chief, if you will hand it in?—Thank you.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I think the great mistake of the present, as of the past, is that in looking at the intricate problems connected with a reform of the Poor Laws, we have never gone deep enough and sufficiently considered the right of all men to live by labour. The poor had no hand in making the laws they have to live under until about forty years ago, therefore they cannot be blamed for this muddle that we find ourselves in with regard to the Poor Laws.

2. There are so many things said to a poor man or woman, when they come before us for relief, such as "Cannot you find work?" or "We cannot keep on giving you relief," which never would be said if guardians realised the real condition of affairs. Now I here make a challenge to all the combines, syndicates, companies, railway companies, colliery proprietors, shipping companies, ship builders, all our War Office stores and depôts, our factory masters, and every other kind of employer of labour, if they were to be so kind as to say to-morrow that they were willing to find all our unemployed work, they could not do so.

3. This fact is not taken into account when guardians have the cases before them. Now what are the facts you have to face in dealing with these intricate problems? Ask yourselves. Can we truly declare before God and man that a mother ever gave birth to a child which she desired should ever become a vagrant? No. Then there must be some other cause, and our business must be to find out what that cause is. To my mind the history of our country in its bearing on this great question has not been looked at, when in reality it demands our most serious study. Now in this connection how do we stand with regard to the "Unemployed question"? There are two main questions to be considered.

4. Firstly, then, is the want of employment a mere temporary affair, lasting only for a short time? If so, palliatives may do, but if it is likely to be a permanent question then mere palliatives can never be remedies.

5. In the early part of last century there was a great want of employment, which increased year by year.

6. In 1818 a Committee or Royal Commission was appointed to enquire into the causes of the want of employment.

7. That Commission reported in 1821 and recommended emigration.

8. Again in 1839 large numbers were out of work, also in 1840, 1841, and 1842.

9. In the middle of the latter year there was rioting, and the Government of the day made a grant of £2,000,000. Then came the repeal of the corn laws.

10. After this we began to make our mighty empire, and the great changes that have taken place since then no pen can tell, but nevertheless I feel that I must put some of the causes of this great revolution in our powers of production and distribution before you to take into account.

11. Now I desire that we shall look at what the position is to-day. The trade of England was never so great as it is to-day, but the great bulk of the work is being done by power and every kind of labour-saving machinery.

40307. If you first of all sort out the many of the best who are in receipt of out-relief, and then if you exclude those who come to the Poor Law because they are sick, you have at once a sort of natural classification, because a natural sediment is left of which, no doubt, a large proportion are bad?—That is it.

40308. It is rather hard, therefore, on the whole reputation of the poor to say that 75 per cent. are bad, is it not?—Yes, you are quite right; I see that.

Example:—

—	1840.	1870.	1895.
Manual labour -	22·8	11·2	5·2
Horse power -	52·5	23·3	10·3
Steam -	24·4	65·5	84·5

12. Again, of all work done in Scotland 90 per cent. is done by steam.

In England and Wales, 86 per cent.

In Ireland, 47 per cent.

For the United Kingdom, 84 per cent.

The steam power of the United Kingdom is calculated to be equal to the labour of 169,000,000 men.

13. What a revolution in production, etc., from 1840 to 1895; and it goes on. Take our carrying trades. Up to 1870 steam vessels of 1,000 tons, with a crew of 35, were the largest afloat. Now vessels of 7,000 and even 9,000 tons, with a crew of less than five men per 1,000, are the rule. Take the result:—

Year.	No. of Seamen.	Carrying Power.	Tons per Man.
1840 -	140,000	2,840,000	200
1870 -	196,000	9,020,000	460
1895 -	240,000	27,250,000	1,140

14. Take another view. With the increase of our productive powers there has been a steady increase of wealth, viz. :—

Wealth per head of population :—

1823.	1867.	1878.	1895.
£ s. d. 12 10 8 Lowe.	£ s. d. 30 10 0 Hoyle.	£ s. d. 33 2 0 Leone Levi.	£ s. d. 38 0 0 Mulhall.

Average value of worker :—

—	1869.	1878.	1895.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Value -	137 10 0	171 9 0	175 12 0
Wages -	43 5 0	48 10 0	49 9 0
Surplus -	94 5 0	122 19 0	126 3 0

Note well the surplus value—the average mark of each worker.

15. Before proceeding further with the subject, and having well considered the preceding tables, take the following, showing the increase of the national wealth :—

Date.	£	Per Head of Population.	Authority.
		£ s. d.
1823 -	2,050,000,000	91 12 3	Lowe.
1860 -	5,500,000,000	171 13 0	Mulhall.
1878 -	7,970,000,000	233 10 0	Mulhall.
1886 -	9,410,000,000	261 0 8	Lord.
1895 -	11,866,000,000	302 0 0	Mulhall.
1902 -	15,000,000,000	357 0 0	Giffen.

This would give to every family of five £1,785 in 1902.

Mr. J. W. Wilson.
12 Feb. 1907.

Mr. W. Wheatley.
12 Feb. 1907.

For England only.
Displacement of manual labour by machinery.

Increase in national wealth since 1823.

Mr. W.
Wheatley
12 Feb. 1907.

16. Let me add the nation's income for 1902 as given by Giffen :—1902. Income, £1,750,000,000 ; per head, £55 3s. ; per family of five, £275 15s. We thus see that there is abundance of wealth produced, that there need be no want or fear of want. We know, too, that the wealth produced by the workers is consumed by the non-necessary classes of the community.

17. We have seen how machinery with steam power, and now electricity, is displacing manual labour, and has been doing for fifty years.

Decrease in certain classes of workers between 1871 and 1881

18. Take the following from the census returns for 1881, and the same process is still going on, and will continue.

Decrease of workers from 1871 to 1881 :—

	1871.	1881.	Decrease.
Farmers - - -	249,987	223,943	25,954
Market gardeners - -	98,069	65,882	32,789
Agricultural labourers -	962,343	870,823	91,701
			150,444

Workers.	Decrease.
Iron, etc. - - - - -	39,109
Silk - - - - -	19,557
Linen - - - - -	5,707
Hosiery trade - - - - -	5,508
Glove - - - - -	3,885
Lace - - - - -	4,239
Shoe - - - - -	29,937
	107,942

And this decrease of workers notwithstanding the increase of population.

Unemployment as affected by the land question.

19. Secondly, I come to the land question. The question is not new. For generations it has been the question.

20. Take a few historical facts which must not be forgotten.

21. In 1581 an Act was passed that to each labourer's cottage erected there should be attached four acres of land. That was repealed in 1781.

22. This aspect I refer to as showing the change in regard to the view taken in reference to the working classes.

23. Then again this matter of what must be done for our poor came up in Parliament in 1795, and in debate Mr. Pitt declared in favour of a regular allowance being given to all parents with large families. He said, "This will make a large family a blessing and not a curse, and it will draw a proper distinction between those who are able to provide for themselves and those who, having enriched their country with a number of children, have a claim on it for assistance."

24. Here was one of the most important declarations ever made. Then the basis of production was manual labour, now it is machinery, steam power, etc., and the cry to-day is to get rid of the workers, send them to Canada, anywhere, but get rid of them. Not a word about the thousands of surplus shopkeepers and traders, not a word about the idle and ever useless class.

25. It is stated that for every adult male it takes at least £300, and for each female £150, and the estimated gain to the United States up to 1873 was £898,839,800, the gain to Canada £182,260,000, to Australia £205,559,000. We give these three countries all this wealth, and our shams sit at home and still talk of emigration, and it is always the workers to go.

Growing dependency on foreign food supplies.

26. The cry of late has been raised, "Back to the land." What does the cry mean ? Is it anything more than a delusion and a hollow mockery ?

27. In 1841 we grew food enough for 24,000,000 of the population ; now we do not grow enough for 7,000,000.

28. In 1869 we had under wheat 3,982,000 acres, in 1895 1,417,641 acres. We are the most dependent people in the world, e.g., take our food supply for 1895 :—

	Bushels.	No. of days' supply.
Home grown - - -	57,000,000	71
From United States - -	87,000,000	121
" Russia - - -	46,000,000	65
" Argentina - - -	23,000,000	33
" India - - -	17,500,000	25
" Canada - - -	9,500,000	13
" Others - - -	26,500,000	37

Dependent on home-grown, seventy-one days ; on foreign supplies, 294 days. (From Mulhall's work of 1897.)

29. Where, oh where is our boasted freedom, our wisdom, our bravery ? And this is what royal, and priestly and aristocratic rule has brought us to !

30. Let me now come to the plunder of the common lands. The enclosure of "common lands."

31. From 1760 to 1879 there were passed 3,867 Acts, enclosing 10,505,000 acres of common lands. Here was plunder on a grand scale.

32. Under the Act of 1845 618,000 acres were enclosed of the estimated value of £6,140,000. Of that 1,200 clergymen got 30,730 acres, being an average of twenty-four acres each, 620 lords of the manors got 27,590 acres.

33. By the annual report for 1880 there had been enclosed in Nottinghamshire 728 acres, in Staffordshire 5,055 acres, in Cardiganshire 17,278 acres, in Yorkshire (1882), 28163 acres, of which the clergy got 2,200 acres.

34. Again, we find from Mulhall's agricultural reports for 1815, the following : " Of common lands there were in Warwickshire 50,000 acres, in Northamptonshire out of 317 parishes eighty-seven were open lands, in Oxfordshire over 100 parishes were open fields " In Wiltshire the greater part of the country. The greater part of Huntingdonshire was also open fields. Where are these to-day ? All gone.

35. From the yearly report of the Board of Agriculture for 1869, page 17, we find that from 1869 there had been enclosed around London twenty-two commons containing 3,840 acres.

36. Why do not the unemployed and their advisers demand, and with a voice of thunder, the restoration of those twenty-two commons on which to put the unemployed ?

37. Turn to Scotland. Down to 1883 tens of thousands of men, women and children had been driven from the land to make room for deer forests. The Duke of Sutherland, 212,658 acres ; Lovat, 107,120 acres, and so it goes on. Even her late Majesty Queen Victoria is down in the report for 19,310 acres. The total land turned into deer forests is now not far from 3,000,000 acres. It may well be asked where are we to-day and whither are we going.

38. Then there are the Crown lands. Well, what is needed is not a mere handful of men taking a bit of land here and there from which they are bound to be ejected—it is child's play—but a national movement—an earnest one—for the restoration of all the commons to the people, and sufficient funds from the National Exchequer to establish home colonies on those lands to make them self-supporting.

40. Turning to the Statistical Abstract for 1906 we find that down to 1905 loans had been issued for local purposes for relief of trade, etc., to the amount of £179,489,402. Of that sum £12,416,465 has been written off as bad debts.

41. In 1846 by 9 & 10 Vict., c. 101, a loan of £2,000,000 was granted to the landlords.

	£.
The Duke of Sutherland got - -	50,000
The Duke of Richmond got - -	30,000
The Earl of Carlisle got - -	47,138
The Lord Maston got - -	60,000 and so it went on. On page 19 of the Board of Agri-

Growing dependency on foreign food supplies.

The enclosure of "common lands."

The conversion of land into deer forests in Scotland.

Proposed establishment of "home colonies" subsidised from National Funds.

National loans for relief of trade agriculture,
etc.

culture Report, 1896, it is stated that for agricultural purposes £4,000,000 of public money had been advanced.

42. Now the need of the hour is not mere palliatives tinkering with effects, but a mighty strike at causes—discovering and uprooting the evil.

43. Replacing men by machines, and at the same time plundering them of the land, are the causes of our streets being walked by gaunt unemployed workmen and their starving wives and children; and no good is going to come from your labours unless followed by the restoration of the common land plundered from the people, and the issuing of public loans sufficient for all purposes of home colonisation.

44. What is required is not charity, but principles of justice for each and all in all the relations of life and through all the ramifications of society.

45. Let me draw your attention to one effect of machinery replacing men on those workers to whom from certain quarters is constantly being preached the gospel of thrift. Government returns from 1897 to 1903 tell the tale of 30,723 being done to death in workshops—more than were slaughtered in the late Boer War. How many from this cause were left with no other mercy than that to be obtained from Relief Committees? In those years these producing powers as a bye-product maimed and injured no less than 709,937 persons. All these represent weekly wage-earners, and therefore are deprived of the power of providing the ordinary necessities of life, not to mention the storing up for a rainy day.

46. My experience on the Huddersfield Board of Guardians is that it fights shy of any attempt to experiment in any direction. I tried to induce the board to acquire fifty acres of land to be put into cultivation by the unemployed, but without success. The chairman of our workhouse committee also mooted the weaving of blankets, etc., by the inmates, but without much encouragement.

47. I think that the Commission should give consideration to the question of unions having authority to provide by building or purchasing house property in which to place suitable cases of out-door relief and thereby economise by saving the interest on capital, which is in the rent now paid by many recipients of out-door relief, out of their already small allowance.

48. A large number of recipients of out-door relief should be receiving old-age pensions instead of relief. Of the classes of persons who apply for relief, a large number are widows and children. The greater percentage of the remainder is composed of sick and crippled.

49. With regard to the class of persons seeking election as guardians, 75 per cent. of our board are neither qualified nor desire to qualify themselves for the responsible duties they have undertaken, and ought not to persist in being returned. Their one qualification is to keep down the rates at the sacrifice of life and the claims of justice and mercy.

50. The following are some of my suggestions for a reform in the Poor Law:—

(a) The consolidation, simplification and codification after emendation.

(b) The abolition of the law of settlement and removal; as the saving of law costs, removal expenses, and settlement officers' salaries and expenses will be a national economy.

(c) The defraying of all forms of relief from money raised by national taxation, and the national exchequer to be the common fund for the whole country.

(d) Absolute power to be given boards of guardians to remove at their discretion cases of phthisis or other sick and infirm cases to the workhouse or other infirmary.

Example:—Case I visited on December 31st last. Husband in advanced stage of consumption, wife and six children compelled to breathe the foul and germ-laden air of a confined room 15 feet square, Youngest seven weeks, eldest ten years. Can wife give proper attention to her suffering husband or her child, not to mention her lack of nursing skill? Deterioration must continue while these conditions are allowed to remain unaltered.

(e) Compulsory notification of all syphilis cases and full power to retain such cases until cure has been effected; the cost of treatment and maintenance, etc., to be made a charge upon the offenders and imprisonment to be enforced in case of default of either non-notification or repayment of cost.

(f) In cases of illegitimate children, drastic powers to be given for the punishment of the putative father.

(g) More humane treatment to be meted out to bona fide working men when on the road in search of work than to those who frequent the tramp ward.

(h) Guardians to be placed in a position to offer work to any able-bodied male or female; powers to be given for uniting with other unions for the formation of labour colonies on which to place cases which habitually refuse to work after work has been found for them.

(i) The control of all officers to be left entirely to the boards under which they serve.

(j) Full power to be given to the chairman of a board to retain his office and act as returning officer at a general election of guardians and to so act at any bye-elections.

(k) Where the offices of the clerk to the guardians and superintendent registrar are combined and the fees of the latter office exceed £150 that it be separately held.

(l) Powers of granting vaccination and exemption certificates to be placed with boards of guardians who already have to pay the piper for this inhuman quackery.

(m) No disfranchisement whatever to follow the granting of relief to a person who is otherwise qualified to vote.

(n) The widest possible powers to be granted to boards for caring for all the various classes of children coming under their jurisdiction.

40311. (Chairman.) The earlier part of that statement relates a good deal to the economic history of the past which, of course, is somewhat controversial, but I understand it is rather the preamble to your evidence. I do not think we propose to examine you on that, but we do propose to ask you to give us the result of your experience of things as they are now in Huddersfield, or as you think they are. Perhaps it would be sufficient for me to take you through your suggestions which are at the end of your paper, a great many of which are non-controversial, and then we may come to the more controversial questions afterwards. In the first place, you would wish to see the Poor Laws consolidated and simplified?—Yes.

40312. May I ask here how long you have been a guardian?—Three years.

40313. Previous to that had you studied the principles or the operation of the Poor Laws at all?—I had read various works on it, and I have been an acute observer, having had to go through it myself with my mother and gone on the business on her behalf and on my brothers'. That has made me think about these questions.

40314. Were your family then in receipt of relief?—My father's, not mine.

40315. You as a child received it?—Yes.

40316. What date would that be about, how far back?—As near as I can remember it would be from 1868 to about 1870.

40317. Your first two suggestions I think we need not go into, because their object is quite clear. Your suggestion (c) raises rather a controversial point which I should like to reserve?—I should like to further explain (a) which refers to the consolidation and simplification of the law. I think it is about time that something was done with that, and I should like the law to be made clear. When I went on our board I got my book of instructions, and when I came to examine its contents the things seemed to be contradictory altogether. First of all, I found some of the orders saying "Out-relief will not be granted except in special cases to the following classes of persons—workmen or operatives when on strike." I say nothing about a workman who is fighting the battle, but I do think this ought not to be extended to the children, because the battle is not theirs to commence with, and

Mr. W.
Whalley.

12 Feb. 1907.

Proposed
Poor Law
Reforms.

notification and detention etc., of syphilitic

cases.

Illegitimate
children.

Working men in search of work.

The able-bodied;

labour
colonies.

Officers.
Guardians'
elections.

Pluralist appointments

Vaccination.

ment.

Children.

Mr. W.
Wheatley.

12 Feb. 1907.

to make the order say, because two men or a number of men have decided to fight that little children should starve, I say is not just.

40318. The question at the moment is not so much the justice of the orders, but whether those orders are clear, is it not?—They are not clear, because this only classifies him. The general ruling of our board is that we should not look at cases of this character even if the mother came.

40319. What is that book that you are referring to?—It is one which has been prepared by our late clerk.

40320. (Sir Samuel Provis.) It is a book issued for the guidance of the guardians, I suppose?—Yes; it condenses the orders.

40321. (Chairman.) I think we all agree, and indeed everybody will, that consolidation and simplification will be a benefit, because undoubtedly, in the course of time, some of the orders and some of the circulars will become not apparently quite consistent one with another. We quite agree about that, I think?—Yes, I think so.

40322. Now as to abolishing the Law of Settlement and Removal; that, I think, rather speaks for itself. Of course there are difficulties, but it would undoubtedly, if it could be done, save a good deal of time and money. Now I want to come to (d). You want absolute power given to boards of guardians to remove at their discretion cases of phthisis and other sick and infirm cases; that is to say, you want to give them compulsory powers?—Yes.

40323. I suppose you see the difficulty of removing phthisical cases in their earlier stages?—I think science has so far penetrated into the question that it perceives at once when a phthisis case is in its first stages that it is as well to isolate, so that no other person, particularly in a room of the dimensions I give here, 15 feet square, should come in contact with it.

40324. The difficulty I rather meant was this—that for fear of losing their employment persons are reluctant in the very early stages of phthisis to come and to declare themselves as suffering from phthisis?—Yes, that is the case.

40325. What you propose is that if you get this compulsory power the patient so removed would have to be maintained at the expense of the rates, and, assuming the family had no means of subsistence, they would also have to be helped?—Yes.

40326. And you would continue that until the case was cured?—Yes. This one I cite here has passed away now, and we have all these six children on our hands.

40327. That is, you have got the six children on the Poor Law?—Yes. Evidence has come to me without a doubt that this is a genuine character, and that he has been struggling for dear life between life and death for four years to stick to his little occupation so as to maintain his family. But he has sunk under it at last.

40328. He was reluctant to come into the infirmary?—Yes. We did not force him in because we had no power to force him in, and he died at his home.

40329. Now as to (e); You would wish that the class of cases dealt with in that paragraph should be compulsorily notified?—Yes.

40330. It is not a very agreeable subject, but as you know cases sometimes come up where the man could still earn his livelihood, and so on, or is able to work; what would you do in those cases? Would you leave it to the medical officer to decide whether or not it was safe for him to be at large?—This is really a medical officer's business. He is the only one who can detect these things, and we have to be guided by him. I think he ought, for the security of the people, to tell us when it is a danger, and if it is a danger, whatever the man's occupation is, the State ought to be able to step in and secure him and also secure those who are chargeable to him.

40331. You would wish that those cases should be compulsorily dealt with?—Yes.

40332. In (f) you deal with the case of illegitimate children; of course you would give the putative father the power of giving evidence in his own behalf, because whilst the object you have in view is most desirable there are cases where false charges are made, as you know?—Yes, there should be a fair trial for him; but I do know that too many on our side escape.

40333. Then in (g) you would wish to draw a distinction between the bona fide working men who are on the road searching for work and those who are mere tramps?—Yes, I would.

40334. Would you give to the bona fide working men better accommodation and better treatment?—Yes. That really is defined clear enough according to my intention. First of all, I lay down the basis that every one should have an opportunity to work and that everybody should work. Now we have no means whatever at the present time to detect what we are classifying as loafers. We are not justified in classifying any one as a loafer to-day until we have fairly stated by law that he has a fair chance to do work. Until he has that I am not classifying anyone as a loafer; but after he has had that opportunity and he refuses to work, then I should make a place for him where he will have to work—if I had the power.

40335. You draw a distinction between those who frequent a tramp ward as tramps and those who are walking about in order to get work?—Yes.

40336. Now we come to a very wide and important suggestion. In (h) you suggest that the guardians should be placed in a position to offer work to an able-bodied male or female. On what terms would you offer work?—On the same terms as any one else has had at the same sort of work.

40337. That is to say, you would give trade union terms?—Yes.

40338. Assuming that you guardians had that power, have you ever thought what inducement there would be for people to seek work outside?—I want that period to come when they will not have to seek work outside, but when they will work for the State.

40339. Then you look to this rather as a preliminary step in that direction?—Yes.

40340. You would associate that with powers of sending people to labour colonies who would not comply with the test or whatever was the Order?—Yes.

40341. I suppose you feel there are a certain proportion of people so constituted that they must be so dealt with?—Individually I do not think so. I think it is their surroundings and circumstances and environment that have become so far engrafted into their very nature, that it is a case of sickness which wants curing. They are not really bad people; they really want curing, and they want curing by kindness and some sort of medicine which we have not up to the present used.

40342. Then you wish boards of guardians to have complete control over all the officers under them?—Yes.

40343. That means to say that the Local Government Board should not interfere at all?—What I mean by that is this: seventy-two of us have been chosen by the citizens of our union; if we have not the common sense to engage an efficient officer without writing two or three documents to the Local Government Board officers stating that we have done so, it is about time that we were turned out of office.

40344. There is this difficulty about that, is there not, that public opinion changes, and what it may be thought right to do or what it may be popular to do in Huddersfield to-day may, perhaps, three years hence be the reverse?—It might be.

40345. Then would not the officers be rather in a difficult position if they were subject to whatever might be the changes or whims of each successive board of guardians?—We find stability in the Local Government Board. We do not find that they change their officers every time a Tory or a Liberal Government comes in. We do not think, having regard to the compassion and the judgment of boards of guardians when they change office that they would be discharging their officers any more frequently.

40346. But there are really little difficulties in the way of the Local Government Board acting like that, are there not?—Yes; but there is the parallel.

40347. If all the Poor Law officers had the same statutory rights that civil servants have they would be in a

Difficulties
as to compulsory power of removal of phthisis
cases.

Need for compulsory notification of syphilitic cases.

Need for further power to punish putative fathers of illegitimate
children.

Need for better treatment of bona fide working men in search of work.
Suggested increase of guardians'
power to provide work for able-bodied and establishmen-of labour colonies for the work shy

Guardians should have greater freedom from Local Government Board control in appointment of officers.

stronger position than they are now?—I have not gone into all the details of the different arrangements, but I cannot see where they can have better security than the Poor Law officer has.

40348. Now we come to your next suggestion (j); what is the object of giving the chairman of a board of guardians the power to act as a returning officer?—This: We find now that when there is an election of a board of guardians it is a very expensive affair, and I think that we could really economise in that. Not only that, but we find that the great bulk of the money which is spent in the contest goes to one individual.

40349. That is, to the returning officer?—Yes.

40350. And you think that if the chairman were made to act as returning officer his expenses would be lower than those of the present returning officer?—Yes. When you tell me that it costs one man £90 for a contest on a board of guardians it looks outrageous.

40351. Your next suggestion is that "Where the offices of the clerk to the guardians and superintendent registrar are combined and the fees of the latter office exceed £150 that it be separately held;" what exactly do you mean by that?—What I mean by that is this: We have a vast amount of very capable men knocking about the country out of employment—not loafers, but men who are capable; and when we have a clerk who is getting, we will say, £6 a week for the clerkship alone, and he has another office, the registrar's, for which he is getting £6 a week more, then I think those two offices ought to be bringing two livings in instead of one.

40352. The next suggestion deals with a different matter. You wish to give the board of guardians the power of granting exemption certificates in the case of vaccination; you evidently do not believe in vaccination?—No, not at all. I think we were made perfect and want no patching.

40353. Have you got a small-pox hospital at Huddersfield?—Yes.

40354. Have you had many patients there?—It is no use whatever.

40355. That is, the small-pox hospital is not?—We do not get a patient in a year. We are fortunately favoured.

40356. Really, not one in a year?—I do not think we average that and have not done for this last three years.

40357. Are there a very large number of unvaccinated people in Huddersfield?—We have a fair sprinkling of anti-vaccinators.

40358. Might it not be argued that one of the reasons why you have not had these outbreaks is because the majority are vaccinated?—I do not think so. I think it is due to the wisdom of the people in going into extensive sanitary alterations.

40359. Have you been vaccinated yourself?—Yes.

40360. Then in (m) you do not wish that disfranchisement should follow in any case where a person is otherwise qualified?—That is so; I do not.

40361. You would like very wide powers to be given to boards for caring for the various classes of children coming under their jurisdiction?—Yes.

40362. The powers are very wide now; in what direction would you like them extended?—I should like a little better division between the widows with families and the cottage homes. Here is a mother left with six children; we shall say to her when she comes before us "In the course of a very short time, when this child has got away from your breast you will be able to go to the loom." I want that mother to have something like the proportion that it takes the foster-mother of a cottage home to maintain the ten or eleven children that we have in a cottage home; I want her to have something similar to that for the maintenance of her children.

40363. Could you not do that now, if you wished it, by merely carrying out the ordinary law?—Yes, I dare say we might be so generous now if we could only get a majority of the board to do so; but unfortunately they are not educated up to the pitch yet.

40364. The pitch, that is, that you want them to be at?—Yes.

40365. Now we will turn to your board; I am afraid you have not a very high opinion of your board?—Well, I state what I think.

40366. You think that 75 per cent. of them are neither qualified nor desirous of qualifying?—I do.

40367. In Paragraph 49 you say you think, "Their one qualification is to keep down the rates at the sacrifice of life, and the claims of justice and mercy"?—In the case of every action that I can observe their judgment is so. This is a very deep subject; it is not a play subject with me. In this Statement I have put down the result of the observation that I have made on their words and their actions when they have had a case to judge of.

40368. You know sometimes people use rather strong rhetorical language with respect to those with whom they differ, and I thought that it might be that you thought that, merely because the board did not agree with you?—No. There are no better friends than I and the members of the board, I am the best friend for them.

40369. Will you just amplify this? As I understand it your allegation is not that the law prevents them from doing that which is just and merciful but that they will not do that which the law will allow them to do which is just and merciful; is that right?—Yes.

40370. Will you please give us an illustration?—Here The an old lady comes; she is living in a nice little cot by inadequacy herself and we cannot for the life of us move to give her of out-relief more than 5s. At the first stroke out of that 5s., 2s. at allowances. the very least will have to go for rent. Now I reckon that this old creature must have twenty-one meals in seven days, and I cannot find out how to mathematically calculate out how she is to exist and find coal, light, soap, etc. If she has been a decent creature for a matter of seventy years, I do contend that our compassion ought to go to the very least to 8s., without any difference at all. But they do not seem inclined to go beyond 5s.; that is our limit.

40371. Then putting it unrhethorically you differ from the majority of the board as to what is adequate relief?—Yes.

40372. But a person might differ from you and still say that he was influenced by justice and mercy, might he not?—He might; but then when I give a definition I have to be the judge for my own opinions.

40373. Possibly some of the other guardians might, in reference to your views, use the same sort of language?—Yes; they could give their views that I am wrong.

40374. You have told us very frankly what is the state of society that you would like to see, and you make one suggestion here (which I left purposely to the end) which seems to me to go rather in that direction. By (c) you would defray all forms of relief from money raised by national taxation?—Yes. Proposal that poor relief should be a national charge and question as to its difficulties.

40375. And the national exchequer, in your opinion, should be the common fund for the whole country?—Yes.

40376. Assuming you did that of course local boards of guardians would have to disappear, would they not?—Not necessarily.

40377. If every board of guardians were allowed to dip their hands as much as they liked into the national exchequer there would not be very much left after a little time, would there?—I think there would. I think we should just form an estimate approximately for the national exchequer to be guided by. That is what we do now.

40378. But those who control the national exchequer under those circumstances must have the last word, must they not?—Yes.

40379. Assuming that the relief of the poor was put on the basis you suggest, I think it follows, does it not, that the guardians would have to be very much curtailed of their present powers?—In the shape of granting out-door relief, or anything of that sort, do you mean?

40380. Yes?—I cannot see it.

40381. One board of guardians might take a perfectly different view from another and, as they would not have to pay anything for it would not the inclination be everywhere to take the most liberal view?—If we can get the basis that the national exchequer is liable for these purposes instead of individuals as we have it now, in parishes and unions, then we shall get a uniform system and we shall get

Mr. W.
Wheatley.

12 Feb. 1907.

The qualifications of existing guardians.

Mr. W.
Wheatley.

12 Feb. 1907.

Proposal that poor relief should be a national charge and question as to its difficulties.

to something by which we can get to know where justice is being meted out and we shall not have Sheffield doing one thing, Bradford another, and Huddersfield another.

40382. The uniformity would have to be laid down by the central authority, would it not, and that would tie your hands much more than they are tied now?—I do not know about that. We are tied enough now and I do not think we could be tied much more. When we are making out our Budget for our different unions we are always cutting down on those that have work, but we find the Chancellor of the Exchequer never particularly shaves off to two or three millions.

40383. I was forty years in the House of Commons and I am afraid I must say I rather take a different view?—When we look through Whitaker's Almanac and other things, and see what allowances he makes for public purposes and public men, we just do see that he could draft a Budget that would be suitable for this purpose.

40384. That is, you think the salaries are too high, but we cannot go into that. Anyhow I think you agree that you want to get uniformity, and uniformity can only be established by a central authority, that is what I am putting to you?—Yes.

Proposed universal old-age pensions

40385. What is your view about pensions? I think you mention it in your Statement, and you are in favour of pensions?—Certainly.

40386. Of course you would wish them to come out of the National Exchequer?—Yes.

40387. Would you give pensions to everybody?—Everybody after a certain age.

40388. Would you make no enquiry into their conduct?—I should most certainly want a certain amount of conduct, but I should not make that the qualifying thing, because to a certain extent I do not blame men and women that fall as some men blame them.

40389. Would you give it to everybody whether they wanted it or not, or would you put a test of income on?—Any man who became entitled to it, whether he was wealthy or whether he was poor, if he went and called for would get it.

40390. What would you give him per week?—I should give him nothing less than 10s.

40391. That is a large order; that is £52,000,000 a year?—That does not matter to me; it is here.

40392. Then you see on the top of that you would have your National Poor Rate, would you not, or the pensions would be on the top of the rate; for they would have to be added together?—Yes, they could go into the same category.

40393. Have you ever thought of the consequences to the people?—I have thought of it from top to bottom.

40394. And you do not think this tremendous increase of taxation would have a bad effect on the people?—No. There is a means of raising it without affecting a soul. It will not hurt anybody if you take the right channel to get it from. We have a means and it will have to be tapped some day, sooner or later.

Inadequacy of poor
relief.

40395. I do not know that we can go into the system of taxation, but I think you have put your views very clearly before us. You think the relief given in Huddersfield is inadequate, and you would like to have?—Just excuse me, I do not want to put our board down as worse than other boards. I do not think our board with regard to its conduct to its poor is second to any; but I say that the whole of the boards, so far as I have been able to investigate, are not treating the poor humanely.

40396. That is to say that the relief which, as far as you know is given by Huddersfield, is in your judgment, inadequate?—Yes.

The relief of widows with
children.

40397. (Bishop of Ross.) Do you desire that a widow with children should receive the same for each child as the children are costing in the Scattered Homes?—I do not say it is necessary to grant her so much as that, but I should not individually make any objection for her to have it so.

40398. Suppose she had six children and got 10s. a week for each child that would be £3 a week; would that not be a larger sum than a very large proportion of the healthy strong working-people are able to earn?—

You see if yon mother belonging to the case mentioned The relief c in my statement was unfortunately to pass away and to widows wit leave us these six children they would go to our Scattered children.

Homes and we should make no murmur at their going on to the cost. I do not think it is necessary for a human mother to require 10s. under the present order, but I do think that there is a long difference between 1s. 6d. a child, and, say, 5s. or 4s. If it takes the wisdom of seventy-two of us on our board to arrange and concoct a scheme at our new Scattered Homes and then we cannot provide a system where we can keep them at less than 8s. a week, then I say that a human mother who is left with six children is entitled to no less than 4s. each for hers.

40399. But you would not propose to make the widow and her children better off than they had been while the husband, the father, was living and in receipt of his earnings, would you?—Certainly I would, because the father was not in good enough circumstances to keep his children.

40400. Would you propose then to make that widow and her family better off than the family next door where both parents are living?—Certainly, because I want to bring them up to a higher standard, and I want to educate the others up to that standard.

40401. And you want to educate them under the Poor Law?—Yes.

40402. You begin by lifting up the paupers to the level that you want the whole of society to reach afterwards?—Yes.

40403. Instead of beginning with the strong working-people and trying to lift them up, you want to begin at the other end?—At the present time and for generations that have passed we have been attempting to educate them by not letting the poor get beyond a certain pitch. We have got to educate them to a higher pitch, and if we can educate them either from the Poor Law basis or from any other basis to get a better standard of life I individually think it is our duty to do so.

40404. (Mr. Russell Wakefield.) With regard to the Question as workers I do not notice that in your statement you say to conversi very much about the question of the education which of unskilled should be given to people to fit them for their work in life. into skilled Is not one of the great difficulties of the present day the workmen. fact that so many unskilled people are thrown upon the work-market?—I do not think it is for want of skill. I think it is because skill and genius have made the productive powers so great that you really have not space unless you re-arrange the whole commercial system altogether—that is, unless you cut down all of us who are working and reduce our time of operation, and replace us, so to speak, by those who are now out of employment.

40405. Do you find, for instance, in Huddersfield much want of work for the skilled workman?—No. Our centre has been very fortunate and is very fortunate to-day, because the textile trade, particularly for a few years, even through the Japanese War and since, has been very fortunate to be on a very good basis, and we have not had what you may call a very heavy list of skilled men out of employment.

40406. But you have had of unskilled, have you not?—Yes.

40407. What I was rather wanting to get at was what can be done in your judgment to turn those who are unskilled now and suffer from that cause into a similar type of workmen to the skilled workmen?—You have not the capital that is required to invest in business, and to build mills to occupy them, if they were skilled enough to go into that same sort of business.

40408. Then do you suggest that the number of skilled workmen keeps up just to the amount required?—Yes, I do. I know cases where a young man has gone and made himself skilful as a weaver, but the man who taught him has not had a loom for him, and when he has gone to another employer, because he has never had charge of a loom himself he could not get a start.

40409. Are you satisfied with the present system of Present education for children, with a view to fitting them for the educational battle of life?—No, I am not satisfied with the present system un-satisfactory.

40410. Would you like to put anything more technical—I will put it in that way—into education, so as to make people better fitted for some of these trades and professions?—If I gave you my scheme I should go a long, long way.

The relief of widows with children.

40411. What you want with regard to the widow and her children, if I understand you rightly, is this: You want practically to have allowed to her that which in a scattered home is required to cover the cost of the general living of the children apart from what you might call establishment charges and so forth; that is really what it amounts to?—Yes.

The finance of old-age pensions.

40412. Would you have no contribution on the part of the person receiving the old-age pension from his wages during his life towards that pension?—No. I do not know that I should make it obligatory to do that. I think there is a means of graduated taxation and of a classification of taxation which will raise the money without that.

The relief of widows with children.

40413. (Mr. Lansbury.) About the children, it is not your desire to specially start with Poor Law children except that the children are there and you have to deal with them?—Yes, that is it.

40414. All that you are claiming is that the same standard of living, the same standard of comfort that they have in a scattered home should be possible when they are with their mother?—Yes.

40415. You do not of choice want to start with these, only there they are and you are obliged to start with them?—Yes.

40416. If you could start with the strong and virile you would do that, would you not?—At once.

40417. The object of your consideration is not the parent, but the child all the time?—That is it.

40418. It is an economy to the State to bring the child up physically and mentally and morally as strong as possible, is it not?—That has just answered the question as well as asked it.

National poor rate to be accompanied by settled principles as to relief and uniform treatment.

40419. With regard to the subject of State taxation or national taxation, you have not any notion that each individual board is going to dig their hands in and take out just as much as they please, have you?—No. I think we have order.

40420. You quite recognise that there would have to be settled rules and settled principles on which relief is given which would have to be settled by the nation; and your real idea is to get uniformity of treatment all over the country?—Certainly.

40421. Even if that uniformity does not come up to what you want you are willing that that shall be done?—Until I can fight for a better.

40422. You trust to agitation and education to get what you want?—Yes.

40423. But you do not want, and you have no idea, that each board should use the national funds just as they please?—No. You see, there would be a protection that they would not do that, exactly the same as there is now, because the men that were disposing of this money that we should be getting from the national Exchequer would be the men that would pay the most of it; and they would look after it that we did not dip too deep.

40424. With regard to the clerks doing two or three jobs, your idea is one man one job?—Yes, where we can pay a wage for him doing this one job.

40425. You never give a workman two jobs, do you, and pay him two salaries?—Very rarely I have found it.

40426. Never, perhaps?—I have never seen it operating yet.

40427. It is only the kind of person you refer to in (k) who is able to carry out these double duties?—Yes.

40428. As to policies changing and officers not carrying out the changed policy—Sir Samuel Provis will excuse my saying this, but at the Local Government Board very often the policy changes but the officers do not change; the officers are there and they carry out the wishes of the powers that be for the time being?—Yes.

40429. The same thing would operate, would it not, with a board of guardians?—Exactly; as far as I can see, it would.

40430. Is it true that there is a dearth of skilled people in Huddersfield, or in any town that you know of where there is unemployment?—No, I do not know of that.

40431. Is it not true that the skilled trade unions pay large sums of money each year in out-of-work benefit?—That is so with us.

40432. That has been so in the unions in your time?—Yes.

40433. Therefore, there does not appear to be a big demand for more skilled people?—No; and the returns of our country tell us that we have any amount of skilled labour.

40434. Therefore, although you want boys and girls trained in the most efficient manner possible, yet at the same time you point out that skilled people even nowadays are out of employment?—Yes.

40435. Where do you propose to get the money from to do these things?—As I told you, I should first of all have a graduated income-tax.

40436. I notice that you tell us there is plenty of money already raised?—Yes.

40437. Would you get it by a graduated income-tax and any other taxes?—The taxes should be differentiated—that is, taxes on unearned incomes would be differently taxed to the income that a man has earned. Supposing, for instance, I was fortunate enough to have about £500,000 in railway stocks or shares, I could afford to have about 15 per cent. of that paid back to the State, because I never lift my hand to earn it.

40438. (Chairman.) You would have a graduated income-tax and a classification besides?—Yes.

40439. (Mr. Lansbury.) About loafers; there are a good many people who are loafers besides those in the workhouse, are there not?—According to my classification I can find them.

40440. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to phthisis, you have special wards provided in the Huddersfield infirmary, have you not, for those cases?—Yes. What we call the No. 3 Hospital is specially adapted for this class of cases.

40441. Is it set apart for that class only?—Yes.

40442. Since that has been done have you found that people will go in more readily than before?—No, we have not.

40443. What is their objection?—Their objection is that they fear it is the last turn-over when they are going up there. Not only that, but they do not like to leave home.

40444. Do you sympathise with that feeling?—No, I do not sympathise with it. I think it would be better for themselves, and better for the nation, and better for those that they are leaving.

40445. Cannot you persuade them to go in when they are a danger to others?—I have never been able to induce them to go in yet.

40446. Have you tried it personally?—Yes.

40447. (Chairman.) What is the objection? Is it because the relief is associated with the Poor Law?—It is on this account—there is a stigma somewhere which is getting hold of all the poor about this institution.

40448. I suppose there are two objections—one objection being that they do not want to give up their liberty and their employment, and the other objection that the institution they are going to is connected with the Poor Law?—Yes.

40449. Do you think that second objection is a strong objection?—Yes. The objection is not because they fear the loss of their employment or anything of that sort.

40450. It is rather the stigma of going into pauperism?—Yes.

40451. (Mr. Bentham.) I thought you said, speaking of the principle that animated them, that they had an objection to leaving home?—I might divide it between its character as they think about it and the attachment they have for their home.

40452. When you used the word "stigma" just now did you mean a deep sense of independence?—Yes.

40453. Is that deep sense of independence in the minds of the people superior, as it were, and stronger than you

Mr. W. Wheatley.

12 Feb. 1907.

The demand for skilled workmen.

Need for a graduated and differentiated income-tax.

Poor Law provision for phthisis cases at Huddersfield and need for compulsory powers of removing such cases to hospital.

Objections to ruralist appointments.

Difficulty of giving guardians greater freedom over appointment of officers.

Mr. W.
Whitley.

12 Feb. 1907.

Poor Law
provision for phthisis cases at Huddersfield and
need for compulsory powers of removing such cases to hospital.

Proposed change in method of appointing chairman of board of
guardians.

would like to see it?—You will have to qualify that. What I mean, for instance, is this: We will take you and me; we are two sensible chaps, but neither of us, even if we unfortunately were suffering with phthisis, would like to think that we were going to rest our heads in that institution. With the training that we have had, you with the longer number of years than myself, and me with the short period that I have had, we might get over the scruple; I could get over the scruple if I thought it were bound to do me good physically and with the experience I have had these last three years. But I have to allow for my fellow-worker, with his knowledge and surroundings. He has not seen these things the same as I have, and he has a feeling that he wants to stay at home. That feeling has to be removed, and whether it has to be removed by force or whether we can do it by persuasion I am not certain, but of course it will have to be done, and if it needs force to remove them then I should use force.

40454. Is not their feeling for the children—that is, that they should protect the children against being infected like themselves by phthisis—a strong enough inducement?—It is not.

40455. In another paragraph (J) in your statement you refer to the chairman of the board of guardians retaining office; what do you mean by that?—I thought I made it clear to the Chairman.

40456. Your answer to the Chairman on the point was that he should act as returning officer; by retaining office, do you mean that he should be a permanent chairman of the board of guardians?—No. He should retain his office as chairman until the board assembled again.

40457. Supposing he is a candidate, could he act as returning officer, do you think, and be a candidate at the same time, or would you debar him from being a candidate?—You see we can now co-opt one, two or three members, and I think we should co-opt our late chairman before we retired.

40458. Could you do that?—I want the power to do so.

40459. You can only co-opt after you have re-assembled?—I ask for power in my suggestion to do that before, just exactly the same as is the case with the mayor.

MISS EMILY FRANCES SIDDON and Mr. ELI WHITWAM, called; and Examined.

Miss E.
F. Siddon,
Mr. E.
Whitwam.

12 Feb. 1907.

The proper cases for out-relief.

The class of persons applying for relief at Huddersfield.
The chief causes of pauperism at Huddersfield.
Effect of Local Government Act, 1894, on the personnel of the
guardians.

40471. (Chairman.) I understand, Miss Siddon, you have been a guardian of the Huddersfield Union since 1882?—(Miss Siddon.) That is so.

40472. And you have served in many capacities; you were for four years vice-chairman?—Yes.

40473. I understand that you refused the office of chairman?—Several times.

40474. I hope you are not the only lady on your board?—I am not the only lady on the board.

40475. I believe you have prepared a statement which we shall be glad if you will hand in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

1. I believe outdoor relief in cases of respectable old people when properly cared for, and of deserving widows with children, is a desirable and proper course, always provided such cases are carefully supervised and safeguarded.

2. In the Huddersfield Union the persons who apply for relief are mostly old people, and widows with children, and of course sick people.

3. Want of thrift more than anything else, and of course misfortune of various kinds, are the chief causes of pauperism.

4. The class of persons seeking election as guardians has changed very much since the Act of 1894, and I, personally, do not consider the change is proving beneficial, either to the real interests of the ratepayers or of the poor.

5. I think the principles of the Poor Law are sound, but I should like to see some reforms. Amongst others are:—(a) The amendment of the Infant Life Protection 40460. Would you make it a rule that the chairman should be co-opted for the following term of office; is that your proposition?—Yes, exactly the same as a mayor is elected.

40461. What salary has your clerk?—He has £150.

40462. That is as clerk to the guardians?—Yes, and then he has £65 for the assessment committee.

40463. Has he anything else?—There is nothing else, only the election income, and that runs to about £90.

40464. Every three years?—Yes.

40465. Would you not have to pay more than £215 every year for a good clerk?—I may be rather unjust, but I think that we ought to be able for that—it is really £250 a year, or close upon it—to get an efficient man to serve for the purpose that we have in our office. That is my individual opinion.

40466. You think it is enough for the post, do you—that is the point?—Yes.

40467. After all, I suppose you believe in every man having a proper reward for his labour?—Yes. But I think £6 a week for the duties performed here where there is only £30,000 in capital turned over, including all the establishment charges, asylums, out-relief—all the lot—is enough. We only pay our borough treasurer £500 a year, and he turns over and is responsible for the watching of loans and bonds of different amounts totalling up altogether to £3,000,000.

40468. Is he satisfied?—He has never asked for an advance.

40469. With regard to pauperism generally, there has been a rise in recent years; has the number of people in receipt of relief during the period of growing trade in the Huddersfield district risen?—Yes.

40470. How do you account for that?—Although we have had a growing trade in the textile industry we have had simply nothing going on in the building trades. I have watched my duty most carefully with every applicant who has come before me, and I can truthfully say that never a penny has passed my judgment that I have regretted; I mean to say, there has been sickness or there has been some cause whereby this relief ought to have been given. Now you observed us the other day; and if you think that we over-stepped our duty in our division—well then, I am at a loss.

Act so as to include all single child cases and cases where a "lump sum" is paid down. (b) Powers to deal with vagrants' children to take them out of the hands of children, quasi parents. (c) In all cases I would remove children from workhouses, and from all contact with adult paupers. In my opinion the boarding-out system in cases where it is possible is the ideal one, associated with the plan of scattered homes, quite away from the workhouse—not to contain more than ten children at most (eight would be better) in each home, of mixed girls and boys. (d) I also wish for more power of control over immoral and feeble-minded girls and women. And (e) I think cases of phthisis should be compulsorily detained for treatment in properly adapted hospitals.

40476. (Chairman.) I believe, Mr. Whitwam, you have been a member of the Huddersfield Board of Guardians for nearly twenty years?—(Mr. Whitwam.) That is so.

40477. I believe you also have prepared a statement which you will hand in?—Yes.

(The Witness handed in the following statement.)

1. I was first elected on the Huddersfield Board of Guardians, in April, 1887, and have sat continuously for the west ward of the township of Huddersfield during the whole period.

2. I have been permitted to sit on every kind of committee of which the board has been composed—and by the suffrages of my colleagues, I was for four years vice-chairman of the board; and afterwards four years chairman. I was also president of the Yorkshire Poor Law Conference in 1904.

3. In my opinion, the broad principles of the Poor Law are sound, humane, and just; and in my twenty years'

The emoluments of the clerk to the guardians Hudders-
field.

Increasing
pauperism
Hudders-
field.

Suggested reforms as to children, feeble-minded women and phthisis.

experience I have found it to be a very great boon, and blessing and help to innumerable poor persons in their time of adversity and need.

4. In making the above observation I am far from saying or believing that it is a perfect code—I have seen the list of suggestions forwarded by the Huddersfield Board of Guardians, of amendments in the law and procedure, and with the majority of those I cordially agree; but I am quite satisfied that so long as human nature remains what it is, a Poor Law will be required—and in my opinion the present system has stood a severe testing, and is far superior to any system that has come under my notice.

5. My first seven years as a guardian were served under the old qualification law, and the last thirteen years under the new system inaugurated by the Act of 1894.

6. I have no hesitation in saying that the Poor Law was better administered before the 1894 Act came into force: doing away with the qualification was a mistake—because since that era the administrator and recipient have been placed very nearly on a level; many of them of course quite unaccustomed to the distribution of monies raised from the public—and the common error into which they all fall is of regarding the poor fund as a charity which they may distribute according to sentiment—instead of an enforced levy compulsorily taken from the pockets of the poor as well as of the well-to-do, and which ought to be administered on different principles altogether.

7. Mr. Chaplin's Circular of 1900 was, on the whole, injurious—to the general body of the public. Guardians were exhorted to deviate from the old basis of destitution—or at any rate to adopt a very much wider definition, and to attempt to adjudicate on the deserving; this advice was readily made use of as a lever for wholesale increases in the relief given and often with little or no investigation.

8. One-third of the members of our board, are friendly society members, and in my opinion it does not conduce to good administration that so many representatives of one section of society should have so much power in the distribution of relief.

9. The board is composed of seventy-two members; this I think far too large a body for all practical purposes. I should like to exchange quantity for quality—and to reduce it, say, by one-half: it ought also to be elected on different lines. I have not thought out any scheme, but submit that it might be possible to select guardians from other public bodies.

Say, for example, the Huddersfield Corporation, to elect so many, and each of the twenty-two urban district councils, in the area of the union, to elect a number proportioned to their rateable value, population, and area.

40478. (Chairman.) There are certain suggestions you make, Miss Siddon, in regard to the amendment of the Poor Law. I should like to ask you, on the whole, do you think the principles of the Poor Law work well?—(Miss Siddon.) Yes, certainly, I think they work well. Of course, like other human institutions, they are capable of considerable improvement, which I hope will be brought about in many ways.

40479. Do you notice much difference in the tendency or ideas of guardians since 1894 when the new Act came into operation?—Yes, in many ways.

40480. To put it roughly, is the idea of certain of the guardians rather to help poverty than to relieve destitution?—I think so far as my own board is concerned there is a very decided tendency to almost a sentimental dealing with cases of destitution and of distress. There is a very great difference in that respect, I think. The composition of the board of guardians since that time is, I think I may say, essentially different, and it is working in that direction.

40481. As regards reforms, you would suggest an alteration of the Infant Life Protection Act so as to include all single child cases?—Yes, that is so. I have seen so many instances of single cases in our own district, and I am distinctly of opinion that inspection in all such one child cases is very desirable indeed.

40482. Next you would like power to deal with the children of vagrants?—Yes.

40483. You say, "To take them out of the custody of quasi parents." Do you mean to say that they are only parents in name, or that the children do not belong to them?—It might be one thing or the other. They are perhaps parents in name, but at any rate they are not parents in fact and in the proper care of their children; that is what I think I meant. We see many distressing cases, and I suppose it is the case all over the country, of these parents taking children about with them in all sorts of bad weather and over bad roads, and in some instances the result is very distressing, indeed fatal to the children.

40484. We have had evidence that a considerable proportion of the vagrants' children look extremely well considering the life they lead?—I am very glad to hear that; it is not my experience.

40485. It is not your experience?—Certainly not; I will not say some do look well, but I have seen some that look extremely deplorable.

40486. Would you go so far as to say the hardship of the life they are subjected to in their tender years affects them throughout life?—Perhaps I am hardly justified in going so far; I have a great dislike of exaggeration, but certainly it has had a very distressing effect upon their life, both mentally and physically.

40487. Going on to the children that come under your control as guardian, you like the system of boarding-out associated with scattered homes?—Yes, distinctly.

40488. You put ten as the maximum that a foster mother can look after?—I should prefer eight.

40489. In Huddersfield what is the practice: do certain guardians take special interest in the individual scattered homes and in the children?—There is a children's committee appointed every year by the board.

40490. So you get to know practically I suppose that there is some guardian who personally knows, or is interested in, almost every child in the homes?—Yes.

40491. That is rather the result of the system, is it not?—Yes, I think that is so. Perhaps I ought to say I am myself the superintendent under the Local Government Board of the children's homes, and I am also Chairman of the children's committee, and I do take an individual interest in every child and in every case.

40492. Have you been able to follow those cases up after they have left you when they have gone into employment?—Do you mean the children who have been in the children's homes or the children generally speaking?

40493. I mean the children who have been in the children's homes?—The children's homes have only been established five years so far; I know all about the work, but of course there has not been much time for history.

40494. You have not had time to see the result?—I have time, but sufficient time has not elapsed yet.

40495. What is the policy of the board at Huddersfield in dealing with widows with large families? Do they take away certain of the children and school them?—No, they do not; that is not the policy of the board certainly; it has been done in exceptional instances, but as the policy of the board it is not so.

40496. Are any of the children who are in the scattered homes taken from families who are in Huddersfield, and would those children ever come in contact with their relations?—Yes, it does happen in some cases, generally with unfortunate results.

40497. It was suggested to us by some witnesses that in certain cases the result of the scattered homes system was that the children were well looked after and made to look tidy and clean and when they came in contact with their relatives whom they saw dirty and untidy it further had rather an unfortunate effect?—I do not know that it has prevailed to that extent; they have only seen their relatives under supervision, so to speak, that is of course when the relatives have been undesirable. I have not found that to be the cause at all, but of course it unsettles the children when their relatives get hold of them.

40498. Would you like to extend the age of adoption of children?—Yes, I think I should.

40499. To what age would you like to extend it?—Fifteen or sixteen.

40500. Is that long enough, do you think?—Yes, I think it ought to be in our district.

Miss E.
F. Siddon,
Mr. E.
Whitwam.

12 Feb. 1907.

Method of dealing with
Poor Law
children at Huddersfield.

Method of dealing with widows and their families at Huddersfield

Bad influence of relatives on Poor Law
children and need for powers of adoption by guardians.

Miss E.
F. Siddon,
Mr. E.
Whitwam.

12 Feb. 1907.

Need for further control by guardians over feeble-minded and immoral
women.

Difficulties as to compulsory powers of detention of phthisis
cases.

Proposal to make phthisis
compulsorily
notifiable and treated at the expense of the State without stigma.

Question as to detention of ins-and-outs.

40501. Your next wish is to have more control over feeble-minded and immoral girls and women?—I suppose that probably is the wish of almost any guardian who has had any experience of such cases.

40502. The evidence we have had is almost unanimous on that point?—Yes. I do not suppose I have anything new to take up your time with upon that score.

40503. Cases of phthisis you would like to compulsorily detain?—Yes, I am extremely interested in those cases, and I should like to see something of that kind. I am aware it is a very difficult question.

40504. One of the difficulties is the length of time required for the treatment of the case?—That is so.

40505. And you say that one of the deterrent causes preventing people in the early stages of phthisis from declaring it is the fear of losing their employment?—I have no doubt that is so to a great extent; of course, that is one of the difficulties.

40506. Have you thought out at all any scheme or plan for dealing with phthisis, because the difficulty which naturally suggests itself is, that if you compulsorily force persons in the early stage of phthisis to go into hospital, you must make yourself responsible, not only for their maintenance, but also the maintenance of their children?—That is so, of course; I think that must be so. I attended the Conference last year in Paris with reference to this subject, and I have followed it up a good deal since then. I represented my Board there, and I should very much like to see inspection of houses in which there are cases of phthisis.

40507. You would make it a notifiable disease?—Yes, and also that the home should be visited and precautions taken.

40508. Without pledging yourself as to details your inclination would rather be to treat it as an infectious disease?—Which in my opinion it undoubtedly is. We have a great deal of it, perhaps almost more than our share in the north, possibly owing to climatic influences, and I have seen some very painful results.

40509. Does factory life conduce to it?—That I am not quite sure about; it depends a good deal on the factories. There is so much being done in our neighbourhood now (of course, I am only speaking for that) with regard to the sanitary conditions of the operatives that that danger is at any rate very considerably lessened, I think.

40510. It has been pointed out to us that in certain cases of notifiable infectious diseases the patient is kept at the expense of the State. Your inclination I gather, is rather to go in that direction as regards phthisis?—I am afraid I do not see any other alternative, but I think the great danger of these phthisical cases is having these patients in their own homes, they spread contagion to such a very great extent.

40511. (Mrs. Webb.) May I ask whether if you detain the case compulsorily, you would make the man a pauper, or detain him as an infectious disease is detained by the municipality?—I prefer that.

40512. You prefer that phthisis should be treated by the municipality, and not as a question of pauperism?—I can hardly answer that question because there is hardly any provision for that; it is rather premature, is it not?

40513. It is rather important because the municipal authorities at present deal with other infectious diseases without charge or the stigma of pauperism?—You mean should I like all the cases of phthisis to be treated by the municipal authorities, apart from the guardians.

40514. Yes, without the stigma of pauperism, that is rather what I want to come to?—I have not really thought that out very much.

40515. If you detain a man compulsorily, it seems rather hard to make him a pauper?—I quite see that, that is rather one of the difficulties.

40516. (Chairman.) I thought the evidence was rather to the effect that the person would not be treated as a pauper if he were compulsorily detained?—I should very much like to see that if powers could be granted to that extent.

40517. You have had great experience as a guardian, would you like to have a general power of detention of persons in workhouses so as to prevent these ins-and-outs discharging themselves whenever they like?—I do not know that I am prepared to agree to quite such a sweeping thing as that. I think there should be some definition of what guardians should do, which would be desirable in that condition of things.

40518. Have you in your experience come across cases where people have discharged themselves at times most convenient to themselves?—Yes, undoubtedly in very large quantities, but I took it your question meant the compulsory detention of all such cases.

40519. That if a person went into the workhouse he should not be able to get out just when it suited his convenience?—They have now, as you are aware, to give a long notice which we find to be a deterrent in some cases. I think only in that direction it is desirable in certain cases.

40520. Is there anything else you would like to add, because your experience is so very exceptional that we should be glad to hear anything you would care to say?—I do not wish to take up your time because there are more valuable witnesses to follow. I have seen a very great improvement, and seen it with very much pleasure, in the nursing arrangements; I hope that more may come in that direction. When I was first a guardian, at Crossland Moor Workhouse we had an old woman, in an old coal-scuttle bonnet as old as herself, to attend to all the cases there. We have now ten nurses; and at Dean House, which is really a sort of, I think I might call it, home for the chronic infirm and old people, we have five nurses, where there was formerly only one, not trained. I should like to mention that at one time (Mr. Bentham will know about it) there was a scheme brought forward in Yorkshire with regard to uniformity and a sort of combination of the arrangements for nursing through Yorkshire for small and large workhouses. There was a comprehensive scheme propounded and a Committee was formed; I do not know why, but that has apparently been lost sight of altogether. It seemed to me that that would have been a considerable improvement in the nursing arrangements not only in our larger workhouses but certainly in the smaller country ones.

40521. It was a sort of county combination?—Yes. I simply mention that because if it should come into your way to enquire into that I think it would certainly make for good.

40522. Was the county combination confined to infirmaries or did it apply to all the institutions under the Poor Law?—To all workhouse infirmaries, large and small.

40523. To secure uniformity of treatment throughout?—Yes, and to assist the smaller workhouses.

40524. Have you tried classification much in Huddersfield?—Not so much as in other unions, but to some extent.

40525. You have nothing like in Sheffield where they have Classes A, B., and C.?—We have classes for good behaviour and so on in which they have privileges; they are Classes 1, 2, and 3.

40526. Is Class 1 allowed very considerable liberty of going in and out?—Yes, and also what they very dearly love, tobacco and snuff and privileges of various kinds. Class No. 2 has smaller quantities of tobacco and snuff and smaller privileges.

40527. How are they classified, by their antecedents as they come in?—Yes, by their past careers to some extent, and also we take into consideration (I think we are extremely lenient in this matter and I am very glad we are) their conduct after they have been a short time in the workhouse. Then the guardians decide which of these classes they shall be put into.

40528. You put down and you put up people as they behave?—Yes.

40529. I suppose that is a good instrument in maintaining discipline?—I think the very best; human nature being what it is, I think it is very satisfactory.

40530. Is it felt in the workhouse to be rather a stigma to be put down from one class to another?—I think so, undoubtedly.

40531. Your board is a very large one?—(Mr. Whitwam.) That is so. There are seventy-two members all told; seventy-one elected and one co-opted.

Improvements in Po-Law nursin

Proposed Yorkshire
Combination
Nursing Scheme.

Method of classifying
workhouse inmates at Hudders-
field.

Number of members on Huddersfield
Board of Guardians.

40532. You do not want it so large for business purposes?—We do not 40533. It is due I suppose to the incorporation of a number of rural parishes?—That is so.

40534. You think that since the Act of 1894 the tendency of the guardians has been to treat the poor fund as a charity?—That is so.

40535. You think that the Circular of 1900 rather tended to confirm that idea in the minds of the guardians?—Yes, that is shown by the very fact that for the year ended Lady Day, 1900, we were giving out-relief to the extent of £7,385, and for the year ended 1906, Lady-Day, we had risen up to the remarkable figure of £12,577.

40536. There was a great change in the board, was there not, some years ago, when a large number came on who were friendly society members?—Yes.

40537. Can you tell us what was the cause of that change?—We have certainly not had the interest taken in the board of guardians, and have not representatives there, that we ought to have had, it has never been considered of that benefit, the standard has not been high enough; in a way anyone could be made a member of the board of guardians. That has been the spirit for a great length of time. We have men on even now who are what you might call retired shop-keepers, tradesmen, and so forth. They simply come there, as it were, to spend the time; they never take any active part in connection with the work of the board from meeting to meeting. Of course that is not what we want—we want good business men if it is possible. We always get the most work out of the busiest men; with them there is not that leniency, they will not let their hearts run away with their judgment, or let their feelings take away what their good judgment is. I am afraid we have allowed things to go simply on sympathy.

40538. What was the cause of the friendly societies bestirring themselves?—In the first place they began to say that thrift should be recognised, and, of course, as you are aware, there was a permissive Bill giving guardians the option of not taking into account any subscription or sick-pay which they got from the friendly societies. Of course, they dealt largely with that, they waited upon the board, or rather asked to wait upon the board, and the board in its weak moment I am afraid made a mistake; it would not see them, and that caused a little bit of friction. The then president of the friendly societies set to work because they were determined they would have some representation on the board. That was, I think, in 1901.

40539. Did they bestir themselves because the board declined rather to recognise the principle of the change of the law?—They wanted to be heard on it, but after that, as you are aware, it became compulsory, but betwixt then and it becoming compulsory they determined they would themselves get on the board and see if they could not make an entire alteration in the administration of relief, and certainly they have been very successful in getting their members on. In 1904 they made the number rise to twenty-three friendly society members, and they have certainly taken action in such a way that they have been able to give relief without any opposition, as it were.

40540. They have increased the amount of out-door relief?—That is so.

40541. If their object is to encourage thrift has not their action on the board operated in the other direction?—As one individual, I think so. I think it is a mistake to make it too easy for those seeking relief, it is destroying their independence, it is contrary to what the Poor Law was originated for, which was simply to relieve destitution.

40342. Should you say that since the last election any considerable proportion of those in receipt of out-relief belong to friendly societies?—We have not such a very great number, as far as that is concerned, but, independent of that, whether they be of that class or not, they determined that everybody in receipt of Poor Law relief should be what they are called adequately relieved. It is a difficult matter to draw a line as to what is adequate.

40543. Is there a scale?—No, we have no tied scale.

40544. What is the general practice of the board; what do you consider adequate relief to a widow with young children, for instance?—Formerly I dare say we were somewhat little in that respect, we gave perhaps 2s. 6d.

for a grown-up person and 1s. 6d. for a child. We have raised that to double that practically.

40545. Was the supposition that that was sufficient, or that there were resources which were concealed?—In some cases I find that the relief has gone up because we have not had that investigation which we ought to have, we are short of that, because the cases have mounted up to such a quantity now that the relieving officers which we have are not able to cope with it. They cannot give that visitation which the matter ought to have.

40546. I understand that since the number of recipients of out-relief has increased the amount given to the individuals has also increased?—That is so.

40547. It has increased both ways?—That is so.

40548. Is this still continuing?—We are still going up. I will show you a statement of what occurred at the last meeting of our board. (Same produced.)

40549. Huddersfield is supposed to be exceptionally prosperous just now?—Exceptionally so, it has been so for the last half-dozen years, or even more than that.

40550. The distress committee, I understand, disbanded itself?—That is so; there was nothing for them to do. It is in a prosperous time that our out-relief has been going up so extensively.

40551. Do you say that this increase is largely due to the action of the representatives of, or the persons who were returned by, the friendly societies?—To a great extent. It is certainly their intention to rule the board, if possible. They are sending this pamphlet out now. (Same produced.)

40552. (Miss Hill.) That is on the eve of the election?—Yes, elections are a great deal to do with the conduct of our board. (Miss Siddon): Some of the members.

40553. (Chairman.) They lay down here that not less than 5s. a week for the destitute should be the amount given. Should you say that all the societies mentioned here, the working men's clubs and the kindred thrift societies combine to support this policy?—(Mr. Whitwam) They are trying to make it far more extensive now; they are putting others in.

40554. When is your next election?—In March. That is being issued now. You will see at the bottom they ask to be supported, so that they may be a majority on the board. They say that they live amongst them and know their requirements and what they ought to have. I have said something in my evidence as to the constitution of the board. Perhaps you will be giving that attention, you are here as experts and I have no doubt you will do something as to the formation of boards of guardians in future.

40555. In your judgment seventy-two is too large a number?—I think so.

40556. What should you say was a good number to carry on all the business and supply sufficient for the committees?—I think one-half is quite sufficient for what we have to do.

40557. Thirty-six?—Yes.

40558. How many relief committees have you?—Five relief committees.

40559. And they sit once a week?—Once a fortnight.

40560. Is the whole board divided amongst them?—That is so.

40561. What is the average attendance?—We have good attendances; there is no difficulty about having them there.

40562. On the committees?—Yes, there is no difficulty about that. Of course, it is a difficult matter to rule a board like that. Three of your members were present the other day, and I think they had a sample of how our board's business is carried forward.

40563. (Sir Samuel Provis.) You have some rural parishes in the union, have you, besides the urban district?—They are all urban, really.

40564. Your suggestion would be that the board of guardians should be made up of delegates from the county council and urban district councils?—Some- thing like the education committee: I think that better men would be got, more business men, men more fitted for the position.

Miss E.
F. Siddon,
Mr. E.
Whitwam.

12 Feb. 1907.

- Miss E. F. Siddon, Mr. E. Whitwam.*
12 Feb. 1907.
40565. In that case you would not get, would you, men specially elected who were well qualified to deal with the relief of the poor?—I think those that had the power would try to follow that out.
40566. If they were selected from their own body they would be persons who had been elected members of the district council not on account of their special qualifications for Poor Law purposes, therefore they might not be particularly interested?—That is, of course, always the case, you cannot govern that exactly. I would leave room for co-opting a few members. So far as that is concerned, all I ask is that something should be done in order that we should have a higher standard of persons serving on boards of guardians.
40567. I suppose you have wards now?—Yes.
40568. Would you get rid of the wards?—In this case I am afraid you would if you did something like that; this is simply a suggestion. I am not wedded to the scheme, but it may be a means of bringing something out in order to get better men to carry on the administration of the Poor Law.
40569. With regard to the county arrangement as to nurses that you were referring to, was it intended that there should be a sort of scale, a graduation, I should perhaps say, amongst the nurses, so that they should go first to small workhouses and gradually work up?—(Miss Siddon.) Yes, there was to be a sort of interchange. I am afraid I do not remember the exact details. That was the chief idea so far as I remember. That scheme seems to have been quietly dropped altogether. I just mentioned it because I thought it might be within your powers to deal with it.
40570. It is certainly very interesting?—Personally I was disappointed when it was dropped.
40571. It was limited to nurses?—It was entirely for nurses. No doubt Mr. Bentham could tell you more about it than I can. I believe he was vice-president of the Committee.
40572. (Miss Hill.) You said the Scattered Homes were only established about five years ago?—That is so.
40573. You knew the training in the days when the children were all at the large school?—Yes, at the school in the workhouse. We had the school within the workhouse grounds, the buildings were quite separate from the workhouse, but they were school quarters for the children within the workhouse walls.
40574. Were those large schools?—The numbers decreased so very largely. When I was first a guardian, we used to have from seventy to 100 children and upwards; at the time when our Scattered Homes were built we had, I think, something between twenty and thirty. We have now, for the size of the union, an unusually small number of children in the homes. We have about thirty-one, I think.
40575. Can you account for that at all? Do you know why it is?—I have tried over and over again; I really cannot give any satisfactory solution of it at all. One thing is, we take very much more care about getting the children who come under our care out. The boarding-out system with us I consider is a distinct success. We do not entrust the visiting of the children to the relieving officers, they have nothing whatever to do with them.
40576. That is boarded-out within the union?—Yes.
40577. You have a good many boarded-out within the union?—Yes, we have.
40578. Do you think, as far as you can judge with this short experience, that the result of the Scattered Homes will be markedly different from that of the workhouse schools?—Yes, I think so undoubtedly, it takes them entirely away from any surroundings of the kind, and the children are very much more normal, I think, and healthier in every way.
40579. You did not find the result of the school satisfactory?—I cannot say that; we were eminently fortunate in having officials at the workhouse who took very intelligent care of the children; but, of course, there was always the atmosphere. I feel sure the children are infinitely better without that, even with the short experience we have had.
40580. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) How would the cost of the two compare?—Curiously enough the cost of the homes is somewhat less per head than when the children were in the workhouse.
40581. Do you know what the cost is per head per child per week?—In the homes or the workhouse?
40582. In the Scattered Homes, taking everything?—It was 8s. 7½d. last year; that includes the whole of the charges.
40583. Including the building of the homes?—Yes, that is so. They cost rather more per head in the workhouse. That is a feature for which I am very thankful, because the guardians on my board were very much opposed to the Scattered Homes system. I, with some kind support, had to fight the battle and we did it with great difficulty.
40584. With regard to the reduction you propose from seventy-two to thirty-six, does each ward return a member of the board of guardians now or how is it?—(Mr. Whitwam.) In some cases there are four and in some cases there are six.
40585. From each ward?—Yes.
40586. How would you propose to reduce that, assuming that the present system remained and that it was an elected board of guardians?—I think I should knock off from each ward so many.
40587. Who would do that?—I suppose, as far as you are concerned, you would be able to make some recommendation which may come to something which will be practicable.
40588. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Could you give us any idea whether the friendly society members are as careful in distributing Poor Law relief as they would be with the funds of their own societies?—I do not think they are.
40589. I take it they are very judicious with their own funds and one would expect them to make very good guardians. Do you think they regard it differently?—I do think so, they think there is money, you may as well have it, we want you to be well done for and have plenty to go on with. They have considered up to now that we have practically starved them and they think they ought to have more money and be made easy and comfortable.
40590. I think you said you have doubled the amount of relief you give to widows with children. Would you now give 3s. for each child?—We generally deal according to circumstances. There are other things to take into account many a time, and it is necessary to deal with each case on its own merits.
40591. Do you encourage the mothers of children to go out to work, or do you prefer them to stay at home and look after the children?—We encourage them to go out to work. (Miss Siddon.) Not in all cases.
40592. I understand part of the board prefers the mother to stay and look after the children?—(Mr. Whitwam.) It all depends on how they are situated. In some cases they have mothers living with them and they can leave the children with them. It is better, I think for the woman to be out and working, although not always.
40593. You would take into consideration what was to become of the children?—Certainly. That is a very great point. The children at any rate are what we want to look after for the future.
40594. Could you explain to us what exactly is your position as superintendent of the children. I think we have not heard of that before?—(Miss Siddon.) Unfortunately I do not enjoy any salary; that is one difference.
40595. It is an honorary position?—An honorary position entirely. We have an extremely kind and sympathetic inspector for our district who has always so far been pleased to speak with satisfaction of my efforts, and he has renewed the appointment from year to year.
40596. It is an official appointment?—It is sanctioned by the Local Government Board; it is not official in any other sense; as I say, it does not carry any remuneration.
40597. You do not do it simply as one private guardian; you do it from an official position as superintendent?—Yes, I expect it is rather an anomaly really, but that is what prevails. The clerk, Mr. Rigby, is associated with me.
40598. That gives you power to enter and report?—I believe absolute power.

Proposed
Yorkshire
Combination
Nursing Scheme.

Results of Scattered Homes and boarding-out within the union at Huddersfield.

Cost of maintenance in Huddersfield Scattered
Homes.

Proposed reduction in membership of Huddersfield Board of Guardians.

Attitude of friendly society
guardians towards the poor fund.

The relief of widows and children at Huddersfield

Guardian as superintendent of Poor Law
children at Huddersfield

40599. Have you any system of reporting to the guardians on children who have left your care?—No system, it is reported to the Children's Committee, it is not necessarily reported to the board.

40600. In some boards they have regular yearly reports about all the children who have left their care?—A very excellent plan, but it does not prevail with us.

40601. You have no such record?—There is a regular report about the boarded-out children.

40602. Is that after they go out to service?—After they are boarded out there is a report.

40603. After they have left the care of the foster parent and become of age to work?—There is no official report.

40604. Would you favour a record being kept of them up to the age of twenty or so?—Yes, I think it would be decidedly a good thing. I have a sort of unwritten record of my own; nothing official, nothing connected with the board.

40605. Apart from such record, we really do not know how the children do in after life; the fact that they do well for a year does not tell very much?—No, it is desirable to have a record. As a matter of fact we do know, not as a board, but individually, how the children are going on.

40606. That would not be knowledge that would be available for every one?—No, it is not arranged statistically or anything of that sort.

40607. (Mr. Gardiner.) Would you like to see it a matter of legal obligation that a certain proportion of the guardians should be women?—That is a question I had almost rather you had not asked me. I think women ought to be able to do good work on boards of guardians, otherwise I should not have been on one for twenty-five years myself.

40608. I thought perhaps in the interests of the administrative work that might be so because it is so much detailed work?—Yes, I certainly think women would be useful; many of them are capable of being useful.

40609. Just like on the Education Authority they have a certain proportion of women?—Yes.

40610. Would you like to see the same principle applied to boards of guardians?—I do not think it is a very desirable reform.

40611. Are you satisfied with the size of your areas; you want the number of guardians diminished, do you want the size of the union increased?—(Mr. Whitwam) No, I should not like to see it increased, I think it is very large already.

40612. Do you think it is too large?—I think unions are better administered when they are smaller.

40613. As to the classification of the indoor poor for instance?—It might be better for that.

40614. It is rather a choice of evils, is it not?—It is a matter of opinion.

40615. (Dr. Downes.) With reference to the cost of the children's homes, a table in the annual report of your union for the year ended Lady Day 1906, gives a somewhat different total than that which you mentioned?—(Miss Siddon) I took Mr. Whitwam's figures; the cost varies a little from year to year. I see it is rather more there, but it did not occur to me to bring my figures. Mr. Rigby will be able to explain those.

40616. (Mr. Nunn.) I am looking at this election pamphlet which you kindly placed in our hands. What is the usual practice of your board with regard to the destitute and deserving aged and infirm poor. Do they get an outdoor allowance as a rule if they are able to stay out?—(Mr. Whitwam) We have always considered they did.

40617. Has it been fixed upon any definite scale?—No, the board refused to fix a scale.

40618. You refused to do that?—Yes, the guardians are of opinion that they should use their own judgment in the cases as they like.

40619. Has your board any facilities for warehousing the furniture of the home of an applicant if he has to come in temporarily with his family?—Yes, at the union offices.

40620. You do do that?—Yes.

40621. I see that they do not allow any mention of allowances during sickness to an able-bodied man here; have they instituted any pressure in that direction at all on the board?—No.

40622. When an able-bodied man falls sick, would it be the policy of the representatives of these friendly societies to deal strictly with him by the offer of the house?—No, it is seldom now we do offer the house; we cannot get such a thing now.

40623. Is not that cutting their own throats rather, to offer men a Poor Law allowance instead of encouraging them to belong to their own sick benefit clubs?—They do encourage them to be thrifty by belonging to friendly societies.

40624. At the same time they encourage them not to by offering them out-relief instead of the house?—You may put in that way, but they do it.

40625. Is it the case that your relieving officers do not take relief to the aged and infirm to their own homes?—We have a resolution of the board which says that the various relief committees can give instructions where that should be done, but it would be a very difficult matter for all our cases to have it taken to them.

40626. It is at the option of the relieving officer to give it at the pay stations?—Yes. It certainly would be a good thing if it could be done; it would be all right if it could be taken.

40627. Has the board passed any resolution with regard to the enforcing of maintenance by able-bodied sons able to support their parents?—In cases where they are capable.

40628. You have not carried out their policy in that respect?—Yes, I think that simply means where a son has not much coming in he does not want to have his own family impoverished by paying for his own parents.

40629. That is not an absolute proposal of theirs?—No.

40630. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to the formation of boards of guardians, you say in paragraph 9, "I have not thought out any scheme, but submit that it might be possible to select guardians from other public bodies." What was your idea as to that; a board that would take the place of the present board of guardians?—It would still be a board of guardians composed of different representatives.

40631. Do you want to get away from the representative directly elected by the people?—I am rather inclined to that.

40632. You think that the present mode of election makes it possible for persons to be elected on the plea of giving out of the rates something which is to the people's taste?—Yes.

40633. And that that is a mischievous policy; is that your opinion?—That is so.

40634. By the representatives from other bodies, were you thinking of the City Council or other public bodies?—Yes.

40635. Would you include representatives from charitable institutions?—As far as that is concerned I should give the board itself, when composed, power of co-opting.

40636. Would you have any representatives directly nominated by the Local Government Board?—I should very much like that.

40637. You are not afraid, are you, of more restrictions being placed upon the guardians by the central authority?—Not at all.

40638. With regard to your workhouse arrangements, I think you said there is some form of classification adopted?—Yes.

40639. Is that left in the hands of the master?—No, the committee; it is brought before the house committee.

40640. You have already provided an able-bodied section of the workhouse, I understand?—That is so.

40641. Has that been in operation long?—No, we have not put all the restrictions on to it yet.

40642. And cases are selected by the master from the ins-and-outs and put in this test house; are they then brought before a committee to sanction it?—That is so.

Miss E. F. Siddon, Mr. E. Whitwam.

12 Feb. 1907.

Policy of Huddersfield guardians as to maintenance or ers.

Proposed boards of guardians.

System of classifying workhouse inmates at Huddersfield.

Miss E.
F. Siddon,
Mr. E.
Whitwam.

12 Feb. 1907.

40643. They are given a test of work and they do not come near the other inmates?—That is the intention. We have not strictly carried it out, but we intend to isolate them from the others.

40644. Has that been brought about by having a good many ins-and-outs?—Yes, we have really found it is the same over and over again, they are out and in again; they will not work and we have a difficulty to make them work even then in many cases; some of them have been sent to prison two or three times, they would sooner be in prison than out, they say one is as good a shop as the other.

40645. What is the effect of this arrangement?—We are hoping to make it deterrent so that they shall not come to the workhouse.

40646. Is there any classification of the aged people inside the workhouse?—Yes.

40647. Whose hands is that left in?—That comes before the committee also.

40648. There are no rules, I think, you said with regard to outdoor relief?—No.

40649. In the minds of the guardians there is an unwritten law, is there not, that is, to take your test labour, that the man gets 2s. 6d., his wife 2s. 6d. and each child 1s. 6d.?—That is fixed.

40650. Was that fixed by a resolution of the board?—Yes, and sanctioned by the Local Government Board.

40651. The amount per head?—Yes.

40652. Then you have a scale of relief?—In that case. (Miss Siddon.) For that class only.

40653. Has it led to a practice being adopted; that because there is a scale fixed that scale of allowance is granted even though there might be earnings which even amounts to more than the amount granted?—(Mr. Whitwam.) That is taken into account.

40654. Do you mean that earnings are deducted?—We do not give it. (Miss Siddon.) The person does not receive the same amount for the test work. (Mr. Whitwam.) We only give them so many days.

40655. Would that be so in every section?—(Miss Siddon.) It is so in my section; I am the chairman of the Holmfirth section.

40656. Take a case like this, a man and wife and seven children and the two older children are earning together 18s. a week; that leaves the man, his wife, and five children dependent. The same relief would be granted, viz., 12s. 6d. a week on this scale, as would be granted to a man, his wife, and five children only, would it not?—The man would not have so many days given to him; he would not have so many days of work allotted to him, therefore he would not receive so much for it. I take it that is your meaning, the scale would be the same, but the work would be less, therefore the pay would be less.

40657. I thought the relief was granted for a week?—So many days in the week. That is what is done in the Holmfirth section, certainly.

40658. I suppose the week would be divided into six days and the man would be paid for each day?—That is so; it would be in proportion.

40659. (Miss Hill.) I gather that the scale per day is a standard one, but that the Committee decided, according to the circumstances of the family, how many days work are allotted to individuals?—That is so.

40660. (Mr. Bentham.) That was not done on the occasion of our visit, the instance I have given you is an actual case?—Then you did not come into the Holmfirth section.

40661. The same amount was granted in the case with 18s. a week coming in as in the case where there was no income whatever?—(Mr. Whitwam.) Was that in No. 2 section?

40662. I do not know it by number?—Mr. Rigby will answer you if there is anything different about that.

40663. It is possible to have a wide diversion in practice in the different sections?—(Miss Siddon.) I think so undoubtedly.

40664. The members sit for the district which they represent, do they not?—That is so.

40665. Is the Chairman of the Relief Committee elected for a whole year?—Yes.

40666. For other classes of case you have no scale of relief, have you, take old people for instance?—No fixed scale in any section.

40667. In the case of a widow with children is it the practice to give relief to the widow herself?—(Mr. Whitwam.) An able-bodied widow? The relief of widows with children at Huddersfield 40668. Yes, with children?—We have done that. (Miss Siddon.) That is exceptional.

40669. What is the practice?—(Mr. Whitwam.) Really in practice we ought not to do so, they say she can go out working for herself. It is the wrong principle if we do it. (Miss Siddon.) It is done practically.

40670. Take a widow with five children, if you grant relief in that case and she has no known earnings, what would you give, and how would you arrive at it?—It would depend on the age of the children.

40671. (Mrs. Webb.) If they were of school age?—You mean where the children are not able to earn?

40672. (Mr. Bentham.) Where there are no earnings?—We should give 14s. or 15s. in that case.

40673. How would you arrive at it?—Of course it depends so very much on the circumstances; sometimes there is a widow who has a sister well off next door, or a mother or sister who helps her. We should take that into consideration. I only gave that as a rough estimate. She might have somebody who would look after her children while she went out to work.

40674. In your own mind, is this so much per head for each child and so much for the widow?—As a rule, 2s. 6d. for each child, 2s. for quite an infant, and 3s. possibly for the widow. I can only speak very indefinitely because it depends so much on the circumstances of the case. We find in the country districts the neighbours help each other so much, sometimes one pays the rent, and so on; but taking it roughly you might take that as an answer I think.

40675. With regard to the children admitted to your Homes, are they admitted directly into your Scattered Homes or do they go to the workhouse?—If it can be possibly avoided they do not go to the workhouse. We have one home in the town for the children and the other two are in the country, five miles out from the town, on the edge of the moors almost. Methods of admitting children to Scattered Homes at Huddersfield

40676. Are the children received at the home in the town or at the workhouse. On the admission of the parents to the workhouse where would the children be admitted; at the workhouse or the home in town?—If possible they are taken to the home direct, in some instances they have to go to the workhouse for a night or two, but if possible they are taken to the home direct. Accommodation is getting limited so that it is necessary to say that we sometimes have to take children to the workhouse until there is room for them in one of the Homes.

40677. Is the practice then to admit them to the home or the workhouse as a general rule?—Both ways. (Mr. Whitwam.) The fact is that we were not able to get the Board to give us power to build a receiving home.

40678. You have not established a receiving home?—(Miss Siddon.) No we have not.

40679. As a matter of fact they are received at the workhouse?—(Mr. Whitwam.) It is generally so, we have no other alternative in many cases. (Miss Siddon.) We have no receiving home and at present the accommodation at the homes is too small for our requirements.

40680. (Mrs. Webb.) With regard to the inspection of the boarded-out children, I did not understand who inspected them?—The Boarding-out Committee. The inspection of children boarded out within the union at Huddersfield 40681. Is that a Committee of ladies?—No, there are some ladies on it at this present moment. (Mr. Whitwam.) Miss Siddon is on, and she visits.

40682. How often do you visit?—(Miss Siddon.) I visit the children on my special list once in six weeks. I very often see them, but every six weeks or two months I make an official visit.

40683. Is that the common case in the union?—Yes.

40684. Are they ever medically inspected?—Yes.

40685. When?—Every month, and the district medical officer sends in a return; he is paid so much a head for doing so.

Absence of out-relief rules at Huddersfield. Test labour allowances at Huddersfield.

Want of uniformity in administration of relief at Huddersfield. Guardians administering relief to their own constituents.

40686. Are their teeth attended to?—Yes, we make a point of that.

40687. How many are there of them?—Roughly speaking about thirty.

40688. I find with regard to the children who stay with their parents, the widows, there is roughly speaking about 100?—I should have thought more, but I really do not know.

40689. How do you inspect those?—There is no inspection except when the relieving officers visit them.

40690. You do not think the relieving officer is good enough for the boarded out children?—No.

40691. Then why do you think it is good enough for the widows' children?—I do not think I do.

40692. Do they ever get medically inspected?—Of course if their parents take them, otherwise I do not think they receive any medical inspection; I am not aware that they do.

40693. Do their teeth get attended to?—If the mothers call the doctor's attention to them.

40694. Not otherwise?—I am not aware of it.

40695. You do not think your board of guardians is under any responsibility for those children?—I am not prepared to say that, but not the same responsibility, certainly.

40696. How much responsibility? How far do you really see that these children are getting sufficient food and are being properly brought up?—We do not see very much in our union certainly; there has been an idea that there should be, I have wished it myself, an inspector for that particular purpose. I hope that will come. It is one of the things I should venture to hope from the result of the deliberations of this very important Commission.

40697. Do you not think that is a very important question for us to investigate?—I do.

40698. I want to draw your attention to the fact that there are 260,000 Poor Law children, and 200,000 of them are practically being brought up in homes like this?—I should deprecate any visit from the relieving officer where it could be avoided.

40699. Whom would you suggest and what would you suggest?—I should certainly suggest an inspector. I have always thought that more inspectors were wanted at, and certainly more women inspectors.

40700. What type of woman, not the relieving officer type, but a sort of sanitary inspector type, the health visitor type?—I should suggest a woman suitable for the purpose and trained for the purpose to some extent. In Huddersfield we have, as I have no doubt it is perfectly well known, two women visitors.

40701. Medical officers?—Yes.

40702. Is that the type of person which you would suggest?—Yes, certainly. Not quite so official as that, but certainly in that direction.

40703. You would regard it as very important that all those children, who are practically being brought up in a state of pauperism, should be inspected?—I should expect that such inspection would lead to very good results. I have no practical experience of it whatever, I do not know what it may be.

40704. As a board, you have not felt really responsible for those people?—No, I do not think so, Yorkshire people are somewhat sensitive and resentful of any interference with their children in their own homes.

40705. (Bishop of Ross.) You state in your précis that the boarding-out system, in cases where it is possible, is the ideal one?—That is my own experience.

40706. For suitable cases, do you consider the boarding-out system superior to the cottage home system, for cases suitable to the scattered homes?—I think that the boarding-out system is the best in cases where children are eligible for boarding-out (of course it can only prevail in those cases), because it incorporates them so entirely with the families, it grafts them so to speak on a family, and in our district it has certainly been, I think I may say, almost an unqualified success.

40707. You have boarded-out some of them in the town and some of them in the country?—Yes. In the country it is within the union, but we have given the preference I think to country townships.

40708. To what class of family have you taken them in the country?—The ordinary artisan. Of course, the larger proportion of them are mill operatives; there are several policemen and people of that kind. We always take care that the children do not go into any home where their adoption would mean money profit of any kind.

40709. You are quite satisfied that the results from the boarding-out are at least equally as good as the results from your scattered homes?—Yes, because in the boarding-out I think the children are really started, as it were, they are grafted into a family.

40710. They get more of a family instinct?—That is so.

40711. You think it is naturally the ideal?—Yes, that is my own idea.

40712. The nearer you can get back to the family, the better?—Yes, in the homes, however well they are managed and however good the foster-mother may be, it always must be to a certain extent an institution.

40713. (Chairman.) Is not pecuniary or monetary advantage one of the inducements of the foster-mothers to take these children who are boarded-out?—I think that is not a consideration really with them.

40714. You think not?—I do not think it is worth thinking of at all. We give very small pay with them, and I do not think it really has any weight with them.

40715. Has the foster-mother as a rule got other children?—Yes, very often she has unfortunately lost her own and wants to adopt one in its place. In some cases there are other children, but I should say the other is the usual case, the wish to adopt a child.

40716. Is any proportion of the class of foster-parents in such a position as that the small saving there might be from keeping a child rather on short commons would come into consideration?—There are very very few instances. As you are aware orphan children now only can receive relief under the boarding-out committee. We have in one or two instances been obliged to continue, or we have felt obliged to continue to allow the children to remain with their relatives when we should not otherwise have chosen them: it is not an ideal home, but we have continued the children there and paid for them, some of those homes are very poor, but in no cases certainly are the children in any way short of food or any necessities.

Miss E. F. Siddon, Mr. E. Whitwam.

12 Feb. 1907.

The advantages of boarding-out for certain classes of Poor Law children.

The motives of foster-parents in taking boarded-out children.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR RIGBY, called; and Examined.

40717. (Chairman.) You are the Clerk to the Guardians of the Huddersfield Union?—I am.

40718. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your evidence in chief, if you will kindly hand it in?—Very well.

(The Witness handed in the following Statements.)

1. Statistics relating to the Huddersfield Union:—

Population:
County borough	-	-	95,047
Rest of area all under urban district councils	-	-	71,599
			166,646
Inhabited houses:
County borough	-	-	22,356
Rest of area	-	-	16,627
			38,983

Houses with less than five rooms:

County borough	-	-	-	15,236
Area of union:
			acres.
County borough	-	-	-	11,854
Rest of union	-	-	-	59,757
				71,611
Rateable value:
			£
County borough	-	-	-	477,977
Rest of union	-	-	-	310,927
				£788,904

Mr. E. A. Rigby.

12 Feb. 1907.

2. The district was remarkable at the census in that there was a decrease in the population of 1,753 as compared with 1891 and the decrease was pretty general, only

ed for ther inaction of lows with children.

Station as to Huddersfield Union.

Mr. E. A. Rigby. ten townships out of the thirty-three into which the union is divided shewing an increase.

12 Feb. 1907. 3. No satisfactory explanation of the decrease has been suggested, but for a number of years statisticians have noted the very low birth-rate and marriage-rate.

4. Practically the whole of the buildings in the district are built of stone, there being an abundance of good building-stone quarried in the immediate neighbourhood.

Industries at Huddersfield. 5. The district is the centre of the woollen cloth manufacture which forms the basis of the industries of the district; some of the finest and best cloths produced as well as large quantities of cheaper grades for the ready-made clothing trade are manufactured in the district.

6. The raw material is treated in all its stages. A number of mills are occupied with the production of yarns for the Nottingham and Leicester markets. There are also a number of mills engaged in spinning cotton yarns and one of the great cotton thread firms is identified with one of the small towns in the union.

7. The water of the district, being of a very soft character, is eminently suitable for dyeing and finishing purposes and is an important factor in the prosperity of the district.

Industrial and social prosperity of Huddersfield. 8. There is plenty of employment in the staple trade of the district at fair wages; the young people and girls of the family readily find work, and, as a consequence, the majority of the people are well clothed, housed and fed.

9. As indicative of the prosperity of the district the following figures may be given as applicable to the Huddersfield district:—

	£	s.	d.
Amount standing to credit of depositors in the Yorkshire Penny Bank -	607,193	4	9
Amount standing to credit of depositors in the Huddersfield Savings Bank -	731,738	11	11
Amount standing to credit of depositors in the Huddersfield Building Society -	493,182	0	0
Amount standing to credit of depositors in the Halifax Building Society, estimated -	650,000	0	0
Amount standing to credit of depositors in the Huddersfield Co-operative Society -	185,614	0	0
A number of independent co-operative societies in the district, estimated -	10,000	0	0
	£2,677,727	16	8

10. It is generally recognised that the above deposits and shares are mainly contributed by the working class population.

11. The county borough which forms about two-thirds of the union is amongst the most advanced of those bodies.

12. The water, gas and electricity supplies are owned by the municipality, as also are the tramways, parks, free library, technical college, and municipal lodging-house.

13. The municipal debt is £3,750,000 or £39 6s. 11½d. per head of the population.

Workhouses and scattered homes at Huddersfield. 14. The only peculiarity in Poor Law administration that I would refer to is the fact that we have two workhouses, one (modern) adjacent to the town with accommodation for 500 inmates, the other five miles away with accommodation for 300, very pleasantly situated and which is reserved for the more respectable aged and for about sixty harmless lunatics and imbeciles. We have also three scattered homes for the children.

The proper classes for out-relief. 15. Wherever clean and comfortable homes can be found for respectable aged people who have fallen on evil times I am in favour of out-relief, also in the case of respectable widows with young children.

Need for exhaustive investigation of out relief cases. 16. In every case there should be exhaustive enquiries and all through the period of chargeability the relieving officer's investigations should be repeated.

The classes for indoor relief. 17. For the thriftless, shiftless, and the unemployable I should give only indoor relief.

18. A large proportion of those who apply for relief are the aged and infirm who have struggled on to the utmost and only in the last extremity sought poor relief.

19. Another large class is composed of single women who appear to eke out a living by hawking or charring or keeping a small sweet-shop or the like. The classes applying for relief and method of relieving some of the cases at Huddersfield.

20. There are many cases of sudden or temporary sickness. In one recent half-year out-relief was given to twenty-nine deserted wives. In a number of cases relief was given to men or women whose only home is the common or municipal lodging-house.

21. In many cases relief is given to an aged father or mother in order to compel some obstinate son, occasionally living under the same roof, to contribute his share to the parents' support.

22. An Italian organ-grinder, his wife and four children have had out-door relief now for one or two years and another of the same nationality, a hawker of images and his wife and three children have likewise been accorded outdoor relief to the extent of £11 in a half-year.

23. With regard to the causes of pauperism there are the usual general causes at work. Accident, misfortune, improvidence, thriftlessness, drink, idleness; examples of all these can readily be found, but I am not aware of any special causes peculiar to the Huddersfield Union. The causes of pauperism.

24. It may be remarked, that the class of persons seeking election will probably be affected by the qualification and the electorate. Now, with regard to the first, any adult free from the statutory disqualifications who has resided in any part of a union area for the twelve preceding months is qualified for election, so that very few people will be excluded on that ground. The class of persons seeking election.

25. The electorate is the most comprehensive and takes in every other qualification.

26. The Huddersfield Board of Guardians is composed of seventy-one elected members and one co-opted one. There are thirty-three townships, and at least one guardian is elected for each township.

27. In some of the country townships it means considerable out-of-pocket expenses. For example, it costs one member 2s. in railway fares to attend the board meeting and many others proportionate sums and similar expenditure to attend workhouse and other committees, and unless some method of finding these expenses for a representative be discovered, this acts by way of restricting the class with which this paragraph deals.

28. At the election of 1901, 105 persons were nominated, and of these sixteen were women, twenty-six were described as "gentlemen," meaning for the most part that they had retired from work or business and were living on their means, there were four licensed victuallers, four woollen manufacturers, and nine other representatives of various manufacturing processes, three clergymen, two Baptist ministers, three coal merchants, three insurance-agents, two grocers, one solicitor, one surgeon, fifteen others were masters on their own account, including a street news-vendor, and the rest were engaged in various occupations which in the event of election would necessitate their making arrangements with their employers for permission to discharge their duties. A considerable number of the candidates had no knowledge whatever of the duties they were anxious to discharge and at the last election (1904) twenty-three persons were elected who were absolutely new to the work.

29. I should like at this point to refer to the existence of the Huddersfield Board of a party which is promoted and returned in the interests of the friendly societies. Represented by the Friendly Society members of the Huddersfield Board of Guardians.

30. I believe that the genesis of this movement lies in the fact that in May, 1899, a deputation from the friendly societies sought an interview with the board of guardians on the subject of the adoption of the Out-Relief Friendly Societies Act of 1894. They were kept waiting some time, and whilst the board discussed the advisability of receiving them; ultimately by a majority of one vote the guardians refused to hear the deputation, and they went away feeling very indignant. policy as to relief.

31. Two bye-elections occurred shortly afterwards and supporters of the friendly society party were returned in each case.

32. At the election of 1901 they formulated a programme, held public meetings, and made a vigorous canvas and succeeded in defeating the chairman of the board and returning a number of members pledged to support their views.

Method of administering relief at Huddersfield.

Large increase in out-relief at Huddersfield since 1900.

Suggested reforms:—
“Relief Regulation Order.”
Deserted wives.
“Family income.”
Destitution.

Guardians’ officers.

33. At the election of 1904 a similar procedure was again followed and some twenty-two or three members returned. Their policy appears to be to give out-door relief in every possible case and only in the last resort to give workhouse orders and to pay special regard to the case of any members of friendly societies which may come before the board.

34. They have also advocated a reduction of officials’ salaries and resolutely opposed an increase in the staff which the Local Government Board have urged ought to be made.

35. For relief purposes the union is divided into five districts, two of them covering the county borough area and the remaining three the country portion of the union.

36. There is a relieving officer assigned to each district and under a special Order of the Local Government Board a relief committee considers and adjudicates upon the applications for relief in each district.

37. The committees meet fortnightly and act under the Out-Relief Regulation Order. There are also the following special regulations adopted by the board with which the committees must comply.

38. “Out-door relief may not be granted in any case for more than fourteen weeks at a time, nor to any able-bodied person for longer than four weeks at a time; nor to any new case for a longer period than four weeks, and each application should be treated by the relieving officer as a new application.”

39. The guardians for the wards or parishes comprised in the area form the committees.

40. The table which follows shews the number of persons relieved and the amount paid during the half-year ending Michaelmas, 1906:—

Mr. E. A. Rigby.
12 Feb. 1907.

Statistics as to pauperism, etc., at Huddersfield.

Name of District.	Number of Guardians forming Relief Committee.	Population.	Area (Acres).	Number of paupers relieved half-year ending Michaelmas, 1906.	Amount of Relief half-year ending Michaelmas, 1906.	Number of District Medical Officers.
					£ s. d.
Huddersfield (No. 1) - - -	17	50,179	4,514	739	1,630 12 1	6
Huddersfield (No. 2) - - -	18	39,509	6,004	989	2,402 9 11	3
Kirkburton - - - - -	10	18,356	16,167	208	592 8 0	4
Holmfirth - - - - -	14	24,636	25,229	208	534 0 8	5
Slaithwaite - - - - -	13	33,966	19,678	449	1,358 11 5	3

41. I have also attached a diagram shewing the course of relief for the twenty-five years ending at Lady Day last. From this it will be observed that the marked and continuous rise in out-relief dates from 1900, the year of Mr. Chaplin’s Circular, nationally, and the advent of the first friendly society members, locally. (See Appendix No. IX. (A).)

42. The expenditure on out-relief in the year ending Lady Day, 1901, was £7,626 and in the year ending Lady Day, 1906, £12,577, an increase in five years of 64·9 per cent. The number of persons relieved on the 1st January, 1901, was 1,441, and 1906, 1,983.

43. If the several districts be analysed it will be found that in the No. 1 and No. 2 Huddersfield districts whereas in the twelve months ending at Lady Day, 1900, the relief paid was £4,056; in the six months ending at Michaelmas, 1906 it was £4,053 or nearly as much in six months in the summer of 1906 as in the twelve months, six years before, and this during a time of prosperity and with the staple trade of the district fully employed.

44. I submit with some diffidence one or two suggestions for reform in administration.

45. A new “Relief Regulation Order” should be issued and the cases in which relief may or in which it may not be given should be made clear.

46. The question of relief to deserted wives should be explicitly dealt with.

47. The question as to whether the total income received by a family should be taken into account or not should be made quite clear.

48. What constitutes destitution might be set forth, and in what cases, if any, guardians may depart from insisting upon it as a condition precedent to granting relief, and having laid down clear rules for the granting of relief the central authority should instruct their auditors to surcharge any relief given contrary to the Order.

49. They should also insist upon competent officers being appointed. It is notorious that guardians frequently appoint persons as relieving and other officers who have no knowledge or experience of the Poor Law whatever.

40719. (Chairman.) How long have you been Clerk to the Guardians?—About ten years and three months.

40720. During that period has there been an increase in the area of the union?—No.

40721. Your Board of Guardians consists of seventy-two members. The previous witnesses have expressed the opinion that that is too large. Do you concur?—Yes, I think it is an unwieldy board. The board itself is unwieldy and so are the committees. It necessitates all the committees being very large in order to get the different districts represented. One of our relief section committees has eighteen members, another seventeen, the workhouse committees have thirty and twenty-five.

40722. What would you take as the number for an ideal board? Is twenty-four too small?—I suppose you would want each section of the district to be adequately represented?

40723. I was thinking of it simply from an administrative point of view?—I have had no experience apart from Huddersfield.

40724. The population of Huddersfield has gone backwards, I understand?—From 1891 to 1901 it went backwards about 1,000.

40725. Did the town shew outward signs of growing during that period in the way of building, and so on?—Yes, but the details of the census shewed that it was merely a migration from the centre to the outside. The old property in the centre of the town became empty and new property and better property was built on the outskirts which made people move out there. We have only one ground landlord, all the land in the town has been taken up by one ground landlord, and the consequence is there have not been any freeholds, and until we got a good tram system established it made the rents in the town somewhat high, but now with the trams you can get out into the outskirts quickly, and more artisan property has been built on the outskirts, and that has led to a little bit of the transference.

40726. Those outskirts are within the union?—Yes.

40727. So that the migration of population you refer to has nothing to do with the decrease?—No.

40728. During that time has there been any migration of the business or has the business of the factories and other employments increased?—No. Within that ten years period I am not aware of any migration. I am not aware of any explanation that can be offered for the decrease except the one I give in my statement: the aversion to having large families; I think I may put it that way; that seems to have got hold of the popular mind; people will not have large families.

Reduction in membership of Huddersfield Board of Guardians.

Decrease in population of Huddersfield between 1891 and 1901 and its probable cause.

Mr. E. A. Rigby. 40729. You became clerk ten years ago ?—In November, 1896.

12 Feb. 1907. 40730. The Act of 1894 was already in operation ?—Yes ; but I was previously clerk to the late clerk, for some five years before that, so that I was thoroughly in touch with any change that took place.

Effect of Local Government Act, 1894, on personnel of Board of Guardians.

40731. You rather concur in the view that the standard of qualification of guardians has deteriorated ?—Yes ; we find it most distinctly on the assessment committee. Whereas we always had the four justices of the peace ex officio members, who gave the committee a standing from a higher class of business men, now the 1894 Act having abolished ex officio guardians, we have to have all the members of the committee elected from the board, and the consequence is that we have a decidedly inferior assessment committee. I feel it in that respect more than anywhere else ; but, all round, I think it has led to an inferior standard of membership.

Influx of friendly society members on Huddersfield Board of Guardians ; their policy and its results.

40732. At the last election the friendly societies made a combined effort, with the result that they returned a good many persons representing them on to the board ?—Yes, at the last two elections.

40733. The result you describe in paragraph 33. "The policy appears to be to give outdoor relief in every possible case and only in the last resort to give workhouse orders, and to pay special regard to the cases of any members of friendly societies who may come before the board." That describes, in your judgment, the general operations of those representing the friendly societies ?—That is so. I dare say I could supplement that with evidence from the relieving officers as to what members of the friendly societies have said, in No. 2 section particularly. Certain members of the friendly societies have said they were strongly averse to using the workhouse test ; they have expressed the opinion repeatedly that they would not approve of the use of the workhouse test. They have gone in for this : they meant to give 5s. a week to every possible case.

40734. They have raised the scale and increased the numbers on outdoor relief ?—They have raised the scale, and the effect of it has been largely to increase the numbers on outdoor relief.

40735. That is to say, the number of applicants has increased ?—Yes ; it is much easier to get relief now than it was before.

40736. How do you account for these societies taking this combined action, their object is to induce people to join them and promote thrift. It would seem at first sight that their action in giving so much outdoor relief would be contrary to the interests of these societies ?—That is as it strikes me, and as it has struck me all the way through. The two things were contradictory. I give a slight suggestion as to the historical way in which this thing arose through the deputation that waited on us to get us to adopt the 1894 Friendly Societies Act, which gave permission to ignore 5s. Our board would not take any notice of it. The Friendly Societies Act of 1894 gave a permissive power to ignore 5s. a week. My board practically ignored that Act ; we had one deputation before us which was heard, then after some time a scale was drawn up which partially adopted this suggestion and made certain allowances. That was not satisfactory to the friendly societies people, and later on again another deputation sought to influence the board, but the board would not hear them. I think it was an exceedingly rude thing, and very bad tactics, as it turned out. I think that was really the fundamental reason of this friendly society movement.

40737. It was the attitude of action or inaction which the board of guardians adopted in connection with the Out-relief Friendly Societies Act, 1894 ?—Yes.

40738. (Mr. Nunn.) Has the board kept any record of the number of applicants who were affected by that Act from time to time ?

40739. (Chairman.) Do you know if any considerable proportion of those receiving out-relief now belong to friendly societies ?—An infinitesimal number. I do not think we have kept any records, but I have often had conversations with these friendly society guardians. The result is not worth the fight, because it is an infinitesimal number of friendly society people who come up for relief.

Number of friendly society members who become paupers.

40740. You state here that they give preference, or rather show partiality for members of friendly societies ? friendly —Yes, they see that the interests of any members that happen to come up are well looked after.

40741. Notwithstanding that the result is that very few have come ?—That is so, up to the present.

40742. Would it be difficult to get a return ?—I do not think so. I have no doubt the relieving officers would do their best.

40743. Would the friendly societies ?—Yes, they would help me. (See Appendix No. IX. (B))

40744. What you really say is, it was rather pique at the treatment they received from the guardians that initiated this movement ?—Yes, they were kept waiting at the door while the guardians discussed whether they would receive them or not. By one vote they concluded that they should not be heard. That was in 1899. A bye-election arose through the death of a guardian, I think in July, 1899 ; they made this a hot question, and elected a lady who supported their views. Another election followed at the end of the same month, and Mr. North, from whom you have had a statement, was returned at the end of the same month, and made a great outcry about this question.

40745. You have attached to your evidence a chart from which it is clear that the out-door relief on the whole went down from the year 1881 to 1899 very considerably ? —That is so.

40746. It has risen in the last seven years from £7,600 to £12,500. Has the number of people in receipt of out-relief risen ?—Yes.

40747. I understand the number has risen from 1,441 to 1,983 ?—Yes.

40748. To take the first point, the adequacy of the relief given, I understand there was complaint of that. Do you think the old scale, or the old practice did result in adequate relief being given ?—I do not. I was never satisfied that 2s. 6d. a week was adequate for a case that was really in need. I had always the feeling that 2s. 6d. was absurd.

40749. What was the idea of giving that 2s. 6d., was it that the person had other resources ?—Partly, no doubt.

40750. So that there has been some justification with regard to the adequacy of the relief ?—That is my private opinion, that there was some ground for Mr. Chaplin's circular in our union. The issue of that circular, as was to be expected, had a great effect in making the allowance of relief rise ?

40751. In that period, that is from 1901 till now, I suppose trade on the whole has been on the upward prosperity at move in Huddersfield ?—Yes, we have really never had any bad trade through the South African War, and the Japanese War. We have never really had any bad trade, properly so called. During the Japanese War we got some very good orders from Japan that practically kept the textile part of the town going.

40752. Am I right in assuming that the increasing numbers are due to two causes, the increased number of applicants who come in consequence of the amount given being raised and secondly, the less careful supervision of the cases of the applicants ?—Yes, I think you may certainly take those two, and you might possibly add a third, that the guardians themselves have rather inclined to seek out cases for relief. The gentleman you had giving evidence this morning has made himself very intimate with his constituents, and the consequence is he gets to know the persons who are poor and sends them to the relieving officer ; he often encourages them to come, and other guardians likewise.

40753. A certain proportion of these guardians who have been returned are socially very close to the class of those who want relief ?—A number of them are.

40754. And they encourage them in that way ?—Yes, I was going to add that in the Slaithwaite District, that is a district where the mills are working night and day now, they are working double shifts, and yet that district has shown a considerable rise in relief. They have a sort of Committee, or have relations with people who get to know the condition of the poor, and they encourage poor people to come and apply for relief. The old theory was that the relieving officers were not to go out seeking Movements in outdoor pauperism at Huddersfield.

Inadequate out-relief at Huddersfield.

Causes of increased pauperism at Huddersfield.

cases for relief, they were to discourage it, but now the guardians as a matter of fact do, to a considerable extent, go out seeking persons who are in need of relief. I think that accounts for a good deal of the increase in numbers.

40755. Is there much difference of opinion on these various committees with regard to the cases?—Nos. 1 and 2 sections, which are wholly comprised in the Huddersfield County Borough, are very much more advanced than the others, then the Slaithwaite section would come next, the section of which Miss Siddon is chairman, Holmfirth, would come next, and the Kirkburton section would come last.

40756. That is agricultural?—We really have no agricultural districts; it is semi-agricultural.

40757. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) May we ask what you mean by "advanced"?

40758. (Chairman.) You mean relief is more freely given?—Yes.

40759. The test is not severe?—The test is not so rigidly adhered to. The old lines are more adhered to in the country sections than they are in the two town sections.

40760. (Mrs. Bosanquet.) Are you using that in any special sense, or do you regard it as an advance?—I do not regard it as an advance.

40761. (Chairman.) You meant merely a rise?—Quite so.

40762. Are the committees appointed on account of their local connection with the districts they represent?—Yes, that is the principle we follow. The guardians for a certain township constitute the relief committee for that township.

40763. Therefore these two relief committees which, to use your own words, are in advance are to a certain extent dominated by the representatives of the friendly societies?—Yes. I got out the exact proportion of these gentlemen. I make out there are twenty-three or twenty-four members actually on the board who are out-and-out friendly society people; there are a number of others who are in sympathy with them, but they are not avowed friendly society members. In the No. 1 section there is a Committee of seventeen, and there are ten avowed friendly society members on it, that gives them a clear majority in the working of that committee; in the No. 2 section there are six on a committee of eighteen, that is the section we have the most trouble with, it shows the greatest increase in the out-relief and in my opinion it is the section where the regulations are worst administered.

40764. The six must get support, or the twelve do not attend?—That is so. If I were to describe the twelve, I should say they are many of them very passive, quiescent sort of guardians; and Mr. Wheatley, whom you heard this morning, is one of the members on that section, and he counts for a good many by himself. Then, on the Kirkburton section there are two friendly society members, on the Holmfirth section two friendly society members, and on the Slaithwaite section there are three. Of course those latter are smaller committees, but still they are in the minority.

40765. Do these cases, after they have passed the committee, come up for revision?—No, only by the same committee itself; there is no other revision.

40766. They come back to the committee after a time?—Yes.

40767. When a decision is arrived at on a particular day that decision is final so far as a certain period of time is concerned?—That is so. They give the relief for fourteen weeks, that is our rule, then it comes up again at the end of fourteen weeks. There are many that are really permanent cases, and I am afraid the revision in those cases is very formal. The name is called over, the question is asked: are the circumstances the same, and, if the answer is yes, then the relief is the same, but there is no other revision. Some of those sections will have what they call a call-over, a roll-call, perhaps once in twelve months, but it is the same committee. There is no revision by other committees.

40768. The practice varies very much in these districts, as I understand?—Yes, as between the two town committees and the three country committees.

40769. I am not putting it too strongly, am I, when I say that the principle which regulates out-door relief in the Huddersfield Union is not one of general principle, but the political composition of the committee who administers it?—You are using "political" in quite a special sense, are you not?

40770. The personal composition?—Yes, I should think that is a fair description.

40771. You have these discrepancies actually in the union itself?—Yes.

40772. Have you had any complaints on that ground?—From other members of the board?

40773. No, the people in one district saying they do not get the relief that is given in another district?—It is a constant source of chaff as between No. 1 section and No. 2 section, which are both in Huddersfield, that a person can get relief in No. 2 who cannot get it in No. 1; the guardians themselves, the members of the committee, will say to the others: There was such and such a case in our section which could not possibly get relief; she comes over into your section and you give her 5s. or 6s., or whatever the case may be, and we have cases on the books where that is illustrated.

40774. Will you be so kind as to send us those cases where relief has been refused by one committee and given by another?—I will try. (See Appendix No. IX. (C).) There is another item to take into consideration: I think the relieving officers themselves have something to do with the increased out-relief. At the end of my statement I make a suggestion, in the last paragraph of all, that I think the Local Government Board should insist upon competent officers being appointed. We have now five relieving officers.

40775. Would you just expand that paragraph a little, how are the relieving officers now appointed?—They are elected by the board.

40776. The whole board?—Yes.

40777. Of recent years have men been appointed without the necessary qualifications?—Without any experience. In our No. 1 section, which has hitherto been the best administered, we had a relieving officer who had had twenty-seven years' experience and has just resigned. He has been a most diligent and industrious officer, he has not left his work when he has left the office, but on Saturday nights and at other times he has gone round and got information with reference to his people, and in my opinion he has been a very excellent relieving officer and worked up to the ideals which we have had put before us by the Local Government Board. In No. 2 section we have a relieving officer of about five or six years' standing. He is a very good-natured man. I think he is thoroughly upright and all that sort of thing, but I do not think he is very good in working up information. I do not think he is very strong or firm, and his own committee have often disregarded his advice. He has worked up cases, he has got up information, and then the committee of the section has disregarded the reports which he has made.

40778. How many relieving officers have you altogether?—Five.

40779. Only one for each district?—One for each district.

40780. Is one sufficient for two such large districts as No. 1 and No. 2?—That is a matter we have had up for the last twelve months. We have had a correspondence about it, I have quite a bushel of correspondence with the Local Government Board. Just twelve months ago the question arose on the resignation of the relieving officer for the Kirkburton district, and the Local Government Board suggested before proceeding to the appointment of a successor the guardians should consider the desirability of re-arranging the districts. The guardians did not see how it was possible to do without a relieving officer for the Kirkburton section, which has a very large acreage and a very small population, so they went to work and appointed a man for that district, a man without any experience of the Poor Law whatever. He is a kindly-natured man, upright and all that, but has absolutely no experience of the Poor Law. The guardians themselves held a committee on the subject and made certain recommendations that the two Huddersfield districts should be divided into three and a third man appointed. It was the chairman's committee that made that recommendation

Mr. E. A. Rigby.
12 Feb. 1907.

Want of uniformity in administration of relief at Huddersfield.

Need for appointment of competent relieving officers.

Want of uniformity in administration of relief at Huddersfield.

Guardians administering relief to their own constituents.

Proportion of friendly society members on Huddersfield Board of Guardians.

System of revising cases at Huddersfield.

Want of uniformity in administration of relief at Huddersfield.

Mr. E. A. Rigby.
12 Feb. 1907. to the board, but the board refused to ratify the recommendation of the chairman's committee, and the Local Government Board have repeatedly asked the guardians to appoint a third man for Huddersfield, but hitherto the guardians have refused to do so.

40781. The policy of the newer members of the board, I understand, is to reduce salaries and to increase out-relief?—That is one leading plank in their platform; less money for the officials, less officialism, and more money for the poor.

Insufficient investigation of out-relief cases at Huddersfield. 40782. Are these out-relief cases, in your judgment, thoroughly investigated?—No, I do not think they are. I am speaking now particularly of the No 2 district. I think that is the worst case.

40783. Do you know whether the number of members of friendly societies in Huddersfield during the last three or four years has increased?—I do not know, I am not a friendly society member, and not in touch with their inner workings. I should not think they have increased, I should think they are about stationary.

40784. Now, to take your recommendations, you are under the Regulation Order?—Yes.

40785. You would like to have something clearer if possible?—Yes, I think so.

40786. You want the question of the relief of deserted wives to be explicitly dealt with?—Yes, I should like to have an express Article which forbade the giving of relief to deserted wives, except with the special sanction of the Local Government Board.

40787. You think there is so much collusion?—There is a danger of it; you never know, you are never sure that the man is not somewhere about, and if a man knows his wife will get relief from the guardians and the children will be taken to the children's home it is almost a temptation to a man in a certain class of society to run away and leave his wife.

40788. You think if the relief were contracted or made subject to the approval of the Local Government Board there would be fewer deserted wives?—Yes, that would be the ultimate effect. Of course, I take it that educated Poor Law opinion believes that relief to deserted wives is contrary to the well-being of society. We have tried to urge that on the guardians, but we cannot persuade them of it. We cannot make them believe it, and this new class persists in giving it. I think I have stated somewhere that we have twenty-nine deserted wives on our books now.

40789. (Mr. Patten-MacDougall.) Getting outdoor relief?—Yes. We had on our last list thirty-four deserted wives receiving outdoor relief scattered over the whole of the union.

40790. (Chairman.) Have they been long in receipt of outdoor relief?—Some of them have, they are almost treated like widows.

40791. You would like the question taken up as to the total income received?—Yes, that is another point. Of course many of us have argued that that ought to be taken into account; for a long time it has been recognised that you cannot properly deal with the amount of relief unless you know all that is coming into the family, whether they are legally obliged to maintain or not. It is only quite recently that I saw a letter that had been sent by the clerk to the Dudley Union to the Local Government Board on the subject, and we have had a letter from Mr. Davy practically confirming the view that the guardians ought to take into consideration all the income that comes into the house, whether the people are legally liable or not.

40792. You next would like to know what constitutes destitution; by that you mean a definition of the condition which justifies relief being given?—Yes, I think so.

40793. You go on to say, "and in what cases, if any guardians may depart from insisting upon it as a condition precedent to granting relief." By that I assume you mean that your guardians might in certain cases have power to assist people who are approaching destitution but who have not arrived at it?—Yes.

40794. That is to say to try and help them, to give them something to prevent them becoming paupers. Is that the idea?—Yes, I am extremely humanitarian myself. I have intense sympathy with poor people. I should like to go a little bit beyond the old lines, but we want to feel that we have safe ground under our feet.

40795. I want to clear this point up. Do you want to have a power to interfere before the persons become destitute with a view to preventing them coming under the Poor Law, or is it merely that you want to have easier conditions under which relief can be given under the Poor Law?—I think the latter is more my view.

40796. You want rules to be laid down so clearly that an auditor should be able, without much difficulty, to surcharge any relief which was contrary to those orders?—Yes. Of course, I do not want them laid down so clearly as though the guardians were children; I want it to be recognised they are men and women with discretion, but still much more clearly than they are now. This particular point about destitution, I think, might be defined much better than it is.

40797. Taking your Board, do you say amongst the Guardians' majority of them there is not a grasp or any full idea of the principles of the Poor Law which they have to administer?—I am afraid that is so. We have done our best to educate them. My predecessor got out a handbook for guardians, and I myself wrote a paper some years ago on the powers and duties of guardians, and I gave them all a copy of it. At all times I have advised and helped them, but I am afraid a great many of them do not realise their position.

40798. (Mr. Booth.) The interference of the friendly societies in the matter was based in the first instance on the treatment of their own people under the Poor Law, was it not. That was the question that was referred to at first?—I am not so sure about that, I have stated my view of what was the cause of the original interference of the friendly societies, Attitude of Huddersfield friendly society members towards the Poor Law.

40799. I am taking it from that. I understood you to say they had asked to be heard on behalf of their own people and they were turned off without being heard?—Yes.

40800. And that they then took up a hostile position and said, We will have members of our own on your board?—I think that is correct.

40801. Have they since then greatly widened the issue, because it means that in action they support an extension of out-relief in the form of greater adequacy all round?—Yes, they are humanitarians; they are advocates of more out-relief and this old-age pension is given through the Poor Law.

40802. So that part of the action has not very much to do with the special advantages they in the first instance claimed for their own people?—I dare say that is so.

40803. Would they still claim those advantages in addition? I mean, supposing the whole scale of out-relief was increased to the extent that they wish, would they still claim that in addition to that any friendly society people who come to the guardians should still have beyond that no account taken of the moneys that they might be receiving from their friendly society?—Up to 5s. yes.

40804. So that they do not base that upon adequacy, but upon privilege?—Yes, the latter part of it.

40805. (Mr. Bentham.) In paragraph 22 you refer to the case of an organ grinder and his wife and four children in receipt of relief; was he pursuing his occupation at the time?—Partially. May I just give you a short account of the case supplied to me by the relieving officer? Case of organ grinder and family receiving relief at Huddersfield.

40806. I just wanted to know whether the man was disabled through sickness in the first instance?—Yes, he has a good deal of sickness, a sort of paralysis of one arm, I think. There is a man thirty-eight years of age, and his wife twenty-eight, they have now four children ranging from twelve years old; they are twelve years, nine years, six years and the youngest is one year old. He has had relief up to the present amounting to £45 3s. 10d. The man came from Sheffield prior to 1901. His wife, an English girl, ran away from home at Sheffield to marry him; they had subsisted by begging and going about with the organ until 1904, when he began working test, and he has continued ever since. The wife is a puny weak woman and they have had a lot of sickness. The guardians have considered the case many times and have been advised to send them into the workhouse, but have declined to do so. I am told that it was occasional relief at first, and it came under the medical officer; it was casual relief, but now it has practically settled down to a regular case.

40807. At least this last child has been born since he became chargeable?—That is so.

40808. Now the hawker of images mentioned in the same paragraph?—That case has gone off, it is not now Case of hawker receiving relief at Huddersfield.

Need for further restrictions on relief to deserted wives.

Number of deserted wives receiving out-relief at Huddersfield.

The total family income to be considered in fixing out-relief allowances.

Need for definition of "destitution" as the condition of relief.

receiving relief, but during the half year ended March last that man and his wife had £11 in the half year.

40809. Was he hawking at the time the relief was given him, or did you insist on a labour test?—I think he would have test labour, but that would not necessarily prevent him hawking as well.

test labour system at Hudders-
field.

40810. Could you tell us with regard to test labour whether it is the fact that some of the men are not allowed to work the whole week when it is granted?—My impression is they have all to work the whole week. The guardians determine the amount of relief that the case requires, then they have to go up every day so many hours. The matter arose a few years ago, the idea arose that it was so much a day, it was called so much a day. I said, "It is nothing of the kind, we give relief according to the needs of the case, and you must go and work test labour six days a week so many hours, whatever the relief is."

40811. You heard the evidence that was given this morning?—Yes, I think they were under a misapprehension.

40812. The entry in the book was 6s. 3d. in money and 6s. 3d. in kind; that would mean per week?—Yes.

40813. That would mean the whole week, or they were getting 6s. 3d. in money and 6s. 3d. in kind if they did not work the whole week because it was entered in the book?—They would get 12s. 6d. a week; that was the amount of relief given to that family that week.

40814. Provided he turned up and did the work?—Yes.

40815. (Sir Samuel Provis.) They never actually pay it each day?—You mean six times a week?

40816. Yes?—No, I do not think so. When they are sent up they will get the food ticket, that is the kind, and about the Friday or Saturday they come and are paid the money. I think that is the arrangement.

40817. (Mr. Bentham.) It is the usual practice to pay daily in some districts?—I think it depends on the acuteness of the case.

40818. When the applicant seeks relief the case is supposed to be destitute and must be relieved that day?—The food ticket would get over the immediate necessities. The food would cover two or three days anyhow.

40819. With regard to the question of relief for the children, it was said this morning that 2s. 6d. might be given for children. Your average out-relief for all classes, that is for all persons, is 2s. 7d. per head per week according to your statement. Could it be possible that 2s. 6d. is allowed for children?—I hardly think so.

40820. Except in rare instances I think 2s. 6d. for children is rather an exceptional amount?—That is my view.

40821. It may be given in some cases?—It may be given in some cases, but it would be a very special case.

Hudders-
field
pauperism
statistics.

40822. In your Paragraph 42 you give the number of persons in receipt of relief from January 1st, 1901, to January 1st, 1906. I would like to ask you if that figure for 1906 is correct, because it does not agree with the figures we have had given in evidence previously. The figure for 1901 was 1,441 and for 1906, 2,312, which showed an increase of 60 per cent. during those years?—I think there must be an omission there, because the January Return for 1906 was 2,844.

40823. In that table what is the first year, 1901?—I cannot tell you because this is the mean, 2,172 was the mean of January 1st and July 1st.

40824. At any rate there was an enormous increase between 1901 and 1906?—Undoubtedly.

40825. You do not attribute that to the state of trade, but to the administration?—Yes.

40826. (Dr. Downes.) The increase in out-relief has not been uniform in all the districts I think you told us. On page 11 of your report for the year ended Lady Day, 1906, you give it according to the different districts. It has more than doubled I see in the No. 2 District of Huddersfield. The amount paid in out-relief in 1899 was £2,151, and it has risen to £4,761 in 1906. In Huddersfield No. 1 District it has risen from £1,651 to £3,031, and in Slaithwaite it has risen from £1,270 to £2,403. Then there are two other districts, Kirkburton and Holmfirth in which there does not appear to have been much rise. What is the reason of that as compared with the others?—I think what I stated at the beginning to some extent will explain that: they adhere more closely to the old lines of relief, and then the population is much more stationary. Miss Siddon is the Chairman of the Holmfirth Section. That is one, and she has been extremely punctilious in adhering to the regulations and carrying out so far as we know it, the regulation of the Board, and what is recognised as good administration amongst Poor Law authorities. In the Kirkburton Section there is not that change in the population of the district; it is very stationary: they are largely old people.

40827. Do the guardians adjudicate on the relief to be given to their constituents?—Yes, in every case.

40828. You have no regulation on your own board against that?—I think in the country sections the guardians for a parish often give very useful information to the section with reference to a case. In country districts everybody knows everybody else, and the guardian for the district can get to know any relief that is required in his district, he knows the people thoroughly, but they certainly do adjudicate upon the cases.

40829. There was some question as to cost per head of the children's homes. You have a table on page 10 of the same report. Perhaps you could tell us what the figures are from that?—The cost for the year ended Lady Day, 1906, for the children's homes was at the rate of 6s. 5d. per head per week. I must say that this does not include anything for the buildings. We bought the buildings out of the current rates, we did not get any loan for them, and consequently there is nothing charged for the buildings in that case.

40830. The workhouse cost in one case is 9s. 5d. and in the other 9s. 1d.?—Yes, that does include something for repayment of loans, and any repairs that are going on; there are always a lot of repairs going on at the workhouses in one way and another.

40831. (Mr. Chandler.) I think with regard to the agitation that took place in 1901 that resulted in a change on your Board, your out-relief at that time was going up was it not?—In 1901, the agitation began in 1899.

40832. In 1901 the out-relief, I think you said it was due largely to Mr. Chaplin's Circular, had an upward tendency accordingly to your chart?—Yes, it had begun to go up but as I pointed out, two persons were returned on behalf of the Friendly Societies in 1899. Then the general election came in March 1901, but there was a slight tendency upwards undoubtedly. The Friendly Societies did not come on until 1899 and Mr. Chaplin's Circular was in 1900.

40833. This agitation is not confined now to friendly societies, because they have taken in workmen's clubs in the district and so on, in the agitation?—The friendly societies are the centre of the movement, they are the acting force; but they are using the clubs as a means of propaganda for working their movement.

40834. (Sir Samuel Provis.) It has been suggested that the number of guardians at Huddersfield might be very much reduced with advantage. Have you considered any plan by which that might be done?—Huddersfield alone has thirty-seven guardians for the county borough; there are six parishes there is one ward which returns four members. I think no possible harm would accrue if it only returned two.

40835. I suppose it is proportionate, is it not, according to the population and rateable value of the other ones?—No doubt, and the others could be reduced proportionately. If the proportion was kept up I see no harm in two guardians representing that ward equally as well as four; if the same proportion is kept up in the other wards.

40836. And you could do that without combining parishes?—Yes, in Huddersfield certainly we could.

40837. But outside?—I am afraid we could not.

40838. Unless you could combine parishes the Huddersfield people would complain, would they not, because their proportion would be lower than the others?—Yes, and as they contribute more than half of the common fund they would find they had a ground of complaint.

40839. It is not practicable is it, unless you combine parishes?—I am afraid not, but I see no difficulty in combining parishes in some of the country districts.

40840. Except that they do not like it?—There is a local feeling that they do not like to be represented by another parish.

40841. With regard to the question of committees

Mr. E. A.
Rigby.

12 Feb. 1907.

Guardians administering relief to their own constituents at Hudders-
field.

Cost of maintenance in Huddersfield scattered homes and
workhouse.

Increase of out-relief at Huddersfield and its causes.

Proposed reduction in membership of Huddersfield Board of Guardians.

Mr. E. A. Rigby.
12 Feb. 1907.
Question as to appeal against decisions of relief committees.

giving relief on different principles would that be met supposing that their action had to be confirmed by the whole board?—Nominally there is a power to appeal to the whole board wherever a guardian is dissatisfied, but in my fifteen years' experience I have never known a successful appeal.

40842. Supposing it had to come always to be confirmed?—If a committee could be composed of representatives from each section, it would form a court of appeal, I think, which would be beneficial, I think decidedly that would be a help.

40843. (Chairman.) An appeal to the whole board I assume would result in all those who were on the committee supporting the case, and the majority of the guardians would know nothing about it?—No doubt there would be something of that sort.

40844. Therefore, those who supported the case would probably carry it?—Possibly.

40845. (Sir Samuel Provis.) They might have the relieving officer there and enquire of him?—One complaint that I have against this No. 2 section is that they often ignore their relieving officer. They do not back up their man. If he gets up a case, and gets evidence and proves up to the hilt that a case ought not to have relief, they do not support him. They ignore his view. I think the whole board or a revision committee probably would support the relieving officer. I got out a sort of account of how this relieving officer spent his time last week. It shows that practically in the whole of last week, which was the board week, beginning on Monday, he only visited about seven cases. He only had time to visit seven cases. The rest was taken up with clerical work very largely, paying his relief, and other work in connection with his office.

Relieving officer's advice and information as to cases set aside by relief committee at Huddersfield.

40846. (Chairman.) How many cases has he?—I should say hundreds of cases.

40847. Cases receiving relief?—He relieved last week 704 persons, and paid away £103.

40848. (Mr. Bentham.) How many visits would he make in the week; does he keep a diary?—That he does not do, although we provide him with a diary; I asked him to write this up and he gave me his recollection yesterday morning of how he had spent his time last week.

40849. At each meeting of the relief committee, is not the relieving officer's diary before them?—We have a regulation hanging up in their room, that it is part of their business to do so, but it is not done.

40850. When you said the guardians did not back up the relieving officer, did you mean they did not act on the information the relieving officer gave?

40851. (Chairman.) Or his opinion?—It is not so much the opinion he has formed, but they ignore the information on which he has formed it.

40852. (Mr. Bentham.) The material point is whether the guardians act upon the information the relieving officer places before the committee?—Mr. Bentham was in this section last Monday, and there was one case where information was placed before the committee with reference to a certain woman who had been getting 2s. 6d. a week relief; there were two persons living together, a woman and her daughter, the daughter's average earnings were 11s. a week and they paid 2s. 8d. a week rent. Application was made for relief, one of the guardians had encouraged this woman to come and apply for more relief. She came, and on those facts the guardians gave her another 1s. a week relief. I take it that is a case where they did not act upon the information supplied by the relieving officer.

Relieving officer's advice and information as to cases set aside by relief committee at Huddersfield.

EIGHTIETH DAY.

Monday, 18th February, 1907.

AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, S.W.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. Lord GEORGE HAMILTON, G.C.S.I., etc., etc., etc. (Chairman).

The Right Hon. Sir HENRY A. ROBINSON, K.C.B.

The Right Hon. CHARLES BOOTH, F.R.S.

Sir SAMUEL B. PROVIS, K.C.B.

Mr. F. H. BENTHAM.

Dr. A. H. DOWNES.

The Rev. T. GAGE GARDINER.

Mr. GEORGE LANSBURY.

Mr. T. HANCOCK NUNN.

The Rev. L. R. PHELPS.

The Rev. H. RUSSELL WAKEFIELD.

Mrs. SIDNEY WEBB.

Miss OCTAVIA HILL.

Mr. R. H. A. G. DUFF (Secretary).

Mr. J. JEFFREY (Assistant Secretary).

Mr. ALBERT E. BOOKER, called; and Examined.

Mr. Albert E. Booker. 40853. (Chairman.) You are clerk to the Guardians of the Sheffield Union?—I am.

18 Feb. 1907. 40854. You have prepared a statement, which we will take as your evidence in chief, and supplement it by some questions on points of special importance, if you will kindly hand it in?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following statement.)

The Social and Industrial Conditions of the Union.

1. The staple industries of Sheffield are connected with the manufacture of iron and steel goods and silver plate. The east end of the city comprises a number of very large firms engaged in the heavy trades. A number of these firms undertake government contracts for the building of battleships and the production of the necessary armour-plates, propellers, etc.; other firms are also contractors for the production of guns, shot and shell, and other munitions of war. These firms employ, in busy times, large numbers of unskilled labourers, and at such times no doubt attract men from country districts by the larger wages that it is possible for unskilled persons to earn, together with the other attractions of town life. These men are taken on in large numbers in times of good trade, and their services are dispensed with at short notice when trade falls off. The unskilled labourer of this class earns probably about 20s. per week, with overtime when he is required, and in a city like Sheffield it is not possible for men of this class, however thrifty they may be in disposition, to provide for slack times to any appreciable extent especially if they are married men with families. The consequence is that numbers of these people are compelled to apply for Poor Law relief as soon as they are turned out of employment. The men who are employed in the cutlery and kindred trades, which form another important branch of the staple industries, are, as a rule, only small wage earners.

2. There are no special facilities in Sheffield for the employment of female labour, the largest opening for this class of labour being in the silver and electro-plate trades. Although the manufacturers of these goods employ a considerable number of women as burnishers, buffers, and warehousewomen, there are not the same opportunities which exist in towns connected with the textile industries for a large employment of female labour.

Particulars of Peculiarities or experiments in Poor Law Administration.

3. During the last twenty years the following reforms been made by the Sheffield board of guardians.

4. In 1887 the guardians appointed a committee to inquire into the large amount of money distributed in out-relief, and to present a report thereon. The findings of this committee resulted in the appointment of a superintendent of out-relief, to supervise the general work of the relieving officers, and also the appointment of a cross visitor, a pay clerk, and a collector. This revision of the system removed from the relieving officers any connection with the actual payment of cash or kind to the poor or the receipt of monies, and placed those duties upon separate officers. The appointment of a cross visitor to pay independent visits to the homes of the poor in receipt of out-relief and to check the inquiries of the relieving officers was a development which had most important results. The revision of the system, reference to which will be made in detail by the superintendent of out-relief in his statement, brought about a considerable reduction in the amount of out-relief, the closer inquiry leading to the detection of many cases of imposition and to the discovery of considerable numbers of relatives of persons in receipt of out-relief, who were in a position either to take such persons off the relief list altogether, or to contribute considerable amounts towards their maintenance.

Women's work in Sheffield.

Appointment of superintendent relieving officer, etc. and its effect on out-relief.

Social and industrial conditions of Sheffield Union: unskilled labourers' low wages render provision against unemployment impossible, etc.

5. The second reform, which was at first in the nature of an experiment, was that of the establishment in 1893 of what is now known as the scattered homes system for dealing with Poor Law children. I make no reference to this matter in detail, as the chairman of the board, Mr. J. Wycliffe Wilson, who was the inventor of the system, will no doubt give considerable information to the commission respecting this matter, but having been associated with the system from the time of its inception, through its period of trial, to the present time, when it is recognised as one of the most successful systems of dealing with Poor Law children, I should like to say that I am satisfied that under careful administration, in which the generous sentiments of the heart are tempered by the judgment of the head, there has been no better system evolved dealing with these children in the course of experiments during the past twenty years.

6. In 1892 the guardians passed a resolution expressing the desirability of a classification of the recipients of relief, with a view to the better treatment of those of good character, and this was the commencement of the system which has since been in operation, of classifying both the indoor and the outdoor poor according to their character and not according to their physical condition. This will be referred to in detail by certain members of the board.

7. The system has been a success in Sheffield. Many difficulties have arisen, particularly in connection with the dietary of the indoor poor, but these have been overcome by endeavouring as far as possible to square the guardians' classification according to character, with the classification of the Local Government Board orders according to age and physical condition.

8. The principal matter in connection with the classification scheme which would be likely to interest the members of the Royal Commission will probably be the cottages which have been erected for the housing of the indoor poor of the "A" class. This class consists of persons of sixty years of age and over who have resided in the Sheffield Union for a period of not less than twenty years prior to their applying for relief, who have never had relief during that time, who have been thrifty and provident as far as their circumstances would permit, and who have been obliged eventually to apply for Poor Law relief owing to circumstances of misfortune over which they have had no power of control. Each of the cottages referred to is occupied by two persons of this class, either a married couple, or two old men, or two old women, as circumstances permit. A good deal of freedom is given these old people, and they are allowed to go in and out practically at their will. They have of course a non-distinctive dress, and their diet is as generous as the Dietary Order will permit.

9. This part of their classification scheme is one which gives the greatest possible satisfaction to the guardians—gratifying to them not only because they feel that the deserving are receiving treatment such as their character merits, but also for the gratitude which is exhibited by these old people, and their appreciation of the privileges they enjoy.

10. For the past fifteen years the guardians, in the enlargement and development of their hospital, have had in view the separation of that part of the workhouse from the other part of the institution, and after the erection of some costly administrative buildings this separation was finally brought about in April of last year, the principal reason for the separation being that, in the opinion of the guardians, an institution for the treatment of the sick should be under separate management from an institution dealing with the able-bodied poor, and that a separate institution under suitable administration by persons trained for dealing with the sick should produce more efficient results.

The respective Merits of Indoor and Outdoor Relief.

12. During the past few years in my opinion the guardians of the Sheffield Union have inclined towards a more liberal policy in the matter of the granting of out-relief, although for many years past it has been recognised by the guardians that this form of relief was proper to be given in suitable cases. The union expenditure on out-relief has, during the past few years, had a distinctly upward inclination, partially due no doubt to the scale of relief adopted under the classification scheme, but also due in my opinion to a determination, on the part of newly elected guardians particularly, to be generous in this direction.

13. My own personal view is that the influence of out-relief on the poorer classes of the community is a bad one, and that it should only be granted with the greatest possible care after the most careful and searching enquiry, and on the guardians being satisfied (and this is a point on which there is considerable laxity) that the moral conditions of the home are satisfactory. There is no doubt difficulty in many cases, owing to the refusal of, say, a widow with children who has a small home, to take her family into the workhouse, and of course in such cases, neither the relieving officer nor the guardians will take the responsibility of allowing the case to escape observation, and in quite a number of cases the relieving officer is called upon to grant relief in kind at his discretion in order to save the children from starvation.

14. A case came under my own observation at the meeting of one of our relief committees during the past week, when a woman with a grown-up daughter, a boy about fourteen, and some younger children, took in a male lodger, and the sleeping arrangements of the family were in every way undesirable. The possibilities of immorality between the woman, the grown-up daughter, and the lodger, and the evil influence on young children living in a house under such conditions were as bad as could be conceived. The Committee were advised to give a workhouse order (the case having previously received out-relief), which order was promptly refused.

The Classes of Persons seeking Election as Guardians.

15. I do not think the social and business standing of the class of person seeking election as members of the boards of guardians improves. The classes may roughly be divided as follows, viz.:—

(a) Guardians who have had considerable experience, and who seek re-election from time to time owing to their interest in, and capacity for the work.

(b) Small tradesmen and shopkeepers whose candidature is usually promoted by one of the political parties, and

(c) Men of a similar social class who have made a sufficient competency to enable them to retire from business, and who seek some occupation in public life, and whose candidature is also similarly promoted.

Reform in the Law or Practice suggested by Experience.

16. The board of guardians, in their representations to the Royal Commission, the original draft of which was prepared by myself, referred to a number of matters which appear to require serious consideration by the Commission. I make the following notes of points which have impressed themselves upon me in my experience as urgently requiring attention, viz.:—

(a) Increased powers to guardians to detain feeble-minded persons who are a moral danger to the community.

(b) Better provision for the classification of, and powers to detain insane epileptics for the same reason.

(c) A greater freedom in the regulations affecting indoor officers, in order to modify the present anti-social conditions which prohibit such officers from marrying.

(d) The establishment of penal colonies for workhouse incorrigibles who spend their time either in workhouses or prison, and upon whom repeated convictions appear to have no reformatory effect; and

(e) Penal colonies for the detention of habitual vagrants.

Mr. Albert E. Booker.
18 Feb. 1907.

Increase of out-relief at Sheffield.

Evil influence of out-relief, but difficulty as to its entire abolition.

Social and business standing of Guardians not improved

Need of increased powers to detain feeble minded.

Regulations for indoor officers restrictive.

Labour colonies.

Mr. Albert
E. Booker.

18 Feb. 1907.

Proposed
abolition of law of settlement and consequential reforms.

(f) The simplification or total abolition of the law of settlement and removal.

But in view of the inequalities and burdens which would be imposed on urban unions by the restrictions being removed from persons in rural districts becoming settled in large towns, it seems to me that if it were thought desirable to abolish the law of settlement, it would be necessary, if practicable, to standardise the treatment of persons received into workhouses, in order to protect the union against a large influx of persons having no settlement, as now recognised, to the workhouse where the comforts and attractions were higher than in neighbouring unions. It is well recognised that there is a great tendency at the present time for persons living in the country to be attracted to large towns under the conditions similar to those referred to in the remarks on unskilled labour in paragraph (1).

Medical Relief as the Introduction to Pauperism.

Medical relief the first step to pauperism.

17. At my suggestion, the superintendent of out-relief has expressed very fully in his observations my own views, which are in accord with his on this matter.

Guild of Help.

Sheffield
Guild of Help
and its
operations.

18. There has been no charitable organisation society or other similar organisation co-operating with the guardians in Sheffield up to the present time, but there is just being established what is to be known as the "Guild of Help," with the provisional committee of which I have been associated in preparing a scheme during the past twelve months. The object of the Guild is to co-ordinate as far as practicable the private charity of the city, to make searching enquiry into the cases of all poor persons coming to the notice of the officers of the Guild, and to bring the deserving poor into touch with benevolent persons; to discountenance the indiscriminate distribution of private charity, to repress mendicancy, and, as far as practicable, to help the poor to help themselves.

19. I am not in a position to say how far the objects of the Guild will be successfully carried out, but I have urged, as opportunity has offered, that the Guild should work hand in hand with the guardians, and I am hopeful that cases applying to the guardians for Poor Law Relief in times of temporary difficulty may be referred to the Guild of Help, and possibly in some cases be prevented from becoming paupers. It is not intended that the Guild of Help should be a relief distribution society, and there will be no central fund from which untrained persons will have the opportunity of giving relief.

Female labour and wages in
Sheffield.

40855. (Chairman.) In Sheffield the peculiarity of the industrial situation seems to be that there are, unlike many other manufacturing towns in the North, few special facilities for the employment of female labour?—That is so.

40856. I suppose, therefore, the majority of married women are not engaged in any organised industry?—There are some opportunities for female labour. I think I refer to that in my statement, and I have obtained some information with reference to the wages earned by those people, if it would be of any interest to you.

40857. Perhaps you will put that in?—I have ascertained that the larger proportion of the opportunities for female labour are, as I say, in connection with the silver and silver-plate industries in Sheffield. Connected with those industries the women are employed in the following occupations; spoon and fork buffers, who are mostly married women, and whose average weekly earnings are 12s.; silver burnishers, 40 per cent. of whom, I am informed, are married women, and whose average weekly earnings are 14s.; spoon and fork filers, 50 per cent. of whom are married women, and their average weekly earnings are from 12s to 13s. In addition to those, in connection with other Sheffield trades, not only the silver trade, but the cutlery trade and file trade, there are a number of women employed as warehouse hands, that is to wrap up and so on, and according to their age and length of service, they earn from 3s. 6d. to 14s. a week, that is to say, girls go into the warehouses soon after leaving school and commence at the lower amount, and as they gain experience their wages are increased until they obtain, I suppose, not more than 14s. a week. In addition to these occupations there are others in which women are engaged. Some women are employed as file cutters, cutting light files, and they earn from 7s. to 10s. a week.

These hand file cutters work in their own homes principally; of course there are a few employed in connection with machine file cutting who work in the works, and earn about the same amount of money. Then the lowest class of female labour in Sheffield may possibly be classified as follows:—there are a certain number of women who work in nut and bolt factories who earn from 7s. to 10s. a week; some women, who work in the small malleable iron foundries where they make small castings and earn from 7s. to 10s. a week, and there are a number of women employed also in connection with bottling warehouses and similar places; these bottle washers earn from 8s. to 10s. a week; the last three classes of female labour are, I suppose, amongst the lowest we have in Sheffield, and the women who are employed are also, I am afraid, of rather a low class.

40858. I assume that the lower class of employment is casual?—The lower class of employment will be casual labour.

40859. The burnishers and the others, as a rule get continuous employment?—Yes.

40860. In fact, judging from the wage, it is insufficient to keep a woman, so it is really an addition to the family purse?—That is so.

40861. Consequently most of the women are married women?—Yes. A number of these women are engaged in these occupations before marriage, and they continue, as far as their domestic circumstances will permit, after marriage.

40862. Coming to the peculiarities of Poor Law administration in Sheffield, I understand that about twenty years ago the guardians revised their system of out-relief?—That is so.

40863. They appointed a superintendent of out-relief, Statistics and the revision of the system resulted in a considerable out-relief contraction in the number of cases?—That is so. I have in Sheffield a statement here I shall be glad to hand in, if it is of sufficient interest, showing the numbers of persons in receipt of relief and the amount which that relief cost in 1887 and showing the decrease in the number of paupers both indoor and outdoor, and also the decrease in the cost of relief for a number of years and bringing the statement down to March, 1906. (See Appendix No. X. (A.)) 40864. A few years later you passed a scheme of classification?—Yes.

40865. And you applied this classification to the outdoor as to the indoor?—That is so.

40866. The result is that those in Class A., as regards out-door relief, get a higher grant than those in Class C.?—The guardians adopted what is called a maximum scale of relief to harmonise with their classification according to character, and they adopted the following scale: For Class A., 5s.; for Class B., 4s.; for Class C., 3s.; and for Class D., 2s. 6d. I think it has to be recognised that out-relief, when given, should be in accordance with the necessities of the case; and although the guardians adopted this scale of relief as a so-called maximum in practice the relief committees do not adhere to this maximum sum if any peculiarity in the circumstances justifies an increase of that amount.

40867. I understand the theory of classification as regards the indoor paupers, but I am not sure that I have quite mastered it as regards outdoor paupers. Is it assumed now that the Class A., as a rule, tell the whole truth, and consequently have no resources other than those which they bring before the out-relief committee, is that the idea?—I think there is no assumption, if I may say so; the strictest enquiries are made into the facts, and every possible means made use of to obtain reliable information. We not only take the applicants own statement, but get information from whatever other source is available.

40868. Assuming you give out-relief on the ground that you must relieve pressing necessities in order to provide the recipient with the necessities of life, what is the assumption? That the person of better character will require more than a person of less good character?—I do not think we are entitled to assume that. I said just now that primarily I think we must accept the principle that relief should be given according to the necessities of the case, but it is an advantage to us to classify these people according to their character; and while we might, in a particular case in Class B., think it well to give 5s. a week, which is above labour and wages in Sheffield.

Female

Classification of indoor and outdoor paupers in Sheffield, on basis thereof.

the maximum amount included in our scale, at the same time I think there is an advantage to us in knowing that the person does not come up to the highest standard in our classification. The adoption of this maximum scale, I wish it to be understood, is for the guidance of the relief committees, and not to be strictly adhered to, provided the necessities of the case require a larger sum.

40869. Is it of as general application with regard to indoor relief as it is with regard to outdoor?—Yes.

Effect of classification of the workhouse discipline.

40870. As regards indoor relief, I understand, it has contributed very much to the good order and discipline of the workhouse?—There is no doubt about that, besides which I think the guardians have some gratification in feeling that people in the workhouse who have led decent lives are not obliged now to consort with those of a more offensive character, whose habits, language, and so on, are not desirable.

40871. I see that advantage, and I suppose, also, that it is a real punishment degrading a pauper from one class to another?—That is so, and it is so regarded by the inmates of the workhouse.

40872. And by the workhouse little community or world?—That is so. We have frequent applications by inmates of the workhouse in the lower classes to be raised.

40873. The main difference, I suppose, is the greater liberty given them?—Yes; greater liberty, more comfort in their rooms and so on.

40874. Should you say it was an almost unqualified success?—We think so in Sheffield, it is a success from the point of view for which it was established.

Scattered homes preferable to boarding out, and disadvantages of boarding out.

40875. I think we need not trouble you with regard to the scattered homes, because we saw those, and Mr. Wilson gave us full evidence. You have a certain number of children boarded out?—We have.

40876. Are you satisfied with that system as far as you have adopted it?—Our view in Sheffield is rather against than in favour of boarding out. We think that our scattered homes system lends itself to the necessities of the case in a better way than boarding out, except for a few special cases in which it is desirable to remove children from the influence of undesirable parents or relatives, orphan and deserted children of course. In those cases we do board out a few. My guardians do not take very great advantage of the boarding-out system. We have at the present time only four boarded out within the union, and beyond the union, under committees, thirty; thirty-four in all. We had more boarded out within the union, but that has been allowed to go down, and the places are not filled up from time to time as they become vacant, the guardians prefer to keep the children in the homes. I think our view is that the difficulty of supervision is a considerable one, and from time to time we have found that children were not being treated in the homes where they were boarded-out in the way we should have liked. I do not think we have ever had a scandal, but we have in a few cases found that things were not quite satisfactory; those cases have been drawn attention to by Miss Evans.

40877. You make a point of wishing to associate outdoor relief with the condition that the surroundings of the home must be good?—My own opinion is that not quite as much attention is paid to that as there should be. I do not think in all cases the surroundings are desirable. My opinion is that we should pay a little more attention to that, and insist on offering the workhouse test in cases where the home surroundings are all that we could desire.

40878. At present in certain cases (take the case that you allude to in Paragraph 14) the applicant can almost force upon you outdoor relief by declining to go into the workhouse?—That is so to this extent, that, as I say, the relieving officer will not take the responsibility of allowing the children to suffer because the parents will not accept the order for the workhouse, therefore he gives relief at his discretion as the necessities of the case require.

40879. You would like to have some additional power given the guardians?—Certainly, I should. I have here a list of cases that I have obtained from the superintendent of out-relief, and it contains particulars of eight persons who have quite recently refused indoor relief when offered, in which cases it seems to me that unnecessary suffering may be brought upon young children from the fact that the parent will not take the relief which the guardians consider to be proper and necessary for the case. (See Appendix No. X (B).)

40880. We have had explained to us by experts in the law that the theory of the law is that the poor are entitled to conditional relief?—Yes.

40881. But in this case the relief practically becomes unconditional by the applicant refusing to go into the workhouse?—Yes, except so far as the relieving officer, as I say, will not take the responsibility of allowing the children to suffer; and he gives relief in kind from time to time at his own discretion, subject, or course, to the confirmation of the guardians at the next meeting.

40882. With regard to the suggested reforms, I think your proposal to detain feeble-minded persons only corroborates evidence we have already had?—Quite so.

40883. Your next proposal (b) is much to the same effect. Restrictive regulations for indoor officers. What is the particular grievance of the indoor officials with regard to the rule which prohibits them from marrying?—I think this is a very real grievance; it seems to me it is not a good thing from any point of view, either socially or morally, that these people should be in such a station of life that they are prohibited practically from marrying unless they give up their situations as indoor officers in the service.

40884. What class of officer do you mean?—Chiefly attendants; attendants on the insane, attendants on the infirm, and so on. There are, at the present time, in our workhouse (this is excluding the hospital, which is a separate hospital) forty-four officers. There are twenty-four single male officers and twenty single female officers most of whom are of marriageable age, and it does seem to me that it is a very serious hardship on these people that they have no opportunity of marrying, if they desire to do so; they are indoor resident officers, and there is no opportunity for them to live under ordinary domestic conditions; they must give up their position and leave the service or they must remain single; there is no other alternative. This to my mind, is not a desirable thing from any point of view.

40885. I suppose the ground of the regulation is that they must sleep on the premises?—For the good government of an indoor establishment it is quite impossible that all officers should live outside; there must be officers in the workhouse at night sleeping close to the wards. Where these officers have large numbers of people under their control and supervision they must be there both day and night.

40886. Are you inclined to some sort of arrangement by which the rule should be relaxed with regard to marriage, and that there should be the nightly attendance of so many officers of the institution?—Yes, either that, or in workhouses where conditions of space will admit, I rather incline to the view that a certain number of officers might be allowed to marry and be provided with separate apartments in the institution, the value of which would be taken into account in their emoluments. I think it would not be impossible at Sheffield, for example, for the guardians to provide some small cottages in the grounds in which some of their indoor officers might live, and the rentals of those cottages could be taken into account as part of their remuneration.

40887. From your experience, you do not think there would be much difficulty in framing conditions which would enable officers to marry?—I do not think so.

40888. As regards penal colonies, I think your evidence is endorsed by a great many other witnesses?—I have no doubt that is so.

40889. Then with regard to the simplification or total Arrangement abolition of the Law of Settlement, have you any between Sheffield and Ecclesall arrangement with the neighbouring unions as to cases of settlement?—No. You will understand there are two unions within the city of Sheffield. We have not any arrangement with the Ecclesall Bierlow Union to exchange cases, or anything of that sort, but we have a sort of arrangement of this kind: If a person applying for relief has slept within our union the night before the application and previously resided in Ecclesall, or the other way

Mr. Albert E. Booker.
18 Feb. 1907.

Mr. Albert
E. Booker.

18 Feb. 1907.

round, as a matter of courtesy between us we allow the pauper to be admitted to our respective institutions; we enquire into all cases reported to us from Ecclesall, and the Ecclesall officers enquire into all cases reported by us to them.

Proposed
abolition of settlement, etc., and consequential reforms;
standardisation of
workhouse treatment,
etc.

40890. You go so far as to think that the total abolition would be an improvement upon the existing practice?—I am urged to that by the fact of the great amount of expense and loss of time and litigation that are caused under the present conditions. I should incline rather to a simplification of the law than to a total abolition of it.

40891. A suggestion has been made that there should be some special tribunal like the Local Government Board to decide such questions?—I think that would be a very good thing.

40892. You make a suggestion about standardising the relief in workhouses. That suggestion is a very important one if it was ever proposed largely to increase the areas. What was the idea about standardising? Taking Sheffield, for instance, the standard is high in Sheffield workhouse?—Yes; I am urged to it by these considerations. To abolish the Law of Settlement and Removal would be a serious matter so far as a large city like Sheffield is concerned, with the attractions we have for what I call in the early part of my statement unskilled labour, which is really not entirely unskilled; but, as I say, we offer considerable attractions, by reason of the large firms in the east end of the city, to people from smaller towns in the district, and even from the country, but perhaps not so considerably from the country as it used to be, to come in on account of the higher wages they may earn in these large firms. If the Law of Settlement and Removal were abolished entirely it would be very hard on us that we should have to accept chargeability, if they became chargeable, without the power of removal, of all these people who come into Sheffield; in addition to which, it does seem to me if the Law of Settlement and Removal were abolished the people would naturally gravitate to those workhouses and institutions where the comforts, and, if one may say so, even the luxuries, are very much more considerable than in other places; the desirable situation of the workhouse in the country, or with grounds round it, and the additional comforts which are offered by our own classification scheme, are all things which might tend to induce a large number of people who, at the present time could not have any settlement, to want to come to Sheffield or to some other place—Bradford, or other places where we know things are well done.

40893. How would you meet that difficulty, because it seems to me it is a substantial difficulty?—This is a thought that occurred to me in considering this matter, if it were practicable to standardise the treatment in workhouses, in the dietary, for one thing, in order to make the conditions of workhouses really much on the same lines as far as local conditions would admit, that in itself would be in the direction of removing the inducement that at present exists for people to take refuge in the place where there are most comforts.

40894. I think we may assume that the standard, as a rule, in the urban workhouses, particularly in large towns, would be above that of the country?—Yes.

40895. If a town once got up to a certain standard, you could not bring it down, to a lower standard?—No; but I do think there might be a modification of the standard in some large workhouses. I do not know whether you have evidence to show that the standard of comfort in the rural workhouses is as good as it is in the urban workhouses?

40896. We have not any evidence to that effect. Classification in some degree would help you?—Yes.

40897. Still, of course, the persons of good character from the country would probably in your workhouse get more comfortable treatment than they would in a country workhouse?—I think so.

40898. You urge this as a question that would have to be considered assuming settlement was abolished?—I do.

40899. You have a very fine workhouse infirmary. Do you know what it cost?—I could not say that. I could give you the information, but, of course, the workhouse infirmary was erected as part of the workhouse, and has only quite recently been separated.

40900. Could you give us an estimate of what it cost per bed in both establishments?—I could not. I have not the information before me. I could give you the first cost of the whole institution, the workhouse and hospital combined. Large sums of money have been spent from time to time in additions and alterations, and so on, but I could give you the first cost, the contract cost, of the institution.

40901. There are large administrative blocks there?—Yes, at the union hospital. They have been quite recently erected. I think I ought to explain with reference to Sheffield that the infirmary, as I have just said, was erected as part of the workhouse. The guardians for some years have had in view the separation of the hospital from the other part of the institution and placing it under separate administration. That was done nearly a year ago. With that in contemplation they have erected several very large and very costly additions in order that the place might be worked as a separate institution, and the administrative block is one of those buildings, the laundry is another. These things were not provided before, because of course the whole institution was originally administered from the workhouse itself, and the laundry work was done in the workhouse. Now the new administrative block receiving wards, laundry, etc. have been erected for the hospital.

40902. Perhaps you would put in a statement which would, in your judgment, give us all the information?—Yes, I think I know what you want. I will do my best. The administrative block with the entrance lodge, and the receiving wards, etc. cost £48,000. That money was spent in contemplation of the separation of the hospital from the workhouse which came about nearly a year ago [Subsequently sent. See Appendix No. X (C).]

40903. The Guild of Help has only recently come into operation?—Quite so. As a matter of fact it is not actively working at the present moment. Sheffield Guild of Help and its operations.

40904. You are hopeful as regards the benefits of its co-operation with the Poor Law?—I am very hopeful indeed.

40905. They will deal with the class of case which you want to prevent coming on the Poor Law?—I hope so.

40906. Will they be in possession of any funds?—It is not intended that they should have a central fund from which the helpers of the guild can distribute anything in the form of relief, but it is contemplated that there should be certain funds at their disposal for use in extremely urgent cases, and one of the primary objects of the guild is putting the deserving poor, as distinct from the pauper, into touch with the charitably disposed, giving assurance, of course, to generous persons that the case recommended for relief is a deserving one.

40907. I assume it is intended that they should in special cases, or in some cases, make an appeal to charitable persons?—That is so.

40908. (Mr. Booth.) In Paragraph 1 of your statement, which refers to industries, you speak particularly of the uncertainty of the unskilled labourers, that they are attracted in large numbers when trade is active and dismissed when trade is not?—That is so.

40909. Does that not apply also to the skilled labour?—Yes, I suppose it does, but I should like, if I may, just to give a little further information about this particular matter. Since submitting this statement I have had the privilege of a conversation with three of the directors of one of our largest firms with a view to getting reliable information as far as possible respecting this particular class of labour. The firm which I refer to, the name of which I perhaps need not give, employs about 5,000 men at its works; they are very large contractors for Government work and for municipal work in the way of tramway track and so on, and I am informed that they employ in normal times of trade about 2,500 men who may not perhaps be quite unskilled labourers, because a certain amount of training at the particular work gives them a certain amount of skill, but their occupation is not one to which they have had to serve any apprenticeship, that is to say men quite new to the place may be set on to a job and the particular kind of work he will be called on to do he very likely has to do all the day, all the week, and all the year round; it takes him a certain time to get into that particular job, but of course when Conditions of unskilled labour at Sheffield.

Sheffield separate infirmary and its cost.

Conditions of casual and unskilled labour at Sheffield. he has got into his work, he is to a certain extent a skilled man. These men are paid about 22s. a week, that is their ordinary wage; in times of good trade they make over-time and their wages go up to probably 28s. or 30s. a week by reason of over-time. From another firm I have obtained information to the effect that they have about 1,300 men employed at what may be called unskilled labour, and that these men average about, they say, £58 a year, which is about 22s. a week, the same as the others. This particular firm for the past six years has had an average of about 1,150 of these men, which goes down to about 950 in times of trade depression. Of course the decrease in the demand for skilled labour affects the unskilled labour, that is to say that the skilled man who is employed as an engineer, a turner, or fitter, or a moulder in the large iron works, requires the service of one or it may be two of the men who are more or less unskilled labourers. If the number of engineers, or moulders, or these other skilled men is decreased by reason of bad trade, naturally the decrease follows in the number of the unskilled men.

40910. Are these semi-skilled or unskilled men employed direct by the firm, or are they employed by the skilled men?—They are employed by the firm.

40911. If they are drawn to this employment, they may be drawn from entirely different kinds of unskilled labour?—Quite different occupations.

40912. The skill they have is acquired in the business?—Yes, the particular business in which they are engaged. I am told a man from the country is acceptable for this kind of employment, as a rule he is a strong man physically, he is steady, he is reliable and punctual, he attends to his work, he is not spoiled by the contamination of the attractions of town life, and he is an acceptable man to the employer of labour for these reasons.

40913. This labour is not very mobile, if a trade ceases at Sheffield and is even active at Birmingham, they do not readily move?—It would not affect this particular class of man, I think.

40914. With regard to home industries, the work which is actually done by men in their own homes, there is all classes of work is there not at Sheffield?—Yes, there is a certain amount of it.

40915. Do the families work?—In some cases the women and children may be employed in hand file cutting at home.

40916. With their parents?—There are not many men who work at file cutting in their own homes, they most of them work in the factories.

40917. The women folk of what are called small masters would not work at it?—No.

40918. The work is mainly done in the factories?—That is so. Of course what is called in Sheffield dialect "a little mester" might have a daughter in the warehouse or something of that sort.

40919. I mean not helping their parents?—No.

40920. I did not know whether there was work done where the polishing could be done by the wife and the filing by the man?—I know of no such trade. The reason why I drew attention to the question of the labourer is that out of 2,264 men admitted to our workhouse during the year ended March last, 1,222, nearly half of them described themselves as labourers. Of course "labourer" I know is a generic term, that is to say a man will call himself a labourer who has practically no occupation at all, it has become to be recognised as a sort of thing that will satisfy the relieving officer, and will be all that is necessary; at the same time I am strongly of opinion that the number given does include an appreciable number of the men that I refer to; also of course labourers engaged in the building trade and so on.

40921. With regard to the boarding out of children, do you occasionally adopt boarding out at a distance in order to separate children from undesirable surroundings?—Yes, almost invariably where we board out a child beyond the union it is because the guardians want to move it from the influence of undesirable relatives.

40922. It is a way of dealing with that class which is better than keeping them at the homes?—Yes.

40923. Otherwise you propose to keep them in your homes?—We do.

40924. With regard to the dietary arrangements which you refer to in Paragraph 7, it seems rather difficult to square classifications which are based on such entirely different ideas; have you the co-operation of the doctor in making that squaring?—There is no classification of the inmates of the sick wards, that is to say, all inmates of the sick wards must be dieted according to the doctor's orders, and people in health must be dieted according to the dietary tables.

40925. Then really the doctors have not much to do with it?—No, they have nothing to do with it excepting with regard to the infants, who must be dieted according to their instructions, but so far as people in health are concerned, they are dieted strictly according to the order.

40926. (Dr. Downes.) I think the doctor has to advise the guardians with regard to the dietary of those in health?—When the guardians adopt a dietary table, or a new dietary table; it has to be submitted to him, and he signs a certificate that it has been so submitted and he is satisfied.

40927. (Mr. Booth.) You speak here of the Local Government Board dietary being according to age and physical condition, that is according to the doctor's order?—No, the new dietary order, if one may now use the term, which was issued by the Local Government Board a few years ago, provides that the people should be dieted according to age and physical condition; it provides a description of the age and physical condition under which they should be dieted.

40928. Would you like to have greater freedom of dieting?—My own impression is that the present system existing of dieting is very generous indeed; there are a large number of tables from which the guardians can select a diet giving very great freedom indeed; my impression is that workhouse inmates were never better nor more generously dieted than they are at the present time.

40929. (Mr. Nunn.) With regard to Paragraph 8 of your statement, did you find that the provision of cottage homes led to an increase of the class referred to there applying to the board?—I do not think so.

40930. Are the guardians really strict in applying the standard which was laid down?—Very strict indeed; that is to say they would keep their A class cottages empty, and at the present time I believe we have two unoccupied, rather than put in people who did not come up to the standard. I think it is the only way of carrying out strictly their principle of classification.

40931. Do you find that the fact that they are housed in that way affects the willingness of the children who are liable to maintain them to contribute to their support?—No, I do not think so.

40932. With regard to Paragraph 16, would you include under (a) increased powers to guardians to admit persons who were a physical danger to the community owing to their want of cleanliness or want of power to take care of themselves?—Yes, I would certainly, provided they had power to keep them when they got them.

40933. Powers of admission and detention?—Exactly so.

40934. What classes of persons had you in your mind especially with regard to the powers of detention?—Other than those that I have mentioned here, the feeble-minded persons. Feeble-minded persons appear to me to be a very serious menace to the community at the present time. It is no uncommon thing for this class of person to be admitted to the maternity ward for confinement, and the guardians having no power to detain her, she goes out and comes back. I have a case in mind, the details of which I have not before me at the present moment, in which on enquiry I found that one feeble-minded young woman had been admitted three times to our hospital for confinement.

40935. That is the first and most important class, the feeble-minded young women?—Yes.

40936. Then there is the very aged persons who are unable to look after themselves outside the house, and yet refuse to come in?—Yes, or refuse to stay in when they have come.

40937. Then there are the epileptics who have not received a certificate of insanity, and yet are unable to look after themselves?—That is so.

Mr. Albert E. Booker.

18 Feb. 1907.

Dietaries at Sheffield and functions of medical officer there as to.

Question of home industries at Sheffield.

Large number of labourers becoming paupers.

Boarding out for children of bad parents.

Need of power to guardians to detain certain classes in the workhouse.

Mr. Albert 40938. Have you any other classes in your mind ?
E. Booker. I have not at the present moment.

18 Feb. 1907.

Standardisa-
tion of workhouses a corollary to abolition of
settlement.

40939. You refer in the same paragraph to the standardisation of workhouses in order that some of them shall not attract persons to come into the unions ; is not the real comfort of a workhouse very largely due to the personnel of the guardians and of the officers ; what other element would you say there was ?—I think there are material comforts in the workhouse apart altogether from the personnel of the persons named ; you can provide a chair for a pauper to sit in, or make him sit on a form. I think we should be prepared to admit that a chair is more comfortable than a form. That is only a very simple illustration of what I mean. You can have the walls of a workhouse ward white-washed, or have them painted, and I think we should be prepared to agree that a painted wall is pleasanter and not quite so repulsive to the inmates as the other. These are only just simple matters that occur to me at the moment. There are other ways in which material comforts may be given or withheld in a workhouse.

40940. At present they depend upon the personnel of the guardians, I suppose, and of the officers ; their taste and their sympathy ?—Yes, I think the provision of those comforts first of all depends on the views the guardians take of what an institution for the poor should be like. If they take what is now known as the humanitarian view, they would provide a comfortable room, if they take rather the repressive view, they would provide an uncomfortable place ; it is a matter very largely in the discretion of the guardians, there is no doubt ; secondarily, the officers have something to do with it. The workhouse master may suggest to the guardians that a certain ward should be made comfortable in the way that there should be curtains put to the windows, and chairs provided, and the walls decorated with a few pictures, and so on ; they are small matters, but they make all the difference to the comfort of those living in the room.

40941. Do you find that the humanitarian and repressive guardians, as you have named them, are divided very sharply on this subject ?—I have not heard of such things ; we do not have divisions of that kind in Sheffield.

40942. Would you be prepared to make any more definite suggestions as to the points upon which such standardisation might be made. You have had a great deal of experience with workhouses, or would it be more suitable to ask a master about that, or the Workhouse Masters' Association ?—I do not think I should care to give any suggestions at the moment without further consideration.

Sheffield
Guild of Help
and its
operations.

40943. (Miss Hill.) With regard to the Guild of Help have any steps been taken, do you happen to know, for training your visitors, or are they under experienced workers, or persons who have studied the question of suitable charitable relief ?—The Guild of Help is only just starting ; my impression of the persons who will be the helpers is that they will be persons who are probably experienced more or less in ordinary philanthropic work in connection with churches, district visitors, and so on : people who would want to take up this work from its social side, and they will not be trained in the way I regard training.

40944. Nor will they be gathered round trained workers ?—No.

40945. Do you think that will be a desirable way to arrange for giving relief ?—I am not contemplating at all that they will give relief.

40946. Do you think their leaders would be able to prevent it ?—I do. There is going to be no common till from which indiscriminate relief can be given to any poor people who raise sympathy, probably by a false story, in the heart of a helper.

40947. Do you not think that the mere setting to work of a large number of untrained and probably kindly people will really be more likely to be detrimental than of assistance to the administration of relief amongst the people ?—The first principle of the Guild of Help is going to be thorough enquiry into facts, and a complete record of the results of those enquiries will be kept ; another principle of the guild is that the poor may feel that they have in some person a friend who will take an interest in their welfare by counsel and advice, giving assistance to obtain employment, or assisting in obtaining employment for children, and in other such ways, but not for the purpose of obtaining relief in the majority of cases.

40948. (Dr. Downes.) I should like to ask you if you will reconsider for a moment your answer about the duty of the medical officer with regard to the framing of the dietaries. The dietary order which is in force states, first of all, that the guardians, in consultation with the medical officer, shall frame tables, and then those tables are referred to the medical officer for a formal report ?—Yes.

40949. That report I think, has to be considered by the guardians and entered on the minutes ?—Yes.

40950. Is it not the fact that at that point the medical officer's duty stops ; formerly he had to sign the tables, but now the tables are signed by the chairman and the clerk ?—That is so. With reference to Article 2 of the Order, it says the guardians shall forthwith, in consultation with the medical officer of the workhouse, proceed to frame dietary tables. As you know, the Local Government Board issued certain alternative tables from which the guardians might make a selection of dietary tables, therefore, it does not seem to me there is any necessity for consultation with the medical officer. In the schedule to the order there are certain tables given from which the guardians may make a selection for the several classes. These are all numbered as you know, and the guardians may make a selection of these for the different classes described in the schedule. As a matter of practice that is submitted to the medical officer in order that it may have his approval before it is submitted to the board of guardians and subsequently signed by the chairman and the clerk, and then submitted to the Local Government Board.

40951. As a matter of fact there is a large variety in those tables ; I believe mathematically there are something like 500 or 600 varieties of dinner ?—That is so.

40952. In framing a dietary for a week, the combination of those has to be considered ? Does not the order provide that there shall be any consideration of combinations of these dietaries ?—I do not think so. I have always understood that these having been framed on scientific lines, any one combined with any other would be a suitable combination from the point of view of scientific nourishment.

40953. That is so to a certain extent, but the local conditions have to be considered ?—Exactly.

40954. And the economy of the combination which may be selected by the guardians has to be considered ?—Yes.

40955. On all those points do you not think that medical evidence has an advantage and value ?—I do, certainly.

40956. At any rate the medical officer comes in, does he not, as an advisory agent in the matter ?—He does.

40957. Do you know what the cost of your dietary in Cost of Sheffield is now ; the weekly cost ? Can you separate Sheffield it from the sick ?—I have not the dietary table here, so dietary. I do not think I am in a position to say exactly to what it works out. I will supply with pleasure the weekly cost of each class. [Subsequently sent. See Appendix No. X (D).]

40958. Can you tell us what the cost of your infirmary maintenance is ?—We have not been separated a year. Difficulty of ascertaining cost of sick paupers. In our statement of accounts we show exactly what the cost is for the whole of the workhouse, which included then the hospital, for the year ended March last, and until we have passed March 25th coming we shall not be in a position to say what the inmates of the hospital cost as compared with the inmates of the workhouse.

40959. Is that not rather a common difficulty in the Poor Law accounts, that you cannot in ordinary workhouses definitely separate the cost of the sick from the cost of the healthy ?—It is a very material difficulty, and I think a very great disadvantage. I think this is one of the advantages we are hoping to gain by the separation of our hospital, that presently we shall be able to see what our sick people cost us and what our able-bodied people cost us, which at the present moment we are not able to do. We know that the people in our workhouse, including the hospital, cost us 9s. 10d. a week for the year ended March last, including all charges except the repayment of loans. We do not know how much of that 9s. 10d. could properly be apportioned to sick people and how much to ordinary inmates. We shall know that presently.

40960. Referring for a moment back to the dietary, you say many difficulties have arisen in connection with the dietary for the indoor poor; will you tell us what difficulties?—I should rather like to modify that; when the new dietary order was introduced, we were told by the workhouse master that there would be considerable difficulty in getting the dietary under the new order to square with our classification, but as a matter of fact that has only been found to be so to a modified extent and now the inmates of all the classes are dieted according to their age and physical condition, but they are housed and provided for in other ways according to our own classification.

40961. Do I gather that the difficulties were rather anticipatory than actual?—Yes, and they are actual to an extent now, because we have the inmates of the workhouse classified according to our own classification and occupying the wards suitable to that classification, and the consequence is that the dietary must be adjusted by the master so that the people in the B Class ward may receive the dietary that is prescribed by the order for them. It is only a matter of adjustment by the workhouse master.

40962. There is a certain amount of cross classification?—Yes, it is only a matter of adjustment. I do not think it is really a serious difficulty; it has been in operation now some time, and the matter has been adjusted by experience.

40963. With reference to the suggestion that there should be greater freedom in the regulations affecting indoor officers with regard to their marrying, I do not know whether you are aware that in some places accommodation has been provided for indoor married officers, and has not been found altogether successful?—I was not aware of that.

40964. I was referring to what occurred at one of the asylums of the Metropolitan Asylums Board. May I suggest that one of the difficulties which is found is that it may be necessary to inspect the quarters which are on the hospital premises, or institution premises, and that there may be a certain resentment on the part of the married people against that institutional inspection?—I should think there would be very properly resentment. You may know why there should be reasons for that inspection, but they are not present to my mind. It seems to me if these people should be provided with quarters, they should be regarded as a private house. I do not think if I were a married indoor officer I should like an inspector coming round inspecting my house.

40965. I believe some difficulty of that kind was experienced at the Leavesden Asylum. What is your difficulty with regard to your married officers living out?—At the present time at Sheffield we have some of the chief responsible officers married and living out, that is to say the head attendant of the asylum and others; I had better not mention the particular officers in case I may make a mistake, but there are certain of the head officers who are allowed to reside outside and are paid as outside officers. That necessitates the provision of a responsible second officer, who must live inside and be able to take the place of the head official when he is away from his duties.

40966. Do your officers take turns of day duty and night duty?—Not the head officials, the assistant officers do.

40967. Then practically the head official is on continuous duty day and night if he is resident?—I suppose the workhouse master must look to the head official as the responsible man to him for anything that takes place in his department.

40968. And you consider it desirable that as far as possible the duties of officers should be divided into day and night turns so that the officers should not always continuously be on duty?—My impression is that the best plan, and the one most appreciated by the officers, is to have an alternation of day and night and certainly not continuous night duty.

40969. In connection with this suggestion would you be disposed to aim at that as much as possible?—I would.

40970. So as to reduce the number to the minimum that would have to live in?—Yes.

40971. (Mr. Phelps.) With regard to what Dr. Downes was asking you about the marriage of officers, is it in your form of advertisement for officers generally stated that if they are married people, they are to be without encumbrances?—As we have no resident officers in the workhouse who are married, except the porter and portress, that is not necessary.

40972. Take the master for instance?—We should not state that in our advertisement for a master.

40973. Would a man have a fair chance of being elected who had a young family?—I am quite sure my board of guardians would not make that a stumbling block; our feeling is all against that sort of thing in Sheffield. With a chairman like my present chairman we should not consider it for a moment as a disqualification.

40974. You have homes for children, have you not?—Yes.

40975. Would the same be true there, that it would be no disqualification?—In the case of the children's homes I think it would be considered undesirable, and I know it has been considered undesirable; there are special reasons in the case of the children's homes why that should be so. The principle of the children's homes system is that the mother of a particular home shall associate on quite family terms with the children under her care. If she has children of her own it is very likely there may be rather an inducement for her to treat them differently from our poor children, and in that case it is rather a disqualification for a woman to have children. It has been found in practice that a mother of a home who had children of her own rather differentiated the treatment and gave them their own meals in another room and sat in that room with them to her meals, which is quite against what we want to see; that is to say, we prefer that the mother should take her own meals with the children under her care and be an associated family as far as the conditions will admit.

40976. And with regard to the superintendent of the whole establishment?—I do not think at all it would be any disqualification in his case. As a matter of fact our present superintendent has no children, but the first superintendent we had had quite a young boy of his own living with him.

40977. On the question of settlement could you give us a return of the number of cases of removals you have had in the last few years?—During the past five years, an average of 132 cases a year have been settled on other unions. Statistics as to cases of settlement and removal at Sheffield.

40978. What kind of number have you received?—I have here the report for the year ended March 31st, 1906, and during that period the settlement officer interviewed upwards of 440 cases. Of this number 255 cases we found to be either settlements Sheffield, irremovable, or no settlement, leaving 185, and with 18 cases brought forward from the previous year, you get a total of 203 cases in which action could be taken. Of those 203 cases, in 162 the settlement was admitted, in 21 the chargeability ceased prior to the establishment of a settlement, 2 cases died prior to the establishment of a settlement, 3 were refused and 15 were standing over awaiting the decision of the Unions to which they were reported.

40979. How far do these cases come under your notice?—I have an assistant clerk who is the settlement officer whose whole time is taken up with this business. I peruse every report of a case before it is sent to another union, and my assistant consults me with regard to any matter of difficulty which may arise in the course of his inquiries. I receive from him after every journey out of town or elsewhere to make an inquiry, a report of what he has discovered; I keep myself fully acquainted with the business. Functions of the clerk to guardians as to settlement cases.

40980. In the majority of cases which come before you is the question involved one of settlement or a status of irremovability?—Settlement.

40981. Supposing that it was not found possible to abolish settlement altogether, have you any modification of law of you could suggest?—I have made notes of some matters settlement that occur to me to be of importance in connection with the law of settlement, and I suggest as follows:—(1) That its abolition. Modifications alternative to its abolition.

Mr. Albert E. Booker

18 Feb. 1907.

Difficulties as to married officers.

Sheffield workhouse dietary.

Restrictive regulations for indoor officers and difficulties as to married officers.

Desirability of day and night shifts for officers.

Mr. Albert
E. Booker.

18 Feb. 1907.

Modifications of law of settlement alternative to its abolition.

birth settlement should remain undisturbed: that is, the principle of settlement by birth should remain as at present; (2) That settlements by apprenticeship might also be allowed to remain. This form of settlement does not occur very frequently now, the residential settlement having taken place its place; (3) Renting and rating settlements: these are very easily established in the majority of cases, and I think there is no harm in their being allowed to continue; (4) Settlement by possession of an estate is also very rare; then settlement by estoppel is a matter that follows if the other cases are allowed to remain; that might also be allowed to remain; that is to say a case having once been removed under an order there is an estoppel of inquiry for the future until another settlement has been obtained. These before-mentioned settlements do not present much difficulty in application, and the proofs required for establishment of the settlement by the existing law are generally obtainable, except perhaps in very old birth, and in some apprenticeship cases. In the matter of settlement by residence it will be known no doubt to members of the Commission that there has been considerable litigation, and that the matter is one of considerable difficulty, especially with reference to Section 35 of 39 and 40 Vict., c. 61. Difficulties and much legislation have resulted from the provision as to the settlement of a child under sixteen years of age, and questions as to whether those children could obtain a settlement in their own right have been carried to the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords, and the doubts have not even yet been removed. Then another matter which I think urgently requires attention is that of the settlement of paupers in divided parishes. This is a matter that has been impressed upon the Local Government Board as being one that urgently requires adjustment, and that is my own view. Then with reference to Irish removals the operation of the Poor Law (Irish Removals) Act 1900 has thrown, I think, considerable burdens upon large unions such as our own. The Act, as will be known, provides that where a native of Ireland has resided in England for five years, he shall be irremovable from England. The provisions of this Act are peculiarly devoid of any conditions as to the nature or place of residence, and the result is that the great bulk of Irish poor in England have to be maintained by unions having no liability under English laws and without means of redress. This should be a national and not a parochial charge if it is allowed to remain as it is at present, in my opinion. I have already referred to the desirability of the establishment of a board or tribunal to which cases of difference might be referred by unions who do not agree.

40982. You would be glad to see the period of residence required for a settlement reduced to a year?—I do not think I should.

40983. Have you ever in your experience taken a case by agreement to the Local Government Board to decide?—We are singularly free from litigation or disagreement in Sheffield. From time to time we do not perhaps agree with other unions on particular cases, but during my ten years' experience as clerk we have only had one case at Quarter Sessions. I do not think we have submitted one to the Local Government Board.

40984. You know that it is possible to do so under certain circumstances?—Yes.

40985. Are you content with the area of your union, or do you think any enlargement of it would be desirable?—We have an old question existing in Sheffield, as to whether there should not be a combination of the two unions for the purposes of the Poor Law. My own impression is that that would make an unwieldy area, and that, apart from an adjustment of the poor rate over the whole city, there are no advantages to be gained. I think it would satisfy those people who have urged now for a good many years, since my time and before, that the two unions of the City of Sheffield should be amalgamated, if they could have an equalisation of the poor rate. That equalisation, in my opinion, is coming about of itself, but still there it is, at the present moment in one union the poor rate is lower than in the other, both unions being in the same city.

40986. Do you think there is any advantage in having the same area for all purposes?—I cannot say that from experience, but I should think there would be, if it were possible 40987. Who is your rating authority in Sheffield?—Rating authority. The Sheffield Corporation, under the Local Act of 1900, took over the powers and duties of overseers and the appointment of overseers, and everything in connection with the overseers' work in the making of the rate and the collection of the rates.

40988. You have no assessment committee?—We have the union assessment committee; the Corporation did not take over the power of appointing the assessment committee.

40989. What is the assessment authority for your union?—The corporation. The duty is on the overseers to make the valuation list.

40990. What does the assessment committee do?—They receive the valuation list from the overseers and after deposit approve it, and they are the tribunal before which objections are first heard.

40991. The corporation accepts that valuation?—We work in complete harmony with the overseers appointed by the corporation.

40992. How is that working in harmony with the corporation brought about? Under what machinery?—The overseers might, if they chose, appoint a separate valuer to make their valuation, as a matter of fact the valuations of the expert valuer appointed by the assessment committee are accepted for both bodies, the overseers and the assessment committee.

40993. Does the corporation have an assessment committee?—No.

40994. And they do not hear any appeals?—No, and they are not represented on the assessment committee.

40995. Could they legally have an assessment committee?—As far as I know there is no provision for it.

40996. Do you think with regard to the expenditure of the boards of guardians there is room for more control?—In large matters, yes, in small matters certainly not. My impression is that there is no necessity for, or at any rate there is no justification for any relaxation of, the present central control in matters of large expenditure, but I think there is considerable necessity for relaxation of that control in matters of quite minor expenditure, and also for the modification of the powers of auditors in the same direction.

40997. Do you find the auditor is very active in matters of small importance?—I think I can give a perfect illustration of that; our auditor, of whom I speak with very great respect, has just completed his audit of the accounts for the half-year ended September. I suppose the amount of our expenditure for a half-year is about £70,000. At the completion of this audit he drew attention to two matters, presumably those only in connection with the half-year's accounts in which there was any irregularity. Those two matters amounted to 1s. 10d. for a repair to a chair leg at the office, which was three weeks out of date, and the other was an expenditure of 9s. for blacksmith's work in connection with the farm, that had also been made a week or two out of date. It seems to me that it is trifling with the advantages of a Local Government Board audit that we should be put to the inconvenience of writing to the Local Government Board for their sanction to the payment of 10s. 10d. on an expenditure such as ours in Sheffield. It seems to me that that sort of thing is considerably overdone.

40998. In large affairs you think the control on the whole is judicious?—Yes, I am very strongly of that opinion.

40999. I see with regard to the payment of outdoor relief you have appointed a pay clerk?—We have.

41000. Is he under your supervision?—In the same way that all officers of the union are under my supervision as the chief official.

41001. Is he a clerk in your office?—No, he is an officer in the out-relief department.

41002. To whom is he responsible?—He is firstly responsible to the superintendent of the out-relief, who has control of all the officers of the out-relief department, and through him to me.

41003. (Sir Henry Robinson.) Does this pay clerk give all the pay that is given to the recipients of outdoor

Question of
combination of unions at Sheffield.

Extent of which control of Local Government Board should be retained or diminished

Over-earof trifles district auditors.

Approval control of Local Government
Board.

Pay clerk his functions relief?—There are no payments in cash made by the relieving officers at all.

41004. In the case of sudden and urgent necessity which the relieving officer has to do with, what does he do?—He relieves in kind.

41005. If the pay clerk considers too much relief is given does he report the fact?—He does not express himself with regard to that at all.

41006. With regard to Paragraph 8 of your statement, are the cottages which are erected for the well-conducted classes within or without the workhouse grounds?—They are without the workhouse grounds in this sense, that the inhabitants of the cottages are not required to pass through the workhouse lodge. They have quite free ingress and egress to and from the cottages. That is to say, if they choose to go outside and take a walk in the country lane which is quite close by there is no restriction.

41007. Is there no restriction on the hour they return?—Only the general supervision given by the attendant. Of course there is an attendant in charge of the cottages.

41008. A sort of servant in each house, is it?—The man who is the responsible attendant is the shoemaker at the workhouse, which is only a quarter of a mile away. His wife looks after these people, cooks their meals and attends to them generally, giving a general supervision to them during the day.

41009. Are the cottages as comfortable as those occupied by a labouring man outside?—They are simply one room cottages; they are plainly furnished, with a bed in the corner of the house. Of course it is kept perfectly clean. It is kept in order by the people themselves as far as their physical condition will enable them to do it.

41010. Is there no kitchen in the house or room?—No, they are dieted according to the dietary order, but their meat, to take that as an example, is served out in one joint sufficient for the whole of the occupants of the cottages, that is taken into a general kitchen by the female attendant and cooked there; and the one joint is served out to these people in a much more homely comfortable and tasty way than is done in the ordinary workhouse ward.

41011. On the whole, the cottages are not so good perhaps as those occupied by the labouring men outside?—A labouring man outside would have more than one room, or the majority would have more than one room; of course there are people who live in a furnished room of a very poor class, but the ordinary man outside has a house containing more than one room, consequently he has more comfort in that way. But these cottages are exceedingly comfortable, and are very highly appreciated by these old people, there is no doubt about that.

41012. The diet, I suppose, is quite as good as they get outside?—Better.

41013. Would it be possible for a working man by his own independent exertions during his working life, by joining any thrift society, to maintain himself in his after years in the same state of comfort as he would be maintained by the Sheffield guardians?—I very much doubt it.

41014. That has no effect on the number of persons who belong to thrift societies?—I do not think we have got to that stage yet.

41015. Is there any necessity to join thrift societies under the circumstances?—Yes, I think there is; however comfortable you may make a man who qualifies for our Class A, when he comes inside his circumstances are not entirely as good as those of the thrifty man outside who has made provision.

41016. Is there any stigma attaching to the person inside?—We have endeavoured to remove that as much as possible.

41017. There is no distinctive dress?—No.

41018. The liberty is almost the same?—Almost, but not quite; that is to say, they may go out pretty well as they like during the day, as I have said, if they want to go for a walk, or even go to town by the car, they could do so, but I cannot see that their circumstances are quite equivalent to the thrifty man who has provided for himself, and lives outside.

41019. With regard to the abolition of removal and your remarks about the Irish cases, are there many of those cases in the Sheffield workhouse?—There are a considerable number that are settled upon us.

41020. Are they mostly people who have worked during their lives in Sheffield or the district, or in England?—Not necessarily.

41021. A good many of them?—Some of them are, no doubt, people who have come in their early life and obtained employment in the large works and lived in Sheffield a considerable time, but some are not.

41022. Considering those people have worked all their lives in Sheffield, do you think it is a hardship upon Sheffield to maintain them in their old age?—I think there is as much hardship in maintaining them there as anywhere.

41023. Supposing a Sheffield man came to Dublin and he goes to the workhouse in Dublin, or to the Dublin infirmary, he has to remain there the whole of the time; do not you think there should be reciprocity?—Yes.

41024. You have about the same number transferred to you as you transfer to other unions?—Yes.

41025. If the law of settlement were altogether removed, do not you think it would cut both ways?—It would to some extent, no doubt.

41026. The only fear would be if in one union the standard of comfort was higher it would attract other people?—Yes, that is my view, that the total abolition of the law of settlement would probably bring a hardship on large urban unions like our own.

41027. That has not been the result in Ireland. I wonder if you would consider that the reason of that would apply in England which we found apply in Ireland, that nothing will induce people who have been all their lives in a certain union to go elsewhere; they like to be relieved amongst their own friends, in a workhouse somewhere near their friends, so that if they get a day out they can go and see them. Do you not think it might have that effect in the English unions also?—Possibly; but at the same time I think from the little experience I have of Irish people they have a very great affection for their own country.

41028. More than the English?—I am not going to say that, but I think the Irish people, especially the peasantry of Ireland, are very much attached to their own neighbourhood.

41029. Do you think if the people in Sheffield heard that a workhouse some 20 or 30 miles away had a somewhat better dietary they would be likely to go off there, although they had no particular friends there?—I think a certain class of the workhouse inmates most undoubtedly would.

41030. There is another way of dealing with that in Ireland. If people go from one union to another for the purpose of obtaining relief they can be prosecuted. Do you think that would be any check?—Yes. I do.

41031. (Sir Samuel Provis.) Taking those audit cases the law is this: that the guardians must pay a debt in the half-year it is incurred, or within three months afterwards unless the Local Government Board extend the time?—Just so.

41032. In those two cases the amount had not been paid in the time prescribed by the law?—Yes.

41033. Therefore the auditor was right?—Exactly, I am not finding fault with the auditor.

41034. What are you finding fault with?—The system.

41035. You think the guardians should be permitted to break the law?—Certainly not; I think the law should be amended so as not to apply to paltry payments such as those were.

41036. That is a suggestion, is it not, for the alteration of the Payment of Debts Act?—Exactly so.

41037. Where would you draw the line? How much would you say the guardians may pay, although the time has expired?—If I am to suggest an alteration in an important statute I do not think I am prepared to answer a question like that right away, it is hardly fair to expect me to do that. I think you will follow me and agree when I say that this was drawn from me as a sort of side

Mr. Albert E. Booker.

18 Feb. 1907.

Irish irremovability cases at Sheffield.

Effect of abolition of settlement.

Effect of abolition of settlement in Ireland.

Alleged over-care as to trifles by district auditors.

Sheffield Cottage Homes for old and infirm, etc.

High standard of relief to the poor at Sheffield and effect thereof on thrift.

Legibility of relief to the poor at Sheffield.

Mr. Albert
E. Booker.

18 Feb. 1907.

Alleged over-care as to trifles by district
auditors.

issue on the question of control of guardians' expenditure. I gave this illustration that came into my mind of something that had happened quite recently in justification of my statement that I thought there was a necessity for Local Government Board control to be continued over the expenditure of large sums, but when we came to small matters of this kind, it seemed to me a statutory provision for control is unnecessary, and causes unnecessary trouble.

41038. The point I wanted to put was this: the principle of that Act is that the guardians should pay their debts within a fixed time?—Yes; I think that is a right principle, because the poor rate is levied for that period.

41039. The object of applying to the Local Government Board is to get relaxation. It is not an instance of excessive control by the Local Government Board, but it is an instance of the Board having power to relax a prohibition which would otherwise apply?—I agree.

41040. Is there not a difference between that case and the case of excessive control in small matters?—I am bound to say I hardly see the difference just at this moment; I do not know whether I have quite followed you.

41041. The point I want to put is: that this is not an instance of control, but an instance of the power on the part of the central authority to relax the provisions of the statute?—I think I must agree with you, because the illustration which I gave happens to be one which applies to a matter for which there is statutory provision. I think I must agree with you on this particular point, because that happens to be so in the illustrations I gave.

Situation on refusal of order for Applicant, and possible remedies.

41042. You give a case in Paragraph 14 of your statement in which under very undesirable circumstances out-relief had been given, and a workhouse order was offered and refused. What happened to that case afterwards; had you to give out door relief?—I was at the relief committee when this case came forward, so it happened to come into my mind when I was writing my statement. The matter was left in this way, that in order to prevent the possibility of these young children suffering, the relieving officer only gave relief at his discretion, that is to say in kind, in order that the children might not suffer. How long that will go on I cannot say.

41043. In the cases referred to in your paper, that same sort of thing happens: that the relieving officer gives relief in kind, because of the children?—He must.

41044. How does he secure that the children get it, and that it does not go to the parents?—I do not think he can secure that, but he protects himself by the fact that he has given relief that should go to the children, and if the children do not get it he cannot help it, he cannot secure that it does go to them, of course.

41045. What is your remedy for cases of this kind; what alteration in the law or orders would you make to meet cases of that kind?—I am bound to say I had in mind at the time I wrote this and gave that illustration, the provision of some power such as I have heard the guardians wish for many times in relief committees, under which they could in a case of this sort in which they, in their discretion, thought the house was the proper relief to be given in all the circumstances of the case, compel that person to go and take that relief. It does not seem to me to be satisfactory from any point of view that a person should be in a position to say to the guardians, No, "I will not take the relief you offer me," when the guardians have the knowledge that his refusal of that relief puts him in the position of starving his children, and carrying on a wretched existence such as is not desirable from the point of view of the community in any way whatever.

41046. You mean to say you would compulsorily remove that case to the workhouse?—Yes, I would in this case particularly have had some power to compel the person to accept the relief given, which is the proper relief in my mind; there is no doubt about it, it was the proper relief for the necessities of that case.

41047. You might have taken the children into the workhouse, might you not?—We might have done that, and we should in an occasional case, I mean in the case of a widow we sometimes take the children to relieve her, we take the children to our homes, and leave her to work for her own living, and perhaps the support of one child.

41048. Perhaps you would think it was open to this objection, that it would be relieving the parent of the support of his children?—I should consider that a very great objection where it is possible to be avoided.

41049. I do not think I quite understood your system with regard to the classification of outdoor relief. Am I right in thinking that the maximum of outdoor relief varies according to different classes in the same circumstances?—I do not know whether I have made this matter as clear as I should like to. The idea of the maximum scale is for a guidance to the relief committees. In quite a number of cases the persons in the particular class do not get that maximum amount, there may be relatives contributing, or there may be other circumstances under which the guardians do not feel warranted in giving the maximum sum; in other cases the circumstances may be such as to render it not desirable for a person to go into the workhouse owing to the condition of their residing with a daughter or what not, and yet the circumstances may justify a larger amount of relief than is given in our scale. In those cases a larger amount would be given, but under normal conditions where the conditions were such as in the opinion of the relief committee to necessitate outdoor relief, if there were not special circumstances this scale would be adhered to.

41050. Let us suppose two cases in which the circumstances of destitution were similar and there were no contributions from relatives or any circumstances which interfered. Supposing that to be so, and the circumstances precisely the same with the two cases but they belonged to different classes, would there be a higher sum given in one case than in the other?—Yes, but we have to bear in mind in conjunction with that, the conditions under which they are classified. That is to say, in Class A. the people are over sixty years of age, have resided in Sheffield for a certain period and are persons of excellent character. But the Class B., people may be a little short in one of those conditions, they may probably not be sixty years of age; if you say you will give all persons of sixty years of age and upwards 5s. a week as the maximum, if a person came along who perhaps was fifty years of age there would be no hardship in giving that person 4s., because he would be able to do something to help to support himself.

41051. The cases I was supposing are cases where you have got the same circumstances as regards age and so forth?—If the circumstances are quite the same, if it were possible for them to be quite the same, the scale would be adhered to. We should give 5s. in one and 4s. in the other.

41052. Does it not follow that either in one case you are giving more relief than is really necessary to relieve the destitution, or in the other case you are giving less?—In the earlier part of my evidence I admitted when I was asked a question about this that to my mind the principle upon which all relief is based in the necessity of the case, and probably the Sheffield classification scheme departs a little from that principle.

41053. (Chairman.) Following up these cases of which you have made a list, supposing the guardians were to take the children into the workhouse with a view of educating them, the mother could always claim them afterwards under the existing law?—You may know that the guardians have rather large powers given to them to take the children of undesirable parents, or deserted children under their care and control.

41054. I was taking this list?—That list is of cases in which relief has been refused, the outdoor relief has been declined by the applicant. Were you raising the question that if the guardians take those children from the parents, the parents could claim them afterwards?—Yes, by application.

41055. Yes?—Certainly.

41056. So you would start all over again?—Exactly. It would be a very exceptional case in which the guardians thought it desirable to take the children of parents such as those, in order to enable them to live just as they choose, and to relieve them of all responsibility for their children.

41057. You think the peculiarity of these cases is not so much that there are children associated with them, as that the applicant is supposed to be unfit for outdoor situation on relief; on refusing indoor relief they can practically compel the guardians to give outdoor relief?—They can, and I think it is a very undesirable state of things.

41058. You suggest you should have power to deal with cases where there are those children where the parents are not in the opinion of the guardians entitled to outdoor relief?—I do not see at the present moment why powers of that kind could not be applied to those cases.

41059. The relieving officer now is under a responsibility?—He will not undertake the responsibility of allowing the possibility of the children dying of starvation, and I do not blame him.

41060. He would refuse the responsibility even in the case of adults, would he not?—I do not think he would consider the responsibility so grave in the case of an adult. He is to a certain extent protected if the guardians offer the applicant some form of relief which the applicant declines; then of course the responsibility is on the applicant, but the case is complicated where there are young children who might suffer from the refusal of the parents. In the case of an adult, the adult takes the responsibility, and the relieving officer need not necessarily concern himself about it.

41061. Assuming any serious consequences ensue, and the case came before a jury, the relieving officer, I suppose, might feel himself in an awkward position?—I do not think so, if he or the relief committee had offered an indoor order the relieving officer would not find himself in any difficulty.

41062. (Miss Hill.) Are not the relieving officers very much under the impression that they are responsible?—I think there is a very grave responsibility attaching to the relieving officer if he neglects a case, there is always a criminal responsibility hanging over him.

41063. If the relief is declined and the man or woman starves to death, is not the relieving officer responsible?—I think there is no blame attaching to him, or any legal responsibility attaching to him.

41064. (Mr. Booth.) With regard to the taking of the children away from their parents, if the parents knew that they would lose the children entirely and absolutely, so that they never could identify or claim them again, would they as a rule regard it as an advantage or a penalty to lose the children?—Of course we are here dealing with a very wide question which affects human nature I think. Does it not come back to one, as to what kind of people they are; even the most dissolute people profess a certain amount of attachment for their children very often. In Sheffield the guardians exercise the powers given to them under the Poor Law Act of 1899 to a very considerable extent, and on the smallest possible justification they take children under their care and control under the powers I have just quoted, but I have known cases in which even the most dissolute parents have professed a certain amount of regard for their children and a very keen desire to know where they were and where they had been boarded out, and so on, I am not going to say that this professed interest has not been in some cases with ulterior motives; when a child is getting on towards twelve or thirteen years of age it becomes a matter of serious importance to some of these people as to whether they are going to have the advantages of their services when they get to an age when they can work; I will not say all these enquiries are made from motives of affection, but I do not doubt that they are in some cases, even when the parents are most dissolute people.

41065. I should certainly suppose there was natural affection as well as motives of interest. According to your experience, if you could absolutely isolate the children so that there was no chance of the parents getting them at all, do you think the average effect would be that the children would be, as it were, dumped upon the community?—To put it the other way round, are you raising the question whether this would be an inducement to people to dump their children.

41066. Yes?—I do not think our experience goes to show that it is. I am bound to say it was said in the early history of our children's homes that that would be the effect, but I do not think it has been.

41067. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to the old people's homes, with the experience the guardians have had of those homes, would they build them if they had to do it to-day?—Yes, they would certainly build them and if they were justified in doing so, that is to say, if the number of people suitable for the occupation of those cottages was to increase, they would have no hesitation in building more.

41068. Would they build them where they are?—Yes, the site is such that there is room for expansion. The original plan for those cottages was to start operations with the administrative block in the middle, as it is now built, and to have two wings; we have never built the total number that was originally intended.

41069. Have you the number of married couples you expected to have when you were building?—We have eight cottages there, and those cottages each provide accommodation for two persons; they may be a married couple over sixty years of age, they may be two men or two women. They are not all married couples in the cottages.

41070. The intention was to have married couples was it not?—Not entirely.

41071. With regard to outdoor relief, you say that the outdoor relief has grown considerably during the past three years?—It has had an upward inclination.

41072. To what do you attribute it?—I attribute it to several causes. Mr. Chaplin's famous circular I have no doubt, whether it was correctly interpreted or not I am not prepared to say, was interpreted or misinterpreted to mean that there should be a relaxation of the principles on which out-relief should be granted.

41073. Do the guardians now give relief to persons they would not entertain prior to that circular?—My own opinion is that in Sheffield during the last few years there has been a little relaxation of the principles; that there has been rather a tendency to give relief where there used not to be.

41074. In Paragraph 12 of your statement you attribute that partly to the classification scheme?—I think that has something to do with it. Since we adopted this graduated scale of relief, there is no doubt in my mind that the amount of poor relief per head works out at more than it used to.

41075. That is a question of the adequacy of relief rather than the number of people who seek relief?—That is so.

41076. Is not the number of persons really the proper indication?—I suppose it is; as to the ultimate increase in relief, the number of persons is the index of that no doubt.

41077. You think the classification has increased the number?—I do not think that classification has increased the number of persons in receipt of relief, but I think it has increased the amount of our expenditure on relief.

41078. Is that what you meant when you said that out-relief had during the past few years had a distinctly upward inclination?—I was speaking rather of the amounts than the persons. The schedule I have handed in shows the number of persons and the amount, and comparing the two I think it will be found probably that the amount of money expended is rather out of proportion to the persons. It is rather the money that has had the upward inclination than the number.

41079. Have you the amount it works out at per head for the number of persons receiving relief on a given date?—I have. I can give you the amount for the year. On p. 13 of our statement of accounts you will find particulars relating to the out-relief, and you will see that during the year ended March, 1906, the average number of persons relieved per week was 2,527, and the average amount per head per week was 2s. 1'66d.

41080. Do you consider that high?—No; of course you have to take into account that a large number of those relieved are children, the maximum amount for which is 2s.

41081. Your classification is based upon period of residence to a certain extent, is it not?—It is.

41082. Do you think that is an advisable basis of classification?—I do, for this reason, for local protection; it is conceivable that a person of a very estimable character might have resided in Sheffield for a period of five years and might conceivably qualify, except in the matter of residence, for our Class A. I do not think it is quite

Mr. Albert E. Booker.

18 Feb. 1907.

Increase of out-relief in Sheffield and its causes; Mr. Chaplin's circular, etc.

Effect of classification of out-paupers at Sheffield.

Increase of out-relief in Sheffield.

Basis and probable effect of classification of outdoor paupers at Sheffield.

Mr. Albert E. Booker. Desirable that they should have the same privileges as people of long residence.

18 Feb. 1907. 41083. Do you think they would exercise that amount of forethought that twelve years before they were eligible they would come into your district?—I certainly do not think twelve years before. I suppose there are very few people who contemplate twelve years before they become chargeable that they will become chargeable.

41084. Does this class exercise so much forethought as to cover a three years' period, for instance?—I should not like to say; perhaps they would.

41085. They would be really thrifty people who would exercise that forethought and probably do without the relief?—Perhaps; I should not like to say they would.

41086. Is there any co-operation between the medical officer of health and the board of guardians?—In what direction?

Co-operation between Poor Law and sanitary authorities at Sheffield. 41087. With regard to notifying to the guardians cases of want that come under the notice of the medical officer of health, and on the other hand cases coming under the notice of the relieving officer where there are undesirable conditions, overcrowding and dangers to health?—We work in harmony with the medical officer of health; he himself does not report cases to us as being in his opinion suitable for relief, but some of the woman sanitary inspectors have from time to time drawn the attention of the relieving officer to cases they have come across. On the other hand in cases where the homes are insanitary the relieving officer would communicate with the medical officer of health's department, drawing attention to a case if it is not under his observation. There is no systematic co-operation, if you understand me; it would be done on either side in a special case, but there is no systematic co-operation.

Phthisis, its notification and treatment at Sheffield. 41088. There is compulsory notification, is there not, in Sheffield?—Yes, of phthisis.

41089. In consequence of that notification have more cases come under the notice of the guardians for treatment?—I have no evidence of it.

41090. Have the guardians made any special provision for that class of case?—We have a small sanatorium in the hospital containing about eight beds for the treatment of male cases, and we have under consideration at the present time the conversion of a building for about an equal number of female cases.

Midwives Act. 41091. With regard to the Midwives Act, have the district medical officers been called upon to act in cases where the midwives have found it necessary without a relieving officer's order?—I have not heard of that. I should not like to say they have or have not. I have not heard of it at all; it has not come under my notice.

41092. You have not heard of any refusal to attend a case?—No, I think I should have heard of a refusal, but I have not heard of such a case.

Reasons for separation of infirmary from workhouse at Sheffield. 41093. With regard to the separation of your hospital from the other part of the building, what is there expected to be gained from that apart from the separate accounts?—The guardians were of opinion when they went in for separation, that in the case of a union like Sheffield, the institution itself was too large to be properly controlled by one officer, and further that it was better that the sick should be treated by persons specially trained for that particular work and under separate supervision. Reasons for separation of infirmary from workhouse at Sheffield.

41094. That could be done even although it was under the same administration, could it not?—Yes, so far as the training of the persons who look after the sick is concerned, no doubt it could. Another reason was that it was considered that a hospital separated altogether in methods of administration, has a higher standard and a higher tone; it is perhaps a sentimental idea, that it has a higher tone than one associated with the workhouse. I am giving now the views of the guardians in this particular matter; of course those views are not necessarily my own; I am giving what the guardians think of it.

41095. You issued a report, did you not, some time ago, with regard to the separation of the institution and made certain claims for it?—Yes, I have here the report of a deputation appointed to enquire into this matter, which contains certain conclusions they arrived at.

41096. Was not the feeling of the patients taken very largely into consideration?—Certain members of the hospital committee on this deputation were very strongly of opinion that there should be nothing in the way of the reception of a sick person into a union hospital; it is said to be for the good of the community that it is desirable that persons in this station of life should be cured as soon as possible, and it is desirable to remove any difficulty, sentimental or otherwise, in the way of the reception of a person into the union hospital as such, and it has been held that the separation of the institution would dissociate it from the workhouse, and that persons going in might consider that they were not going into the workhouse exactly, but into the hospital, which was something rather different. Those are views that are held by some of the guardians.

41097. It was expected that people would avail themselves of the opportunity of treatment inside the workhouse hospital who would not do so if it was connected with the workhouse?—That was so.

41098. That is, it was intended as an encouragement to the people to come in rather than remain sick in their own homes?—That is so.

41099. Is there anything said by the committee with regard to disfranchisement?—This question was taken into account, and it has been suggested that there should be no disfranchisement for persons received into a union hospital; there has been nothing further done in that particular matter as far as our own case is concerned, although the view of the present board of guardians no doubt is that it would be desirable to remove any franchise disqualification.

41100. Is there any suggestion that applicants should be received into the hospital without a relieving officer's order?—No, not with us.

41101. I think you are responsible for the recommendations which were drawn up by your Board?—Yes, I prepared the first draft of those. Destitution for relief.

41102. Do you hold with Paragraph 2, which says that destitution ought not to be a test of relief from the Poor Law?—Are you asking me whether I hold with that personally?

41103. Yes?—No.

Mr. ALLAN DEARDEN, called; and Examined.

Mr. Allan Dearden. 41104. (Chairman.) You are the Superintendent of out-relief and collector to the guardians of the Ecclesall Bierlow Union?—I am.

18 Feb. 1907. 41105. You have prepared a statement which we will treat as your examination in chief, if you will kindly hand it in, and supplement that by further questions?—Certainly.

(The Witness handed in the following Statement.)

Social and industrial conditions at Ecclesall Bierlow. 1. In the north, north-west, and east, the little master and the working-man reside. The principal trades are those of cutlers, file-cutters, silversmiths, grinders, warehousewomen, and factory hands.

The population is great in this division, and naturally produces the most pauperism.

The number of cases in receipt of outdoor relief in the said district on January 1st last was 611.

2. The south and south-west is residential and rural, with a large acreage of moorland. There are three villages and several hamlets. The poorer classes are composed of general and domestic servants and farm labourers. The number of cases in this district on the said January 1st last was 30.

3. Thirty years ago an experiment was tried to compel every able-bodied man in receipt of relief to do a fair day's work. The guardians bought large quantities of stone and wood, and arranged that every able-bodied man then in the workhouse should be turned out, and together with others on out-relief ordered to go into the test yard and break stone or cut wood at the discretion of the Labour yard at Ecclesall Bierlow.

hour yards labour master, and at the conclusion of each day's work to be paid according to the annexed scale. This order has been in force ever since that time.

4. The amounts paid are: 1s. 11d. per ton for cinders; 1s. 8d. per ton for granite and limestone; and 6s. 8d. per ton for wood.

5. You occasionally come across men who can earn very little at this kind of work, such as painters, clerks, etc., whose hands are naturally not accustomed to this work, but the superintendent of the test yard has the trade of each person given to him, and he informs the relieving officer of the amount earned, and if it is not sufficient, a supply of groceries and bread is given.

6. The number of orders given during the past year was 151, and the number now working 8.

7. The respective merits of indoor and outdoor relief may be well stated by quoting the policy of the guardians of this union.

8. Outdoor relief of an adequate amount is granted in cases where an excellent character may be proved, and in cases presenting any doubt the workhouse test is applied.

9. To give outdoor relief in cases addicted to drink, immoral characters, those unable to care for themselves, etc., is to encourage pauperism in the vicinity where they reside.

10. The workhouse, therefore, offers a good alternative, and in cases where guardians consider there to be any doubt, an order for admission is the most satisfactory way, both to themselves and to the pauper, to afford the necessary relief.

11. The classes of persons applying for relief are:—The old, infirm, and feeble-minded, young widows and children, wives (and children) whose husbands (and fathers) are in different institutions, the temporary sick, the deserted and neglected, also a small proportion of temporary "out-of-works," pregnant women, and the able-bodied "never-want-work."

12. The causes of pauperism are:—Age, fluctuation of trade, Employers' Liability Act, drink, immorality, thriftlessness, chronic sickness, and mental deficiency.

13. The class of persons seeking election as guardians is composed of candidates nominated and elected by political parties and friendly societies. Since 1894 a great change has occurred in the personnel of the board.

14. Relief is administered by three committees (three members forming a quorum). Two committees are carried on at the same time. Pay stations are situated in different parts of the union, where the poor are paid. Applications for renewals, cases of sudden and urgent necessity, are attended to there, also medical orders are given out.

15. Every case is treated on its merits, and no classification has been attempted.

16. Reforms in the law or practice suggested by experience are:—

(a) A penal colony for the "never-want-work," the immoral, and chronic drunkard.

(b) Power to detain the feeble-minded and cases that are partly cured from some loathsome and contagious disease.

(c) Power to remove to the workhouse those who are unable to take care of themselves, and the phthisical cases who are occupying bedrooms where others are sleeping.

(d) To do away with the attendance cards of children where school cards are not used.

(e) To amend Section 13 of the Lunacy Law.

(f) To elect a third of the guardians annually, so that the policy of the board be continuous. Members of the new board have only a slight knowledge in many cases of the principle and practice of the Poor Law.

Case-Paper System.

17. In many unions the case-paper system has now come into vogue, and the officer who is working it naturally likes the system, for it cannot help but be of material assistance to him in his work, and those who have worked with it unanimously agree that it is far in advance of the Application and Report Book, for it gives the guardians great assistance in not only providing a complete history of individual cases, but showing at a glance the decisions of the various Relief Committees from time to time in consecutive order. It is of assistance at the Police Court, for it shows the written orders of the guardians, as well as those who are liable to maintain, and also the earnings of each member of the family.

18. It assists the settlement officer, for it gives the date and place of the applicant, and all particulars relating to such applicants. It is also of assistance to the overseers in making out parliamentary lists, as it states whether the applicant is a householder or lodger. But the main advantage, which I feel I cannot press home too much, is that if an officer resign or die, the newly appointed official can, if sufficiently energetic, start where the old officer left off, and not have to spend years of time and experience to find out the ins and outs of every case.

19. The only objection that can be made against the system is the difficulty of the audit, but this can be easily overcome if the Local Government Board should authorise the Relief Order Book to be substituted at audit for the Application and Report Book, and if the information contained in the case-papers should be used as a check upon the legality of the relief.

20. It would also reduce the cost of printing and storage. The case-papers in vogue in the Ecclesall Union differ somewhat from those in other unions, for it has been feared that the cost of storage would be a very serious item.

21. Therefore, to reduce the space, the history of the family is put upon the thick backing sheet, and one paper is used for the relatives liable to maintain, instead of each member of the family having one sheet to himself.

22. The books in use are of course the Application and Report Book, the Stoppage Book, and five Registers, viz:—(1) Admissions and Discharges (Workhouse); (2) Admissions and Discharges (Asylums); (3) Other Institutions; (4) Revision Register; and (5) Case-Paper Register.

23. To fill up a case-paper averages about twenty minutes. On being filled up, the relieving officer copies the application into the Application and Report Book, and on the morning of the day previous to the meeting of the committee, the superintendent goes over every case-paper, and stamps in the words:—

APPROVED.

.....weeks
Date190 ..
.....

24. At a meeting of the committee, same are taken before them, together with the Application and Report Book, and as the cases are disposed of, one guardian enters the Order on the case-paper, and one in the Application and Report Book. The chairman, after the cases have been heard, signs the Relief Order Book, which is then countersigned by the Clerk.

25. At the termination of the meeting, each relieving officer hands the case-papers over to the superintendent, and he, with the assistance of a case-paper clerk, sorts them into three divisions, namely:—(1) Old cases taken from the cabinet; (2) New cases for outdoor relief, and (3) Admissions to the workhouse, asylums, etc.

26. He now takes the Revision Register, and enters the name and number of each case forward to the week when same will have to be revised by the guardians. He then replaces the old cases in the cabinet which have been extracted during the week, taking the Cabinet Register to see if all have been returned, and, if so, initial each case in the Register.

27. He afterwards takes all the Admission and Discharge Registers and enters the index number in a column ruled for that purpose.

28. All new cases are indexed, and the index number is stamped on each case-paper and then placed in the filing cabinet.

29. To make the system a success it should be started de novo in every case, for it is surprising the different statements made when the case-paper is taken, to what were given on the first application.

Mr. Allan
Dearden.
18 Feb. 1907.

Audit difficulties as to case-paper system and their remedies.

Relief books and forms in use at Ecclesall.

Procedure of relief committees at Ecclesall.

Mr. Allan
Dearden.

18 Feb. 1907.

Advantages and cost of case-paper system.

30. Out of 3,632 case-papers taken in 1905, twenty-four old settlement cases were discovered, namely, twenty-eight inmates and three lunatics, and these have been removed to other unions, showing a yearly saving of £681 12s. ; also a thorough investigation of outdoor relief shows a reduction of £255 19s. 9d. and an increase of £222 7s. 8d. on the amount of money collected towards the maintenance of those chargeable.

31. The salaries, cabinet, and stock, cost £258 10s. 6d., showing a net saving on the year of £907 8s. 11d. I may add that the present year, so far, appears to show reasonable hopes of effecting a similar saving.

Scale of relief in Ecclesall labour yard.

32. SCALE ALLOWED BY THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE ECCLESALL BIERLOW UNION TO MEN BREAKING CINDERS.

	Tons	Per Ton	s.	d.	s.	d.
Single man to break -	3 weekly	at 1	11	=	5	9
Married man with wife only	4 "	1	11	=	7	8
" with wife and one child	5 "	1	11	=	9	7
" with wife and two children	6 "	1	11	=	11	6
" with wife and three children	7 "	1	11	=	13	5
" with wife and four or more children	8 "	1	11	=	15	4

Dated January 31st, 1877.

JOHN FAIRBURN, Chairman.
THOMAS W. SMITH,
Clerk.

41106. (Chairman.) How long have you been superintendent of out-relief?—Two and a quarter years.

41107. What were you before that?—I have been since 1875 assistant relieving officer and relieving officer. I was appointed relieving officer in 1894.

Arrangements for employment of able-bodied
at Ecclesall.

41108. You have had, therefore, a lengthy experience. Did the system in operation thirty years ago of compelling able-bodied men in receipt of relief to try and do a fair day's work answer?—Yes; we are still carrying on the same system.

41109. Is that exclusively confined to breaking stones?—No, wood cutting and stone breaking, but chiefly wood cutting.

41110. Have you any men doing agricultural work?—No, we have only seventeen men in the wood and stone yards.

41111. What do the men working in the workhouse do?—They bundle up the wood and cart it out and that sort of thing; tie it up for sale.

41112. Did we not see some men working in a field or garden?—Yes, we have a very small garden attached to the workhouse.

Increase of outdoor pauperism at Ecclesall; effect of Local Government
Act, 1894.

41113. Until recently outdoor pauperism has been on the decrease, I think, but the amount received per head has been on the increase?—Yes, there has been a great increase; that has been on account of the adequate relief. I have a chart here showing the population and the expenditure.

41114. Has the number of outdoor paupers gone up in the last five years?—The last three years it has been gradually falling off. I have a return here for 1904, 1905 and 1906. (See Appendix No. XI. (B).)

41115. There was a rise up to 1905 and since then there has been a fall?—Yes.

41116. Has there been any change in policy in the union as regards the outdoor relief?—Prior to 1894 the guardians gave their test in every doubtful case, and now they give adequate out-relief to nearly all cases.

41117. Has that caused an increasing number of applications?—Very much so.

41118. Have you the case-paper system in use?—Yes, I have here the present case-paper, and a new one I am bringing out. (For copy of latter see Appendix No. XI. (A).)

41119. Though it gives more trouble you are strongly in favour of the case-paper system?—Certainly, I prefer it before anything else.

41120. There was a considerable rise in the outdoor relief between 1894 and 1905?—Yes.

41121. Do you think that was due to there being more distress or due to the higher rate of relief given?—We have not had that amount of distress in our division, it is a good deal residential.

41122. Enumerating the causes of pauperism, amongst others you mention the Employer's Liability Act?—Yes. Liability A 41123. Have you any figures to show that the Employer's Liability Act has operated in the direction of pauperism?—In 1897, when the Act came into force, there were 73 old men and 276 old women, last week there were 105 old men, and 372 old women, and we constantly hear from the applicants themselves that they cannot get work where machinery is in the workshops, and they have to apply for relief; that is a general statement with them.

41124. It is sometimes suggested to us that the Employer's Liability Act is quoted by the least competent workmen as a reason why they cannot get employment; is that your opinion?—It may be in some cases, but I know personally of other cases, from my own knowledge, where good workmen have had to give up work.

41125. Your impression is that this Act has rather reduced the age at which people could get work?—That is so.

41126. Is that the general impression of the other relieving officers do you think?—In my union it is.

41127. Taking your various reforms, I think those speak for themselves mostly, and we have had information which corroborates them. What is (d) "To do away with the attendance cards of children where school cards are not used"?—In Sheffield there are no school cards used generally, and when our children have to go up to have their cards marked, some of the children now and again call them pauper children, and that kind of thing, and I certainly object to it.

41128. Is it a special regulation of the Sheffield Education Committee that there should be attendance cards?—No, they have no attendance cards unless they are union children.

41129. (Sir Samuel Provis.) The reason is this is it not, that the relieving officer gets a school attendance card in respect of the children of paupers in receipt of outdoor relief in order that he may show at the audit that the child has been attending school?—That is so. I do not believe in stigmatising these children in that way.

41130. (Chairman.) Have the pauper children that go up any distinctive dress?—Of out-door paupers?

41131. These children who go up for the attendance cards, have they a distinctive dress?—No.

41132. It is alleged that they are called pauper children when they go up for these cards?—Yes, I have heard them so called myself.

41133. You would like to have one-third of the guardians elected annually?—That is so, that would assist in a continuous policy of the board. At the last two elections we have had the majority of the guardians changed. We have twenty-six guardians and fifteen new ones were returned in 1904, and it takes a long time to get used to a body of gentlemen when changes are continually occurring.

41134. Have you many phthisical cases that come to the Poor Law?—Many cases of phthisis.

41135. It is rather a common complaint?—A very grave complaint in Sheffield.

41136. It is connected in some ways with the various industries?—Yes.

41137. I suppose the cases that come for relief as a rule are rather far gone?—Very often they are too far gone when we get hold of them to do any good.

41138. Phthisis is a notifiable disease, is it not?—It is.

41139. Has that made much difference now with regard to the number of applicants?—No, I do not think the slightest so far.

Proposed
abolition of school-attendance cards therefor.

Need of an annual electio of guardian by thirds.

Phthisis at Ecclesall, i notification and treatment, etc.

Phthisis at Ecclesall, its notification and treatment,
etc.

41140. Do you get more information about these cases?—In what way?

41141. Since they have become notifiable?—No, not from the medical officer of health.

41142. The information which is supposed to be given has not reached the board of guardians?—No.

41143. What does your union do; does it send any of those cases to a sanatorium?—We have a small sanatorium in the workhouse hospital, but it is very small.

41144. Do you think these cases want special treatment?—I do certainly.

41145. Would you put them outside the Poor Law?—I think so.

41146. When the man was of good character?—Yes, I think where he is of good character you want special treatment.

41147. It has been suggested that people who are suffering from this illness are afraid to come forward for fear of losing their employment?—Yes I have seen men suffering from phthisis or grinders' asthma working when they should not work.

41148. That is the reason is it?—Yes.

41149. (Mr. Booth.) Working when they should not work for their own sake or the sake of others?—You can see the different stages of consumption or grinders' asthma starting, shortness of breath, which is one of the effects of grinders' asthma.

41150. Is it for their own sake, or for the sake of others that you make the point?—For the sake of others, I want them away from the houses where they are. I do not like children being, and sleeping in the same room where a phthisical case is.

41151. (Chairman.) The difficulty of these cases is the lengthy period for which they may be upon the rates?—Yes.

41152. (Sir Samuel Provis.) I think you have told us there are special books in use in your union which are not prescribed by the Orders, but which you have found it convenient to have?—Yes.

41153. For instance, the stoppage book?—Yes.

41154. What is a stoppage book?—The stoppage book gives the names of all the people whose relief is stopped, the reason of the stoppage being put down in the book. It is a similar book to that which they have in prisons, etc.; and it also gives the general character of the persons.

41155. Is that a book which you keep yourself, or is it kept by the relieving officers?—The relieving officers do that; there is a large book kept.

41156. Then you have a revision register, in the same way; is that a book in which the cases which are to come up for revision are entered?—That is so. Say the guardians give an order to-day for six months, then it is taken on to a page six months hence, with the date on.

41157. That, I take it, is merely for the convenience of knowing that you have the cases brought up from time to time?—Yes. We have in every case throughout the workhouse this revision going on always. It does not matter whether it is an indoor pauper, a lunatic, or anyone else; it is revised anyhow.

41158. (Sir Henry Robinson.) In reference to paragraph 3, which refers to the labour test yard, are all the people kept at work according to their ability, or only the able-bodied persons?—Only the able-bodied.

41159. When they came to obtain employment in this yard must they get put on the relieving officer's books; are those so employed only those who apply to the relieving officer?—That is so. They make an ordinary application, and they are sent in to the test yard.

41160. Is there any difficulty in disposing of the produce of the test yard?—No, we can always sell all we cut.

41161. I see you pay these people so much for their day's work; but you do not give any payment to the indoor people, do you?—No, only to these men. We call them journeymen woodcutters or journeymen stonecutters. They do not lose the vote without they have actual relief from the rates in the shape of groceries and bread.

41162. If a person is put to this labour-yard, and if he declines to work in it, how do you deal with him; do you discharge him?—I have never received any report that people have declined to do the work since my appointment as Superintendent of Outdoor Relief.

41163. They always do the task which is allotted to them?—Yes.

41164. And you have no refractory people to deal with?—No, I do not have any bother with them at all. We have very few able-bodied men. Our average is only eight per week. There are no able-bodied men now in the workhouse.

41165. The infirm people, I take it, are not kept working to the extent of their capability?—No, they are not.

41166. (Mr. Gardiner.) In Paragraph 12, you mention Employers' the Employers' Liability Act as one cause of pauperism, Liability Act can you give us any evidence of a more detailed character a cause of upon that?—I can only give you what I get from the pauperism. people when they apply for relief. They tell me that they cannot work on account of the machinery in the shops, as the employers will not let them go where there is machinery working.

41167. Have you nothing more than that to go upon?—Only the figures I gave a few minutes ago that there was a slight increase.

41168. (Dr Downes.) Do you have any difficulty with Effect of this out-relief test work in regard to a man whose hands labour yard may be spoilt by the rough work?—No. We generally work on relieve in kind if we see the man cannot do the work. paupers. The superintendent of the test yard has particular instructions to report such a case.

41169. Take the case of a silversmith?—His hands are very soft, and he is always relieved in groceries and bread.

41170. With regard to your case-paper system, how do you deal with cases of medical relief only; do you enter them up on the case-paper?—Yes, just the same as any other case, and we investigate them exactly the same.

41171. You say your forms are rather different to those generally used; do you know the Sheffield slips?—Yes, I have seen the Sheffield slips. Special books and forms in use at Ecclesall.

41172. Are your forms like those?—No.

41173. Are they more extended than the Sheffield slips?—Yes. I have brought several specimens here. That is a new one I brought out the other day, and it enables one to put the particulars of six sons instead of one on one sheet (handing in the same, see Appendix No. XI. (A).) Here is my report, made up to last Christmas. (Handing in the same, see Appendix No. XI. (B).)

41174. (Miss Hill.) You say you would be in favour Proposed of doing away with the attendance cards of children abolition of where school cards are not used?—Yes, I should be. school attendance cards.

41175. I suppose there are means of securing their regular attendance, are there not?—I think nowadays the school officer is quite able to do that without the assistance of the guardians. I suggested to my committee that they should send a list of the persons receiving relief to the clerk to the School Board, for the work to be equally divided amongst the attendance officers, and then, if they found neglect, they could report it direct to the guardians.

41176. Do you think that would be as effectual as using the regular card?—I feel sure of it.

41177. I have often heard it said that the pauper children are really prized in the schools because of their more regular attendance?—They are. They certainly attend very regularly. Still, you would have the same check; I am sure of it.

41178. (Sir Samuel Provis.) There was a clause in the Education Bill of last year to get rid of it, was there not?—Yes, there was such a clause, but of course, as we know, it was not passed.

41179. (Mr. Bentham.) With regard to the people who are put on the labour test, are they entered on the Application and Report Book?—Yes.

41180. In counting the number of persons who are in receipt of relief, are they counted?—They are, if they are actually relieved; but if not they are simply journeymen in our eye. Question of inclusion of inmates of labour-yards in pauperism statistics.

Mr. Allan
Dearden.

18 Feb. 1907.

Special relief books in use at Ecclesall.

"Stoppage Book."

"Revision register."

Labour yard
at Ecclesall and disposal of products
thereof.

- Mr. Allen Dearden.* 41181. They are still on the application and report book as applicants for Poor Law relief?—Yes.
- 18 Feb. 1907. 41182. They are relieved through the labour yard?—Yes.
- Question of inclusion of inmates of labour yards in pauperism statistics. 41183. But they are not counted as paupers?—No.
41184. Has the auditor's attention ever been drawn to that?—Both the Government inspectors and the in pauperism statistics. 41185. Three inspectors, one following each other?—Yes.
41186. Are they aware that these people are not actually counted as paupers?—I believe so. The auditor checks the book. We make a certain profit on the wood, and that pays the men.
- Particulars as to labour yard at Ecclesall. 41187. It is employment relief, or rather it is employment for wages?—It is.
41188. It is under the Poor Law, the work is given in the labour test yard inside the workhouse grounds, it is paid for by the guardians, and yet these people are not counted as being in receipt of relief?—No, they are not so counted; without they have actual relief, such as groceries and bread, they do not go upon the relief list at all.
41189. Do you claim that this has, to a large extent, kept a lot of people off your books as ordinary paupers?—I am sure of it. I remember the workhouse when it was crowded. It is the same with out-relief; now we have eight able-bodied men, and we have got rid of the loafers I am sure.
41190. Do these men work by piece?—Yes, and they are paid every night.
41191. There is a limit put on the amount a person is meant to earn, is there not?—Yes, which is signed by the chairman of the guardians.
41192. According to the size of the family?—Yes. If they cannot earn it we make it up with groceries and bread.
41193. When you make up the difference with groceries and bread, is that counted as ordinary relief?—That is so.
41194. And the person immediately comes on the list as a pauper?—That is so. I say it gets rid of the single man, and it gets rid of the married man with no family, because we very seldom give them relief.
41195. If a single man can earn 5s. 9d. per week in your labour yard, which is the amount that he is allowed to earn, he may earn that, say, in how many days?—A proportion is given out each day.
41196. Would he have to come every day?—Yes.
41197. And do his allotted portion for that day?—Yes.
41198. So you really keep him there so many hours a day?—Yes.
